In both the Old Testament and the New Testament the people of God were surrounded by pagan gods. The apostle Paul declared to the philosophers of Athens, “I perceive that in all things you are very religious” (Acts 17:22). In the city of Athens, idols of pagan gods stood on every street corner. The Athenians, perhaps fearing that they had slighted some deity, had even erected an altar “to the unknown god” (Acts 17:23).

“The One whom you worship without knowing,” said Paul, “Him I proclaim to you: God, who made the world and everything in it, since He is Lord of heaven and earth, does not dwell in temples made with hands” (Acts 17:23–24).

Only the sovereign Lord God has the power to rule the world; only the Lord Jesus Christ has the power to rise from the dead as the conqueror, establishing once and for all our everlasting life with Him.

◆

GOG [gog]—the name of two men in the Bible:

1. A descendant of Joel, of the tribe of Reuben (1 Chr. 5:4).
2. The leader of a confederacy of armies that attacked the land of Israel. Described as "the prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal," Gog is also depicted as being "of the land of Magog" (Ezek. 38:2–3), a "place out of the far north" of Israel. Ezekiel prophetically describes Gog and his allies striking at Israel with a fierce and sudden invasion (Ezekiel 38–39). According to Ezekiel's prophecy, Gog will be crushed on the mountains of Israel in a slaughter so great it will take seven months to bury the dead (Ezek. 39:12).

   In the Book of Revelation, Gog and Magog reappear as symbols of the nations of the world that will march against God's people in the end times (Rev. 20:7–8).

GOIIM [GOY yim] (nations)—the name of two groups in the Old Testament:

1. A people who were part of an attack against the cities of the plain (Gen. 14:1, 9).
2. One of the tribal groups conquered by Joshua (Josh. 12:23, NRSV; Goyim, NIV).

GOLAN [GOE lan]—a city of Bashan in the territory of the half-tribe of Manasseh east of the Jordan River (see Map 3, C–2). Golan was assigned to the Gershonite Levites and was one of three cities of refuge east of the Jordan River. It is probably the site of modern Sahem el-Jaulan, about 27 kilometers (17 miles) east of the Sea of Galilee (1 Chr. 6:71). The area northeast of the Sea of Galilee is sometimes called the Golan Heights.

GOLD (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

GOLD, PIECE OF (see MONEY OF THE BIBLE).

GOLDEN CALF—an idolatrous image of a young bull, probably made of wood and overlaid with gold, which the Israelites worshiped in the wilderness while Moses was on Mount Sinai receiving the Ten Commandments (Ex. 32). Another instance of this form of idolatry occurred years later in the history of God's people when King Jeroboam I of Israel set up golden calves at Bethel and Dan (1 Kin. 12:26–33). Also see GODS, PAGAN.

• Scholars point out the similarities between the golden calf worshiped by the Israelites (Ex. 32:1–24) and an Egyptian religious custom. Their god Hapi was represented by the figure of a bull.

GOLDSMITH (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

GOLGOTHA [GOL gah thuh] (place of a skull)—the place where Jesus was crucified, a hill just outside the walls of Jerusalem (Mark 15:22).

GOLIATH [goe LIE ahth]—a Philistine giant whom David felled with a stone from his sling (1 Sam. 17:4–51). Goliath, who lived in the Philistine city of GATH, was probably a descendant of a tribe of giants known as the Anakim, or descendants of Anak (Num. 13:33). These giants probably served in a capacity similar to that of a foreign mercenary or soldier of fortune.

Based on the figures in the Bible (1 Sam. 17:4), Goliath was over nine feet tall. The magnificence of Goliath's armor and weapons—his bronze coat of mail, bronze greaves, bronze javelin, spear with an iron spearhead, and huge sword—must have made him appear invincible.

For forty days this enormous man challenged Saul's army to find one man willing to engage in hand-to-hand combat. The winner of that one battle would determine the outcome of the war. The young David, chosen by God as Israel's next king, accepted the challenge, felling Goliath with a single stone to the forehead from his sling. When David beheaded the fallen giant, the Philistines fled in panic.

GOMER [GOAM ur]—the name of a man, a people, and a woman:

1. The oldest son of Japheth (Gen. 10:2–3).
2. The people descended from Gomer, son of Japheth. Apparently they lived to the far north, beyond the Black Sea (Ezek. 38:6). They were probably the Cimmerians of classical history.
3. A prostitute who became the wife of the prophet HOSEA (Hos. 1:1–11). When Gomer left Hosea and became the slave of one of her lovers, Hosea bought her back at God's command for the price of a slave. Gomer's unfaithfulness and Hosea's forgiveness symbolized God's forgiving love for unfaithful Israel.

GOMORRAH [guh MOR ruh] (submersion)—one of the five "cities of the plain" located in the Valley of Siddim (Salt Sea or Dead Sea). The other cities were Sodom, Admah, Zeboiim, and Zoar (Gen. 14:2–3). Gomorrah is associated closely with its twin city, Sodom. Because these cities became the site of intolerable wickedness, they were destroyed by fire (Gen. 19:24, 28). The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah is often referred to in the Bible as a clear example of divine judgment against the vilest of sinners (Is. 13:19; Jer. 49:18; Amos 4:11; Matt. 10:15; 2 Pet. 2:6; Jude 7).

The exact location of the "cities of the plain" has been a subject of much debate. The current consensus, however, places them near Bab edh-Dhra, the entrance to the "tongue" (Lisan) of land that juts out into the Dead Sea on its eastern shore.

GONG (see MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE).

GOOD—a word with two distinct meanings in the Bible:

1. As an adjective, "good" means "pleasant" (Prov. 15:23), "in full measure" (Gen. 30:20), "kind" and "gracious" (1 Sam. 25:15).
2. As a noun, "good" means primarily God Himself (Mark 10:18). The Bible also speaks of God's works, gifts, and commands as good.

GOODMAN—KJV word for the male head of a family or master of a household (Luke 12:39; master of the house, NKJV; owner of the house, NIV).

GOODNESS—the quality of being good; praiseworthy character; moral excellence. The Bible speaks often of the goodness of God (Ex. 33:19; Rom. 2:4). God's goodness consists of righteousness, holiness, justice, kindness, grace, mercy, and love. Goodness is also one of the fruits of the Spirit that should characterize Christian believers (Gal. 5:22). Christians are called to goodness, even as God the Father is perfect and good (Matt. 5:48).

GOOSE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

GOPHERWOOD (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

GOSHEN [GOE shun]—the name of two areas and one city in the Old Testament:

1. The northeastern territory of the NILE Delta in Egypt (see Map 2, A–1), known today as the area of the Wadi Tumilat. Jacob and his family were granted permission to settle in this fertile section during Joseph's rule as prime minister of Egypt (Gen. 46:28).

   During the time of the Exodus, Goshen was protected from the plagues of flies (Ex. 8:22) and hail (Ex. 9:26) that engulfed the rest of Egypt. The district was not large, containing perhaps 900 square miles, and it had two principal cities: Rameses and Pithom.
2. A district of southern Palestine between Gaza and Gibeon and the hill country and the Negeb (Josh. 10:41).
3. A town in the mountains of southwest Judah (Josh. 15:51).

GOSPEL—the joyous good news of salvation in Jesus Christ. The Greek word translated as "gospel" means "a reward for bringing good news" or simply "good news." In Isaiah 40:9, the prophet proclaimed the "good tidings" that God would rescue His people from captivity. In His famous sermon at the synagogue in Nazareth, Jesus quoted Isaiah 61:1 to characterize the spirit of His ministry: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He has anointed Me to preach the gospel [good news] to the poor" (Luke 4:18).

The gospel is not a new plan of salvation; it is the fulfillment of God's plan of salvation that was begun in Israel, was completed in Jesus Christ, and is made known by the church.

The gospel is the saving work of God in His Son Jesus Christ and a call to faith in Him (Rom. 1:16–17). Jesus is more than a messenger of the gospel; He is the gospel. The good news of God was present in His life, teaching, and atoning death. Therefore, the gospel is both a historical event and a personal relationship.

Faith is more than intellectual agreement to a theoretical truth. Faith is trust placed in a living person, Jesus Christ. When the apostle Paul warned Christians of the dangers of following "another gospel" (2 Cor. 11:4), he was reminding them that any gospel different than the one he preached was no gospel at all.

In the second century, the word “gospel” came to be used for certain writings in which the “good news” or story of Jesus Christ was told. These writings were written in the first century, but they became known as “gospels” much later. Mark was the first to write such a story (Mark 1:1), and in so doing he invented a literary form that we call a “gospel.” The New Testament has four versions of the one gospel: the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.

A gospel is more than a biography intended to provide information about a historical character. It is the presentation of the life of Jesus to show His saving significance for all people and to call them to faith in Him.

Also see GOSPELS.

GOSPELS—the four accounts at the beginning of the New Testament about the saving work of God in His Son Jesus Christ. The writers of the four gospels introduced a new literary category into literature. The gospels are not true biographies, because apart from certain events surrounding His birth (Matt. 1–2; Luke 1–2) and one from His youth (Luke 2:41–52), they record only the last two or three years of Jesus’ life.

Moreover, the material included is not written as an objective historical survey of Jesus’ ministry. The gospels present Jesus in such a way that the reader realizes that God acted uniquely in Him. The authors of the gospels wrote not only to communicate knowledge about Jesus as a person, but also to call us to commitment to Him as Lord.

The gospels produce four distinctive portraits of Jesus rather than exact photographic likenesses. Thus, there are four gospels (accounts) of the one gospel (the good news of salvation in Jesus Christ).

The Gospel in Four Editions. Why, though, are there four versions of the same story? Why not one account? This question is as old as the church itself. Around A.D. 150, Tatian compiled a life of Christ, called the Diatessaron, by harmonizing the four gospels. His contemporary, the heretic Marcion, attempted to resolve the problem by choosing one gospel, Luke, and discounting the others.

The church, however, resisted Tatian’s artificial life of Jesus and Marcion’s choice of one gospel to the exclusion of the other three. Prior to Tatian and Marcion, the church had accepted each of the four gospels as a faithful and complementary witness to Jesus Christ. The church adopted symbols for the gospels—Matthew a lion, Mark an ox, Luke a man, John an eagle (or variations thereof)—from the fourfold witness to God in Scripture (Ezek. 1:5; 10:14; Rev. 4:7). At an early date the church realized that the combined witness of the four gospels was required to declare the full significance of Christ.

The Synoptic Problem. If one sets the four gospels side by side, it becomes apparent that Matthew, Mark, and Luke have much in common. Each gospel arranges its material in a similar fashion, and each gospel casts the life of Jesus within the framework of a Galilean ministry that extended from Jesus' baptism to His death, with emphasis on His final days.

The similarity of the gospels also includes their content. The first three gospels recount many of the same incidents or teachings, and often in the same or related wording. A glance, for example, at the baptism of Jesus as related by Matthew (3:13–17), Mark (1:9–11), and Luke (3:21–22) will quickly demonstrate their agreement. Because of this similarity in arrangement, content, and wording, the first three gospels are called synoptic gospels (from the Greek synopsis, "a seeing together").

The Gospel of John presents a more independent account of Christ. John's relationship to the first three gospels can be considered only after a thorough discussion of Matthew, Mark, and Luke.

The synoptic problem arises from the attempt to explain the general similarity of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, while accounting for their individual differences. Two of the four gospel writers (Mark and Luke) were not eyewitnesses of the events they relate, and some question remains about the other two (see JOHN, GOSPEL OF; MATTHEW, GOSPEL OF). This means we cannot assume that the similarities and differences among the gospels come solely from their personal perspectives as interpreters of Jesus and His ministry. Other sources also probably contributed to the composition of the four gospels.

In the past 200 years, a great deal of scholarship has been devoted to recovering such possible sources, though it is doubtful whether the puzzle has been fully resolved. The theories advanced generally fit one of two categories. One possibility is that the synoptics depend on a prior source that is now lost, except as it is preserved in the synoptics themselves. A second possibility is that two of the synoptic gospels depend on the other gospel. Until about 1800, the church generally accepted the view, first advanced by Augustine, that Matthew wrote the first gospel, Mark abbreviated Matthew, and Luke used both to compose the third gospel.

Mark as a Source. Most scholars now agree that at least two, and perhaps as many as four, sources lie beneath the synoptic gospels. The first and most important of these is the Gospel of Mark—and not Matthew, as the church long assumed. Mark contains 666 verses (excluding 16:9–20, which many scholars consider later additions to the text). A total of 606 of these verses reappear in full or in part in Matthew's Gospel of 1,071 verses; 350 of Mark's verses reappear in Luke's Gospel of 1,151 verses. This means that more than one-half of Matthew and one-third of Luke are composed of material from Mark. Only thirty-one verses in Mark have no parallel in Matthew or Luke.

A number of observations show that Mark, and not Matthew or Luke, is the prior source. First, Matthew and Luke never agree in arrangement of material when compared against Mark. When either Matthew or Luke disagree in the sequence of events, the other follows Mark.

Second, certain details in Mark's gospel are either omitted or reworked in Matthew and Luke. The latter often refine Mark's awkward expressions; for example, compare Mark 4:1 with Matthew 13:1–2 and Luke 8:4. Inconsistencies in Mark are omitted by Matthew and Luke; for example, compare Mark 2:26 with Matthew 12:3 and Luke 6:3. Mark's frank assessments of the disciples (6:52; 9:32) are omitted by Matthew and Luke, apparently out of respect for their importance as apostles. Mark's references to Jesus' human emotions—for example, grief (14:34), exasperation (8:12), anger (10:14), amazement (6:6), and fatigue (4:38)—are softened by the other synoptics; and examples of Jesus' ability to perform certain actions (Mark 6:6) are deleted by them, too (Matt. 13:58; Luke 4:23).

On the other hand, Matthew and Luke on occasion heighten Jesus' accomplishments in comparison with Mark (Mark 1:32, 34; Matt. 8:16). If we assume that Matthew and Luke reworked Mark in these instances, it is possible to explain the differences; but it is practically impossible to do so if we assume otherwise.

Q Source. When the remaining material in Matthew and Luke is examined, the reader discovers that more than 200 verses appear in them, while they have no parallel in Mark. This material, which consists mainly of Jesus' teachings, can be grouped into four categories: (1) Jesus and John the Baptist, (2) Jesus and His disciples, (3) Jesus and His opponents, and (4) Jesus and the future. Scholars assume that this material must have come from a source known only to Matthew and Luke.

For purposes of identification, this source is assigned the name "Q" (from the German, Quelle, "source"). Since Q passages agree closely, sometimes to the point of exact wording, it is reasonable to assume that this source was written rather than oral. Q material occurs scattered throughout Matthew 5–7; 10–11; 18:10, 23; and 24:37; but it is centralized in two sections of Luke (6:20—7:35; 9:57—13:34). Luke, therefore, probably more nearly preserves the original sequence of Q.

The "Q" document, of course, is theoretical, since no copy of it is known to exist. It is likely, however, that a document preserving the sayings of Jesus and fitting the description of Q was known to the early church. The church father, Papias, writing about A.D. 130, records, "Matthew collected the oracles in the Hebrew language, and each interpreted them as best he could." It is unlikely that these "oracles" are our present Gospel of Matthew, though it may be that they served as a source for the Gospel of Matthew (and Luke?). The sayings of Jesus were highly esteemed in the early church, especially for the instruction of converts; and it is possible that the more than 200 verses that Matthew and Luke have in common depend on a sayings source compiled by Matthew and known to Papias as "oracles."

Special M and Special L. When Mark and Q are accounted for, there remain more than one-fifth of Matthew and one-third of Luke for which there is no parallel in other gospels. Where each writer obtained this information is uncertain, although much of Luke's special material probably came from sources associated with his Pauline journeys, particularly in Caesarea. At any rate, each writer appears to have used unique materials in writing his gospel. These sources are sometimes labeled Special M (Matthew) and Special L (Luke).

Form Criticism. Following World War I, a new approach to gospel research arose in Germany. Its goal was to get behind the written sources (Mark, Q, L, or M) and investigate the forms (hence, form criticism) in which the gospel was transmitted by word of mouth in the period between the death of Jesus (A.D. 30) and the appearance of the first Christian writings of Paul (A.D. 50).

This school of thought rests on several assumptions. One assumption is that the tradition that was handed down about Jesus tended to become grouped into a number of broad categories: miracle stories, parables, pronouncements (Mark 2:27; 3:35), sayings of various kinds (Matt. 6:19–34), and most importantly, accounts of the death of Jesus.

Another assumption of form criticism is that the early church remembered, shaped, and passed on those aspects of Jesus' teachings and ministry that were relevant to its circumstances. This means that, in addition to telling us about Jesus, the gospels tell us something about the early church that passed on the stories about Jesus.

This assumption has resulted in the important awareness that the early church did not look upon Jesus merely as an historical figure of the past, but as the living Lord of the present. This second assumption is especially evident in the Gospel of John, which blends the remembrances called to mind by the Holy Spirit (John 14:26) with the events of Jesus' life. Since the early church maintained its treasure of tradition about Jesus primarily through preaching, the contents of the gospels are shaped significantly by the faith of the early church.

This is not to say that stories were "made up" by the early church in order to preach about a Jesus who was a figment of someone's vivid imagination. It means, instead, that the early church kept some memories about Jesus alive, while it did not continue others; and one of the reasons for this is that certain events and sayings were much more important in the early church's eyes than others were.

Although form criticism is still in its infancy stages, it has increased our appreciation of the role the early church played in the formation of the gospels. Some form critics, however, have erred in overstating the influence of the church on the gospel tradition, sometimes even implying that the gospels mirror the church instead of the Lord.

Is it possible to know whether the early church distorted or preserved the intent of the historical Jesus? Fortunately, the New Testament contains certain checks that provide reasonable certainty of careful handling on the part of the early church. We may be assured that eyewitnesses, including some of the apostles, were alive when the gospels appeared in writing. Such eyewitnesses would have encouraged historical accuracy and prevented distortion in the gospels.

Another important fact is that rabbis of Jesus' day trained their disciples to commit their teachings to memory, in fact, to the point of perfect recitation of long passages. We have no reason to assume that Jesus was less diligent about the transmission of His teaching than the rabbis were about theirs.

We also may be assured that the early church did not project upon the gospels any teachings or concerns foreign to Jesus. The synoptic gospels, for example, record more than fifty parables of Jesus, but not one parable is recorded in the remainder of the New Testament. This observation demonstrates that Jesus—and only Jesus—taught in parables, and the church was faithful to record them.

Expressed respect for the words of Jesus can also be found in the apostle Paul, who distinguishes between "commands of the Lord" and his own opinion (1 Cor. 7:10, 12, 25). In a similar vein, we have no instances where the words of Paul, Peter, John, or any of the "pillars" of the church (Gal. 2:9) are placed in Jesus' mouth. Nor do we find the teachings of the apostles included in the gospels. Jesus commands center stage, and He has no successors.

Furthermore, we know that the early church faced a series of crises as it began to evangelize the Gentile world. One such crisis concerned the conditions of accepting Gentiles into the church, and especially CIRCUMCISION. But such questions are scarcely mentioned in the gospels (Matt. 8:10).

Finally, inclusion in the gospels of confusing statements (such as the second coming; Mark 9:1), or matters unimportant to the early church (little children; Mark 10:13–16), or even embarrassing remembrances (Peter's denial; Mark 14:66–68), indicate that the early church was more intent on preserving the tradition it received than on improving its own image.

Redaction Criticism. Since World War II, some scholars have done gospel research in another area. These scholars focus on the role of the gospel writers as editors of the material received from the early church, and hence the name redaction criticism (from the German, Redaktion, "editing"). Whatever sources and traditions the writers may have inherited, redaction studies have revealed that the gospel writers were more than chroniclers or witless transmitters of the material they received. Each is an important link in the chain connecting us with Jesus. Each offers a unique and complementary portrait of Jesus, because each writes to a different audience and emphasizes different aspects of Jesus' life.

For Mark, Jesus is the Suffering Servant who reveals His divine Sonship on the cross. Matthew's major concern is to present Jesus as a teacher who is greater than Moses and continually present with the disciples. For Luke, Jesus is the keystone in the history of salvation, beginning with Israel, fulfilled in Jesus, and communicated by the church. The fourth gospel writer penetrates the mystery of the incarnation (Jesus as God in human form; John 1:14), who brings life to the world through trust in Him.

The Synoptics and the Gospel of John. It would be a mistake to imply that John is radically different from the other gospels and deserves no consideration with them. All four gospels portray Jesus Christ through selected events in His life, climaxing in His death and resurrection. But John features an independent, unique presentation of Jesus. In the synoptics, Jesus' ministry lasts less than a year, and is conducted mainly in Galilee; in John it extends to three or more years and centers more often in Judea.

The synoptics present Jesus as a man of action who paints word pictures for His hearers; John, however, portrays longer, less picturesque, and more speculative discourse coming from Jesus, and comparatively little action. In the synoptics, Jesus teaches in parables—nearly sixty in all—but in John no parables exist. In the synoptics, Jesus teaches mainly about the kingdom of God, whereas in John he teaches about Himself. In the synoptics, Jesus often demands silence of those who behold His miracles, but in John miracles are signs revealing Jesus and His mission.

These facts are sufficient to indicate that the synoptics present basically one perspective on the life of Jesus and that the Gospel of John presents another perspective, achieved most probably by profound meditation on the meaning of Jesus Christ.

The importance of the gospels for the early church may be indicated by noting that these four, which were collected perhaps as early as A.D.

125, were the first books of the New Testament to be accepted as authoritative by the early church. Today the four gospels remain our only reliable source of information about the central figure of the human race.

We may never fully understand how the gospels originated and what sources each writer used for his account. But a more important challenge than solving the literary mysteries of the gospels is learning to appreciate the unique portrait that each writer offers of Jesus and growing in our love and devotion to Him.

GOSSIP—a person who spreads rumors or idle, fruitless tales. The apostle Paul described some of the early believers as “not only idle but gossips [tattlers, KJV] and busybodies” (1 Tim. 5:13). Jesus said, “For every idle word men may speak, they will give account of it in the day of judgment” (Matt. 12:36).

GOTHIC VERSIONS (see BIBLE VERSIONS AND TRANSLATIONS).

GOURD (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

GOVERNMENT—earthly authority; those who rule over others in order to keep society stable and orderly. Only God is the sovereign ruler of all. When human governments exalt themselves above God, they go beyond their legitimate function in society (Dan. 5:31). In Bible times God exercised government through many persons and institutions.

The basic unit of government among the Hebrews was the "father's house" or primary family (Gen. 12:1; Num. 1:4). Above this was the clan (Num. 36:6) and then the tribe, governed by a leader who was chosen by representatives from the tribes (Num. 1:4–16). Over all these units was a central leader. In early days, Moses or Joshua (and Aaron and his descendants in the religious sphere) served as central leaders among the Israelites. After Joshua's death, numerous local or tribal leaders known as JUDGES stepped forward to lead. These judges exercised many governmental functions, but no central leadership existed during those days. Only Samuel approached national status as a leader.

The possibility of a king as central leader of the nation was foreseen as early as Genesis 17:6; Deuteronomy 17:14–20. The kings governed by using bureaucracies similar to those of other ancient Near Eastern kingdoms. Kings who overstepped the legitimate bounds of "government under God" were often confronted by prophets such as Nathan, Elijah, or Jeremiah (2 Sam. 12:1–15a). Isaiah the prophet pointed to the coming Messiah who would be the supreme ruling king and agency of God's government of His people (Is. 9:6–7).

After the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., the Jews were ruled by foreign powers such as Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome. During most of these times, however, the Jews were allowed a measure of self-government. In time the office of HIGH PRIEST took on political as well as religious dimensions. At most times there was also a group of local Jewish leaders that formed a governing council. In Jesus' day, this body was called the SANHEDRIN. Made up of both SADDUCEES and PHARISEES, it was presided over by the high priest.

Jesus taught that earthly governments exist by God's will (John 19:11) and are legitimate as long as they do not take over the role reserved for God (Mark 12:13–17). Romans 13 discusses human government as ordained by God. Revelation 13, on the other hand, discusses it as degenerate and demonic. Christians live in the tension created by the fact that governments can be good (Rom. 13) or evil (Rev. 13). When governments promote good and suppress evil, they fulfill their God-given function (Titus 3:1; 1 Pet. 2:13–14). But if government exalts itself as sovereign over all life, then it has overstepped its bounds and is a handmaid of evil.

GOVERNOR—a regional agent or officer for the Roman emperor during New Testament times. This office gradually developed across a period of many years. The primary function of the governor was to serve as a financial officer. In a senatorial PROVINCE the governor was in charge of the emperor's properties within the province. In an imperial province he acted as the treasurer, collecting taxes and paying the troops in the Roman army. Later, in A.D. 53, Claudius gave governmental powers to governors in the third-class provinces such as Judea. They had auxiliary troops to maintain order and were responsible to the Roman ruler based in Syria.

Before A.D. 53 the governor was officially called "prefect" as in the case of Pilate. After A.D. 53 he was called "procurator" as in the cases of Felix and Festus. There was much confusion at the time because after A.D. 53 the Jewish historian Josephus calls the ruler of Judea prefect, procurator, and governor. In the New Testament the political ruler of Judea was always called by the more general term "governor." The governors of Judea included Pilate (Matt. 27:2), Felix (Acts 23:24), and Festus (Acts 26:30–32).

GOZAN [GOE zan]—a city or region in northern Mesopotamia, on the river Habor (or Khabur), to which the Israelites were deported by the king of Assyria after the destruction of Samaria (Is. 37:12). In 1 Chronicles 5:26 "river of Gozan" doubtless means "river in (the region of) Gozan."

GRACE—favor or kindness shown without regard to the worth or merit of the one who receives it and in spite of what that person deserves. Grace is one of the key attributes of God. The Lord God is "merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abounding in goodness and truth" (Ex. 34:6). Therefore, grace is almost always associated with mercy, love, compassion, and patience.

In the Old Testament, the supreme example of grace was the redemption of the Hebrew people from Egypt and their establishment in the Promised Land. This did not happen because of any merit on Israel's part, but in spite of their unrighteousness (Deut. 7:7–8; 9:5–6). Although the grace of God is always free and undeserved, it must not be taken for granted. Grace is only enjoyed within the COVENANT—the gift is given by God, and the gift is received by people through repentance and faith (Amos 5:15). Grace is to be humbly sought through the prayer of faith (Mal. 1:9).

The grace of God was supremely revealed and given in the person and work of Jesus Christ. Jesus was not only the beneficiary of God's grace (Luke 2:40) but was also its very embodiment (John 1:14), bringing it to humankind for salvation (Titus 2:11). By His death and resurrection, Jesus restored the broken fellowship between God and His people, both Jew and Gentile. The only way of salvation for any person is "through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 15:11).

The grace of God revealed in Jesus Christ is applied to human beings for their salvation by the HOLY SPIRIT, who is called "the Spirit of grace" (Heb. 10:29). The Spirit is the One who binds Christ to His people so that they receive forgiveness, adoption to sonship, and newness of life, as well as every spiritual gift or grace (Eph. 4:7).

The theme of grace is especially prominent in the letters of Paul. He sets grace radically over against the law and the works of the law (Rom. 3:24, 28). Paul makes it abundantly clear that salvation is not something that can be earned; it can be received only as a gift of grace (Rom. 4:4). Grace, however, must be accompanied by faith; a person must trust in the mercy and favor of God, even while it is undeserved (Rom. 4:16; Gal. 2:16).

The law of Moses revealed the righteous will of God in the midst of pagan darkness; it was God's gracious gift to Israel (Deut. 4:8). But His will was made complete when Jesus brought the gospel of grace into the world (John 1:17).

GRAFT, GRAFTING—in horticulture, the process of uniting a shoot or bud with a growing plant so they grow as one. The apostle Paul used this procedure to illustrate the relationship between Jews and Gentiles in God's plan. The natural branches of the good olive tree (Israel) were broken off (because of Israel's unbelief), and the alien branches of a wild olive tree (the Gentiles) were grafted onto the root of the good olive tree (because of the Gentiles' faith; Rom. 11:17–24).

GRATE, GRATING—a network of bronze on the altar in the TABERNACLE. Each of the four corners of the grating had a bronze ring or housing by which the altar was carried (Ex. 27:4–7).

GRATITUDE (see THANKSGIVING).

GRAVE—a place where the dead are buried. In general, the Hebrew people buried their dead in graves much as today, except that they were not as deep. In towns and cities the burial grounds were situated outside the city limits (Luke 7:12; John 11:30). Evidence of this may be seen today in the many graves in the Kidron Valley east of Jerusalem and at the Essene community overlooking the Dead Sea. Plain stones or a stone slab were used to cover the grave as a safeguard against animals and to mark the burial place (2 Sam. 18:17). In some instances hewn stones were used. Occasionally expensive pillars were used as memorials (2 Kin. 23:17); thus, Jacob erected a pillar over Rachel's grave (Gen. 35:20), which today is marked by a building over the traditional site.

Natural caves were often used as family burial sites. The most famous of these is the cave of MACHPELAH (Genesis 23), which was purchased by Abraham for this purpose. A building constructed over its location may still be seen in Hebron (Gen. 23:2).

Wealthy people, such as Joseph of Arimathea (John 19:38–42), sometimes cut a family tomb out of solid rock. To cover the entrance, a large circular stone in a groove was rolled in front of the entrance and sealed. The "Garden Tomb" outside Jerusalem is a good example of this type of burial site.

• Cemeteries, like this one in the Kidron Valley outside Jerusalem, were always located outside the city wall.

GRAVECLOTHES—strips of cloth wrapped around a corpse in preparation for burial. When Lazarus was raised from the dead by Jesus, he emerged from the tomb “bound hand and foot by graveclothes” (John 11:44; strips of cloth NRSV; wrappings, NASB; linen bandages, REB).

GREAT LIZARD, GREAT OWL (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

GREAVES (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE).

GREECE—a region or country of city–states in southeastern Europe between Italy and Asia Minor. Greece was bounded on the east by the Aegean Sea, on the south by the Mediterranean Sea, on the west by the Adriatic Sea and Ionian Sea, and on the north by Mount Olympus and adjacent mountains. The Old Testament name for Greece was JAVAN (Gen. 10:2, 4; Is. 66:19).

In the early years of its history, Greece was a country of self-governing city–states. Politically and militarily, the Greek city–states were weak. Their varied backgrounds led to frictions and rivalries that kept them from becoming one unified nation.

In 338 B.C., Philip II, king of Macedon, conquered the southern peninsula of Greece. Under Philip's son, Alexander the Great (336–323 B.C.), the Greek Empire was extended from Greece through Asia Minor to Egypt and the borders of India. Alexander's military conquests and his passion to spread Greek culture contributed to the advancement of Greek ideas throughout the ancient world. This adoption of Greek ideas by the rest of the ancient world was known as HELLENISM. So thoroughly did Greek ideas penetrate the other nations that the Greek language became the dominant language of the known world.

Greek learning and culture eventually conquered the ancient Near East and continued as dominant forces throughout the New Testament era. Even after the rise of the Romans, about 146 B.C., the influence of Greek language, culture, and philosophy remained strong, even influencing the Jewish religion.

Greek religion included many gods. The religions of Egypt, Asia Minor, and Persia were more appealing than the old Greek gods because they promised immortality. However, the Greeks did not abandon their former gods; they simply adopted new gods and gave them old names. A renewed interest in astrology among the Greeks also led to widespread belief that the planets governed the lives and fates of human beings. The Greeks sought to control any turn of fate through worship. They even erected an altar inscribed "to the unknown god" in their capital city of Athens (Acts 17:23).

The peninsula of Greece fell to the Romans in 146 B.C. and later became the senatorial province of Achaia with Corinth as its capital. The apostle Paul visited this area on his second missionary journey, delivering his famous sermon to the Athenian philosophers (Acts 17:22–34). Later he appeared before the proconsul Gallio at Corinth (Acts 18:12–17). On his third missionary journey, he visited Greece for three months (Acts 20:2–3).

Greece is important to Christianity because of its language. In New Testament times Greek was the language spoken by the common people of the ancient world, as far west as Rome and the Rhone Valley in southeastern France. Most of the New Testament was written originally in Greek, a precise and expressive language.

GREEK (see LANGUAGES OF THE BIBLE).

GREEKS—natives of Greece or people of Greek descent. In the New Testament, “Greeks” is sometimes used as a general term for all who are not Jews.

Historically, the Greeks descended from four separate groups—the Acheans, Ionians, Aeolians, and Dorians—that immigrated into Greece and replaced the civilization that previously existed. Each group settled in different regions of Greece. Because these peoples did not mix very well, Greece developed into a group of city–states instead of a nation. They fought among one another for superiority, and even though they conquered isolated areas of the Mediterranean coastland, they were unable to establish a unified empire. Much later, Philip of Macedon conquered Greece, and his son ALEXANDER the Great, extended Greek culture throughout most of the Mediterranean world. When Alexander died, his generals continued this policy of forcing Greek culture upon the people of his empire. The way of life they enforced is known as HELLENISM.

Centuries later when the Romans conquered the ancient world, they brought political organization to the Mediterranean, but they did little to change its Hellenistic culture. When the biblical writers use the term "Greeks," therefore, they do not merely mean natives of Greece; they are speaking of all who have been influenced by Greek culture and are not Jews (for instance, Mark 7:26, where a Syro-Phoenician woman is called a Greek).

By contrast, the terms "Grecians" (KJV), "Grecian jews" (NIV), or "Hellenists" (NRSV, NKJV) refers to Greek-speaking Jews only (Acts 6:1; 9:29).

In the Old Testament, Greece is to be identified with Javan (Is. 66:19). The only Old Testament reference to Greeks occurs in Joel 3:6.

GREEN FELDSPAR, GREEN JASPER (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

GREETING—a SALUTATION on meeting a person (Matt. 26:49; hail, KJV) or an opening address in a letter or message (Acts 15:23).

GREYHOUND (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

GRIEF—an emotion of sorrow; the experience of emotional distress or pain. Today the word grief is usually used to express what a person feels in periods of intense sadness, as in the time of death. But the Bible uses the word more freely and, more often than not, in reference to things other than death. Grief is a response to the trouble one's enemies cause (Ps. 6:7; 31:10) or to the foolishness of a child (Prov. 10:1).

The Bible also tends to emphasize the cause of grief rather than the emotion itself. For example, in 1 Samuel 25:31, the word translated "grief" means literally a "stumbling block." To the Hebrew writers the importance of grief was not its psychological effect upon the individual. Grief was important to them because it is a response to the troubles of a fallen world.

The grief of Isaiah 17:10–11 is the result of people forgetting God. God Himself is sometimes grieved, or troubled, at our sinfulness (Gen. 6:6–7; Is. 63:10). But if God and righteous people feel sorrow or pain about the world, there is hope in Christ, who "has borne our griefs" (Is. 53:4).

GRIFFON (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

GRIND—to prepare grain for cooking by crushing it into a fine mixture. Wheat was ground into flour in Bible times by pulverizing the kernels between two large circular stones (Is. 47:2). Also see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE.

GRINDERS—a symbolic word for teeth (Eccl. 12:3), describing one of the common problems of old age—worn and decayed teeth.

GROVE (see WOODEN IMAGES).

GRUB (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

GUARANTEE—a promise or assurance; something given or held as security. The apostle Paul declared that the Holy Spirit, who lives in our hearts, is the guarantee that we shall receive our full inheritance from God (2 Cor. 5:5).

GUARD (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

GUARD, GATE OF THE; GUARDHOUSE, GATE OF THE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

GUARDIAN—a person legally responsible for the welfare and property of a minor (Gal. 4:2).

GUDGODAH [gud GOH dah]—a place where the Israelites camped in the wilderness, near Ezion Geber (Deut. 10:7). This place is also called Hor Haggidgad (Num. 33:32–33).

GUEST—a person who receives hospitality at the home or table of another (Zeph. 1:7; Matt. 22:10–11). The scribes and Pharisees were amazed that Jesus accepted the hospitality of Zacchaeus, a chief tax collector, and went to stay at his house. They murmured, "He has gone to be a guest with a man who is a sinner" (Luke 19:7).

GUEST ROOM—a room for the lodging of guests (Mark 14:14; Philem. 22). The Greek word translated as "guest room" means "a lodging or resting place." A few houses of Palestine had rooms set aside for use by guests.

GUILE—craftiness, cunning, deceit, or deception. Jesus commended Nathanael as a true Israelite, a man in whom there was "no guile" (John 1:47; nothing false, NIV). The opposite of guile is truth, honesty, and sincerity.

GUILT, GUILTY—bearing responsibility for an offense or wrongdoing; remorseful awareness of having done something wrong (Lev. 4:3; Ezra 9:6, 13, 15). Although the word "guilt" is not specifically used, some classic examples of guilt in the Bible are: Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:7–8), Cain (Gen. 4:8–9), and David (2 Sam. 11; Ps. 51). One Greek word in the New Testament translated as "guilty" means "under justice," or answerable to the judgment and condemnation of God. Also see SIN.

GUILT OFFERING (see SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS).

GULF—a deep gap or cleft separating two places. Jesus told about a rich man (traditionally called Dives, meaning "rich") and a beggar (Lazarus)—one in heaven and one in hell—who were separated by a great gulf (Luke 16:26; chasm, NASB, NIV, NRSV; gulf, REB).

GUM RESIN (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

GUNI [GOO nih]—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A son of Naphtali and founder of the GUNITES (1 Chr. 7:13).
2. The father of Abdiel (1 Chr. 5:15).

GUNITES [GOO nights]—the descendants of GUNI No. 1 (Num. 26:48).

GUR, ASCENT TO [gure]—a hill near IBLEAM, where Jehu's archers killed Ahaziah, king of Judah (2 Kin. 9:27).

GUR BAAL [gure BAY al] (dwelling of Baal)—a desert place, perhaps a town, inhabited by Arabians. Uzziah, king of Judah, numbered it among his conquests (2 Chr. 26:7).

GUTTER—a watering trough for livestock in which Jacob placed peeled branches of poplar, almond, and chestnut trees to influence the coloring of newborn lambs to his advantage (Gen. 30:38). In the KJV, "gutter" also refers to the water tunnel that David's army used to gain entrance into the city of Jerusalem for a decisive victory over the JEBUSITES (2 Sam. 5:8), (water shaft, NKJV, NIV). Apparently the Jebusites had dug a tunnel leading down to the GIHON SPRING so they could reach the water supply undetected.

GYMNASIUM—an important institution in the culture of ancient Greece where young men were educated by the philosophers and trained in various physical routines. Although the word does not appear in the Bible, archaeologists have discovered evidence that gymnasiums did exist throughout the ancient world in Bible times. The gymnasium got its name from the fact that the men trained and performed naked. This and the fact that all activities were closely tied to Greek culture made the gymnasium repulsive to most of the Jewish people.

However, when Palestine came under Greek control, a gymnasium was built in Jerusalem early in the second century B.C. as part of an effort to make the Jews accept Greek culture. It continued in existence until Jerusalem was destroyed in A.D. 70 by the Romans.

H

HAAHASHTARI [hay uh HASH tur eye]—a descendant of Judah through Ashhur. His mother was Ashhur's second wife, Naarah (1 Chr. 4:6).

HABAIAH [huh BIGH yuh] (The Lord has hidden)—the ancestor of a Jewish family whose name could not be found in the genealogical records (Ezra 2:61–62; Neh. 7:63–64; Hobaiah, NRSV, NIV).

HABAKKUK [huh BAK uhk]—a courageous Old Testament prophet and author of the Book of Habakkuk. The Scriptures say nothing of his ancestry or place of birth. A man of deep emotional strength, Habakkuk was both a poet and a prophet. His hatred of sin compelled him to cry out to God for judgment (Hab. 1:2–4). His sense of justice also led him to challenge God's plan to judge the nation of Judah by the pagan Babylonians (Hab. 1:12—2:1). His deep faith led him to write a beautiful poem of praise in response to the mysterious ways of God (Habakkuk 3).

Also see HABAKKUK, BOOK OF.

HABAKKUK, BOOK OF—a short prophetic book of the Old Testament that deals with the age-old problems of evil and human suffering. The book is named for the prophet Habakkuk.

Structure of the Book. Habakkuk's book contains only three short chapters, but they present a striking contrast. In the first two, Habakkuk protests, complains, and questions God. But the final chapter is a beautiful psalm of praise. Habakkuk apparently used this complaining and questioning technique to drive home his powerful message about the approaching judgment of God.

Habakkuk begins his book with a cry of woe. Injustice is rampant, the righteous are surrounded by the wicked, the law is powerless, and God doesn't seem to care about the plight of His people (1:1–4). Habakkuk wonders why God is allowing these things to happen.

God's reply brings little comfort to the prophet. He explains that the armies of Babylon are moving throughout the ancient world on a campaign of death and destruction. At the time when Habakkuk received this vision, the Babylonians had already defeated Assyria and Egypt. The implication is that Habakkuk's nation, Judah, will be the next to fall.

The prophet was shocked at the news. He reminded God of His justice and holiness (1:12–13). How could He use the wicked Babylonians to destroy His Chosen People? Surely He realized the sins of His people were as nothing, when compared to the pagan Babylonians. "Why do you . . . hold your tongue when the wicked devours one more righteous than he?" he asks (1:13). This direct question indicates Habakkuk's great faith. Only a person very close to God would dare question the purposes of the Almighty so boldly. God assures Habakkuk that the Babylonians will prevail not because they are righteous but because they are temporary instruments of judgment in His hands (2:4). Then he pronounces five burdens of woe against the Babylonians (2:6, 9, 12, 15, 19). God will not be mocked; the end of the Babylonians is as certain as the judgment they will bring on Judah. In all of this, God will vindicate His righteous character: "For the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea" (2:14).

After this assurance, Habakkuk breaks out with the beautiful psalm of praise to God contained in chapter 3. This is one of the greatest testimonies of faith in the Bible.

Authorship and Date. Nothing is known about the prophet Habakkuk except his name. But he was surely a sensitive poet as well as a courageous spokesman for God. His little book is a literary masterpiece that points people of all ages to faith in God and His eternal purpose. Since the book speaks of the coming destruction of Judah, it had to be written sometime before Jerusalem was destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 B.C. The most likely time for its composition is probably about 600 B.C.

Historical Setting. The Book of Habakkuk belongs to that turbulent era in ancient history when the balance of power was shifting from the Assyrians to the Babylonians. Assyria's domination came to an end with the destruction of its capital city, Nineveh, by the invading Babylonians in 612 B.C. Less than twenty years after Habakkuk wrote his book, the Babylonians also destroyed Jerusalem and carried the leading citizens of Judah into captivity. God used this pagan nation to punish His Covenant People for their unfaithfulness and worship of false gods.

Theological Contribution. The question-and-answer technique of the prophet Habakkuk teaches a valuable lesson about the nature of God. That God allows Himself to be questioned by one of His followers is an indication of His long-suffering mercy and grace.

The theme of God's judgment against unrighteousness also is woven throughout the book. God soon will punish His wayward people for their transgression, but He also will punish the pagan Babylonians because of their great sin. God always acts in justice. He will not forget mercy while pouring out his wrath (3:2). His judgment will fall on the proud, but the just will live in His faithfulness (2:4). God's acts of judgment are in accord with His holiness, righteousness, and mercy.

Special Considerations. The Protestant Reformation under Martin Luther was influenced by the Book of Habakkuk. Luther's discovery of the biblical doctrine that the just shall live by faith came from his study of the apostle Paul's beliefs in the Books of Romans and Galatians. But Paul's famous declaration, "The just shall live by faith" (Rom. 1:17), is a direct quotation from Habakkuk 2:4. Thus, in this brief prophetic book, we find the seeds of the glorious gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

HABAZZINIAH [hab uh zih NIGH yuh]—the grandfather of Jaazaniah, leader of the RECHABITES (Jer. 35:3; Habaziniah, KJV).

HABERGEON (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE).

HABIRU [hah BIHR roo]—the people of a broad social movement that took place throughout the ancient Near East from about 2000 to 1100 B.C. The word Habiru comes from the Akkadian language, and its equivalents appeared throughout the period in each of the known languages of the region. While scholars once thought that the word described an ethnic group, they now believe it was merely a descriptive word that may have meant "immigrant." This conclusion agrees with the texts where the word appears, for they picture the Habiru as foreigners.

The Habiru apparently often hired themselves out as mercenaries, or soldiers of fortune. Although the word Habiru does not actually appear in the Bible, some scholars believe the reference to Abraham as "the Hebrew" in Genesis 14:13 may indicate that he was considered a part of the Habiru. See also Exodus 21:2.

HABITATION—a dwelling place. Solomon referred to the temple as God's "house of habitation" (2 Chr. 6:2, KJV). The church is also called "a habitation of God in the Spirit" (Eph. 2:22).

HABOR [HAY bohr]—a tributary of the Euphrates River that flowed through Gozan, a region of Mesopotamia. Tiglath–Pileser (1 Chr. 5:26) and "the king of Assyria" (2 Kin. 17:6)—probably Sargon II—settled along the Habor some of the Israelites who had been deported from Samaria. Habor is probably the modern Khabur River.

HACALIAH [hah kuh LIGH uh]—the father of Nehemiah, the governor of Israel after the captivity (Neh. 1:1; Hachaliah, KJV; Neh. 10:1).

HACHILAH [huh KIGH luh]—a hill in Judah opposite Jeshimon, a barren district in the Wilderness of Ziph. This site was one of David's hideouts from Saul (1 Sam. 23:19; Hakileh, NIV).

HACHMONI [hak MOE nigh] (wise)—the father of Jehiel (1 Chr. 27:32; Hacmoni, NIV).

HACHMONITE [HAK muh night]—a member of a family founded by HACHMONI (1 Chr. 11:11).

HADAD [HAY dad] (thunderer)—a name of four men and one foreign god in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Bedada and king of Avith, a city of Edom. Hadad defeated Midian in the field of Moab (Gen. 36:35–39; Hadar, NASB, REB, NRSV).
2. A prince of the Edomites. As a young child, Hadad escaped from Edom to Egypt during the six-month period when Joab, the leader of Israel's army, was killing every male in Edom. The pharaoh gave Hadad a house, land, and food. He also gave the sister of Queen Tahpenes to Hadad for a wife. After David and Joab died, Hadad became an enemy of Solomon (1 Kin. 11:14–25).
3. The eighth of the twelve sons of Ishmael and the grandson of Abraham (1 Chr. 1:30), also called Hadar (Gen. 25:15, KJV).
4. A king of Edom who ruled from the city of Pai (1 Chr. 1:50–51).
5. An ancient storm god. The Assyrians identified Hadad with their weather god Rimmon and the Canaanites identified him with Baal. The name is found in proper names such as Ben-Hadad and Hadadezer. See GODS, PAGAN.

HADADEZER [HAD uh DEE zur] (Hadad is [my] helper)—the son of Rehob and king of Zobah in Syria. Hadadezer's army was defeated by the forces of David and Joab (2 Sam. 8:3–12). He is also called Hadarezer (2 Sam. 10:16, 19, KJV).

HADAD RIMMON [HAY dad RIM mahn] (Hadad the thunderer)—a place in the plain of Megiddo, not far from Jezreel. At Hadad Rimmon King Josiah of Judah was killed and his army was defeated by Pharaoh Necho of Egypt (Zech. 12:11; 2 Chr. 35:24).

HADAR [HAY dahr]—a form of HADAD Nos. 1 and 3.

HADAREZER [HAY duh REE zur]—a form of HADADEZER.

HADASHAH [hah DAH shuh] (new)—a village in the lowlands of Judah (Josh. 15:37).

HADASSAH [hah DAH suh] (myrtle)—the original Hebrew name for ESTHER (Esth. 2:7).

HADATTAH [hah DAH tuh] (new)—a word describing HAZOR, a city in the territory of Judah (Josh. 15:25; Hazor-hadattah, NRSV, NASB, REB, NIV). The KJV and the NKJV treat Hazor and Hadattah as two separate cities; however, the reference is probably to only one city.

HADES [HAY dees]—Greek word for HELL.

HADID [HAY did] (sharp)—a town of Benjamin named with Lod (Lydda) and Ono as a place inhabited by the Benjamites after the captivity (Ezra 2:33). Hadid is identified as modern el-Haditheh, about 5 kilometers (3 miles) northeast of Lydda.

HADLAI [HAD ligh]—the father of Amasa, a chief of the tribe of Ephraim (2 Chr. 28:12).

HADORAM [hah DOHR uhm] (Hadad is exalted)—the name of three Old Testament men:

1. A son of Joktan, who was descended from Shem and Noah (Gen. 10:27).
2. A son of Tou (or Toi), king of Hamath during David's reign (1 Chr. 18:10). Hadoram is also called Joram (2 Sam. 8:10).
3. The superintendent of forced labor under Rehoboam (2 Chr. 10:18). When the ten tribes revolted, Hadoram was sent to Israel as a messenger, but he was stoned to death (2 Chr. 10:18). He is also called Adoniram (1 Kin. 4:6; 5:14) and Adoram (1 Kin. 12:18).

HADRACH [HAY drak]—a city-state of Syria. Called Hatarikka in Akkadian, it was located north of Hamath on the Orontes River (Zech. 9:1).

HAFT—KJV word for HILT.

HAGAB [HAY gab] (locust)—an ancestor of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants) who returned to Jerusalem after the captivity (Ezra 2:46).

HAGABA, HAGABAH [HAG uh buh] (locust)—the ancestor of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants) who returned to Jerusalem after the captivity (Ezra 2:45).

HAGAR [HAY gahr]—the Egyptian bondwoman of Sarah who bore a son, ISHMAEL, to Abraham (Gen. 16:1–16). After waiting ten years for God to fulfill his promise to give them a son, Sarah presented Hagar to Abraham so he could father a child by her, according to the custom of the day. Sarah's plan and Abraham's compliance demonstrated a lack of faith in God.

When Hagar became pregnant, she mocked Sarah, who dealt with her harshly. Hagar then fled into the wilderness, where, at a well on the way to Shur, she encountered an angel of the Lord. The angel revealed Ishmael's future to Hagar—that his descendants would be a great multitude. Tradition has it that Hagar is the ancestress of all the Arab peoples and of the prophet Muhammad. Hagar called the well Beer Lahai Roi, "The well of the Living One who sees me."

When Hagar returned to Abraham's camp, Ishmael was born and accepted by Abraham as his son. But when Ishmael was fourteen, Isaac, the promised son, was born. The next year Ishmael mocked Isaac at the festival of Isaac's weaning. At Sarah's insistence and with God's approval, Hagar and Ishmael were expelled from Abraham's family. Abraham grieved for Ishmael, but God comforted him by revealing that a great nation would come out of Ishmael.

Hagar and Ishmael wandered in the wilderness until their water was gone. When Hagar laid her son under the shade of a bush to die, the angel of the Lord appeared to Hagar and showed her a well. This is a beautiful picture of God's concern for the outcast and helpless.

In Paul's allegory in Galatians 4, Hagar stands for Mount Sinai and corresponds to the earthly Jerusalem, while Isaac stands for the children of promise who are free in Christ.

HAGARENES [HAG uh reenz]—a form of HAGRITES.

HAGARITES [HAG uh rights]—a form of HAGRITES.

HAGGAI [HAG eye] (festive)—an Old Testament prophet and author of the Book of Haggai. As God's spokesman, he encouraged the captives who had returned to Jerusalem to complete the reconstruction of the temple. This work had started shortly after the first exiles returned from Babylon in 538 B.C. But the building activity was soon abandoned because of discouragement and oppression. Beginning in 520 B.C., Haggai and his fellow prophet, Zechariah, urged the people to resume the task. The temple was completed five years later, about 515 B.C. (Ezra 5:1).

Also see HAGGAI, BOOK OF.

HAGGAI, BOOK OF—a short prophetic book of the Old Testament written to encourage the people of Israel who had returned to their native land after the captivity in Babylon.

Structure of the Book. The two short chapters of Haggai contain four important messages, each dated to the very month and day it was delivered. He called on the people to rebuild the temple, to remain faithful to God's promises, to be holy and enjoy God's great provisions, and to keep their hope set on the coming of the MESSIAH and the establishment of His kingdom.

Authorship and Date. This book was written by the prophet Haggai, whose name means "festive." Like those whom he encouraged, he probably spent many years in captivity in Babylon before returning to his native land. A contemporary of the prophet Zechariah, he delivered these messages of encouragement "in the second year of King Darius" (1:1), a Persian ruler. This dates his book precisely in 520 B.C.

Historical Setting. Haggai takes us back to one of the most turbulent periods in Judah's history—their captivity at the hands of a foreign power, followed by their release and resettlement in Jerusalem. For more than fifty years they were held captive by the Babylonians. But they were allowed to return to their native land, beginning in 538 B.C., after Babylon fell to the conquering Persians. At first, the captives who returned worked diligently at rebuilding the temple, but they soon grew tired of the task and gave it up altogether. Haggai delivered his messages to motivate the people to resume the project.

Theological Contribution. Haggai urged the people to put rebuilding the temple at the top of their list of priorities. This shows that authentic worship is a very important matter. The rebuilt temple in Jerusalem was important as a place of worship and sacrifice. Centuries later, at the death of Jesus “the veil of the temple was torn in two” (Luke 23:45), demonstrating that He had given Himself as the eternal sacrifice on our behalf.

Special Considerations. The Book of Haggai ends with a beautiful promise of the coming of the Messiah. Meanwhile, God’s special servant, ZERUBBABEL, was to serve as a “signet ring” (2:23), a sign or promise of the glorious days to come. As the Jewish governor of Jerusalem under appointment by the Persians, Zerubbabel showed there was hope for the full restoration of God’s Covenant People in their native land.

HAGGEDOLIM [HAH guh doe lihm] (the great ones)—the father of the priest Zabdiel (Neh. 11:14, NRSV, NIV).

HAGGERI [huh GHEE righ]—a form of HAGRI.

HAGGI [HAG eye] (born on a feast day)—a son of Gad and founder of a tribal family, the HAGGITES (Gen. 46:16).

HAGGIAH [hug EYE yuh] (festival)—a descendant of Merari, son of Levi (1 Chr. 6:30).

HAGGITES [HAG ights]—descendants of HAGGI (Num. 26:15).

HAGGITH [HAG ith] (festival)—the fifth wife of David and the mother of Adonijah, who later claimed the throne (1 Chr. 3:2).

HAGIOGRAPHA [HAG ee AHG ruh fuh] (holy writings)—the third division of the Hebrew Old Testament. The other two divisions are the Law and the Prophets. Also known as the Writings, the Hagiographa contained eleven books (thirteen in the English Bible), usually in the following order in the Hebrew Bible: Psalms, Job, Proverbs, Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra–Nehemiah, and 1 and 2 Chronicles.

HAGRI [HAG righ]—the father of Mibhar, one of David’s mighty men (1 Chr. 11:38; Haggeri, KJV; Hager, REB).

HAGRITES [HAG rights] (descendants of Hagar)—a nomadic tribe of Aramean or Arabian origin that lived in TRANSJORDAN east of Gilead. The Hagrites were a pastoral BEDOUIN people rich in camels, donkeys, and sheep. During the reign of King Saul, the tribe of Reuben conquered the Hagrites (1 Chr. 5:10; Hagarites, KJV). The Hagrites are mentioned among the tribes that formed a confederacy against Israel (Ps. 83:6; Hagarenes, KJV; Hagar’s people, REB; Hagarites, NKJV).

HAHIROTH [hah HEAR ahth]—a form of PI HAHIROTH.

HAI [HAY eye]—a form of AI.

HAIL—a greeting that involves a wish for the good health and peace of the person addressed. Judas greeted Jesus hypocritically when he went up to Him in the Garden of Gethsemane and said, “Greetings [Hail, KJV], Rabbi!” and then kissed Him (Matt. 26:49). After His resurrection, Jesus met His disciples and said to them, “Rejoice!” (Matt. 28:9; All hail, KJV). Also see GREETING; SALUTATION.

HAILSTONES—precipitation in the form of pellets of ice. Although hailstones are not common in Palestine, they are reported in the Bible. The seventh plague that struck the land of Egypt before the Exodus was a destructive storm of hail (Ex. 9:18–34). In Joshua’s day more men of the Amorite army were killed by “large hailstones from heaven” (Josh. 10:11) than by the sword of the Israelites. The Book of Revelation uses imagery similar to the seventh plague of Egypt to describe God’s power. The fifth trumpet of judgment brought hail and fire mingled with blood (Rev. 8:7), and the seventh bowl of God’s wrath was a plague of hail (Rev. 16:21).

• This stone engraving on the Tower of the Winds at Athens shows the northeast wind emptying a container filled with hailstones.

HAIR—the hairy coating of an animal or the human body, especially the hair covering a human head. In the Bible the word hair usually means the hair on a human head. In a few cases the word refers to animal hair or human hair other than on the head (Gen. 25:25; Mark 1:6).

In Old Testament times men as well as women wore long hair. Both Samson and Absalom were admired for their long, full hair (Judg. 16:13–14; 2 Sam. 14:25–26). Baldness was considered embarrassing (2 Kin. 2:23–24; Is. 3:24), and Israelite men were forbidden to cut the forelocks of their hair (Lev. 19:27). But people under a NAZIRITE vow shaved off the hair they had dedicated when the vow was completed (Num. 6:18).

Women apparently left their hair loose. Both men and women groomed their hair (Is. 3:24), because leaving it unkempt was a sign of mourning (Ezra 9:3). Beautiful hair was prized by both men and women (Song 4:1; 5:11), while gray hair on the heads of the aged was a badge of honor (Prov. 16:31; 20:29).

In the New Testament era, men wore their hair much shorter than women's (1 Cor. 11:14–15). Christian women were instructed not to wear elaborately arranged hair (1 Pet. 3:3). In Palestine, honored guests often had their heads anointed. On two occasions Jesus' feet were anointed by women who then dried them with their hair (Luke 7:38–46; John 12:1–8). Jesus' statement that the Father has numbered each person's hairs (Matt. 10:30) shows God's concern for even the tiny and insignificant details of life.

HAKILAH [huh KIGH luh]—a form of HACHILAH.

HAKKATAN [HAK uh tan] (the small one)—the father of Johanan, who returned from the captivity with Ezra (Ezra 8:12).

HAKKOZ [HAK ahz]—a priest and chief of the seventh division of service in the sanctuary (1 Chr. 24:10; Ezra 2:61; Neh. 3:4, 21). Also see KOZ.

HAKUPHA [huh KOO fuh]—an ancestor of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants) who returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:51).

HALAH [HAY luh]—a district of the Assyrian Empire to which SHALMANESER exiled some of the Israelites. Apparently the region included the basin of the Habor (Khabur) River (2 Kin. 17:6).

HALAK [HAH luhk]—a mountain in southern Palestine that marked the southern limit of Joshua's conquests (Josh. 11:17). Halak is perhaps the modern Jebel Halaq, northeast of Abdeh.

HALF-SHEKEL [SHEK uhl]—the amount of payment required for the annual temple tax of each male Israelite over twenty years of age (Ex. 30:13). A half-shekel was roughly equivalent to two days' pay for a common laborer. Also see MONEY OF THE BIBLE.

HALF-TRIBE—a term used in the Old Testament to refer to the two separate settlements of the tribe of Manasseh—one east of the Jordan River and the other in central Palestine west of the Jordan. During the days of Moses, half of the people of the tribe of Manasseh requested permission to settle the territory east of the Jordan after the land was conquered. Moses agreed to this request, on the condition that the entire tribe assist in the conquest of Canaan (Num. 32:33–42; Deut. 3:12–13; Josh. 1:12–18).

HALHUL [HAL huhl]—a town in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:58), about 6 kilometers (4 miles) north of Hebron.

HALI [HAY ligh]—a border town in Asher, between Helkath and Beten (Josh. 19:25).

HALL—a large open court in the temple in Jerusalem, Solomon's palace, and other large buildings in Bible times (1 Kin. 7:50; 2 Chr. 4:22; Matt. 22:10). Other translations render the Hebrew word for hall as "porch" or "parlor."

HALL, JUDGMENT (see JUDGMENT).

HALLEL [hah LELL] (praise thou the Lord)—a song of praise celebrating God's mighty acts on behalf of His Chosen People, the nation of Israel. The so-called Egyptian Hallel is contained in Psalms 113–118. It was sung in Jewish homes at the PASSOVER meal and at other major FEASTS AND FESTIVALS during the year.

HALLELUJAH—a form of ALLELUIA.

HALLOHESH [hah LOW hesh] (the whisperer)—the name of one or two men in the Book of Nehemiah:

1. The father of Shallum, who helped rebuild the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:12; Halohesh, KJV).
2. A man who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah after the captivity (Neh. 10:24). He may be the same person as No. 1.

HALLOW (see HOLINESS).

HALOHESH [ha LOW hesh]—a form of HALLOHESH.

HALT (see DISABILITIES AND DEFORMITIES).

HAM [hamm]—the name of a person and two places in the Old Testament:

1. The youngest of Noah's three sons (Gen. 9:18, 24). Ham, along with the rest of Noah's household, was saved from the great Flood by entering the ark (Gen. 7:7). After the waters went down and Noah's household left the ark, Ham found his father, naked and drunk, asleep in his tent. Ham told his brothers, Shem and Japheth, who covered their father without looking on his nakedness. Noah was furious because Ham had seen him naked, and he placed a prophetic curse on Canaan, the son of Ham (Gen. 9:18, 25). The Canaanites were to serve the descendants of Shem and Japheth (Gen. 9:26–27; Josh. 9:16–27).

   Ham had four sons: Cush, Mizraim, Put and Canaan (Gen. 10:6). The tribe of Mizraim settled in Egypt, while the tribes of Cush and Put settled in other parts of Africa. The tribe of Canaan populated Phoenicia and Palestine.
2. A city east of the Jordan River during the time of Abraham. It was attacked by Chedorlaomer and other allied kings (Gen. 14:5). The modern city of Ham lies 6 kilometers (4 miles) south of Irbid.
3. Another name for Egypt, used in poetry (Ps. 78:51; 105:23, 27).

HAMAN [HAY mun]—the evil and scheming prime minister of Ahasuerus (Xerxes I), king of Persia (485–464 B.C.). When MORDECAI refused to bow to Haman, Haman plotted to destroy Mordecai and his family, as well as all of the Jews in the Persian Empire. But ESTHER intervened and saved her people. Haman was hanged on the very gallows he had constructed for Mordecai (Esth. 3:1—9:25). This shows that God is always in control of events, even when wickedness and evil seem to be winning out.

HAMATH [HAY math]—the name of a city and a territory in the Old Testament:

1. An ancient city of Syria situated on the Orontes River about 78 kilometers (125 miles) north of Damascus. The city was on the main trade route that connected Mesopotamia to the east with Egypt to the south. The prophet Amos called Hamath great probably because the city’s influence was spread over a wide area (Amos 6:2).

2. The territory that surrounded the city of Hamath in ancient Syria. In the days of David, the King of Hamath, Toi (or Tou), was friendly to Israel. He congratulated David for defeating their common enemy, King Hadadezer of Damascus (2 Sam. 8:9–10; 1 Chr. 18:9–10). King Solomon later controlled Hamath, where he built storage depots (2 Chr. 8:4). Archaeological sources reveal that numerous kings of Syria–Palestine—including the king of Hamath, Ahab of Israel, and Ben-Hadad of Damascus—formed an alliance to stop the advance of King Shalmaneser III of Assyria in 853 B.C. at the battle of Qarqar.

   About 780 B.C., Jeroboam II, king of Israel, took Hamath for Israel (2 Kin. 14:28). About 722 B.C., Syria–Palestine fell to Assyria. Sargon, king of Assyria, settled colonists from Hamath in cities of Samaria (2 Kin. 17:24; Is. 36:18–20; 37:13, 18–20). The colonists worshiped an idol called Ashima (2 Kin. 17:30), which brought the Lord’s anger upon them (2 Kin. 17:25). Likewise, some Israelites were deported from Samaria and settled in Hamath (Is. 11:11).

HAMATH ZOBAH [HAY meth ZOE buh]—a city of Syria captured by King Solomon (2 Chr. 8:3).

HAMATHITES [HAY meth ights]—the people of Hamath (Gen. 10:18).

HAMITES [HAM ites]—the descendants of HAM (1 Chr. 4:4).

HAMMATH [HAM eth] (hot spring)—the name of a city and a man:

1. A fortified city of Naphtali (Josh. 19:35). Hammath is probably identical with Hammon and Hammoth Dor, which was assigned to the Levites. It is the modern Hamman Tabariyeh, situated on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee.
2. The founder of the house of Rechab, a family of the Kenites (1 Chr. 2:55).

HAMMEDATHA [ham ih DAY thuh]—the father of Haman the Agagite (Esth. 3:1).

HAMMELECH [HAM uh lek]—the father of Jerahmeel and Malchiah (Jer. 36:26; 38:6, KJV). The Hebrew word is probably not a proper name, but a general title that means “the king.” Hence, the NKJV has “the king’s son.”

HAMMER (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

HAMMOLECHETH [huh MOH luh keth]—a form of HAMMOLEKETH.

HAMMOLEKETH [huh MOH luh keth] (she who reigns)—a daughter of Machir and sister of Gilead, the grandson of Manasseh (1 Chr. 7:18; Hammolecheth, NASB, NRSV).

HAMMON [HAM uhn] (hot spring)—the name of two settlements in Israel:

1. A frontier village of Asher (Josh. 19:28).
2. A town of Naphtali allotted to the Levites (1 Chr. 6:76). It probably is the same place as Hammath (Josh. 19:35) and Hammoth Dor (Josh. 21:32).

HAMMOTH DOR [HAM uhth DOHR] (hot springs of Dor)—a fortified city of Naphtali allotted to the Gershonite Levites (Josh. 21:32). It is probably the same place as Hammon (1 Chr. 6:76) and Hammath (Josh. 19:35).

HAMMUEL [HAM yoo el]—a form of HAMUEL.

HAMMURAPI, CODE OF [hah muhr RAH pee]—an ancient law code named after a king who ruled Babylonia from about 1792 to 1750 B.C. These laws from the ancient world are valuable to Bible students because they are so similar to the Law as revealed to Moses in the first five books of the Old Testament.

The Code of Hammurapi was discovered in 1901–02 by the archaeologist V. Scheil at Susa, an early city of the ancient Babylonians. It was written on a seven-foot-high stone monument (called a stele) with the upper part picturing Hammurapi receiving a scepter and a ring, symbols of justice and order, from Shamash, the Babylonian sun-god and divine lawgiver. The rest of the monument contains the code; the direction of writing is from top to bottom. Hammurapi's law dates from about 300 years after Abraham and some 300 years before the events described in the books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Deuteronomy. This law code was written for a complex urban culture, in contrast to the simple agricultural culture of Palestine.

The contents of Hammurapi's Code are listed as follows:

1. Various offenses and crimes, including false witness, sorcery, corrupt judgment, theft, and kidnapping.
2. Property, with special reference to crown tenants, tenant farmers, and loans of money or seed. The king of Babylon owned crownland in the Old Babylonian period, as did the God of Israel. According to the code, land owned by the king could not be sold.
3. Commercial law, related to partnerships and agencies.
4. Marriage law, including dowry settlements, bridal gifts, divorce, and matrimonial offenses.
5. The firstborn, who had special rights and privileges (compare Deut. 15:19).
6. Special cases involving women and priestesses, whose support was weakened by an increase in state and private ownership of land.
7. Adoption, as it relates to Genesis 17:17–18.
8. Assault and damage to persons and property, including pregnant women, a surgeon's liability in an eye operation, and the hire of boats.
9. Agricultural work and offenses, including goring by an ox (compare Ex. 21:28–32).
10. Rates and wages for seasonal workers, hire of beasts, carts and boats, and so forth.
11. An appendix concerning slaves, including their purchase and sale.

The contents of the Code of Hammurapi and the Law of Moses are similar in many ways. This may be a result of the common cultural background the Babylonians and Israelites shared. Both were ancient peoples of the Near East who inherited their customs and laws from common ancestors. Yet it should be noted that much is different in the Old Testament revelation. For example, the Law given at Mount Sinai reflects a unique and high view of the nature of God, and the Old Testament law is presented as an expression of His holy nature, as Leviticus 19:2 clearly shows. Also, when compared with the Code of Hammurapi, the Old Testament law is usually less harsh.

HAMONAH [huh MOE nuh] (multitude)—the symbolic name of a city in the Valley of HAMON GOG where the evil forces of GOG will be defeated (Ezek. 39:16).

HAMON GOG [HAY muhn GAHG] (multitude of Gog)—the name of a valley where the evil forces of GOG and his allies will be defeated in their final conflict with Israel (Ezek. 39:11, 15).

HAMOR [HAY mohr] (donkey)—the father of SHECHEM. Hamor was killed with Shechem in revenge by Levi and Simon after Shechem raped their sister Dinah (Gen. 34:2–26). Jacob purchased land from the sons of Hamor and built an altar upon it (Gen. 33:19). Later, Joseph was buried on this land (Josh. 24:32).

HAMRAN [HAM ran]—a form of HEMDAN.

HAMSTRING—to cripple by cutting the hamstrings, or leg tendons, of horses (1 Chr. 18:4; hough, KJV) or other animals (Gen. 49:6). When horses were captured from the enemy, the great muscles on their hind legs were sometimes clipped to render the horses useless for battle (Gen. 49:6; Josh. 11:6, 9; 2 Sam. 8:4; 1 Chr. 18:4).

HAMUEL [HAM yoo el]—a son of Mishma, a descendant of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:26; Hammuel, NASB, NIV, NRSV).

HAMUL [HAY muhl]—a son of Perez, who was the son of Judah by Tamar (Gen. 46:12).

HAMULITES [HAY muhl ights]—the descendants of HAMUL (Num. 26:21).

HAMUTAL [huh MYOO tuhl]—a daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah, one of King Josiah's wives, and the mother of Jehoahaz and Zedekiah (2 Kin. 23:31; 24:18).

HANAMEEL [huh NAM ih el]—a son of Shallum and a cousin of Jeremiah the prophet. Jeremiah purchased a field from Hanameel during the siege of Jerusalem by the Babylonians (Jer. 32:7–9, 12; Hanamel, NRSV, REB, NIV).

HANAN [HAY nuhn] (merciful)—the name of eight or nine Old Testament men:

1. A son of Shashak and a chief of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:23).
2. A son of Azel and a descendant of Saul and Jonathan (1 Chr. 8:38).
3. A son of Maachah and one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:43).
4. The founder of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants) who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:46).
5. A Levite who helped Ezra interpret the law to the people (Neh. 8:7).
6. A Levite who sealed the covenant under Nehemiah (Neh. 10:10; 13:13). He may be the same person as No. 5.
7, 8. Two chiefs of the people who sealed the covenant under Nehemiah (Neh. 10:22, 26).

9. A son of Igdaliah and a prophet whose sons had a room in the temple (Jer. 35:4).

HANANEEL [HAN uh neel] (God is merciful)—a tower on the north wall of Jerusalem near the Sheep Gate and the Tower of the Hundred (Jer. 31:38; Hananel, NIV, NASB, REB, NRSV).

HANANI [hah NAH nigh] (gracious gift of the Lord)—the name of six Old Testament men:

1. The father of Jehu (1 Kin. 16:1, 7).
2. A son of Heman and head of the eighteenth division of musicians appointed by David for the sanctuary (1 Chr. 25:4, 25).
3. A seer who rebuked Asa for paying tribute money to Ben-Hadad, king of Syria (2 Chr. 16:7).
4. A priest who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:20).
5. A brother of Nehemiah who brought news of Jerusalem to Susa and later was made governor of Jerusalem (Neh. 1:2; 7:2).
6. A Levite who played an instrument at the dedication of the repaired walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:36).

HANANIAH [han uh NIE uh] (The Lord is gracious)—the name of fifteen men in the Old Testament:

1. An ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy (1 Chr. 3:19, 21; Luke 3:27).
2. A son of Shashak (1 Chr. 8:24).
3. A leader of a division of priests in David's time (1 Chr. 25:4, 23).
4. A commander in the army of King Uzziah of Judah (2 Chr. 26:11).
5. A son of Bebai. Hananiah divorced his foreign wife following the captivity (Ezra 10:28).
6. A perfumer who helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls during Nehemiah's time (Neh. 3:8).
7. The son of Shelemiah. Hananiah helped rebuild Jerusalem's walls during Nehemiah's time (Neh. 3:30).
8. An official in Jerusalem during Nehemiah's time (Neh. 7:2).
9. A clan leader who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah's time (Neh. 10:23).

10. A clan leader in the days of the high priest Joiakim after the captivity (Neh. 12:12).
11. A priest who blew the trumpet at the dedication of Jerusalem’s rebuilt wall (Neh. 12:41).
12. A false prophet in the prophet Jeremiah’s time (Jeremiah 28).
13. A prince under King Jehoiakim of Judah (Jer. 36:12).
14. An ancestor of the guard who arrested the prophet Jeremiah (Jer. 37:13).
15. The Hebrew name of Shadrach (Dan. 1:6–7).

HAND—the end of a person’s arm that serves as a grasping and handling tool. The hand enables humans to use tools and to act in ways that are impossible for animals. The Bible speaks often of hands in the literal sense. In the ancient world hands were decorated with bracelets and rings (Gen. 24:22; Ezek. 23:42).

Because hands are involved in almost all human activity, the word is often used symbolically in the Bible. The “hand” of someone or a group can mean power. This gives rise to such expressions as “the hand of Saul,” “the hand of the Egyptians,” and “the hand of my enemies” (Ex. 3:8; 1 Sam. 23:17; Ps. 31:15). Because hands do the will of the entire person, hands may represent someone’s “whole being” (Ps. 24:4; Acts 2:23).

The physical position of the hands suggests a person’s attitude. Uplifted hands symbolize either praise and petition to God or violence against another person (1 Kin. 11:27; Ps. 63:4; 1 Tim. 1:8). Drooping hands mean weariness (Is. 35:3). To lay one’s hands on another’s head conveys transferral (Gen. 48:17; Lev. 16:21). In the churches of the New Testament, the ordination of church officials regularly involved this custom (1 Tim. 5:22).

The expression “hand of God” refers to His great power (Deut. 2:15; Ezek. 1:3). Often the emphasis of this expression is on God’s power in creation (Ps. 8:6; Is. 64:8). Sometimes His power in judgment is emphasized, especially in the phrase, “His hand is outstretched” (Ruth 1:13; Is. 9:12, 17). However, God may also extend His hand to express His mercy and forgiveness (Ps. 37:24).

HANDBREADTH—a linear measurement based on the width of the palm, four fingers closely pressed together. The psalmist used the word "handbreadths" to describe the brevity of human life (Ps. 39:5). Also see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

HANDKERCHIEF—a small cloth used by the Romans for wiping the hands and face. During the time of the Roman occupation of Palestine, the Jews started using handkerchiefs. In Jesus' parable of the minas (Luke 19:11–27), the wicked servant stored his master's mina in a handkerchief (v. 20). The same Greek word (soudarion) is used of the burial cloths used to cover the face of Lazarus in the grave (John 11:44) and the face of Jesus in the garden tomb (John 20:7).

HANDLE—an ax handle (Deut. 19:5) or the knob of a sliding bolt or latch on a door (Song 5:5). Also see LOCK.

HANDPIKE, HANDSTAFF (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE).

HANDS, LAYING ON OF—the placing of hands upon a person by a body of believers in ceremonial fashion to symbolize that person's authority or his appointment to a special task.

The practice of laying hands on someone or something occurs frequently in the Old Testament—particularly the laying of hands on the head of an animal intended for sacrifice. In the account of the ritual of the DAY OF ATONEMENT, the priest laid his hands on the SCAPEGOAT (Lev. 16:21). This symbolized the transferral of the sins and guilt of the people to the goat, which was taken away into the wilderness. The act of laying on of hands in the Old Testament was also associated with blessing (Gen. 48:18), installation to office (Deut. 34:9), and the setting apart of Levi (Num. 8:10). These passages seem to express the idea of transferral of authority and quality.

In the New Testament Jesus laid his hands on children (Matt. 19:13, 15) and on the sick when he healed them (Matt. 9:18). In the early church the laying on of hands was also associated with healing, the reception of the Holy Spirit (Acts 9:17), the setting apart of persons to particular offices and work in the church (Acts 6:6), the commissioning of Barnabas and Paul as missionaries (Acts 13:3), and the setting apart of Timothy (1 Tim. 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6). The ritual was accompanied by prayer (Acts 6:6).

The laying on of hands was not a magical or superstitious rite that gave a person special power. It expressed the idea of being set apart by God’s people for a special task.

HANDWRITING (see WRITING).

HANES [HAY neez]—a place in Egypt visited by ambassadors of the Pharaoh (Is. 30:4).

HANGING—The usual method of capital punishment in Bible times, especially among the Hebrew people, was stoning, not hanging (Ex. 19:13). Occasionally the Hebrews hung the corpses of lawbreakers on trees, although they were to be removed before nightfall (Deut. 21:22–23). In Egypt a beheaded corpse was occasionally left hanging for a longer period of time (Gen. 40:19). The Persians hanged persons by impaling them on a stake (Ezra 6:11; Esth. 6:4).

In the Bible only Ahithophel (2 Sam. 17:23) and Judas Iscariot committed suicide by hanging, possibly by strangulation.

Jesus’ apostles applied the phrase “hanging on a tree” and the curse connected with it (Deut. 21:23) to Jesus’ death (Acts 5:30; Gal. 3:13). Jesus transformed this dishonorable and shameful fate into a picture of God’s sacrificial and redeeming love.

HANIEL [HAN ee uhl] (grace of God)—a leader and warrior-hero of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:39; Hanniel, NIV, NASB, NRSV). He was a son of Ulla.

HANNAH [HAN nuh] (gracious)—a wife of Elkanah, a Levite of the Kohathite branch of the priesthood (1 Sam. 1:1—2:21). Unable to bear children, Hannah suffered ridicule from Elkanah’s other wife Peninnah, who bore him several children. Hannah vowed that if she were to give birth to a son, she would devote him to the Lord’s service. The Lord answered her prayers, and to her was born the prophet Samuel.

Hannah was faithful to her promise. Making what must have been a heart-rending sacrifice, Hannah took Samuel to the temple after he was weaned, there to “remain forever” (1:21). God rewarded Hannah’s piety and faithfulness with three more sons and two daughters. Hannah’s beautiful thanksgiving prayer (2:1–10) is similar to the song that Mary sang when she learned she would be the mother of Jesus (Luke 1:46–55).

HANNATHON [HAN uh thahn] (dedicated to grace)—a town on the northern boundary of Zebulun (Josh. 19:14).

HANNIEL [HAN ee uhl] (grace of God)—a son of Ephod, of the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 34:23). Hanniel was a leader who helped distribute the land west of the Jordan River after the Israelite conquest of the land of Canaan.

HANOCH [HAY nahk] (dedicated)—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A son of Midian. Hanoch was a descendant of Abraham by Keturah (Gen. 25:4; 1 Chr. 1:33; Henoch, KJV).
2. The oldest son of Reuben and the founder of a tribal family, the Hanochites (1 Chr. 5:3).

HANOCHITES [HAY nahk ights]—a family whose founder was HANOCH (Num. 26:5).

HANUKKAH [HAN uh kuh] (dedication) (see FEASTS AND FESTIVALS).

HANUN [HAY nuhn] (gracious)—the name of three Old Testament men:

1. A son of Nahash, king of the AMMONITES. When David sent ambassadors to console Hanun on the death of Nahash, Hanun dishonored David’s ambassadors by shaving off their beards and cutting off their clothes. Upon hearing of this disgrace, David declared war against the Ammonites (2 Sam. 10:1–4).
2. A man who helped repair the walls of Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 3:13).
3. A son of Zalaph who helped repair the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:30).

HAPHRAIM [haf RAY uhm]—a frontier town of Issachar (Josh. 19:19; Hapharaim, NRSV, NIV). It may be modern Khirbet el-Farriyeh, about 10 kilometers (6 miles) northwest of Megiddo.

HAPPIZZEZ [HAP uh zeez]—a descendant of Aaron whose family became the eighteenth of David's twenty-four divisions of priests (1 Chr. 24:15; Aphses, KJV, REB).

HARA [HAIR uh]—a place in Assyria to which some of the Israelites were taken into captivity by TIGLATH–PILESER (1 Chr. 5:26).

HARADAH [huh RAY duh] (fear)—a place where the Israelites camped in the wilderness (Num. 33:24–25).

HARAN [HAIR uhn]—the name of three men and one city in the Old Testament:

1. The third son of Terah, Abraham's father, and the younger brother of Abraham. Haran was the father of Lot, Milcah, and Iscah (Gen. 11:26–31).
2. A son of Caleb by Ephah, Caleb's concubine. Haran was the father of Gazez (1 Chr. 2:46).
3. A Levite from the family of Gershon and a son of Shimei. Haran lived during David's reign (1 Chr. 23:9).

- Cone-shaped Syrian houses built near the mound of ancient Haran in Mesopotamia— the city where Abraham lived before journeying to Canaan (Gen. 11:31, 32).

HARAN [HAIR uhn] (crossroads)—a city of northern Mesopotamia. Abraham and his father Terah lived there for a time (Gen. 11:31–32; 12:4–5). The family of Abraham's brother Nahor also lived in this city for a time, as did Jacob and his wife Rachel (Gen. 28:10; 29:4–5). The city was on the Balikh, a tributary of the Euphrates River, 386 kilometers (240 miles) northwest of Nineveh and 450 kilometers (280 miles) northeast of Damascus. Haran lay on one of the main trade routes between Babylonia and the Mediterranean Sea. Like the inhabitants of Ur of the Chaldeans, Haran's inhabitants worshiped Sin, the moon-god. Second Kings 19:12 records that the city was captured by the Assyrians. Today Haran is a small Arab village, Harran, a spelling that preserves the two r's of the original place name and helps to distinguish it from the personal name Haran (see above). The city name is also spelled Charran (Acts 7:2, 4; KJV).

HARARITE [HAIR uh right]—a word used to characterize several of David's mighty men: Agee, Shammah, and Sharar (2 Sam. 23:11, 33).

HARBONA [hahr BOE nuh]—one of the eunuchs, or chamberlains, responsible for the harem of King Ahasuerus (Xerxes I) of Persia (Esth. 1:10; 7:9).

HARD SAYING—a phrase in the Gospel of John (John 6:60) that John uses to indicate that Jesus' teaching was difficult to understand or to accept. In the Bible the word for "hard," when used in reference to spoken language, has a figurative meaning: difficult to understand. Similar expressions in the Old Testament describe the words addressed to Abraham as displeasing (Gen. 21:11), refer to Joseph speaking harshly to his brothers (Gen. 42:7), and denote the words of a legal case as hard or difficult (Deut. 1:17).

HARDNESS OF HEART—stubbornness in opposition to God's will (1 Sam. 6:6; Job 38:30). The classic case in the Bible of such disobedience was the Pharaoh of Egypt, who refused to release the Hebrew people in spite of repeated displays of God's power (Ex. 4:21; 7:3; 14:4, 17).

HARE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HAREPH [HAIR ef]—a son of Caleb and the founder of Beth Gader, a town in Judah (1 Chr. 2:51).

HARETH [HAIR eth]—a form of HERETH.

HARHAIAH [hahr HIGH uh]—the father of Uzziel (Neh. 3:8).

HARHAS [HAHR hass]—a form of HASRAH.

HARHUR [HAHR hur]—an ancestor of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants) who returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:51).

HARIM [HAIR em] (dedicated [to God])—the name of four Old Testament men:

1. A priest in charge of the third division of temple duties (1 Chr. 24:8).
2. An ancestor of many Israelites who returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:32). Harim's descendants divorced their pagan wives (Ezra 10:31).
3. The head of a priestly family who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:5).
4. Another Israelite who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:27).

HARIPH [HAIR if]—the name of two men in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah:

1. The founder of a family whose descendants returned from the captivity (Neh. 7:24). He is also called Jorah (Ezra 2:18).
2. A leader who sealed the covenant, probably as a representative of his family (Neh. 10:19).

HARLOT—a prostitute. The term "harlot" is often used in a symbolic way in the Old Testament to describe the wicked conduct of the nation of Israel in worshiping false gods (Is. 1:21; Jer. 2:20; Ezek. 16).

In the New Testament, harlots were objects of Jesus' mercy (Matt. 21:31–32; Luke 15:30). The apostle Paul used the term in a warning to the Corinthian church against the prevailing sexual immorality that had made Corinth a byword (1 Cor. 6:15–16). In the Book of Revelation, the term harlot is used symbolically of "Babylon the Great"—an apocalyptic image of great moral corruption (Rev. 17:1, 5, 15–16; 19:2).

When the spies entered the Promised Land and came to Jericho, they hid in the house of Rahab the harlot (Josh. 2:1). She made them promise that when the Lord gave Israel the land, she would be spared (Josh. 6:17–25). The New Testament records: "By faith the harlot Rahab did not perish with those who did not believe, when she had received the spies with peace" (Heb. 11:31). Placed among the heroes of faith (Heb. 11:1–40), Rahab brings into bold relief the power of God’s love and mercy to transform a person’s life. She is listed as one of the ancestors of Jesus (Matt. 1:1–16).

Also see PROSTITUTION.

HAR MAGEDON [hahr muh GED uhn]—a form of ARMAGEDDON.

HARMON [HAHR muhn]—an unknown place to which the people of Samaria were to be exiled (Amos 4:3).

HARNEPHER [HAHR nuh fur]—a son of Zophah, of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:36).

HARNESS—the gear with which a domestic animal, such as a horse, is equipped for riding or for pulling a vehicle or farming tool (Ps. 32:9; Jer. 46:4).

HAROD [HAIR uhd] (terror)—a well or spring near the mountains of Gilboa (see Map 3, B–2) by which Gideon and his soldiers camped before they defeated the Midianites (Judg. 7:1; En-harod, REB). Harod is thought to be modern Ain Jalud on the northwest side of Mount Gilboa, about 1.5 kilometers (1 mile) southeast of Jezreel.

HARODITE [HAIR uh dight]—a native or inhabitant of HAROD. Two Harodites are mentioned in the Bible—Shammah and Elika (2 Sam. 23:25)—two of David’s mighty men.

HAROEH [huh ROE uh] (the seer)—a son of Shobal, descended from Judah through Hezron (1 Chr. 2:52). Haroeh may be the same person as REAIAH (1 Chr. 4:2).

HARORITE [HAIR roe right]—a word used to describe Shammoth, one of David’s mighty men (1 Chr. 11:27).

HAROSHETH HAGOYIM [huh ROE sheth huh GOY ihm] (forest of the Gentiles)—a town of Galilee on the north bank of the Kishon River about 26 kilometers (16 miles) northwest of Megiddo (Judg. 4:2; Harosheth-ha-goiim, NRSV). Sisera, the commander of the army of Jabin, king of Canaan, lived in Harosheth Hagoyim.

HARP (see MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE).

HARPOONS—spearlike weapons with barbed heads used in hunting whales and large fish (Job 41:7; barbed irons, KJV). Neither harpoons nor fishing spears, according to Job, were powerful enough to kill LEVIATHAN, the mighty sea monster.

HARROW (see AGRICULTURE; TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

HARSHA [HAHR shuh]—an ancestor of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants), some of whom returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:52).

HART (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HARUM [HAIR uhm]—the father of Aharhel, a descendant of Koz (1 Chr. 4:8).

HARUMAPH [huh ROO mahf]—the father of Jedaiah (Neh. 3:10).

HARUPHITE [huh ROO fight]—a name applied to Shephatiah, a Benjamite warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:5).

HARUZ [HAIR uz]—a man of Jotbah, a place in Judah (2 Kin. 21:19).

HARVEST—the period at the end of the growing season, when crops were gathered. Harvest was one of the happiest times of the year in Palestine (Ps. 126:5–6; Is. 9:3), marked with celebrations and religious festivals (Ex. 23:16). There were two grain harvests. Barley was gathered from mid-April onwards, and wheat from mid-May. The harvest of fruit from trees and vines took place in the fall.

Cutting with a sickle began the process of harvesting grain (Deut. 16:9; Mark 4:29). Then it was gathered into sheaves (Deut. 24:5). Next the grain was taken to the threshing floor, an important local site with a hard surface and often situated on higher ground. Various tools, such as metal-toothed sledges drawn by oxen, were used for threshing (Is. 28:28; 41:15). Then the grain was winnowed, or tossed into the air, with a pitchfork. The wind carried off the chaff, but the heavier kernels and straw fell to the ground (Matt. 3:12).

Finally, the kernels were shaken in a sieve, made of a wooden hoop with leather thongs (Is. 30:28; Amos 9:9). Then the grain was stored.

Harvest became a picture of God's judgment (Jer. 51:33; Joel 3:13), and Jesus compared the Last Judgment with the harvest (Matt. 13:30, 39; Rev. 14:14–20). However, Jesus used the same metaphor for the gathering together of those who believed in Him (Matt. 9:37–38; Luke 10:2), indicating that the final harvest has already begun with His first coming (John 4:35).

HARVESTER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

HASADIAH [hass uh DIGH uh] (the Lord is faithful)—a son of Zerubbabel and a descendant of Jehoiakim, king of Judah (1 Chr. 3:20).

HASENUAH [hass uh NOO uh]—a form of HASSENUAH.

HASHABIAH [hash uh BIGH uh] (the Lord has taken account)—the name of fourteen men in the Old Testament:

1, 2. Two Levites of the family of Merari (1 Chr. 6:45; 9:14).
3. A son of Jeduthun (1 Chr. 25:3, 19).
4. A Levite of the family of Kohath and a descendant of Hebron (1 Chr. 26:30).
5. A son of Kemuel and chief of the tribe of Levi during David's reign (1 Chr. 27:17).
6. A chief of the Levites in the time of King Josiah of Judah (2 Chr. 35:9).
7. A Levite who returned from the captivity with Ezra (Ezra 8:19).
8. One of the twelve priests appointed by Ezra to take care of the gold, the silver, and the dedicated vessels of the temple after the captivity (Ezra 8:24).
9. An Israelite who helped repair the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:17).
10. A Levite who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:11).
11. A Levite, a son of Bunni, who lived in Jerusalem in Nehemiah's time (Neh. 11:15).
12. A Levite descended from Asaph (Neh. 11:22).
13. A priest who was head of the house of Hilkiah during the high priest Jehoiakim's time (Neh. 12:21).
14. A Levite after the captivity (Neh. 12:24).

HASHABNAH [hah SHAHB nah]—one of the Israelites who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:25).

HASHABNIAH [hah shahb nee EYE uh]—the name of two men in the Book of Nehemiah:

1. The father of Hattush (Neh. 3:10; Hashabneiah, NASB, NIV, NRSV).
2. A Levite who officiated at the feast under Ezra and Nehemiah when the covenant was sealed (Neh. 9:5).

HASHBADANA [hahsh buh DAH nuh] (thoughtful judge)—an Israelite who assisted Ezra in reading the Law (Neh. 8:4; Hashbaddanah, REB, NIV, NRSV).

HASHEM [HAY shem]—the father of several warriors who served in the bodyguard unit known as David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:34).

HASHMONAH [hash MOE nuh]—a place in the wilderness where the Israelites camped (Num. 33:29–30).

HASHUB [HASH uhb] (considerate)—an Israelite who helped repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:11; Hasshub, NRSV, NIV, NASB, REB).

HASHUBAH [huh SHOO buh] (considerate)—a son of Zerubbabel and a descendant of Jehoiakim, king of Judah (1 Chr. 3:20).

HASHUM [HASH uhm]—the name of three Old Testament men:

1. An Israelite whose descendants returned with Zerubbabel after the captivity (Ezra 2:19).
2. A priest who helped Ezra read the Law to the returned captives (Neh. 8:4).
3. The head of a family that sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:18).

HASHUPHA [huh SOO fuh]—a form of HASUPHA.

HASMONEAN [haz moe NEE uhn]—the family name of a dynasty of Jewish rulers who held power in Palestine from 135 to 63 B.C. Simon Maccabeus, the leader and high priest of the Jews, established this family in power. He was followed by John Hyrcanus (135–104 B.C.), Aristobulus I (104–103 B.C.), Alexander Janneus (103–76 B.C.), Salome Alexandra (76–67 B.C.) and Aristobulus II (67–63 B.C.).

Soon after the Greek conquest of the ancient Near Eastern world by ALEXANDER the Great, authority over Palestine was given to the Seleucid kings of Syria. Their attempts to force the Jews to adopt Greek ways led to a series of Jewish wars that are recorded in the apocryphal books of Maccabees and in the writings of the Jewish historian Josephus. Under Judas Maccabeus the Jews gained independence from their Syrian rulers. Simon, the brother of Judas Maccabeus, was appointed to the office of HIGH PRIEST. When Simon’s son, John Hyrcanus, succeeded his father, it signaled the beginning of the Hasmonean dynasty.

The Hasmonean rulers gained recognition from Rome, but their period of rule was characterized by constant war with their neighbors, political infighting, murder, terrorism, and strong opposition between the Pharisees and the Sadducees. In 63 B.C. the Romans sent the famous general Pompey to end the Hasmonean rule and to establish Roman authority in Jerusalem.

HASRAH [HASS rah]—the grandfather of Shallum (2 Chr. 34:22), who was also called Harhas (2 Kin. 22:14).

HASSENAAH [hass uh NAY uh]—an Israelite whose descendants helped rebuild Jerusalem's wall (Neh. 3:3).

HASSENUAH [hass uh NOO uh] (hated)—the father of Hodaviah (1 Chr. 9:7; Hasenuah, KJV; Hassenuah, NRSV).

HASSHUB [HASH uhb] (considerate)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Shemaiah (1 Chr. 9:14).
2. An Israelite who helped repair the walls of Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 3:23; Hashub, KJV).
3. A head of a family who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:23).
4. A form of HASHUB (Neh. 3:11).

HASSOPHERETH [HASS soe FEAR eth]—a form of SOPHERETH.

HASUPHA [huh SOO fuh]—an ancestor of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants), some of whom returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Ezra 2:43). The name is also spelled Hashupha (Neh. 7:46, KJV).

HATACH [HAY tak]—a form of HATHACH.

HATE, HATRED—strong dislike, disregard, or even indifference toward someone or something. As such, hate may be seated in a person's emotions or will. Various degrees and types of hatred are described in the Bible. This makes it difficult to define hatred in simple, absolute terms.

The people of God are to hate what God Himself hates with an absolute hatred—sin (Deut. 12:31; Is. 61:8; Heb. 1:9). But God is also said to hate human beings, as when He declared, “Jacob I have loved but Esau I have hated” (Mal. 1:2–3; Rom. 9:13). This is a relative hatred. It is not the opposite of love but a diminished love. God loved Jacob so much that He chose him to become the father of the nation Israel; He did not love Esau in the same way.

To hate our relatives for the sake of Christ (Luke 14:26) means to love them less than we love Christ (Matt. 10:37); it does not mean to hate them absolutely. Believers ought to love their enemies (Matt. 5:43–44) but hate their enemies’ sins (Eph. 5:3–14; Rev. 2:6).

Wicked people, living under the power of Satan, will hate the Lord Jesus, His followers, and their righteous deeds (John 3:20; 8:44). It is the duty of Christians not to strike back but to do good to their enemies (Matt. 5:43–44; Luke 6:27).

HATHACH [HAY thak]—a eunuch in the court of Ahasuerus (Xerxes), king of Persia, appointed to attend to Queen Esther (Esth. 4:5–6; Hatach, KJV).

HATHATH [HAY thath]—a son of Othniel (1 Chr. 4:13).

HATIPHA [huh TIGH fuh]—an ancestor of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants), some of whom returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Ezra 2:54).

HATITA [huh TIGH tuh]—a temple gatekeeper whose descendants returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:42).

HATS—KJV word for TURBANS (Dan. 3:21). Also see DRESS OF THE BIBLE.

HATTIL [HAT uhl]—one of Solomon’s servants. Members of Hattil’s family returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 7:59).

HATTIN, HORNS OF [HAT teen]—a two-peaked hill on the road from Magdala, on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee, to Cana and Nazareth. One of the great battles of history took place near this hill. On July 4, 1187, at the battle of Hattin, the Crusaders suffered a decisive defeat at the hands of Saladin (1138–1193), a Muslim warrior and the sultan of Egypt and Syria. Saladin’s victory at Hattin led to his capture of Jerusalem later in 1187.

HATTUSH [HAT uhsh]—the name of three Old Testament men:

1. A descendant of David who returned with Ezra from the captivity (Ezra 8:2).
2. An Israelite who helped rebuild the walls of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 3:10).
3. A priest who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel and signed the covenant (Neh. 10:4).

HAURAN [HOHR uhn]—a region in TRANSJORDAN east of the Sea of Galilee, north of the Yarmuk River, and south of Damascus and Mount Hermon. According to Ezekiel’s prophetic vision (Ezek. 47:16, 18), Hauran marked the northeastern limits of the land of Israel. Hauran had roughly the same boundaries as the Old Testament BASHAN (Num. 21:33). Noted for its rich and fertile volcanic soil, this region became the breadbasket of the land because of its wheat production.

HAVEN—a harbor or port for ships (Gen. 49:13). The word is also used symbolically to describe God as a place of safety and refuge for the believer (Ps. 107:30).

HAVENS, FAIR (see FAIR HAVENS).

HAVILAH [HAV uh luh]—the name of two men and a land or region:

1. A land perhaps located in eastern Arabia (Gen. 2:11). King Saul’s army attacked the Amalekites “from Havilah all the way to Shur, which is east of Egypt” (1 Sam. 15:7).
2. A son of Cush and a grandson of Ham (Gen. 10:7).
3. A son of Joktan and a grandson of Eber (Gen. 10:29).

HAVOTH JAIR [HAY vahth JAY uhr]—a group of villages, east of the Jordan River in Gilead and Bashan, captured by JAIR, son of Manasseh (Deut. 3:14; Havvoth-jair, REB, NIV, NRSV). A judge named Jair, together with his thirty sons, later ruled over Havoth Jair (Judg. 10:4).

HAWK (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HAY (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

HAZAEL [HAZ a el] (God has seen)—a Syrian official whom the prophet Elijah anointed king over Syria at God's command (1 Kin. 19:15). Sometime between 845 and 843 B.C., Ben-Hadad, king of Syria, sent Hazael to the prophet Elisha to ask whether the king would recover from an illness. Elisha answered that Hazael himself was destined to become king. The next day Hazael assassinated Ben-Hadad and took the throne (2 Kin. 8:7–15). Hazael immediately attacked Ramoth Gilead, seriously wounding King Joram of Israel (2 Kin. 8:28–29).

At the end of Jehu's reign over Israel, Hazael attacked the Israelites east of the Jordan River (2 Kin. 10:32). During the reign of Jehu's successor, Jehoahaz, Hazael oppressed Israel because "the anger of the LORD was aroused against Israel" (2 Kin. 13:3). A gift of the dedicated treasures of the temple from King Jehoash of Judah prevented Hazael from attacking Jerusalem (2 Kin. 12:17–18). When Hazael died, his son Ben-Hadad II succeeded him.

As late as the first century A.D., Hazael was worshiped in Damascus because of the way in which he had adorned the city.

HAZAIAH [huh ZIGH uh] (the Lord sees)—a man of Judah, of the family of Shelah (Neh. 11:5).

HAZAR [HAY zar]—a term meaning "unwalled village" (Lev. 25:31), used often as a prefix for geographical names in the Bible.

HAZAR ADDAR [HAY zur AY dahr] (noble village)—a fortress town on the southwestern border of Judah between Kadesh Barnea and Karkaa (Num. 34:4; Josh. 15:3; Adar, KJV, NKJV, NRSV; Addar, NASB, REB, NIV).

HAZAR ENAN [HAY zur EE nuhn] (village of fountains)—a place, perhaps an oasis, midway between Damascus and the land of Hamath (Num. 34:9–10; Ezek. 47:17; Hazar-enon, NRSV).

HAZAR GADDAH [HAY zur GAH dah]—a village in southern Judah, between Moladah and Heshmon (Josh. 15:27).

HAZAR HATTICON [HAY zar HAT tih kon] (middle village)—a village at the northeast corner of the ideal boundary of Israel (Ezek. 47:16; Hazer-hatticon, NASB, NRSV, NIV; Hazar-enan, REB).

HAZARMAVETH [HAY zur MAY veth]—the third son of Joktan and a descendant of Shem (Gen. 10:26). The descendants of Hazarmaveth (modern Hadhramaut) settled in the southern Arabian Peninsula.

HAZAR SHUAL [HAY zur SHOO uhl] (village of the jackal)—a town in southern Judah (Josh. 19:3; 1 Chr. 4:28).

HAZAR SUSAH [HAY zur SOO suh] (village of the mare)—a village in southern Judah allotted to the tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:5; 1 Chr. 4:31; Hazar Susim, NASB, REB, NIV, KJV, NKJV, NRSV).

HAZAR SUSIM [HAY zur SOO zim] (village of horses)—a form of HAZAR SUSAH.

HAZAZON TAMAR [HAZ uh zahn TAY mur]—a city near the Dead Sea identified as EN GEDI (Gen. 14:7; Hazezon Tamar, NIV, KJV, NKJV).

HAZEL (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

HAZELELPONI [haz ih lehl POE nigh]—the daughter of Etam and the sister of Jezreel, Ishma, and Idbash in the genealogy of Judah (1 Chr. 4:3; Hazzelelponi, NASB, NIV, NRSV).

HAZER–HATTICON [HAY zer HAT tih kon]—A form of HAZAR HATTICON.

HAZERIM [HAH zuh rim] (villages)—villages of the Avim in southwest Palestine, near Gaza (Deut. 2:23, KJV).

HAZEROTH [HAH zuh rahth] (villages)—a place in the WILDERNESS of PARAN where the Israelites camped after leaving Egypt (Num. 11:35). Here Miriam and Aaron criticized Moses’ marriage to an Ethiopian woman and rebelled against him (Num. 12:1–2). Hazeroth is possibly modern ’Ain Hadra, about 48 kilometers (30 miles) northeast of Mount Sinai.

HAZEZON TAMAR [hah ZEE zuhn TAY mur]—a form of HAZAZON TAMAR.

HAZIEL [HAY zee uhl] (God sees)—a Gershonite Levite of the family of Shimei in David's time (1 Chr. 23:9).

HAZO [HAY zoe] (visionary)—a son of Nahor and Milcah and a nephew of Abraham (Gen. 22:22).

HAZOR [HAH zohr] (enclosure)—the name of three cities and one district in the Bible:

1. An ancient Canaanite fortress city in northern Palestine, situated about 16 kilometers (10 miles) northwest of the Sea of Galilee (see Map 3, C–1). When Joshua and the Israelites invaded Palestine, Hazor was one of the most important fortresses in the land (Josh. 11:10). This was due to its enormous size, its large population, and its strategic location on the main road between Egypt and Mesopotamia.

   When the Israelites approached Palestine, Jabin, the king of Hazor, and several other kings formed an alliance against them. Through God's power the Israelites defeated these armies, killed all the people of Hazor, and burned the city (Josh. 11:1–14). The city regained its strength during the time of the JUDGES. Because of Israel's sinfulness, God allowed the armies of Hazor to oppress the Israelites for twenty years (Judg. 4:1–3). Sisera, the captain of the armies of Hazor, and his 900 chariots were miraculously defeated by God through the efforts of Deborah and Barak (Judg. 4:4–24). Solomon later chose Hazor as one of his military outposts (1 Kin. 9:15). The rebuilt city continued to play an important part in the northern defenses of Israel until it was destroyed by the Assyrian king, Tiglath–Pileser (2 Kin. 15:29), about ten years before the collapse of the Northern Kingdom in 722 B.C.
2. A city in the southern desert of Judah (Josh. 15:23).
3. Hazor-Hadattah ("New Hazor") and Kerioth-Hazor ("City of Hazor"), which may be identical sites in southern Judea (Josh. 15:25).

4. A nomadic district or kingdom of villages in the Arabian desert (Jer. 49:28).

HAZOR-HADATTAH [HAH zohr hah DAH tuh]—a form of HAZOR No. 3.

HAZZELELPONI [haz ih lehl POE nigh]—a form of HAZELELPONI.

HE [hay]—the fifth letter of the Hebrew alphabet, used as a heading over Psalm 119:33–40. In the original Hebrew language, each line of these eight verses began with the letter he. Also see ACROSTIC.

HEAD—the upper part of the human body containing the face and brain. In the Bible the head is more the center of sense experience (sight, hearing, etc.) than the center of thinking. To wound an enemy's head was to show his utter defeat, and to cut off someone's head was the ultimate disgrace (Ps. 68:21; Mark 6:14–28). Both priests and kings of Israel were initiated into office by having their heads anointed with oil (Lev. 8:12; 1 Sam. 10:1). In the New Testament those who were sick were also anointed (Mark 6:13; James 5:14). This custom apparently symbolized joy and well-being (Ps. 23:5; 45:7).

The position of a person’s head symbolized various emotions: wagging the head meant derision; bowing the head showed grief; covering the head with one’s hand suggested shame (2 Sam. 13:19; Is. 58:5; Mark 15:29). To lift up a person’s head was to elevate him to higher rank (Gen. 40:20; Jer. 52:31). For blood to be on the head of someone meant for that person to bear responsibility and guilt for some specified action (Josh. 2:19; Acts 18:6). To heap coals of fire on someone’s head meant to make an enemy ashamed by treating him well (Rom. 12:20).

The word “head” is often used of inanimate objects such as rivers to designate a beginning point or top part of the object (Gen. 2:10; Ps. 24:9). In this sense, several important messianic prophecies refer to Christ as the “head cornerstone” (Ps. 118:22; Luke 20:17; 1 Pet. 2:7). He is the head of His body, the church (Eph. 4:15; Col. 1:18).

• Excavations at the site of an ancient church in Jerusalem uncovered these twin pools believed to be the biblical Pool of Bethesda (John 5:1–15).

HEADBAND—an article of feminine attire that the prophet Isaiah predicted would be taken away from the “daughters of Zion [Jerusalem]” (Is. 3:18). Some scholars believe this reference is to gold or silver head ornaments.

HEADDRESSES—ornamental head coverings (Is. 3:20; bonnets, KJV; head-bands, REB). The reference is probably to strips of material wound around the head in turban fashion. According to the prophet Isaiah, headdresses were one of the articles of feminine attire, that would be taken away from the “daughters of Zion [Jerusalem]” when the judgment of the Lord fell upon the city.

HEALING—the process of applying preventive and remedial practices to maintain good health. In the ancient world health was a highly prized possession. The Hebrews tended to think of health primarily in terms of physical strength and well-being. The land of Palestine apparently provided a relatively healthful environment, as compared to Egypt and Mesopotamia—probably because of its location as well as the various laws and practices prescribed by the Law of Moses.

Regulation of Diet. Most of the laws about food consumption are included in the first five books of the Old Testament. The restrictions involving meats were based on two simple tests. Only animals with separated hooves and that chewed the cud were suitable for eating (Lev. 11:3). This meant that pigs and rabbits were unsuitable. Modern medicine has demonstrated that these animals are especially liable to infections with parasites; they are safe only if well-cooked. Thus, the prohibition of these animals for food among the Hebrew people was beneficial to their health.

Rituals. Several rituals were observed among the Hebrew people to maintain sanitary conditions, ceremonial cleanness and to promote good health. One of these involved bodily discharge. Although not all bodily discharges are infectious, many are. Since the Hebrew people lacked ways to determine which discharges were infectious, all were treated as potentially infectious. For example, sputum is mentioned as a possible cause of infection (Lev. 15:8)—a fact that was not positively validated until the nineteenth century.

Another good example of this principle is the instruction given about the disposal of human excrement. A place was set apart outside the camp for this purpose. The Hebrew people were required to carry a spade, dig a hole for the excrement, and cover it (Deut. 23:12–13).

Hygiene. The Law of Moses required that the body and clothes be washed after contact with a diseased or dead person. The regulations about contact with dead bodies specified a period of uncleanness lasting seven days. During this time, the person involved was isolated from other people and required to perform certain acts, including bathing one's body and washing one's clothes (Num. 19:1–22).

Sexual Perversion. The strict laws about sexual morality among the Hebrew people also promoted the prevention of venereal disease. CIRCUMCISION was not only a religious rite, but also a hygienic measure that reduced infection and illness.

Medicine and Physicians. The first medicines probably were introduced to the Hebrews by the Egyptians while they were in bondage. In biblical times medicines were made from minerals, animal substances, herbs, wines, fruits, and other parts of plants. The Bible mentions numerous examples of these primitive medicines—notably the "balm of Gilead," which was probably an aromatic substance taken from an evergreen tree.

Wine mixed with myrrh was used to relieve pain by dulling the senses. This remedy was offered to Jesus when He was on the cross, but He refused to drink it (Mark 15:23). Olive oil and herbs often were used to anoint the sick. The early Christians continued this practice, anointing the sick as they prayed for them (James 5:14).

The Bible refers to the work of physicians (Gen. 50:2; 2 Chr. 16:12; Jer. 8:22). In the New Testament, Luke is mentioned as the "beloved physician" (Col. 4:14).

Medical treatment in the biblical world often included the use of MAGIC, SORCERY, AND DIVINATION. Such practices were prohibited by the Mosaic law; they were seen as inconsistent with the nature of the all-powerful God.

The Ministry of Jesus. The people of Old Testament times tended to think of sickness as punishment for sin. This concept is explored fully in the Book of Job. But Jesus was firmly convinced that His Father's purpose for humankind was health, wholeness, and salvation. He did not teach that disease was a punishment sent by God. And while He was always concerned to heal the sick in body, He also paid close attention to the minds and the spirits of those who suffered.

HEALING, GIFTS OF (see SPIRITUAL GIFTS).

HEART—the inner self that thinks, feels, and decides. In the Bible the word "heart" has a much broader meaning than it does to the modern mind. The heart is that which is central to a person. Nearly all the references to the heart in the Bible refer to some aspect of human personality.

In the Bible all emotions are experienced by the heart: love and hate (Ps. 105:25; 1 Pet. 1:22); joy and sorrow (Eccl. 2:10; John 16:6); peace and bitterness (Ezek. 27:31; Col. 3:15); courage and fear (Gen. 42:28; Amos 2:16).

The thinking processes are said to be carried out by the heart. This intellectual activity corresponds to what would be called "mind" in English. Thus, the heart may think (Esth. 6:6), understand (Job 38:36), imagine (Jer. 9:14), remember (Deut. 4:9), be wise (Prov. 2:10), and speak to itself (Deut. 7:17). Decision-making is also carried out by the heart. Purpose (Acts 11:23), intention (Heb. 4:12), and will (Eph. 6:6) are all activities of the heart.

Finally, heart often means someone's true character or personality. Purity or evil (Jer. 3:17; Matt. 5:8); sincerity or hardness (Ex. 4:21; Col. 3:22); and maturity or rebelliousness (Ps. 101:2; Jer. 5:23)—all these describe the heart or true character of individuals. God knows the heart of each person (1 Sam. 16:7). Since people speak and act from their hearts, they are to guard them well (Prov. 4:23; Matt. 15:18–19). The most important duty of anyone is to love God with the whole heart (Matt. 22:37). With the heart a person believes in Christ and so experiences both love from God and the presence of Christ in the heart (Rom. 5:5; 10:9–10; Eph. 3:17).

HEARTH—a dug-out depression in a house or tent where fires were built for heating or cooking. The smoke from the fire was let out through a hole in the wall, usually translated as CHIMNEY (Hos. 13:3). Also see HOUSE.

HEATH (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

HEATHEN—one of several words used for the non-Jewish peoples of the world. The distinction between the Israelites and the other nations was important because God's relationship with Israel was unique. He chose Israel, rescued the people from Egypt, entered into a COVENANT with them, and gave the nation His laws. God actually planned to bring light and salvation to all nations through Israel (Gen. 12:3; Is. 2:1–3), but this required that they keep separate from the sinful ways of the surrounding nations (Lev. 18:24).

Following Israel's captivity in Babylon, the Jews were more rigid about their separation from the heathen. While the heathen often persecuted the Jews, the Jews generally had contempt for the heathen. These barriers between Jews and non-Jews were broken down in the early church as the gospel of Jesus Christ was taken to all the nations (Matt. 28:19), especially by Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles (Gal. 1:16; Eph. 2:11–22).

HEAVE OFFERING (see SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS).

HEAVEN—a word that expresses several distinct concepts in the Bible:

1. As used in a physical sense, heaven is the expanse over the earth (Gen. 1:8). The tower of Babel reached upward to heaven (Gen. 11:4). God is the possessor of heaven (Gen. 14:19). Heaven is the location of the stars (Gen. 1:14; 26:4) as well as the source of dew (Gen. 27:28).
2. Heaven is also the dwelling place of God (Gen. 28:17; Rev. 12:7–8). It is the source of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:2, 10). Because of the work of Christ on the cross, heaven is, in part, present with believers on earth as they obey God's commands (John 14:2, 23).
3. The word "heaven" is also used as a substitute for the name of God (Luke 15:18, 21; John 3:27). The kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven are often spoken of interchangeably (Matt. 4:17; Mark 1:15).

   At the end of time a new heaven will be created to surround the new earth. This new heaven will be the place of God's perfect presence (Is. 65:17; 66:22; Rev. 21:1). Then there will be a literal fulfillment of heaven on earth.

HEAVENLY CITY, THE—the city prepared and built by God for those who are faithful to Him (Heb. 11:10, 16). Known as the heavenly Jerusalem (Heb. 12:22), this is the city that is to come (Heb. 13:14). These references in Hebrews find their fulfillment in Revelation 21–22. The New Jerusalem is illuminated by the glory of God. It serves as the dwelling place of God among His redeemed forever.

HEAVENS, NEW—a term that, when used with "new earth," refers to the perfected state of the created universe and the final dwelling place of the righteous. The phrase is found in Isaiah 66:22, 2 Peter 3:13, and in a slightly modified form in Revelation 21:1.

Rooted deep in Jewish thought was the dream of a new heaven and a new earth, a re-creation of the universe that would occur following the Day of the Lord (Is. 13:10–13; Joel 2:1–2, 30–31). The concept of a re-created universe is closely related to the biblical account of the Creation and the Fall and the sin of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden (Genesis 1–3). Because of their sin, "the creation was subjected to futility . . . [and] the bondage of corruption" (Rom. 8:19, 21). The need for a new heaven and a new earth arises from human sin and God's judgment, not from some deficiency or evil in the universe (Gen. 3:17).

The apostle Paul referred to the Old Testament doctrine of the Day of the Lord and applied it to the events that will occur at the Second Coming of Christ (2 Pet. 3:10, 13). When Christ returns, this present evil age will give way to the age to come. The universe will be purified and cleansed by the power of God. This will be reminiscent of the purging of the earth in the days of Noah, but on a universal scale.

HEBER [HEE buhr] (associate)—the name of six men in the Bible:

1. A son of Beriah, of the tribe of Asher (Gen. 46:17).
2. The husband of Jael (Judg. 4:11–21).
3. A man of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:18).
4. The head of a family of Gadites (1 Chr. 5:13).
5. A Benjamite and a son of Elpaal (1 Chr. 8:17).

6. A Benjamite and a son of Shashak (1 Chr. 8:22; Eber, NASB, NIV, NKJV, NRSV).

HEBERITES [HEE burr ites]—the descendants of HEBER, of the tribe of Asher (Num. 26:45; Gen. 46:17).

HEBREW (see LANGUAGES OF THE BIBLE).

HEBREW PEOPLE—an ethnic term designating the lineage of the nation of Israel and the Jewish people.

Abram was the first person in the Bible to be called a Hebrew (Gen. 14:13). Thereafter, his descendants through Isaac and Jacob were known as Hebrews (Gen. 40:15; 43:32). The term is used five times in the story of Joseph (Gen. 39:14—43:32), including a reference to Joseph by Potiphar's wife as "the Hebrew servant" (Gen. 39:17). Joseph told Potiphar's chief butler, "For indeed I was stolen away from the land of the Hebrews" (Gen. 40:15).

The origin of the term "Hebrew" is a mystery to scholars. Some believe the word came from Eber, a descendant of Noah through Shem and an ancestor of Abraham (Gen. 10:21, 25; 11:16–26). Eber, literally meaning "on the other side of," may allude to Abraham's departure from a region east of the Euphrates River.

This possibility harmonizes with the statement made by God to the Israelites in Joshua's time: "Then I took your father Abraham from the other side of the River, led him throughout all the land of Canaan, and multiplied his descendants and gave him Isaac. To Isaac I gave Jacob and Esau" (Josh. 24:3–4). Of Eber's descendants, Abraham, Nahor, and Lot stand out. The genealogical list in Genesis 10 and other passages indicate that Abraham was the ancestor of the Hebrews; Nahor was the ancestor of the Arameans; and Lot was the ancestor of the Moabites and the Ammonites (Gen. 10:21, 24, 25; 11:14–27).

Still other scholars believe the Hebrew people are related to a people known as the Habiru. These people are mentioned in clay tablets dating to the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries B.C. They are also featured in the Nuzi, Hittite and Amarna documents of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries B.C. "Habiru," however, is a sociological term, while "Hebrew" is ethnic.

There is considerable evidence in the Old Testament that the Hebrews regarded themselves as a composite race “My father was a Syrian, about to perish, and he went down to Egypt and dwelt there few in number; and there he became a nation” (Deut. 26:5). In their wandering tribal days and during their early years in Canaan, the Hebrews experienced a mixture of blood through marriage with surrounding peoples. When Abraham sought a suitable wife for Isaac, he sent to northwest Mesopotamia, near Haran, for Rebekah, daughter of the Syrian Bethuel (Gen. 24:10; 25:20). Jacob found Rachel in the same location (Genesis 28–29).

Strains of Egyptian blood also appeared in the family of Joseph through Asenath’s two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. 41:50–52). Moses had a Midianite wife, Zipporah (Ex. 18:1–7), and an unnamed Ethiopian (Cushite) wife (Num. 12:1).

Although several unanswered questions about the origin of the Hebrews remain, no culture has equaled their contribution to mankind. In a pagan world with many gods, the Hebrews worshiped one supreme, holy God who demanded righteousness in His people. From the Hebrews also sprang Jesus Christ, who gave His life to set us free from the curse of sin.

HEBREWS, EPISTLE TO THE—the nineteenth book in the New Testament. Hebrews is a letter written by an unknown Christian to show how Jesus Christ had replaced Judaism as God’s perfect revelation of Himself. Hebrews begins with a marvelous tribute to the person of Christ (1:1–3), and throughout the epistle the author weaves warning with doctrine to encourage his readers to hold fast to Jesus as the great High Priest of God. The author makes extensive use of Old Testament quotations and images to show that Jesus is the supreme revelation of God and the all-sufficient Mediator between God and humankind. Because of its literary style and the careful way it develops its argument, Hebrews reads more like an essay than a personal letter.

Structure of the Epistle. The letter begins by showing that Jesus is the Son of God and, therefore, is superior to angels (1:1—2:18) and to Moses (3:1–6). This section contains a warning not to lose the blessings, or “rest,” of God because of unbelief, as the Israelites did under Moses (3:7—4:13).

The second section of the letter (4:14—10:18) attempts to show that Christ is the perfect High Priest because of His unmatched compassion for people and complete obedience to God (4:14—5:10). Following an additional warning against renouncing the faith (5:11—6:20), the author then describes Jesus as a priest according to the order of Melchizedek (7:1–28). The emphasis on Melchizedek, who is mentioned only twice in the Old Testament (Gen. 14:18–20; Ps. 110:4), may seem farfetched to modern readers. However, there is a good reason for comparing Christ to Melchizedek; it is to show that Melchizedek, unlike Aaron, was unique. He had no recorded predecessors or successors. He was, therefore, a priest forever, like the Son of God (7:1–3). As a consequence of His being like Melchizedek, Jesus inaugurated a new and better covenant (8:1–13) because His sacrifice of Himself replaces the sacrifice of “bulls and goats” (9:1—10:18).

The final section of the epistle appeals to the readers not to give up the benefits of Christ’s work as High Priest (10:19—13:17). In an attempt to offset spiritual erosion (10:19–39), the author recalls the heroes of faith (11:1–40). Let their example, he says, encourage the readers to “run with endurance the race that is set before us” (12:1). The letter closes with various applications of faith to practical living (13:1–19), a benediction (13:20–21), and greetings (13:22–25).

Authorship and Date. Other than 1 John, the Epistle to the Hebrews is the only letter inthe New Testament with no greeting or identification of its author. Although the King James Version entitles the book “The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Hebrews,” this title stems from later manuscripts which came to include it. It is highly doubtful, however, that Paul wrote Hebrews. The language, vocabulary, and style of Hebrews differ from Paul’s genuine letters. Such typically Pauline expressions as “Christ Jesus,” “in Christ,” or “the resurrection” are all but absent in Hebrews. When Hebrews and Paul treat the same subjects, they often approach them differently. For example, in Hebrews the "law" means the ritual law, whereas for Paul it means the moral law; "faith" in Hebrews is belief in the trustworthiness of God, whereas for Paul it is a personal commitment to a living Lord. The author of Hebrews sounds more like a Platonic philosopher than Paul when he speaks of the old covenant (8:5) and the law (10:1) as "shadows" of their originals.

There has been no shortage of suggestions concerning who the author may have been. The list includes Luke, Priscilla, Aquila, Clement of Rome, Silvanus, and Philip. The two most likely candidates are Apollos and Barnabas. Both have characteristics that commend them, Apollos because he was an eloquent Alexandrian Jew who knew the Scriptures well (Acts 18:24), and Barnabas because he was a Levite (Acts 4:36). As with the others, however, these suggestions are only possibilities. The writer of the epistle remains anonymous.

One can only make an educated guess about the date and place of composition. Since the author's purpose was to show that Christianity had replaced Judaism, to have been able to point to the destruction of the temple (which occurred in A.D. 70) as an indication that God had no further use for it would have been a decisive argument. Since the author does not make use of this information, it is reasonable to assume the destruction of the temple had not happened yet, thus dating the letter sometime before A.D. 70. The only clue about where Hebrews was written is found in the closing remark, "Those from Italy greet you" (13:24). This may indicate that the author was writing from Italy, presumably Rome.

Historical Setting. The repeated use of Old Testament quotations and images in Hebrews suggests that the people who received this book had a Jewish background. The repeated warnings against spiritual unbelief reveal that the readers of this epistle were on the verge of renouncing the Christian faith and returning to their former Jewish ways (2:1–4; 3:7—4:14; 5:12–6:20; 10:19–39; 12:12–29). Negligence in good deeds and sloppy attendance at worship services (10:23–25) were evidence of a cooling in their faith. In an effort to rekindle the readers' flame of commitment to Christ, the author urges his readers not to retreat from persecution (10:32–39), but to hasten to the front lines. He calls for a new exodus (3:7–19); he holds before them examples of a pilgrim faith (chap. 11); and he tells them not to "draw back" (10:39), but to "go forth to Him, outside the camp, bearing His reproach" (13:13).

Theological Contribution. In a spirit similar to Stephen's defense before the Jewish Sanhedrin (Acts 7), Hebrews sets out to show that Christianity is superior to Judaism because of the person of Jesus Christ, who is the Son of God, the Great High Priest, and the Author of salvation. Christ stands as the peak of revelation, superior to angels (1:1—2:9) and to Moses (3:1–6). He is the Son of God, the reflection of God's own glory and, indeed, the very character and essence of God (1:3). Whatever revelations appeared before Jesus were but shadows or outlines of what was to appear in Him.

Christ is also the Great High Priest (4:14). Whereas earthly priests inherited their office, Christ was appointed by the direct call of God (5:5–6). Whereas earthly priests followed in the lineage of Aaron, Christ, who has no successors, is a priest forever, according to the order of Melchizedek (7:17). Whereas earthly priests ministered within temples made with human hands, Christ ministers within the true sanctuary—the eternal house of God (8:2; 9:24). Whereas earthly priests offered animal sacrifices for their sins as well as for those of the people, Christ offered the one perfect sacrifice that never need be offered again—His sinless self (5:3; 10:4–14).

As the unique Son of God who made the supreme sacrifice of Himself to God, Jesus is described by the author of the book of Hebrews as the "author of their salvation" (2:10), the "finisher of our faith" (12:2), and the "great Shepherd of the sheep" (13:20). Christ saves His people from sin and death, and He saves them for fellowship with God. In Hebrews salvation is called the "rest" of God (4:1), "eternal inheritance" (9:15), the "Most Holy Place" (9:12). These three emphases—Jesus as Son, High Priest, and Savior—are drawn together in one key passage: "Though He was a Son, yet He learned obedience by the things which He suffered. And having been perfected, He became the author of eternal salvation to all who obey Him, called by God as High Priest 'according to the order of Melchizedek' " (5:8–10).

In light of Christ's preeminence, the author urges his readers to hold fast to the true confession and endure whatever suffering or reproach is necessary on its behalf (4:14; 6:18; 13:13).

Special Considerations. Two passages in Hebrews often trouble Christians. In 6:4–6 and 10:26 the author warns that if a person willingly turns from fellowship with Christ, he can no longer be forgiven. The intent of these verses is to cause Christians to remember the great cost of God’s grace and to take their profession of faith seriously. The intent of these verses is not to cause believers to doubt their salvation. There is no example in the Bible where anyone who desired the forgiveness of Christ was denied it.

The backbone of this epistle is the finality of Christ for salvation. This wonderful truth is no less urgent for us today than it was for the original readers of Hebrews. The rise of cults, with their deceptive claims of security, is but one example of the many things that appeal for our ultimate loyalty. Hebrews reminds us that “Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever” (13:8). Because of His perfect sacrifice of Himself, He is still the only Mediator between us and God. Only Jesus is the true Author of our salvation.

- A. Love in the Social Realm 13:1–6
- B. Love in the Religious Realm 13:7–17

IV. Conclusion 13:18–25

HEBRON [HEE bruhn] (alliance)—the name of two cities and two men in the Bible:

1. A city situated 31 kilometers (19 miles) southwest of Jerusalem on the road to Beersheba (see Map 2, C–1). Although it lies in a slight valley, the city is 927 meters (3,040 feet) above sea level, which makes it the highest town in Palestine. Originally Hebron was called Kirjath Arba (Gen. 23:2). Numbers 13:22 speaks of Hebron being built seven years before Zoan in Egypt. This probably refers to the rebuilding of the city by the Hyksos rulers of Egypt. The twelve Hebrew spies viewed Hebron on their mission to explore the Promised Land.

The area surrounding Hebron is rich in biblical history. Abram spent much of his time in Mamre in the area of Hebron (Gen. 13:18). He was living in Mamre when the confederacy of kings overthrew the CITIES OF THE PLAIN and captured Lot (Gen. 14:1–13). Here, too, Abram's name was changed to Abraham (Gen. 17:5). At Hebron the angels revealed to Abraham that he would have a son who would be called Isaac (Gen. 18:1–15). Later, Sarah died at Hebron (Gen. 23:2); Abraham bought the cave of MACHPELAH as her burial place (Gen. 23:9). The present mosque built over the cave is called Haran el-Khalil, "the sacred precinct of the friend (of God)," reminiscent of a title given to Abraham in 2 Chr. 20:7; Is. 41:8; Jas. 2:23.

During the period of the conquest of the land of Canaan, Joshua killed the king of Hebron (Josh. 10:3–27). Later, Caleb drove out the Anakim and claimed Hebron for his inheritance (Josh. 14:12–15). Hebron was also designated as one of the CITIES OF REFUGE (Josh. 20:7). David ruled from Hebron the first seven years of his reign (2 Sam. 2:11), after which he established Jerusalem as his capital.

When Absalom rebelled against his father David, he made Hebron his headquarters (2 Sam. 15:7–12). King Rehoboam fortified the city to protect his southern border (2 Chr. 11:10–12). The discovery of five jar handles stamped with the royal seal dating from the eighth century B.C. testifies that Hebron was a key storage city, perhaps for rations of Uzziah's army (2 Chr. 26:10).

2. The third son of Kohath, the son of Levi (Ex. 6:18). Hebron was an uncle of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. His descendants were called Hebronites (Num. 3:27).
3. A descendant of Caleb (1 Chr. 2:42–43).
4. A town in Asher (Josh. 19:28, KJV; Ebron, NRSV, NKJV). This may be the same town as Abdon (Josh. 21:30).

HEBRONITES [HEE bruhn ites]—the descendants of HEBRON, the third son of Kohath (Num. 3:27; 1 Chr. 26:23, 30–31).

HEDGE—a thorn hedge (Is. 5:5), a stone wall (Ps. 80:12), or a fence or partition of any kind (Mark 12:1). Hedges helped protect vineyards from thieves and predators. They consisted of loose stones or thorny branches or bushes.

HEDGEHOG (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HEEL—the back of the human foot (Gen. 49:17; Jer. 13:22). The psalmist spoke of a friend who had “lifted up his heel against me” (Ps. 41:9)—an apparent reference to treachery and denial. Jesus quoted this verse when Judas betrayed Him on the eve of His crucifixion (John 13:18).

HEGAI [HEG igh]—a eunuch under Ahasuerus (Xerxes), king of Persia, who had responsibility for the royal harem (Esth. 2:3; Hege, KJV).

HEGE [HEE gee]—a form of HEGAI.

HEIFER (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HEIR (see INHERITANCE).

HELAH [HEE luh]—a wife of Ashhur and the mother of Zereth, Zohar, and Ethan (1 Chr. 4:5, 7).

HELAM [HEE luhm]—a place east of the Jordan River near the border of GILEAD where David's army defeated the Syrians (2 Sam. 10:16–17).

HELBAH [HEL buh] (fertile)—a town of the tribe of Asher whose Canaanite inhabitants could not be driven out by the Israelites. "Nor did Asher drive out the inhabitants of Acco or the inhabitants of Sidon, or of Ahlab, Achzib, Helbeh, Aphik, or Rehob" (Judg. 1:31).

HELBON [HEL bahn] (fruitful)—a village of Syria known for its wines (Ezek. 27:18), probably the same place as Halbun (or Khalbun), about 29 kilometers (18 miles) north of Damascus.

HELDAI [HEL digh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A captain of the temple service and one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 27:15). Heldai is also called Heled (1 Chr. 11:30, NASB, NIV, KJV, NKJV, NRSV) and Heleb (2 Sam. 23:29, NASB, KJV, NRSV).
2. An Israelite who brought gold and silver from Babylon to help the exiles who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel (Zech. 6:10). Heldai is also called Helem (Zech. 6:14, NAS, KJV).

HELEB [HEE leb]—a form of HELDAI No. 1.

HELECH [HEE lek]—NIV, NRSV name for the place of origin of the mercenaries who defended the walls of Tyre (Ezek. 27:11).

HELED [HEE led]—a form of HELDAI No. 1.

HELEK [HEE lek] (portion)—a son of Gilead and founder of the HELEKITES (Num. 26:30).

HELEKITES [HEE luh kights]—descendants of HELEK, a son of Gilead of the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 26:30).

HELEM [HEE lem]—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A descendant of Asher (1 Chr. 7:35). Helem may be the same person as Hotham No. 1 (1 Chr. 7:32).
2. A man mentioned by the prophet Zechariah (Zech. 6:14). Helem may be the same person as Heldai No. 2 (Zech. 6:10).

HELEPH [HEE lef]—a town on the southern border of Naphtali (Josh. 19:33).

HELEZ [HEE lez]—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. One of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:26). He was a PELONITE or a PALTITE.
2. A son of Azariah (1 Chr. 2:39).

HELI [HEE ligh] (God is on high)—the father of Joseph in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:23). Heli is the Greek form of Eli.

HELIOPOLIS [he lih OP oh lis]—Greek name for the Egyptian city of ON.

HELKAI [HEL kigh] (the Lord is my portion)—the head of a priestly house in the days of Joiakim the high priest (Neh. 12:15).

HELKATH [HEL kath] (portion)—a town of Asher assigned to the Levites of the family of Gershon (Josh. 19:25). Helkath is also called Hukok (1 Chr. 6:75).

HELKATH–HAZZURIM [HEL kath hah ZUR im]—a Hebrew phrase that means FIELD OF SHARP SWORDS (2 Sam. 2:16).

HELL—the place of eternal punishment for the unrighteous. The NKJV and KJV use this word to translate Sheol and Hades, the Old and New Testament words, respectively, for the abode of the dead.

Hell also translates Gehenna, the Greek form of the Hebrew phrase that means “the vale of Hinnom”—a valley west and south of Jerusalem. In this valley the Canaanites worshiped Baal and the god Molech by sacrificing their children in a fire that burned continuously. Even Ahaz and Manasseh, kings of Judah, were guilty of this terrible, idolatrous practice (2 Chr. 28:3; 33:6).

The prophet Jeremiah predicted that God would visit such destruction upon Jerusalem that this valley would be known as the “Valley of Slaughter” (Jer. 7:31–34; 19:2, 6). In his religious reforms, King Josiah put an end to this worship. He defiled the valley in order to make it unfit even for pagan worship (2 Kin. 23:10).

In the time of Jesus the Valley of Hinnom was used as the garbage dump of Jerusalem. Into it were thrown all the filth and garbage of the city, including the dead bodies of animals and executed criminals. To consume all this, fires burned constantly. Maggots worked in the filth. When the wind blew from that direction over the city, its awfulness was quite evident. At night wild dogs howled as they fought over the garbage.

Jesus used this awful scene as a symbol of hell. In effect he said, “Do you want to know what hell is like? Look at Gehenna.” So hell may be described as God’s “cosmic garbage dump.” All that is unfit for heaven will be thrown into hell.

The word Gehenna occurs twelve times in the New Testament. Each time it is translated as “hell.”

With the exception of James 3:6, it is used only by Jesus (Matt. 5:22, 29–30; 10:28; 23:15, 33; Mark 9:43, 45, 47; Luke 12:5). In Matthew 5:22; 18:9; and Mark 9:47, it is used with “fire” as “hell fire.” So the word “hell” (Gehenna) as a place of punishment is used in the New Testament by Him who is the essence of infinite love.

In Mark 9:46 and 48, hell is described as a place where “their worm does not die and the fire is not quenched.” Repeatedly Jesus spoke of outer darkness and a furnace of fire, where there will be wailing, weeping, and gnashing of teeth (Matt. 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30; Luke 13:28). Obviously this picture is drawn from Gehenna.

The Book of Revelation describes hell as “a lake of fire burning with brimstone” (Rev. 19:20; 20:10, 14–15; 21:8). Into hell will be thrown the beast and the false prophet (Rev. 19:20). At the end of the age the devil himself will be thrown into it, along with death and Hades and all whose names are not in the Book of Life. “And they will be tormented day and night forever and ever” (Rev. 20:10b).

Because of the symbolic nature of the language, some people question whether hell consists of actual fire. Such reasoning should bring no comfort to the lost. The reality is greater than the symbol. The Bible exhausts human language in describing heaven and hell. The former is more glorious, and the latter more terrible, than language can express.

HELLENISM [HELL un is em]—a style of Greek civilization associated with the spread of Greek language and culture to the Mediterranean world after the conquests of Alexander the Great.

On the advice of Aristotle, his teacher, Alexander sought to instill a love for the Greek way of life within those whom he conquered. His generals adopted the same pattern of operation. Conflict soon arose between the Jews and his successors in Israel, the SELEUCIDS. The history of this conflict is detailed in the books of the MACCABEES.

In the Hellenistic period, Greek became the common language throughout the ancient world. So many Jews spoke Greek that an authorized Greek translation of the Old Testament, the SEPTUAGINT, was made at ALEXANDRIA, Egypt. In the Bible, the word “Hellenists” (NKJV) or “Grecians” (KJV) in Acts 6:1 and 9:29 (Grecian Jews, NIV) refers to Greek-speaking Jews.

HELMET (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE).

HELMSMAN—a person who steers a ship (Acts 27:11; master, KJV; pilot, NIV, NRSV; captain, REB, NASB).

HELON [HEE lahn]—a Zebulunite and the father of Eliab (Num. 1:9).

HELP, HELPS—those able to help others (1 Cor. 12:28), or officers of the early church who performed helpful deeds for the poor and the sick.

HELPER—a word used by Jesus to describe the HOLY SPIRIT (John 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7). The Greek word has been translated into English by various versions of the Bible as comforter, advocate, and counselor, as well as helper. This Greek word is so filled with meaning that it is difficult to translate it with one English word.

The Holy Spirit is the one called to our side by Jesus to help us, to stand by us, to strengthen us and give assistance when needed. The Holy Spirit is the “other” helper (John 14:16). Just as Jesus was the Great Helper while on earth, the Holy Spirit is now our Helper, if we desire His help.

HELPMEET—KJV word for helper, companion, or mate, used by God to describe Eve before she was created as Adam’s spouse (Gen. 2:18; helper comparable to him, NKJV; helper suitable for him, NIV).

HEM—KJV word for the border or fringe of a person’s outer garment in Bible times (Ex. 28:33–34; 39:24–26). Tassels were worn by the Israelites on the hems of their garments to remind them of God’s commandments (Num. 15:37–41). The scribes and Pharisees, because they prided themselves on keeping the Law, often enlarged their hems or added additional tassels to show how holy and pious they were. Jesus condemned them for this practice because they did it to be noticed and praised by others (Matt. 23:5).

HEMAM [HEE mam]—a son of Lotan and grandson of Seir (Gen. 36:22). This name is also spelled Homam (1 Chr. 1:39).

HEMAN [HEE muhn] (faithful)—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A son of Zerah and grandson of Jacob. Heman composed a meditative psalm, a prayer for deliverance from sadness (Psalm 88, title).
2. A son of Joel and a grandson of Samuel the prophet (1 Chr. 6:33; 15:17). Presented as “the singer” or “the musician,” he was the first of three chief Levites to conduct the vocal and instrumental music of the tabernacle during the reign of David (1 Chr. 16:41–42).

HEMDAN [HEM dan] (pleasant)—a descendant of Seir the Horite and the oldest son of Dishon (Gen. 36:26). Hemdan is also spelled as Hamran (1 Chr. 1:41, NKJV, NASB, NRSV, REB) and Amram (1 Chr. 1:41, KJV).

HEMLOCK (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

HEMORRHAGE (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

HEN (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HEN [hen] (grace)—a son of Zephaniah (Zech. 6:14), also called Josiah (Zech. 6:10).

HENA [HEN uh]—a town of Syria captured by SENNACHERIB, king of Assyria (2 Kin. 18:34). Hena may be the same place as modern Anah, a town on the Euphrates River about 32 kilometers (20 miles) from Babylon.

HENADAD [HEN uh dad] (grace of Hadad)—a Levite whose descendants helped rebuild the walls of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 10:9).

HENNA (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

HENOCH [HEE nuhk]—a form of HANOCH.

HEPHER [HEE fur]—the name of three men and one town:

1. The youngest son of Gilead and founder of the tribal family of HEPHERITES (Num. 26:32; 27:1).
2. A town west of the Jordan River (Josh. 12:17) near the district of Sochoh (1 Kin. 4:10).
3. A descendant of Judah and a son of Ashhur by Naarah (1 Chr. 4:6).
4. One of David’s mighty men (1 Chr. 11:36).

HEPHERITES [HEE fur ights]—the descendants of HEPHER, son of Gilead (Num. 26:32).

HEPHZIBAH [HEF zih buh] (my delight is in her)—the name of a queen of Judah and a symbolic name:

1. The wife of Hezekiah and the mother of Manasseh (2 Kin. 21:1).
2. A symbolic name used by the prophet Isaiah to refer to a Jerusalem restored to God’s favor (Is. 62:4).

HERALD—an officer sent by a king or other high official to proclaim a message or announce good news (Dan. 3:4).

HERB (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

HERBS, BITTER—herbs eaten by the Jewish people in their celebration of the PASSOVER. These herbs symbolized the bitterness of the Israelites' years in bondage in Egypt (Ex. 1:14). Jewish tradition identifies five plants, including lettuce, as the bitter herb; but modern Jews use horseradish in the Passover meal.

HERD—a group of cattle or other livestock in Bible times. Cattle herds were an important sign of wealth in Israel's agricultural society. Wealthy people, such as Abram (Gen. 13:5) and Jacob (Gen. 32:7; 45:10), often owned vast herds.

Herding was a common occupation in the ancient world, as references to the practice in Egypt (Gen. 47:17) and Amalek (1 Sam. 30:20) indicate. Israelite herdsmen are rarely mentioned in the Bible, although the best-known is the prophet Amos (Amos 1:1; 7:14).

Herds were kept for milk (Deut. 32:14) and meat (Luke 15:23), as well as for work such as plowing (1 Sam. 11:5; Job 1:14) and pulling carts (1 Sam. 6:7). They were fattened in stalls (Amos 6:4; Hab. 3:17) as well as in fields. Herds from Bashan (in northeast Israel) were especially known for their fatness (Ezek. 39:18; Amos 4:1) and strength (Ps. 22:12). Cattle were also important as sacrificial animals (Lev. 27:32; Deut. 15:19), or for large public occasions such as Passover (2 Chr. 35:8) and the dedication of the temple (2 Chr. 5:6; 7:5).

HERDSMAN (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

HERESH [HEAR esh]—a Levite among the captives who returned to Jerusalem (1 Chr. 9:15).

HERESY—false doctrine, or teaching that denies one of the foundational beliefs of the church, such as the Lordship or deity of Jesus. The writings of the apostle Paul and other early church leaders make it clear that heretical teachings were a problem in the New Testament church (2 Pet. 2:1).

In the Book of 2 Corinthians, Paul condemned certain "false apostles" and "deceitful workers" who claimed to be "apostles of Christ" (2 Cor. 11:13). These may have been the JUDAIZERS, who tried to force believers to observe the Jewish ritual of CIRCUMCISION before they could be accepted as members of the church.

The writer of 1 John also condemned a heretical group known as the GNOSTICS, who denied the deity of Jesus (1 John 2:22).

HERETH [HEAR eth] (thicket)—a forest in the hill country of Judah near the cave where David hid from Saul (1 Sam. 22:5; Hareth, KJV, REB).

HERETIC (see HERESY).

HERITAGE (see INHERITANCE).

HERMAS [HUR muhs]—a Christian in Rome to whom the apostle Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:14).

HERMENEUTICS [hur meh NEWT icks]—the principles and methods used to interpret Scripture. Bible scholars believe a biblical text must be interpreted according to the language in which it was written, its historical context, the identity and purpose of the author, its literary nature, and the situation to which it was originally addressed.

Also see BIBLE, INTERPRETATION.

HERMES [HUR meez] (interpreter)—the name of a pagan god and an early Christian:

1. The Greek god of commerce who served as the messenger of the other gods. He corresponded to the Roman god Mercury (Acts 14:12; Mercurius, KJV).
2. A Christian to whom the apostle Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:14).

HERMOGENES [hur MAH jih neez] (offspring of Hermes)—an Asian Christian who deserted the apostle Paul at Ephesus (2 Tim. 1:15).

HERMON [HUR mon] (sacred place)—the northern boundary of the land east of the Jordan River (see Map 3, C–1) that Israel took from the Amorites (Deut. 3:8; Josh. 12:1). The mountain is the southern end of the Anti-Lebanon range and is about 32 kilometers (20 miles) long. It has three peaks (Ps. 42:6), two of which rise over 2,750 meters (9,000 feet) above sea level.

Hermon was regarded as a sacred place by the Canaanites who inhabited the land before the Israelites (Judg. 3:3). Snow covers the mountain during most of the year. Patches of snow remain even through the summer in shaded ravines. The beautiful snow-covered peaks of Mount Hermon can be seen from the region of the Dead Sea, over 196 kilometers (120 miles) distant. The glaciers of Mount Hermon are a major source of the Jordan River, and water from its slopes ultimately flows into the Dead Sea.

The psalmist speaks of the “dew of Hermon” (Ps. 133:3). The snow condenses to vapor during the summer so that a heavy dew descends on the mountain while the areas surrounding Hermon are parched.

Mount Hermon probably was the site of our Lord’s transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–9; Mark 9:2–9; Luke 9:28–37). Jesus traveled with His disciples from Bethsaida, on the Sea of Galilee, to the area of Caesarea Philippi to the north and from there to a “high mountain.” There, in the presence of His disciples, Jesus was transfigured. A late tradition identifies the “high mountain” as Mount Tabor, but Mount Hermon is nearer Caesarea Philippi.

HERMONITES [HUR muhn ights]—natives or inhabitants of Mount Hermon (Ps. 42:6, KJV).

HEROD [HEHR ud]—the name of several Roman rulers in the Palestine region during Jesus' earthly ministry and the periods shortly before His birth and after His resurrection.

The Herodian dynasty made its way into Palestine through Antipater, an Idumean by descent. The Idumeans were of Edomite stock as descendants of Esau. Antipater was installed as procurator of Judea by Julius Caesar, the emperor of Rome, in 47 B.C. He appointed two of his sons to ruling positions. One of these was Herod, known as "Herod the Great," who was appointed governor of Judea.

Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) The title Herod the Great refers not so much to Herod's greatness as to the fact that he was the eldest son of Antipater. Nevertheless, Herod did show some unusual abilities. He was a ruthless fighter, a cunning negotiator, and a subtle diplomat. The Romans appreciated the way he subdued opposition and maintained order among the Jewish people. These qualities, combined with an intense loyalty to the emperor, made him an important figure in the life of Rome and the Jews of Palestine.

After Herod became governor of Galilee, he quickly established himself in the entire region. For thirty-three years he remained a loyal friend and ally of Rome. He was appointed as king of Judea, where he was in direct control of the Jewish people. This required careful diplomacy because he was always suspect by the Jews as an outsider (Idumean) and thus a threat to their national right to rule.

At first Herod was conscious of Jewish national and religious feelings. He moved slowly on such issues as taxation, HELLENISM, and religion. He did much to improve his relationship with the Jews when he prevented the temple in Jerusalem from being raided and defiled by invading Romans.

Herod the Great established his authority and influence through a centralized bureaucracy, well-built fortresses, and foreign soldiers. To assure his continued rule, he slaughtered all male infants who could possibly be considered legal heirs to the throne. His wife Mariamne also became a victim.

The territories under Herod's rule experienced economic and cultural growth. His business and organizational ability led to the erection of many important buildings. Hellenistic (Greek) ideas were introduced into Palestine through literature, art, and athletic contests. His major building project was the temple complex in Jerusalem, which, according to John 2:20, had taken forty-six years to build up to that time. From the Jewish perspective, this was his greatest achievement.

At times Herod implemented his policies with force and cruelty. His increasing fear of Jewish revolt led to suppression of any opposition. His personal problems also increased, and by 14 B.C. his kingdom began to decline. This decline was brought on mainly by his personal and domestic problems.

Herod's murder of his wife Mariamne apparently haunted him. This was compounded when his two sons from that marriage, Alexander and Aristobulus, realized that their father was responsible for their mother's death. By 7 B.C., Herod had both of these sons put to death. Of Herod it was said, “It is better to be Herod’s pig (hys) than to be his son (huios).”

As Herod became increasingly ill, an intense struggle for succession to his throne emerged within the family. His ten marriages and fifteen children virtually guaranteed such a struggle. One son, Antipater, poisoned Herod’s mind against two other eligible sons, Archelaus and Philip. This resulted in his initial choice of a younger son, Antipas, as sole successor. However, he later changed his will and made Archelaus king. Antipas and Philip received lesser positions as TETRARCHS, or rulers, over small territories.

After Herod died, his will was contested in Rome. Finally Archelaus was made ethnarch over Idumea, Judea, and Samaria—with a promise to be appointed king if he proved himself as a leader. Antipas became tetrarch over Galilee and Perea. Philip was made tetrarch over Gaulanitis, Trachonitis, Batanea, and Paneas in the northern regions.

Jesus was born in Bethlehem during the reign of Herod the Great. The wise men came asking, “Where is he that is born King of the Jews?” This aroused Herod’s jealous spirit. According to Matthew’s account, Herod tried to eliminate Jesus by having all the male infants of the Bethlehem region put to death (Matt. 2:13–16). But this despicable act failed. Joseph and Mary were warned by God in a dream to take their child and flee to Egypt. Here they hid safely until Herod died (Matt. 2:13–15).

Herod Archelaus (4 B.C.–A.D. 6). Archelaus inherited his father Herod’s vices without his abilities. He was responsible for much bloodshed in Judea and Samaria. Jewish revolts, particularly those led by the ZEALOTS, were brutally crushed. Antipas and Philip did not approve of Archelaus’ methods; so they complained to Rome. Their complaints were followed by a Jewish delegation that finally succeeded in having Archelaus stripped of power and banished to Rome.

The only biblical reference to Archelaus occurs in Matthew 2:22. Matthew recorded the fear that Mary and Joseph had about going through Judea on their way from Egypt to Galilee because Archelaus was the ruler.

Herod Philip the Tetrarch (4 B.C.–A.D. 30). Philip, who inherited the northern part of his father Herod the Great’s kingdom (Luke 3:1), must have been the best of Herod’s surviving sons. During his long and peaceful rule, he was responsible for a number of building projects, including the city of Caesarea Philippi. He also rebuilt Bethsaida into a Greek city and renamed it Julias in honor of Augustus Caesar's daughter, Julia.

Herod Antipas (4 B.C.–A.D. 39). Antipas, another of Herod the Great's sons, began as tetrarch over Galilee and Perea. He was the ruling Herod during Jesus' life and ministry. Herod Antipas was first married to the daughter of Aretas, a Nabatean king. But he became infatuated with Herodias, the wife of his half-brother, Philip I. The two eloped, although both were married at the time. This scandalous affair was condemned severely by John the Baptist (Matt. 14:4; Mark 6:17–18; Luke 3:19).

Although Antipas apparently had some respect for John the Baptist, he had John arrested and imprisoned for his outspokenness. Later, at a royal birthday party, Antipas granted Salome, the daughter of Herod Philip, a wish. Probably at the prodding of Herodias (Mark 6:19), Salome requested the head of John the Baptist (Matt. 14:6–12; Mark 6:21–29). Since he was under oath and did not want to lose face before his guests, Herod ordered John's execution.

Antipas' contacts with Jesus occurred at the same time as the ministry of John the Baptist. Because of Jesus' popularity and miraculous powers, Antipas may have been haunted by the possibility that Jesus was John the Baptist come back to life.

The New Testament record shows that the relationship between Jesus and Antipas must have been strained. Jesus' popularity and teachings may have threatened Antipas who, according to the Pharisees, sought to kill Him (Luke 13:31). By calling Herod a fox "Go, tell that fox," (Luke 13:32), Jesus showed His disapproval of his cunning and deceitful ways.

The next encounter between Antipas and Jesus occurred at the trial of Jesus (Luke 23:6–12). Luke indicated that Herod could not find anything in the charges against Jesus that deserved death; so he sent Jesus back to Pilate for a final decision.

During this time of his rule, Antipas was experiencing political problems of his own. Aretas, the Nabatean king whose daughter had been Antipas' wife before he became involved with Herodias, returned to avenge this insult. Antipas' troops were defeated. This, together with some other problems, led to his political downfall. Antipas was finally banished by the Roman emperor to an obscure section of France.

Herod Agrippa I (A.D. 37–44). Agrippa took over Antipas' territory after Antipas fell from favor. Agrippa's power and responsibilities extended far beyond his ability. As a young person growing up in the imperial court, he developed an undisciplined and extravagant lifestyle. But Agrippa had enough charm and intelligence to stay on the good side of Rome.

After the Roman Emperor Caligula was murdered, Agrippa helped Claudius gain the throne. His loyalty was rewarded. Claudius confirmed Agrippa in his present position and added the territories of Judea and Samaria. This made Agrippa ruler of a kingdom as large as that of his grandfather, Herod the Great.

Very little about Agrippa I is recorded in Scripture. From the comments in Acts 12:1–23, we know that Agrippa sought to win the favor of his Jewish subjects by opposing the early Christian church and its leaders. The record of his death as recorded in Acts 12:20–23 shows the humiliating way he died. After his death, Palestine struggled through a number of chaotic years before Rome was able to establish order.

Herod Agrippa II (A.D. 50–100). Agrippa II was judged to be too young to assume leadership over all the territory of his father, Agrippa I. Thus, Emperor Claudius appointed Cuspius Fadus procurator of Palestine. But in A.D. 53, Agrippa II was appointed as the legitimate ruler over part of this territory.

The only reference to Agrippa II in the New Testament occurs in Acts 25:13—26:32, which deals with Paul's imprisonment in Caesarea. Agrippa listened to Paul's defense, but the apostle appealed to Rome. Agrippa had no power to set him free.

Agrippa was caught in the Jewish revolts that preceded the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 under the Roman Emperor Titus. He continued to rule by appointment of Vespasian until his death in A.D. 100. His death marked the end of the Herodian dynasty in the affairs of the Jewish people in Palestine.

• Excavated remains of a structure in Jerusalem built by Herod the Great. This Herod was known as a builder of many magnificent buildings, including a Temple for use by Jewish worshipers.

HEROD, PALACE OF [HEHR ud]—a palace–fortress erected by Herod the Great, a Roman ruler in Palestine, about 24/23 B.C. According to the Jewish historian Josephus, it was situated in JERUSALEM, at the northwest corner of the upper city, adjoined by three mighty towers. The palace was burned at the beginning of the Roman–Jewish war, but the three towers withstood the flames.

HERODIANS [heh ROW dee uns]—Jews of influence and standing who were favorable toward Greek customs and Roman law in New Testament times. Although the Herodians should not be equated with the SADDUCEES, they sided with the Sadducees in their pro-Roman sympathies and opposed the PHARISEES, who were anti-Roman. The Herodians joined forces with the Pharisees, however, in their opposition to Jesus.

In Galilee, the Herodians and the Pharisees plotted against Jesus' life (Mark 3:6). At Jerusalem, the Herodians and the Pharisees again joined forces, seeking to trap Jesus on the issue of paying tribute to Caesar (Matt. 22:16; Mark 12:13). Jesus warned his disciples, “Take heed, beware of the leaven [evil influence] of the Pharisees and . . . of Herod” (Mark 8:15).

HERODIAS [heh ROE dee uhs]—the queen who demanded John the Baptist’s head on a platter (Matt. 14:1–12). The granddaughter of Herod the Great, Herodias first married her father’s brother, Herod Philip I. One child was born to this union. Philip’s half-brother, the tetrarch Herod Antipas, wanted Herodias for his own wife, so he divorced his wife and married Herodias while Philip was still living.

When John the Baptist denounced their immorality, Herodias plotted John’s death. She had her daughter Salome gain Herod’s favor by dancing seductively for him at a banquet. As a result, Herod promised her anything she wanted. Following her mother’s wishes, Salome asked for the head of John the Baptist.

HERODION [hih ROE dee uhn]—a Christian whom the apostle Paul called “my kinsman” (Rom. 16:11) and to whom he sent greetings.

HERODIUM [heh ROW dih um]—a fortress-palace near the Palestinian city of Tekoa built by Herod the Great (see Map 6, B–4). It is not mentioned in the Bible. Its modern name is Jebel el-Fureidis (“Hill of Paradise”) about 6.5 kilometers (4 miles) southeast of Bethlehem. When Herod the Great died in Jericho, in 4 B.C., his body was borne in a funeral procession from Jericho, through Jerusalem, to Herodium, where it was interred. Herod’s tomb has not yet been discovered.

Along with Machaerus and Masada, Herodium was one of the last strongholds of Jewish resistance to the Romans, who captured it in A.D. 72. Herodium was used as a supply depot by Simon Bar Koseba, who led a major but unsuccessful revolt against Rome (A.D. 132–135).

HERON (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HESHBON [HESH bahn]—the former capital of SIHON, king of the Amorites (see Map 3, C–4). Situated in Transjordan about 80 kilometers (50 miles) east of Jerusalem and approximately 23 kilometers (14 miles) southwest of modern Amman, Jordan, Heshbon was captured by the Israelites (Josh. 12:1–2), then rebuilt and populated by the tribes of Reuben (Josh. 13:17) and Gad (1 Chr. 6:81). Later, it was captured by Mesha, King of Moab, and was denounced by the prophets (Is. 15:4; 16:8–9).

HESHMON [HESH mahn]—a town in southern Judah, between Moldah and Beersheba (Josh. 15:27).

HETH [heth]—the name of an Old Testament man and a letter of the Hebrew alphabet:

1. The second son of Canaan, ancestor of the Hittites (Gen. 10:15; 1 Chr. 1:13). The Hittite Empire was centered in Anatolia, or Asia Minor.
2. The eighth letter of the Hebrew alphabet, used as a heading over Psalm 119:57–64. In the original Hebrew language, each line of these eight verses begins with the letter heth. Also see ACROSTIC.

HETHLON [HETH lahn]—a mountain pass on the northern boundary of Palestine, connecting the Plain of Hamath with the Mediterranean coast (Ezek. 47:15).

HEW—to cleave or cut with blows from a heavy cutting instrument, as in chopping firewood (2 Chr. 2:10) or quarrying and cutting stone for building purposes (Amos 5:11).

HEWER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

HEXATEUCH—a term for the first six books of the Old Testament (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, and Joshua), viewed as a unit. The first five books of the Old Testament, known as the PENTATEUCH, have traditionally been regarded as the first division of the Hebrew Old Testament. However, since the early nineteenth century many scholars who specialize in the literary criticism of the Old Testament have preferred to think in terms of a Hexateuch, or six-volumed book, as forming the first division. These scholars view the book of Joshua as closely linked with the preceding five, arguing that it came from the same sources.

While Joshua is similar in some ways to the books that precede it, many scholars disagree with the concept of a Hexateuch. They argue that Joshua belongs with the Former Prophets, which includes Judges, Samuel, and Kings, rather than with the Law.

HEZEKI [HEZ uh kigh]—a form of HIZKI.

HEZEKIAH [hez uh KIGH uh] (the Lord is my strength)—the name of three or four men in the Old Testament:

1. The thirteenth king of Judah. Born the son of Ahaz by Abi, daughter of Zechariah, Hezekiah became known as one of Judah's godly kings. That an ungodly man like Ahaz could have such a godly son can only be attributed to the grace of God. Hezekiah's father had given the kingdom over to idolatry; but upon his accession to the throne, Hezekiah decisively and courageously initiated religious reforms (2 Kin. 18:4).

   In the first month of his reign, Hezekiah reopened the temple doors that his father had closed. He also assembled the priests and Levites and commissioned them to sanctify themselves for service and to cleanse the temple. Appropriate sacrifices were then offered with much rejoicing (2 Chr. 29:3–36).

   Hezekiah faced a golden opportunity to reunite the tribes spiritually. In the north Israel had fallen to Assyria in 722 B.C. Hezekiah invited the remnant of the people to come to Jerusalem to participate in the celebration of the PASSOVER. Although some northern tribes scorned the invitation, most responded favorably (2 Chr. 30:1–27).

   Hezekiah's reformation reached beyond Jerusalem to include the cleansing of the land, extending even to the tribes of Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh. HIGH PLACES, images, and pagan altars were destroyed. The bronze serpent that Moses had made in the wilderness centuries earlier (Num. 21:5–9) had been preserved, and people were worshiping it. Hezekiah had it destroyed also (2 Kin. 18:4; 2 Chr. 31:1). The land had never undergone such a thorough reform.

   When Hezekiah experienced a serious illness, the prophet Isaiah informed the king that he would die. In response to Hezekiah's prayer for recovery, God promised him fifteen additional years of life. God also provided a sign for Hezekiah as evidence that the promise would be fulfilled. The sign, one of the most remarkable miracles of the Old Testament, consisted of the sun's shadow moving backward ten degrees on the SUNDIAL OF AHAZ (Is. 38:1–8).

Shortly after he recovered from his illness (Is. 39:1), Hezekiah received visitors from the Babylonian king, Merodach–Baladan (2 Kin. 20:12). They came with letters to congratulate Hezekiah on his recovery and to inquire about the sign (2 Chr. 32:31) in the land. But their real reason for visiting may have been to gain an ally in their revolt against Assyria. When they lavished gifts upon Hezekiah, he in turn showed them his wealth—an action that brought stiff rebuke from Isaiah (2 Kin. 20:13–18).

There is no evidence to indicate that Hezekiah formed an alliance with Babylon. Neither is there any indication that he joined the rebellion in 711 B.C. led by Ashdod, the leading Philistine city. However, Scripture does reveal that he finally did rebel. Sargon II had died in 705 B.C.; and his successor, Sennacherib, was preoccupied with trying to consolidate the kingdom when Hezekiah rebelled. With that accomplished, however, Sennacherib was ready to crush Hezekiah's revolt.

Anticipating the Assyrian aggression, Hezekiah made extensive military preparations. He strengthened the fortifications of Jerusalem, produced weapons and shields for his army, and organized his fighting forces under trained combat commanders. Realizing the importance of an adequate water supply, Hezekiah constructed a tunnel that channeled water from the Spring of Gihon outside the city walls to the Pool of Siloam inside the walls (2 Kin. 20:20). This waterway (now known as Hezekiah's Tunnel) was cut through solid rock, extending more than 520 meters (1,700 feet).

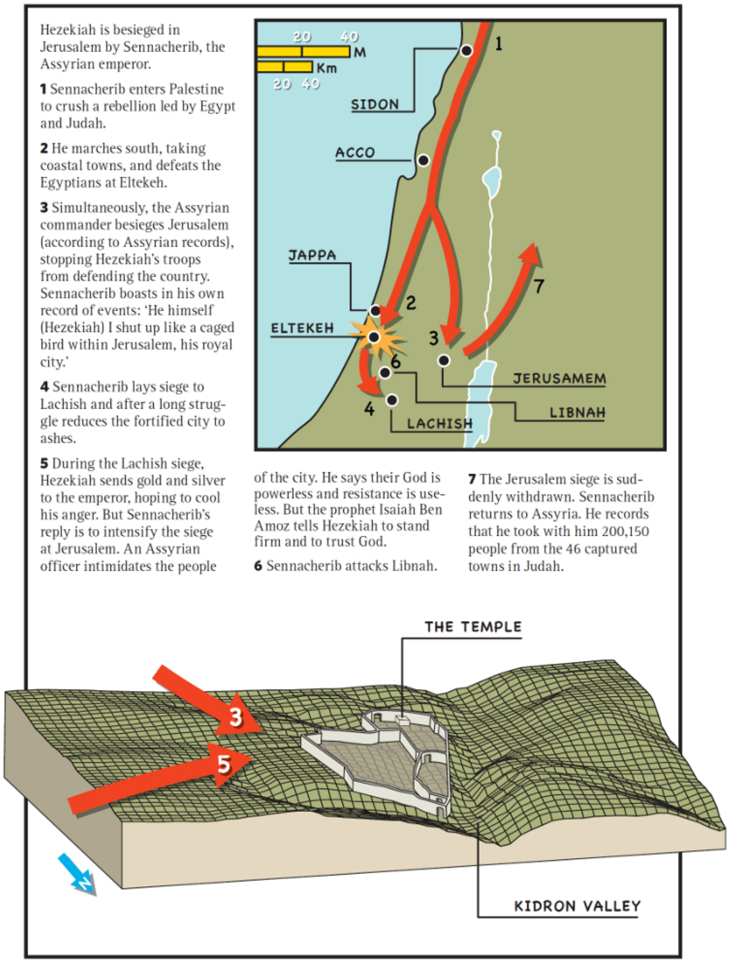
As Sennacherib captured the fortified cities of Judah, Hezekiah realized that his revolt was a lost cause and he attempted to appease the Assyrian king. To send an apology and tribute, he emptied the palace treasuries and the temple, even stripping the gold from the doors and pillars. But this failed to appease Sennacherib's anger.

At the height of the Assyrian siege, the Angel of the Lord struck the Assyrian camp, leaving 185,000 dead (2 Kin. 19:35). In humiliation and defeat, Sennacherib withdrew to his capital city of Nineveh.

Little more is said about Hezekiah's remaining years as king, but his achievements are recorded in 2 Chronicles 32:27–30. When he died, after reigning for twenty-nine years, the people of Jerusalem “buried him in the upper tombs of the sons of David” (2 Chr. 32:33), a place of honor.

2. A descendant of David’s royal line, a son of Neariah (1 Chr. 3:23).
3. A head of a family who returned from the captivity in Babylon (Neh. 7:21).
4. The great-great-grandfather of the prophet Zephaniah (Zeph. 1:1; Hizkiah, KJV, perhaps the same as No. 1).

LIKE A CAGED BIRD



Hezekiah is besieged in Jerusalem by Sennacherib, the Assyrian emperor.

1 Sennacherib enters Palestine to crush a rebellion led by Egypt and Judah.

2 He marches south, taking coastal towns, and defeats the Egyptians at Eltekeh.

3 Simultaneously, the Assyrian commander besieges Jerusalem (according to Assyrian records), stopping Hezekiah’s troops from defending the country. Sennacherib boasts in his own record of events: ‘He himself (Hezekiah) I shut up like a caged bird within Jerusalem, his royal city.’

4 Sennacherib lays siege to Lachish and after a long struggle reduces the fortified city to ashes.

5 During the Lachish siege, Hezekiah sends gold and silver to the emperor, hoping to cool his anger. But Sennacherib’s reply is to intensify the siege at Jerusalem. An Assyrian officer intimidates the people of the city. He says their God is powerless and resistance is useless. But the prophet Isaiah Ben Amoz tells Hezekiah to stand firm and to trust God.

6 Sennacherib attacks Libnah.

7 The Jerusalem siege is suddenly withdrawn. Sennacherib returns to Assyria. He records that he took with him 200,150 people from the 46 captured towns in Judah.

HEZION [HEE zih ahn]—the father of Tabrimmon and the grandfather of Ben-Hadad I, king of Syria in the time of King Asa of Judah (1 Kin. 15:18).

HEZIR [HEE zur] (pig)—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A Levite in the time of David (1 Chr. 24:15).
2. A leader of the people who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:20).

HEZRAI [HEZ righ]—a CARMELITE and one of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:35; Hezro, NIV, NASB, NRSV).

HEZRO [HEZ roe]—a form of HEZRAI.

HEZRON [HEZ rahn] (enclosure)—the name of two men and one town in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Reuben and founder of the HEZRONITES (Gen. 46:9).
2. A founder of a tribal family (Gen. 46:12) and an ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:3; Esrom, KJV).
3. A town on the southern border of Judah (Josh. 15:3).

HEZRONITES [HEZ ruh nights]—members of tribal families descended from HEZRON No. 1.

HIDDAI [HID day eye]—one of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:30), also called Hurai (1 Chr. 11:32).

HIDDEKEL [HID uh kel]—one of the rivers of the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2:14). Hiddekel is the Hebrew name of the TIGRIS (Dan. 10:4; Hiddekel, KJV).

HIEL [HIGH uhl] (God is living)—a native of Bethel who fortified Jericho during the reign of Ahab (1 Kin. 16:34). Hiel also sacrificed his sons, in fulfillment of Joshua's curse (Josh. 6:26).

HIERAPOLIS [HIGH uh rap uh lis] (priestly city)—a city of the district of Phrygia in southwest Asia Minor (modern Turkey). One of the three major cities of the Lycus River Valley, it was about 16 kilometers (10 miles) northwest of Colossae (Col. 4:13). According to tradition, Philip the evangelist was the first Christian messenger to Hierapolis. Christianity apparently flourished in the city.

HIEROGLYPHICS [high roe GLIF iks] (priestly writing)—a system of writing that used pictures to represent words and ideas. The ancient Egyptians developed picture writing to a refined art. Hieroglyphs (pictures) of objects such as birds, animals, trees, and tools represented phrases, words, syllables, or sounds. Also see WRITING.

• Section of a stone inscription, demonstrating the art of picture writing (hieroglyphics) developed by the Egyptians.

HIGGAION [hih GAY ahn] (meditation)—a musical notation of uncertain meaning (Ps. 9:16). The context seems to connote a low, quiet, soft sound, hence "meditation."

HIGH GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

HIGH PLACES—elevated or hilltop sites dedicated to worship of pagan gods. Ancient peoples often built their shrines on hilltops. In Mesopotamia, where the land is flat, they built artificial mountains in the shape of step pyramids called ZIGGURATS. The TOWER OF BABEL (Gen. 11:1–9) was probably such a ziggurat.

Most of the Old Testament references to high places imply a form of pagan worship forbidden to the Israelites. But sometimes the Lord's people, with His approval, worshiped Him at elevated altars. This happened between the time Shiloh was destroyed and before the ARK OF THE COVENANT was installed in Solomon's temple. For instance, Samuel blessed the offerings made at a high place that perhaps was Ramah, a word that itself means "high place" (1 Sam. 9:12–14). At nearby Gibeon there was a high place. During the reign of David the tabernacle was there (1 Chr. 16:39; 21:29; 2 Chr. 1:3–4). At this high place Solomon made many sacrifices, had his dream, and asked God for wisdom (1 Kin. 3:4–15).

After this early period in Israel's history, all high places mentioned in the Bible were off-limits to God's people. In Leviticus 26:30 God promised to destroy the high places, which He knew His people would later build. They probably got the idea for such shrines of worship from the native Canaanites.

In his waning years, Solomon established high places for his pagan wives (1 Kin. 11:7–8). After Solomon's death, the rebellious Northern Kingdom had its high places. The two major ones, containing golden calves, were at Dan and Bethel (1 Kin. 12:28–33). Then as evil kings came to the throne in Judah they inaugurated high places, and successive good kings abolished them. During Rehoboam's reign high places appeared (1 Kin. 14:23), but Hezekiah broke them down (2 Kin. 18:4). Wicked Manasseh built them again (2 Kin. 21:3), but righteous Josiah dismantled them (2 Kin. 23:8). Eventually, "high place" became a general term for a pagan shrine, whether or not it was established in an elevated site.

The prophets condemned the high places (Jer. 17:1–3; 32:35; Ezek. 6:3; Amos 7:9). God is not found on a mountaintop or at a hilltop shrine. He is everywhere, always ready to listen to the prayers of those who call on him (John 4:21–24).

HIGH PRIEST (see PRIEST, HIGH).

HIGHER GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

HIGHEST—a name for God (Luke 1:32; 6:35), that emphasizes His glory and majesty.

HIGHWAY (see ROADS).

HILEN [HIGH luhn]—a town in the hill country of Judah (1 Chr. 6:58), also called HOLON (Josh. 15:51).

HILKIAH [hill KYE ah] (the Lord is my portion)—the name of seven or eight Old Testament men:

1. The father of Eliakim (2 Kin. 18:18, 26, 37).
2. A high priest during the reign of King Josiah of Judah (2 Kin. 22:4–14). Hilkiah assisted Josiah in reforming Judah's backslidden people.
3. A Levite and a son of Amzi (1 Chr. 6:45–46).
4. A son of Hosah (1 Chr. 26:11) and a tabernacle gatekeeper.
5. A priest who helped Ezra read the Book of the Law to the people (Neh. 8:4; 11:11). He may be the same person as No. 6.
6. A chief priest who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:7).
7. Father of Jeremiah the prophet (Jer. 1:1).
8. Father of Gemariah, a contemporary of Jeremiah (Jer. 29:3).

HILL—a rise in the land that is higher than a mound but lower than a mountain. The Bible contains many references to the hills of the land of Palestine (Josh. 24:33; 1 Kin. 11:7). Altars to pagan gods were often built on hills (Ezek. 6:13).

HILL COUNTRY—the hilly terrain of southern Palestine, referred to in the New Testament as the "hill country of Judea" (Luke 1:65).

HILL OF THE FORESKINS—a place near Gilgal (Josh. 5:9) where the Israelites who were born during the wilderness wandering were circumcised (Josh. 5:3). The NASB, REB, NIV, and NRSV transliterate the Hebrew phrase as Gibeath-haaraloth.

HILL OF GOD—the place where Saul was filled with the Spirit of the Lord and prophesied with a group of prophets (1 Sam. 10:5).

HILLEL [HILL el] (he has praised)—the father of Abdon (Judg. 12:13, 15). Abdon was one of the judges of Israel.

HILT—the handle of a weapon, especially a sword or dagger (Judg. 3:22; handle, NIV, NASB; haft, KJV). When Ehud assassinated Eglon, the king of Moab, he thrust a dagger into Eglon's stomach. Even the hilt of the dagger went in after the blade (Judg. 3:12–30).

HIN (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

HIND (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HINGE—a pin and socket arrangement on which a door of Bible times turned as it was opened and closed. Doors in ancient times did not have hinges as we know them today. Instead they had projecting pins at both the top and bottom on the side where the door swung open. These pins fitted into matching sockets in the door frame.

The doors of the Holy of Holies and the main hall in Solomon's temple had gold hinges (1 Kin. 7:50). The lazy person turning back and forth in his bed is compared to a door swinging back and forth on its hinges (Prov. 26:14).

HINNOM [HIN ohm]—an unknown person, perhaps the original Jebusite owner, whose name appears only in the phrase, "the Valley of Hinnom" (Josh. 15:8; Neh. 11:30)—a valley outside Jerusalem. Also see HINNOM, VALLEY OF; HELL.

HINNOM, VALLEY OF [HIN nahm]—a deep, narrow ravine west and south of Jerusalem. At the HIGH PLACES of Baal in the Valley of Hinnom, parents sacrificed their children as a burnt offering to Molech (2 Kin. 23:10). Ahaz and Manasseh, kings of Judah, were both guilty of this awful wickedness (2 Chr. 28:3; 33:6). But good King Josiah destroyed the pagan altars to remove this temptation from the people of Judah.

The prophet Jeremiah foretold that God would judge this awful abomination of human sacrifice and would cause such a destruction that "the Valley of the Son of Hinnom" would become known as "the Valley of Slaughter" (Jer. 7:31–32; 19:2, 6; 32:35). The place was also called "Tophet."

Apparently, the Valley of Hinnom was used as the garbage dump for the city of Jerusalem. Refuse, waste materials, and dead animals were burned here. Fires continually smoldered, and smoke from the burning debris rose day and night. Hinnom thus became a graphic symbol of woe and judgment and of the place of eternal punishment called HELL.

Translated into Greek, the Hebrew "Valley of Hinnom" becomes gehenna, which is used twelve times in the New Testament (eleven times by Jesus and once by James), each time translated as "hell" (Matt. 5:22; Mark 9:43, 45, 47; Luke 12:5; James 3:6).

HIP—the part of the body where the thigh and torso are connected. When Jacob wrestled with God by the ford of the Jabbok the socket of his hip came "out of joint" as he wrestled (Gen. 32:25). The word "hip" is also used in connection with Samson's great slaughter of the Philistines (Judg. 15:8), Joab's armor (2 Sam. 20:8), Behemoth's strength (Job 40:16), and Belshazzar's fear (Dan. 5:6). Also see HIP AND THIGH.

HIP AND THIGH—literally, leg and thigh. The phrase occurs in Judges 15:8 describing one of Samson's successful attacks on his Philistine enemies that was particularly fierce, furious, and violent.

HIPPOPOTAMUS (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HIRAH [HIGH ruh]—an Adullamite, the "friend" of Judah (Gen. 38:1, 12).

HIRAM [HIGH rum] (my brother is exalted)—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A king of Tyre and friend of both David and Solomon (2 Sam. 5:11; 1 Kin. 10:11, 22; 2 Chr. 8:2, 18). The Jewish historian Josephus records that Hiram succeeded his father, Abibaal, and reigned for thirty-four years. Hiram greatly enhanced the city of Tyre, building an embankment on its east side and a causeway to connect the city with the island where the temple of Baal–Shamem stood.

   Hiram appears throughout the reigns of David and Solomon. He sent representatives to David after David captured Jerusalem. When David built a palace, Hiram furnished cedar from Lebanon and workmen to assist with the project. In later years, when Solomon built the temple in Jerusalem, Hiram again sent cedar and skilled laborers—this time in return for wheat and olive oil. Hiram also supplied ships and sailors for Solomon's trade interests, probably for a share of the profits.
2. A skilled laborer who worked on Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 7:13, 40, 45). He worked in bronze on the pillars, the laver, the basins, and the shovels. The title "father" given to him probably means he was a master workman. His name is also spelled Huram (2 Chr. 2:13–14; Huram-Abi, NIV).

HIRE (see WAGES).

HIRELING—a paid worker or employee in Bible times (John 10:11–12). A hireling could hire on for as little as one day, or he might also contract to work for longer periods. When speaking of Himself as the Good Shepherd, Jesus indicated that He had a personal interest in His sheep (or followers), unlike a hireling, who watched over sheep for pay.

HISS, HISSING—to expel the air between the tongue and the teeth to express contempt, insult, and scorn (Job 27:23). Hissing often was accompanied by clapping the hands, wagging the head, and grinding the teeth (Lam. 2:15–16).

HISTORY—a narrative or chronological record of significant events (Gen. 2:4; story, REB; account, NASB, NIV; generations, KJV, NRSV). The Hebrew word translated as "history" literally means "genealogy."

HITTITES [HIT tights]—a people of the ancient world who flourished in Asia Minor (see Map 1, B–1) between about 1900 and 1200 B.C. The name Hittite comes from Hatti, another name for Anatolia, the capital of which was Hattusha. Later the Hittites spread into northern Syria and populated such cities as Aleppo, Carchemish, and Hamath. The Old Testament contains many references to the Hittites (Gen. 15:20; Num. 13:29; 1 Kin. 10:29; Ezra 9:1; Ezek. 16:3, 45).

Hittites in the Bible. When Sarah died, Abraham purchased the field of Machpelah with a burial cave from Ephron the Hittite (Gen. 23:10–20). This incident between a patriarch and a Hittite was followed later by Esau's act of taking two Hittite women as wives (Gen. 26:34).

Hittites were included among the peoples dwelling from the river of Egypt to the River Euphrates—the region promised to Abraham. Hittites also occupied the land of Canaan while the Israelites were in Egypt. They were among the people who had to be driven out when Israel conquered Canaan under Joshua (Ex. 3:8, 17; Deut. 7:1; Judg. 3:5).

After the dissolution of the Hittite empire, remnants of the Hittites were particularly visible in Palestine during the reign of David. Ahimelech the Hittite was among the close associates and trusted companions of David during his flight from Saul (1 Sam. 26:6). The most famous of these later Hittites was Uriah, Bathsheba's husband, whom David sent to his death to conceal his adultery with Uriah's wife (2 Sam. 11:15). The northern border of Israel during David's time was extended to the River Euphrates (2 Sam. 8:3) to include Syrian city-states. It is highly possible that "Hittites" of the Syrian region served in David's administration (2 Sam. 8:17; 1 Kin. 4:3).

Solomon had a Hittite wife (1 Kin. 11:1), apparently from a royal marriage to seal an alliance with a foreign power. After Solomon's time, the "kings of the Hittites" were powerful rulers in Syria during the time when Judah and Israel existed as separate kingdoms (2 Kin. 7:6; 2 Chr. 1:17).

Hittite Religion. The Hittites themselves described their array of pagan gods as "the thousand gods." Among this diversity of deities, there were many names that were Hattic, Hurrian, Sumerian, and Canaanite in origin. The names of many gods occur in treaties of the Hittite people as guardian deities over the parties bound by treaty commitments. Each god was worshiped in its own native language. A storm god was the chief male god, and a solar goddess was his mistress.

The Hittites may have been one of the pagan influences that pulled the nation of Israel away from worship of the one true God during its long history. Students of the Old Testament point out that the Hittites formed treaties with other countries long before the Hebrew people developed the consciousness of being a nation governed directly by God. Some scholars believe these treaties were used as a model for the covenant that God established with the Hebrews at Mt. Sinai.

HIVITES [HIGH vights]—a people descended from Canaan (Gen. 10:17) who lived in the land before and after Israel's conquest of the land of Canaan (Ex. 13:5; Deut. 7:1; Josh. 11:3; Judg. 3:5; 1 Kin. 9:20). No reference to the Hivites exists outside the Bible. Many scholars think the name "Hivite" is an early scribal error for "Horite" (Hurrian). Other scholars suggest that the Hivites were a smaller group within the Horites.

The Bible indicates that the Hivites lived near Tyre and Sidon (2 Sam. 24:7), in the hill country of Lebanon (Judg. 3:3), in Mizpah near Mount Hermon (Josh. 11:3), in central Palestine at Shechem (Gen. 34:2), and in the town of Gibeon north of Jerusalem (Josh. 9:7; 11:19).

Many Hivites were murdered by Simeon and Levi, sons of Jacob, after a member of a Hivite clan assaulted their sister Dinah (Genesis 34). Later, the Israelites were commanded to take Canaan from various groups of Canaanites, including Hivites (Ex. 13:5; 23:23, 28).

Hivites from Gibeon tricked Joshua and the Israelites into making a covenant with them (Joshua 9). Joshua spared the Hivites and made them servants (Josh. 9:27). Hivites were also among those Canaanites whom Solomon used as slave laborers for his building projects (1 Kin. 9:20–21; 2 Chr. 8:7–8).

HIZKI [HIZ kigh] ([the Lord is] my strength)—a son of Elpaal and a descendant of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:17; Hezeki, KJV; Hizki, REB).

HIZKIAH [hiz KIGH uh]—a form of HEZEKIAH.

HOARFROST (see FROST).

HOBAB [HOE bab]—the father-in-law of Moses (Num. 10:29; Judg. 4:11), apparently the same person as JETHRO.

HOBAH [HOE buh]—a town north of Damascus, the most distant point to which Abram pursued the defeated army of Chedorlaomer (Gen. 14:15).

HOBAIAH [hoe BIGH uh]—a form of HABAIAH.

HOD [hahd] (glory)—a son of Zophah and a descendant of Asher (1 Chr. 7:37).

HODAIAH [hoe DIGH uh]—a form of HODAVIAH.

HODAVIAH [hoe duh VIGH uh] (give honor to the Lord)—the name of four Old Testament men:

1. A son of Elioenai and a descendant of Zerubbabel and King David (1 Chr. 3:24; Hodaiah, KJV, REB).
2. A head of the half-tribe of Manasseh, east of the Jordan River (1 Chr. 5:24).
3. A son of Hassenuah (1 Chr. 9:7).
4. Founder of the family of the “sons of Hodaviah” (Ezra 2:40), also spelled Hodevah (Neh. 7:43).

HODESH [HOE desh] (new moon)—a wife of Shaharaim, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:9), also called Baara (1 Chr. 8:8).

HODEVAH [HOE duh vuh]—a form of HODAVIAH.

HODIAH [hoe DIE uh] (splendor of the Lord)—a man who married Naham's sister (1 Chr. 4:19).

HODIJAH [hoe DIE juh] (splendor of the Lord)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah (Neh. 8:7).
2. A chief of the people who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:18).

HOE—a tool with a thin, flat blade on a long handle used for cultivating, weeding, or loosening the earth around plants (Is. 7:25; mattock, KJV). (Also see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

HOGLAH [HOG luh]—a daughter of Zelophehad of the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 26:33).

HOHAM [HOE ham]—one of five Amorite kings killed by Joshua near the cave at Makkedah (Josh. 10:1–27).

HOLIDAY—a religious feast day or holy day (Esth. 2:18; release, KJV; remission of taxes, RSV). The "Feast of Esther" that King Ahasuerus proclaimed as a holiday was later referred to as the Feast of PURIM (Esth. 9:18–32). Also see FEASTS AND FESTIVALS.

HOLINESS, CEREMONIAL—a characteristic of the worship system of ancient Israel, which required that a person be ceremonially clean and pure before he could approach God. Many acts prohibited in Old Testament law were not immoral but they were considered ceremonially unclean. Ceremonial uncleanness resulted from eating forbidden foods or from contact with unclean objects such as a leper or a dead body (Lev. 11:24–47). Priests especially were restricted as to what they could handle or do (Leviticus 21).

Often ceremonial defilement required only washing. But penalties for such defilement could range from disbarment from the priesthood (Lev.

21:16–24) to exile from camp (Lev. 13:44–46). As our great High Priest, Jesus Christ has paid the penalty for our sin, taking away the need for the laws of ceremonial holiness (Hebrews 8–10).

HOLON [HOE lahn]—the name of two towns in the Old Testament:

1. A town in the hill country of Judah west of Hebron (Josh. 15:51), also called Hilen (1 Chr. 6:58).
2. A town in Moab (Jer. 48:21) upon which the prophet Jeremiah pronounced judgment. It is possibly present-day Horon.

HOLY—moral and ethical wholeness or perfection; freedom from moral evil. Holiness is one of the essential elements of God's nature required of His people. Holiness may also be rendered "sanctification" or "godliness." The Hebrew word for "holy" denotes that which is "sanctified" or "set apart" for divine service.

God instructed Moses to "consecrate Aaron and his sons" (Ex. 29:9) to the priesthood. The children of Israel were admonished to "remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy" (Ex. 20:8). The "Holy of Holies" (or "Holiest of All") was the most sacred place in the desert tabernacle and in the temple at Jerusalem (Ex. 26:33; Heb. 9:1–9; Most Holy Place, NIV). Elisha was called a "holy man of God" (2 Kin. 4:9). Herod feared John the Baptist, "knowing that he was a just and holy man" (Mark 6:20).

While "holy" is sometimes used in a ceremonial sense, the main use is to describe God's righteous nature or the ethical righteousness demanded of His followers (Is. 1:10–14; Matt. 12:7). Originating in God's nature, holiness is a unique quality of His character. The Bible emphasizes this divine attribute. "Who is like you, O LORD?" (Ex. 15:11). "There is none holy like the LORD" (1 Sam. 2:2). "Who shall not fear You, O Lord . . . For You alone are holy" (Rev. 15:4). God's high expectations of His people flow out of His own holy nature: "You shall be to me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" (Ex. 19:6); "You shall be holy, for I the LORD your God am holy" (Lev. 19:2). The word "holy" is found more often in Leviticus than in any other biblical book.

Jesus was the personification of holiness; He reinforced God's demands for holiness by insisting that His disciples have a higher quality and degree of righteousness than that of the scribes and Pharisees (Matt. 5:20). Like Amos and Hosea, Jesus appealed for more than ceremonial holiness: “I desire mercy and not sacrifice” (Hos. 6:6; Matt. 12:7).

The theme of sanctification, or growing into God’s likeness and being consecrated for His use, is prominent throughout the Bible. Like Jesus, the apostles taught that sanctification, or true holiness, expressed itself in patient and loving service while awaiting the Lord’s return. Peter urged the suffering Christians of the Roman Empire to follow God’s example of holiness in their trials: “As He who has called you is holy, you also be holy in all your conduct” (1 Pet. 1:15).

Paul’s prayer for the saints at Thessalonica is timeless in its application to the church and individual believers: “And may the Lord make you increase in love and abound in love . . . so that He may establish your hearts blameless in holiness before our God and Father at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all His saints” (1 Thess. 3:12–13).

HOLY CITY (see CITY, HOLY).

HOLY DAY—a term for the Sabbath (Ex. 35:2; Is. 58:13), as well as other days of special religious significance in the life of the Hebrew people. The day on which Ezra read the Law of God to the restored community in Jerusalem was described as a holy day (Neh. 8:9–11). In one passage, the people agree not to buy grain or wares from foreign traders “on the Sabbath, or on a holy day” (Neh. 10:31). In this case the term refers to any of the major religious festivals celebrated by the Jews.

HOLY GHOST (see HOLY SPIRIT).

HOLY OF HOLIES—KJV term for HOLY PLACE.

HOLY ONE OF ISRAEL (see GOD, NAMES OF).

HOLY PLACE—KJV term for the most sacred inner room in the TABERNACLE and the TEMPLE, where only the HIGH PRIEST was allowed to go. This room, separated from the rest of the worship area by a sacred veil, represented the presence of God in all His power and holiness. In this room was the ARK OF THE COVENANT, covered by the sacred MERCY

SEAT (Ex. 25:10–22). Once a year on the DAY OF ATONEMENT, the high priest entered the Holy Place with sacrificial blood and made ATONEMENT before God for the sins of the people (Leviticus 16).

HOLY SPIRIT—the third person of the Trinity, who exercises the power of the Father and the Son in creation and redemption. Because the Holy Spirit is the power by which believers come to Christ and see with new eyes of faith, He is closer to us than we are to ourselves. Like the eyes of the body through which we see physical things, He is seldom in focus to be seen directly because He is the one through whom all else is seen in a new light. This explains why the relationship of the Father and the Son is more prominent in the gospels because it is through the eyes of the Holy Spirit that the Father–Son relationship is viewed.

The Holy Spirit appears in the Gospel of John as the power by which Christians are brought to faith and helped to understand their walk with God. He brings a person to new birth: “That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit” (John 3:6); “It is the Spirit who gives life” (John 6:63). The Holy Spirit is the Paraclete, or Helper, whom Jesus promised to the disciples after His ascension. The Trinity of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are unified in ministering to believers (John 14:16, 26). It is through the Helper that Father and Son abide with the disciples (John 15:26).

This unified ministry of the Trinity is also seen as the Spirit brings the world under conviction of sin, righteousness, and judgment. He guides believers into all truth with what He hears from the Father and the Son (John 15:26). It is a remarkable fact that each of the persons of the Trinity serves the others as all defer to one another: The Son says what He hears from the Father (John 12:49–50); the Father witnesses to and glorifies the Son (John 8:16–18, 50, 54); the Father and Son honor the Holy Spirit by commissioning Him to speak in their name (John 14:16, 26); the Holy Spirit honors the Father and Son by helping the community of believers.

Like Father and Son, the Holy Spirit is at the disposal of the other persons of the Trinity, and all three are one in graciously being at the disposal of the redeemed family of believers. The Holy Spirit’s attitude and ministry are marked by generosity; His chief function is to illumine

Jesus' teaching, to glorify His person, and to work in the life of the individual believer and the church.

This quality of generosity is prominent in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, where the Holy Spirit prepares the way for the births of John the Baptist and Jesus the Son (Matt. 1:20; Luke 1:15, 35, 41). At the baptism of Jesus, the Spirit of God is present in the form of a dove. This completes the presence of the Trinity at the inauguration of the Son's ministry (Matt. 3:16–17; Mark 1:9–11; Luke 3:21–22; John 1:33). Jesus is also filled with the Holy Spirit as He is led into the wilderness to be tempted (Luke 4:1). He claims to be anointed by the Spirit of the Lord in fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy (Is. 61:1; Luke 4:18–19).

During His ministry, Jesus refers to the Spirit of God (Matt. 12:28–29; Luke 11:20) as the power by which He is casting out demons, thereby invading the stronghold of Beelzebub and freeing those held captive. Accordingly, the Spirit works with the Father and Son in realizing the redeeming power of the kingdom of God. God's kingdom is not only the reign of the Son but also the reign of the Spirit, as all share in the reign of the Father.

The person and ministry of the Holy Spirit in the Gospels is confirmed by His work in the early church. The baptism with the Holy Spirit (Acts 1:5) is the pouring out of the Spirit's power in missions and evangelism (Acts 1:8). This prophecy of Jesus (and of Joel 2:28–32) begins on Pentecost (Acts 2:1–18). Many of those who hear of the finished work of God in Jesus' death and resurrection (Acts 2:32–38) repent of their sins. In this act of repentance, they receive the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:38), becoming witnesses of God's grace through the Spirit.

Paul's teaching about the Holy Spirit harmonizes with the accounts of the Spirit's activity in the gospels and Acts. According to Paul, it is by the Holy Spirit that one confesses that Jesus is Lord (1 Cor. 12:3). Through the same Spirit varieties of gifts are given to the body of Christ to ensure its richness and unity (1 Cor. 12:4–27). The Holy Spirit is the way to Jesus Christ the Son (Rom. 8:11) and to the Father (Rom. 8:14–15). He is the person who bears witness to us that we are children of God (8:16–17). He "makes intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered" (Rom. 8:26–27).

The Holy Spirit also reveals to Christians the deep things of God (1 Cor. 2:10–12) and the mystery of Christ (Eph. 3:3–5). The Holy Spirit acts with God and Christ as the pledge or guarantee by which believers are sealed for the day of salvation (2 Cor. 1:21–22), by which they walk and live (Rom. 8:3–6) and abound in hope with power (Rom. 15:13). Against the lust and enmity of the flesh Paul contrasts the fruit of the Spirit: “Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control” (Gal. 5:22–23).

Since the Holy Spirit is the expressed power of the Trinity, it is imperative that one not grieve the Spirit, since no further appeal to the Father and the Son on the day of redemption is available (Eph. 4:30). Jesus made this clear in His dispute with the religious authorities, who attributed His ministry to Satan rather than the Spirit and thereby committed the unforgivable sin (Matt. 12:22–32; John 8:37–59).

In Paul’s letters Christian liberty stems from the work of the Holy Spirit: “Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty” (2 Cor. 3:17). This is a process of “beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord,” and “being transformed into the same image from glory to glory, just as by the Spirit of the Lord” (2 Cor. 3:18). The personal work of the Holy Spirit is accordingly one with that of the Father and the Son, so Paul can relate the grace, love, and communion of the Trinity in a trinitarian benediction: “The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all. Amen” (2 Cor. 13:14).

Among the other New Testament writings the Spirit’s ministry is evident in the profound teaching of Hebrews 9:14, which shows the relationship of God, Christ, and the eternal Spirit. The Holy Spirit’s work in the Old Testament in preparation for the coming of Christ is explained in this and other passages in Hebrews (3:7; 9:8; 10:15–17).

This leads us to consider the working of the Spirit in the Old Testament in light of His ministry in the New Testament. Although the phrase “Holy Spirit” occurs only three times in the Old Testament (Ps. 51:11; Is. 63:10–11), the Spirit’s work is everywhere evident. The Spirit is the energy of God in creation (Gen. 1:2; Job 26:13; Is. 32:15). God endows human beings with personal life by breathing into their nostrils the breath of life (Gen. 2:7). The Spirit strives with fallen humankind (Gen. 6:3) and comes upon certain judges and warriors with charismatic power (Joshua, Num. 27:18; Othniel, Judg. 3:10; Gideon, Judg. 6:34; Samson, Judg. 13:25; 14:6). However, the Spirit departs from Saul because of his disobedience (1 Sam. 16:14).

In the long span of Old Testament prophecy the Spirit plays a prominent role. David declared, “The Spirit of the LORD spoke by me, And His word was on my tongue” (2 Sam. 23:2). Ezekiel claimed that “the Spirit entered me when He spoke to me” (Ezek. 2:2). The Spirit also inspired holiness in the Old Testament believer (Ps. 143:10). It also promised to give a new heart to God’s people: “I will put My Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes” (Ezek. 36:27).

This anticipates the crucial work of the Spirit in the ministry of the Messiah. The prophecy of Isaiah 11:1–5 is a trinitarian preview of the working of the Father, the Spirit, and the Son, who is the Branch of Jesse. Looking forward to the ministry of Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit inspired Isaiah to prophesy: “The Spirit of the LORD shall rest upon Him” (Is. 11:2). The Holy Spirit inspired Jesus with wisdom, understanding, counsel, might, knowledge, fear of the Lord, righteousness, and faithfulness. Thus we come full cycle to the New Testament where Jesus claims the fulfillment of this prophecy in Himself (Is. 61:1–2; Luke 4:18–19).

Isaiah 42:1–9 summarized the redeeming work of the Father, Son, and Spirit in the salvation of the lost, as God spoke through the prophet: “Behold! My Servant whom I uphold, My Elect One in whom My soul delights! I have put My Spirit upon Him; He will bring forth justice to the Gentiles” (Is. 42:1). No clearer reflection of the intimate interworking of the persons of the Trinity can be found in the Old Testament than in this prophecy. It ties God’s grace in Old and New together in remarkable harmony.

HOLY SPIRIT, SIN AGAINST—a sin that is often referred to as the “unpardonable sin” because, in the words of Jesus, “He who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit never has forgiveness, but is subject to eternal condemnation” (Mark 3:29).

Jesus’ words about the sin against the Holy Spirit provide a clue to its nature. When a demon-possessed man came to Jesus, He was healed. The multitudes were amazed. But the scribes and Pharisees said He was healing through Satan’s power (Matt. 12:24). Jesus had cast out the demons by the power of the Holy Spirit; His enemies claimed He cast them out by the power of the devil.

Such slander of the Holy Spirit, Jesus implied, reveals a spiritual blindness, a warping and perversion of the moral nature, that puts one beyond hope of repentance, faith, and forgiveness. Those who call the Holy Spirit "Satan" reveal a spiritual cancer so advanced that they are beyond any hope of healing and forgiveness. Thus, committing the "unpardonable sin" implies final rejection of God's offer of pardon.

HOMAGE—special honor, respect, or allegiance shown to God (1 Kin. 1:16, 31; obeisance, NRSV).

HOMAM [HOE mam]—a son of Lotan and grandson of Seir (1 Chr. 1:39), also called Hemam (Gen. 36:22).

HOME (see FAMILY).

HOMER (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

HOMOSEXUAL—a person who is attracted sexually to members of his or her own sex. Homosexual behavior is prohibited in Scripture (Lev. 20:13) and was a major cause of the divine judgment against Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19:4–5, 12–13). The apostle Paul listed homosexuals among "the unrighteous" who would not inherit the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:9), and declared that God's wrath stands against such behavior, whether practiced by men or women (Rom. 1:26–27).

HONESTY—the state of being honorable or truthful, upright and fair in dealing with others. When Joseph's brothers arrived in Egypt, they explained that they were "honest men . . . not spies" (Gen. 42:11).

HONEY—a sweet, liquid substance produced by bees or, artificially, from fruit.

Bible scholars have no way of knowing whether the word "honey" refers to the production of domestic or wild bees. In the description of Canaan as a "land which flows with milk and honey" (Num. 14:8), the connection with milk, obviously an agricultural product, may imply that the honey was also produced by domestic bees.

The story of Samson's riddle (Judges 14) is one passage where the Hebrew word must certainly refer to honey. Bees and honey are mentioned together in this text. It is also possible to interpret the honey in the story of Jonathan and Saul's vow (1 Samuel 14) as the product of bees.

The word "honey" can also refer to a thick syrup made from grapes and dates. In Arabic, the word used for this kind of fruit syrup is the same as the Hebrew word for honey from bees.

As a symbol, honey stands for abundance (Ex. 3:8; 13:5; 33:3), the believer's delight in God's word (Ps. 19:10; 119:103), and the rightness of God's word to His people (Ezek. 3:3).

HONOR—esteem and respect. To honor God is to give Him reverence and homage, for God alone is worthy of our highest honor (1 Chr. 16:27; Rev. 4:9–11). Jesus makes it plain that one cannot honor the Father unless he also honors the Son (John 5:23). Esteem, honor, and respect should also be given to our spiritual leaders in the church "Let the elders who rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word and doctrine," (1 Tim. 5:17; Heb. 13:7, KJV).

One of the Ten Commandments states, "Honor your father and your mother" (Ex. 20:12; Deut. 5:16). Jesus taught that to honor parents means to help them financially (Matt. 15:4–6).

HOOD (see DRESS OF THE BIBLE).

HOOK—a word used several different ways in the Bible:

1. A pin to which the curtains of the tabernacle were attached (Ex. 26:32).
2. A three-pronged fleshhook used by the priest's servant to handle sacrificial meat (1 Sam. 2:13–14).
3. A hook used for fishing (Matt. 17:27).
4. A vinedresser's pruning hook (Is. 2:4).
5. A ring such as one placed in an animal's nose to lead it about. Isaiah used the word in his prophecy against Sennacherib, king of Assyria (Is. 37:29). Later, the Assyrians took Manasseh, king of Judah, into captivity with nose hooks (2 Chr. 33:11).

6. Forked pegs upon which the carcasses of sacrificial animals were hung (Ezek. 40:43).

HOOPOE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HOPE—confident expectancy. In the Bible, the word "hope" stands for both the act of hoping (Rom. 4:18; 1 Cor. 9:10) and the thing hoped for (Col. 1:5; 1 Pet. 1:3). Hope does not arise from the individual's desires or wishes but from God, who is Himself the believer's hope: "My hope is in You" (Ps. 39:7). Genuine hope is not wishful thinking, but a firm assurance about things that are unseen and still in the future (Rom. 8:24–25; Heb. 11:1, 7).

Hope distinguishes the Christian from the unbeliever, who has no hope (Eph. 2:12; 1 Thess. 4:13). Indeed, a Christian is one in whom hope resides (1 Pet. 3:15; 1 John 3:3). In contrast to Old Testament hope, the Christian hope is superior (Heb. 7:19).

Christian hope comes from God (Rom. 15:13) and especially His calling (Eph. 1:18; 4:4), His grace (2 Thess. 2:16), His Word (Rom. 15:4) and His gospel (Col. 1:23). Hope is directed toward God (Acts 24:15; 1 Pet. 1:21) and Christ (1 Thess. 1:3; 1 Tim. 1:1). Its appropriate objects are eternal life (Titus 1:2; 3:7), salvation (1 Thess. 5:8), righteousness (Gal. 5:5), the glory of God (Rom. 5:2; Col. 1:27), the appearing of Christ (Titus 2:13) and the resurrection from the dead (Acts 23:6; 26:6–7).

HOPHNI [HOFF nigh] (tadpole)—a son of Eli the high priest who, along with his brother Phinehas, proved unworthy of priestly duties (1 Sam. 1:3; 2:34; 4:4–17). Their behavior was characterized by greed (1 Sam. 2:13–16) and lust (1 Sam. 2:22). Eli made only a halfhearted attempt to control his sons' scandalous behavior. Consequently, God's judgment was pronounced upon Eli and his household. Hophni and Phinehas were killed in a battle, and the ARK OF THE COVENANT was captured by the Philistines (1 Sam. 4:1–11). When Eli heard the news, he fell backward and died of a broken neck (1 Sam. 4:12–18).

HOPHRA [HOFF ruh]—a king of Egypt who reigned 589–570 B.C. Early in his reign, Hophra marched against Nebuchadnezzar II who had besieged Jerusalem in 589 B.C. When the Babylonians turned from Jerusalem to challenge him, Hophra retreated to Egypt. Hophra's overthrow was foretold by the prophet Jeremiah (Jer. 44:30). Also see PHARAOH.

HOR HAGIDGAD [HOHR huh GID gad] (the cavern of Gidgad)—a desert place where the Israelites camped (Num. 33:32–33).

HOR, MOUNT [hoer]—the name of two mountains in the Old Testament:

1. The mountain on the border of the Edomites where Aaron died and was buried (Num. 20:22–29; Deut. 32:50). Numbers 20:23 indicates that Mount Hor was situated by the border of the land of Edom. This was the place where the Hebrew people stopped after they left Kadesh (Num. 20:22; 33:37).

   Early tradition established Jebel Harun, meaning "Aaron's Mountain," as the site of Mount Hor. It is a conspicuous mountain about 1,440 meters (4,800 feet) high on the eastern side of the Arabah, midway between the southern tip of the Dead Sea and the northern end of the Gulf of Aqaba. However, this peak is far from Kadesh. In recent years Jebel Madurah northeast of Kadesh on the northwest border of Edom has been suggested as the more likely site for Mount Hor.
2. A mountain in northern Palestine between the Mediterranean Sea and the approach to Hamath (Num. 34:7–8).

• The barren mountain traditionally identified as Mount Hor, the place where Aaron was buried along the border of ancient Edom (Num. 20:22–29).

HORAM [HOHR em]—a king of Gezer defeated by Joshua (Josh. 10:33).

HOREB, MOUNT [HOHR eb] (waste)—the "mountain of God" (Ex. 18:5) in the Sinai Peninsula where Moses heard God speaking through the burning bush (Ex. 3:1) and where the law was given to Israel (see Map 2, B–2). "Horeb" is the favored name for Mt. Sinai in the Book of Deuteronomy, where the word occurs more often than in the rest of the entire Old Testament.

HOREM [HOR em] (sacred)—a fortified town in the territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:38).

HORESH [HOE resh] (forest)—a place in the Wilderness of Ziph, west of the Dead Sea, where David hid from King Saul (1 Sam. 23:15; in a forest, NKJV).

HORI [HOHR igh]—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A son of Lotan and a descendant of Seir (Gen. 36:22).
2. The father of Shaphat, one of the twelve spies sent by Moses to spy out the land of Canaan (Num. 13:5).

HORITES [HOAR ites]—the inhabitants of Mt. Seir before its conquest by the Edomites (Gen. 14:6; Deut. 2:12, 22) and the descendants of Seir the Horite (Gen. 36:20).

Archaeological evidence has shed light on the Horites and their kingdom of Mitanni. They lived in the Armenian and Kurdish mountains, infiltrating the region along the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers in Mesopotamia before 2000 B.C. From 2100 to 1550 B.C., waves of Horites swept across a large part of the ancient world, including Canaan. Their kingdom reached its peak in the middle of the fifteenth century B.C., extending from Nuzi in upper Mesopotamia in the east to Ras Shamra in the west.

Study of Horite tablets from Nuzi shows a close parallel between many of their customs and the accounts of Abraham and the other patriarchs in the Book of Genesis.

HORMAH [HOHR muh] (complete destruction)—a Canaanite city in southern Judah, near Ziklag and the border of Edom. Originally called Zephath, the name was changed when it was captured by Judah and Simeon and utterly destroyed (Judg. 1:17).

HORN—a word with several different meanings in the Bible:

1. The word often refers to the horns of various animals, such as the wild ox (Deut. 33:17) and the ram (Gen. 22:13). Animal horns served two purposes in Bible times. One was to carry oil.

   The second was as a musical instrument, created by cutting the tip off the horn and blowing through it. The curved horn of a ram or an ox was used for this purpose. This horn, called a SHOPHAR, was used to call the Israelites together for religious occasions and to signal them during battles (2 Chr. 15:14).
2. The altar in both the tabernacle and the temple had four projections, or horns—one at each corner—on which the blood of the sacrificed animals was sprinkled (Ex. 29:12). Adonijah and Joab seized the horns of the altar, seeking refuge from King Solomon who intended to have them executed (1 Kin. 1:50; 2:28).

3. The inkhorn in Ezekiel 9:2–11 probably does not refer to a horn at all but to a palette-like board used by scribes to store their pens and cakes of ink.
4. Because the horn was used by animals as a weapon, it came to symbolize power and might. Zedekiah, a false prophet in Ahab's day, made horns of iron to portray how Ahab was going to defeat the Syrians (1 Kin. 22:11). God lifts up the horn of the righteous but cuts off the horn of the wicked (Ps. 75:10). Probably as an extension of this meaning of the word, horns in the visions of Daniel and John symbolized kingdoms and individual kings. David spoke of God as the horn, or strength, of his salvation (2 Sam. 22:3; Ps. 18:2).

HORNED OWL; HORNET (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HORONAIM [hohr uh NAY uhm]—a town of Moab, near Zoar (Is. 15:5), situated along the route the Assyrians followed when they invaded Israel.

HORONITE [HOHR uh night]—a title given to SANBALLAT, an enemy of Nehemiah (Neh. 2:10, 19). He was probably a native of Beth Horon in Samaria.

HORSE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HORSE GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

HORSELEECH (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HORSEMAN (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

HOSAH [HOE suh]—the name of a man and a village in the Old Testament:

1. A village of the tribe of Asher (Josh. 19:29).
2. A Levite gatekeeper of the family of Merari in David's time (1 Chr. 16:38).

HOSANNA [hoe ZAN nuh] (save us now)—the shout of the multitude at the time of Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:9, 15; Mark 11:9–10; John 12:13). The word originally was a prayer requesting God's help (Ps. 118:25), but it had become a cry of joy or a shout of welcome by this time in Jewish history.

The word Hosanna was also associated with Jewish hopes for deliverance by a political hero. When shouted to Jesus by pilgrims and children, it indicates they saw in him the fulfillment of their Messianic expectations. But Jesus came as a spiritual deliverer on a lowly donkey—not as a conquering military hero on a prancing horse.

HOSEA [hoe ZAY uh] (deliverance)—an Old Testament prophet and author of the Book of Hosea. The son of Beeri (Hos. 1:1), Hosea ministered in the northern kingdom of Israel during the chaotic period just before the fall of this nation in 722 B.C. The literary features within Hosea's book suggest he was a member of the upper class. The tone and contents of the book also show he was a man of deep compassion, strong loyalty, and keen awareness of the political events taking place in the world at that time. As a prophet, he was also deeply committed to God and His will as it was being revealed to His Covenant People.

Hosea is one of the most unusual prophets of the Old Testament, since he was commanded by God to marry a prostitute (Hos. 1:2–9). His wife Gomer eventually returned to her life of sin, but Hosea bought her back from the slave market and restored her as his wife (Hos. 3:1–5). His unhappy family experience was an object lesson of the sin or "harlotry" of the nation of Israel in rejecting the one true God and serving pagan gods. Although the people deserved to be rejected because they had turned their backs on God, Hosea emphasized that God would continue to love them and use them as His special people.

In his unquestioning obedience of God, Hosea demonstrated he was a prophet who would follow his Lord's will, no matter what the cost. He was a sensitive, compassionate spokesman for righteousness whose own life echoed the message that God is love.

HOSEA, BOOK OF—a prophetic book of the Old Testament that emphasizes God's steadfast love for His COVENANT PEOPLE, in spite of their continuing sin and rebellion. The book is named for its author, the prophet Hosea, who demonstrated God’s steadfast love in dramatic fashion through his devotion to his own unfaithful wife.

Structure of the Book. Hosea contains fourteen chapters that are filled with some of the most powerful truths in all the Bible. After a brief introduction of himself as God’s prophet, Hosea tells about his unusual family situation. God appeared to Hosea, instructing him, “Go, take yourself a wife of harlotry and children of harlotry” (1:2). The reason for this unusual request was to demonstrate that God’s Covenant People, the nation of Israel, had been unfaithful to God because of their worship of false gods.

Hosea did as the Lord commanded, taking a prostitute named Gomer as his wife. The first three chapters of the book report their stormy relationship as husband and wife. Soon after their marriage, Gomer bore three children. Hosea gave them symbolic names—Jezreel (God scatters), Lo-Ruhamah (not pitied), and Lo-Ammi (not my people)—to show that God was about to bring His judgment upon the nation of Israel because the people had fallen into worship of false gods. Just as the nation rejected God, Gomer eventually left Hosea and the children to return to her life of prostitution. But Hosea’s love for his wife refused to die.

He searched until he found her at the slave market. Then he bought her back and restored her as his wife. This tender picture showed clearly that God had not given up on Israel, although the people had “played the harlot” many times by returning to their old life of pagan worship and enslavement to sin.

The second major division of Hosea’s book, chapters 4–14, contains the prophet’s messages of judgment against the nations of Israel and Judah. The northern kingdom of Israel, Hosea’s homeland, is singled out for strong rebuke because of its gross sin and immorality. But the book ends on a positive note. In tender language, the prophet reminds the nation of God’s undying love. In spite of their unfaithfulness, He is determined to redeem them and restore them to their favored place as His Covenant People.

Authorship and Date. The undisputed author of this book is the prophet Hosea, who identifies himself in the book as “the son of Beeri” (1:1). His name, a shortened form of “Joshua” and “Jesus,” means “salvation.” The prophet also says that he lived and prophesied during the reign of King Jeroboam II of Israel while four successive kings—Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah—were ruling in Judah. This means his prophetic ministry covered a period of about forty years, from about 755 B.C. to about 715 B.C. His book was written sometime during these years.

Historical Setting. Hosea prophesied during the twilight years of the northern kingdom of Israel, a time of rapid moral decline. Worship of false gods was mixed with worship of the one true God. Ritualism rather than righteousness was the order of the day as even the priests lost sight of the real meaning of worship. Although King JEROBOAM II was the instigator of many of these policies, at least his forty-year reign (793–753 B.C.) brought a measure of political stability to the nation. This stability came to an end when he died. In rapid succession, six different kings ruled Israel during the next twenty-five years; four were eliminated by assassination. Weakened by internal strife, Israel collapsed in 722 B.C. when the nation of Assyria destroyed Samaria, Israel's capital city. Hosea was probably an eyewitness to many of these events as his prophecy about God's judgment on Israel was fulfilled.

Theological Contribution. Through his marriage and prophetic message, Hosea presents a vivid picture of the steadfast love of God for His people. Because they have sinned and broken the covenant, God's people deserve His certain judgment. But because of His undying love for them, His mercy and lovingkindness will prevail. Many people believe the Old Testament portrays God's wrath, while the New Testament pictures his love. But the Book of Hosea includes tender expressions of deep love among this prophet's descriptions of judgment. Hosea ranks with Deuteronomy and the Gospel of John as major biblical treatises on the love of God. This love is not mere sentiment; it is rooted in compassion and bound in holiness. God's love makes demands, but it is also willing to forgive.

Special Considerations. The Book of Hosea is noted for its many references to the history of Israel, as well as its vivid poetic images. Throughout the book the prophet speaks tenderly of the nation of Israel as "EPHRAIM." This is a reference to the largest of the ten northern tribes of Palestine that made up the nation of Israel. Because of their superior numbers, Ephraim was a symbol of power and strength. This tribal name also reminded the nation of its history and tradition. Ephraim, after whom the tribe was named (Gen. 48:17–22), was the son of Joseph.

Few events in the Bible have been debated as strongly as Hosea’s marriage. The command for a man of God to marry a harlot is so startling that interpreters have offered many different explanations. Some suggest that the story is meant to be read only as an allegory. Others believe Gomer was faithful at first but went astray after their marriage. Still others believe she was a prostitute from the very beginning but that Hosea did not learn this until later.

All of these approaches to the passage issue from our offended sense of right and wrong. The plain meaning of the text is that Hosea married a prostitute at God’s direct command. In this way, through his own tormented life Hosea could present a striking picture of the pain in God’s heart because of the harlotries of His Covenant People.

HOSEN—an archaic Old English word for “long trousers” or “leggings” (Dan. 3:21, KJV). Other versions translate the word as “trousers” (NKJV) and “tunics” (NRSV).

Also see DRESS OF THE BIBLE.

HOSHAIAH [hoe SHAY uh] (the Lord has saved)—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. An Israelite who participated in the dedication of the rebuilt wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:32).
2. The father of Jezaniah (Jer. 42:1) and Azariah (Jer. 43:2).

HOSHAMA [HOSH uh muh] (the Lord has heard)—a son of Jeconiah, king of Judah, who was carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar (1 Chr. 3:18).

HOSHEA [hoe SHEE ah] (salvation)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. Another name of Joshua the son of Nun (Num. 13:8, 16).
2. The last king of Israel (2 Kin. 15:30; 17:1–6; 18:1, 9–10). Hoshea became king after he assassinated the former king, Pekah. Hoshea did evil in God’s sight, but not to the extent of former kings. While he did not wipe out idolatrous worship, he at least did not give official approval to the practice. When Hoshea took the throne, he served as a puppet king under Assyria. But he eventually quit sending tribute money to Assyria and began negotiating an alliance with Egypt. When the Assyrian king, Shalmaneser V, learned of Hoshea's rebellion and conspiracy, he advanced toward Israel. The capital city of Samaria was besieged and Hoshea was captured and imprisoned. After two years, Assyria finally captured Samaria, and its inhabitants were carried away to new locations in the Assyrian Empire (2 Kin. 17:18–23).

3. A son of Azaziah (1 Chr. 27:20) and an Ephraimite ruler in David's time.
4. A resident of Jerusalem during the rebuilding of Jerusalem's wall under Nehemiah (Neh. 10:23); he signed a covenant to keep God's law.

HOSPITALITY—the practice of entertaining strangers graciously. Hospitality was a very important trait in Bible times. In the New Testament, the Greek word translated "hospitality" literally means "love of strangers" (Rom. 12:13). In the Old Testament, Abraham was the host to angels unaware; he invited strangers into his house, washed their feet, prepared fresh meat, had Sarah bake bread, and later accompanied them as they left (Gen. 18:1–15). Even today a traditional greeting to the guests among the Bedouin people of the Middle East is "You are among your family."

Hospitality was specifically commanded by God (Lev. 19:33–34; Luke 14:13–14; Rom. 12:13). It was to be characteristic of all believers (1 Pet. 4:9), especially bishops (Titus 1:7–8; 1 Tim. 3:2). Jesus emphasized the importance of hospitality by answering the question of who should inherit the kingdom: "I was a stranger and you took Me in" (Matt. 25:35).

Several Old Testament personalities set a good example for all believers in the practice of hospitality. These included Abraham (Gen. 18:1–8); David (2 Sam. 6:19); the Shunammite woman (2 Kin. 4:8–10); Nehemiah (Neh. 5:17–18); and Job (Job 31:17–20).

Psalm 23 concludes with a portrait of a host who prepares a table for the weary, anoints the head of the guest with oil, and shows every kindness so that the guest's cup runs over. The psalmist sees the Lord Himself as Host; His hospitality exceeds all others.

The New Testament also gives examples of gracious hospitality: Mary (Matt. 26:6–13); Martha (Luke 10:38); the early Christians (Acts 2:45–46); Lydia (Acts 16:14–15); and Priscilla and Aquila (Acts 18:26).

HOST—a person who entertains guests in his home and shows HOSPITALITY to strangers. Perhaps because of their own history as wanderers in the desert, hospitality was important to the Hebrew people. Guests were welcomed and provided for (Gen. 18:1–8; 2 Kin. 4:8–17). A host would go to great lengths to protect his guests (Judg. 19:16–24). This was considered a sign of faithfulness to God (Job 31:32; Is. 58:7).

HOST OF HEAVEN—heavenly beings created by God and associated with Him in His rule over the world. God is a social being who brings families into being and implants His divine image in them. The families of earth bear this image (Ps. 19:1–6; Rom. 1:19–20), as does the host of heaven (Is. 45:12). At the angel's announcement to the shepherds of the birth of Jesus, a multitude of the heavenly host praised God (Luke 2:13). They served as a great choir of created heavenly beings who glorified their Creator and participated in the background of the new age of salvation.

God is also called "the LORD of hosts" (Is. 1:9; Lord Almighty, NIV; 10:23; Rom. 9:29, NRSV). The host of heaven consists of angelic beings and celestial bodies whom God has created and whose principal role, like ours, is to serve and glorify Him (1 Kin. 22:19; Ps. 103:19–21; Is. 40:26).

But the host of heaven can become demonic, rebel against God, and come under His judgment (Is. 24:21; 34:4). God's people must not give undue attention or worship to the host of heaven. Scripture warns of God's judgment upon those who love and serve created things like the host of heaven (2 Kin. 23:5; Acts 7:42; Gal. 4:3, 9). All things are created by God to demonstrate His glory and should be enjoyed as such. But these must never displace God the Creator.

HOSTAGE—a person held as a prisoner to ensure good behavior, ransom payments, or certain other concessions from an opposing force. When Jehoash, king of Israel, defeated the nation of Judah, he took hostages back to Samaria to keep Judah from launching a counterattack (2 Kin. 14:14; 2 Chr. 25:24).

HOSTS, LORD OF (see GOD, NAMES OF).

HOTHAM [HOE tham] (signet ring)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Heber (1 Chr. 7:32). Hotham is probably the same person as Helem (v. 35).
2. An AROERITE whose two sons Shama and Jeiel were among David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:44; Hothan, KJV).

HOTHAN [HOE than]—A form of HOTHAM.

HOTHIR [HOE thur]—a Levite in charge of the twenty-first division of singers in the tabernacle service (1 Chr. 25:4).

HOUGH [hok]—KJV word for HAMSTRING.

HOUND (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HOUR—one of the twenty-four parts of a day. An hour was the shortest measurement of time among the people of the ancient world. It was a twelfth part of the period from sunrise to sunset, and thus was of constantly changing length, according to the season of the year. The KJV phrase "the same hour" (Dan. 3:6, 15) occurs in the NKJV as "immediately." The word "hour" is sometimes used generally of time. For instance, Daniel was astonished for one hour (Dan. 4:19, KJV) or for a time (NKJV). A normal working day, from sunrise to sunset, was twelve hours (Matt. 20:1–12).

HOUSE—a structure in which people lived. The word translated "house" appears often in the Bible. It is used of any dwelling place, whether the hut of a peasant, the palace of a king, or the temple of God. Many different kinds and sizes of houses existed in biblical times. The style and size was dictated by tradition and the resources of the family. Those with money usually had two-story homes with a number of rooms. Local customs and available materials dictated the construction techniques used to build houses.

Houses were not always built of stone or brick or made from mud. Many people in the Bible, such as Abraham and Moses, spent much of their lives in TENTS. Those whose livelihood depended upon sheep and goats moved their livestock from place to place to take advantage of the available pastureland. Others lived in tents for part of the year and in permanent houses for the rest. A farmer, for example, might live in the city for safety, except when he needed to be stationed close to his fields during the growing season.

Some people in all periods of Bible history lived in caves. Common in the limestone hills of central Israel, caves had several advantages over a house. Maintenance and upkeep were low. A cave is also cool in the summer and warm in the winter. Caves often served also as stables for livestock as well as a place to live. According to early Christian tradition, the stable in Bethlehem that became the place of Jesus' birth was located in such a cave.

Most people lived in walled villages and towns for protection from outlaws and foreign armies. Conditions inside a town were crowded, with houses built next to each other, separated only by narrow streets. Town planning was rare during those times. It is sometimes difficult to tell from the archaeological remains of a group of houses just where one ended and another began. A particular room might belong to one house in one time, but when the city was rebuilt some time later, the same room might be joined to the house next door.

Roof. The typical roof of a house in Palestine throughout the biblical period was made by laying logs or beams across the top of the walls. Next, branches and thatch were laid on top of the beams, which were then covered by a layer of clay. To keep it waterproof, the clay was renewed by treatment with special rollers periodically. During Jesus' day, some houses of Palestine were built along Roman lines with sloping roofs covered with baked clay tiles; but such houses were rare.

Since it was flat, the roof became a vital part of the house. An outside staircase gave easy access, and a low wall around the roof protected members of the family from falling. In a crowded city, the roof provided needed open space. It was a place to dry fruit and grains, wash clothes, and enjoy the cool evening breezes on hot nights. Sometimes an extra room was added on the roof to serve as a spare bedroom or as a storage room. The Shunammite woman prepared a room for the prophet Elisha, who frequently stayed at her house while visiting the area (2 Kin. 4:8–11).

Doors and Windows. Doorways within the house usually were covered with curtains, but the outside doorway sometimes had a wooden door. Attached to posts, doors turned on two pivots that fitted into sockets. In a two-story house, windows were located on the second floor. If the house had a central courtyard, most of the windows opened onto it. This provided security and privacy. Glass windows were unknown in Bible times. Most windows were left open, with perhaps a lattice or shutter providing security and reduced visibility from the outside.

Floor. The most common floor in houses during Bible times was packed clay. Other possibilities were a layer of plaster on top of the clay or thin pieces of limestone rock, called flagstones. During the time of Christ, mosaic floors were quite common among the wealthy. These were made by setting small cubes of stone in wet plaster. Usually white limestone cubes were used, but sometimes elaborate designs were made by using different colored stones.

Walls. The most common materials used for the walls of houses in Palestine were mud bricks or rough field stones.

These were often covered with a layer of plaster, which would be whitewashed. This brightened the interior of the home considerably. The walls of the wealthy were more elaborately decorated. The walls might be painted with different colors. Wood panels and inlays of ivory were also common in the houses of the wealthy.

Furnishings. The typical Israelite house was simply furnished, more like the homes of peasants a century or so ago than the modern homes of today. Mats covered the floors in some rooms, although the wealthy might have rugs. Inside lighting was poor, with small oil lamps providing some additional light. Furniture was simple, consisting of chairs and a table for eating, perhaps a storage chest or two, and mats on a bed frame. The wealthy had more elaborate versions of this furniture, often with ivory inlays and trimming in gold and silver.

A central heating system, even a fireplace, was unheard of during these times. Because the climate in Palestine is mild, heat sources were not needed. Fires for cooking were usually built outside in the courtyard, or inside a room, with the smoke escaping from a window. Heat in the winter was sometimes provided by a small portable fire pan in which a fire was kept burning. King Jehoiakim of Judah probably cut up the scroll of Jeremiah’s prophecies and burned it in such a fire pan (Jer. 36:23).

Food Preparation and Sanitation. Food was usually prepared in the courtyard outside the house. An oven and an open fire provided the normal means of cooking food. An oven consisted of a pile of stones and bricks. A fire in one part heated the whole oven to a high temperature. Food was then cooked by placing it in another part of the oven or on top of the fire.

Food storage was an important consideration, since most families grew their own food and stored it during the long, dry summer. Grains and dried fruits were stored in huge pottery jars kept in a special storage room in or near the house. Sometimes the jars were buried in the ground with only the mouth of the jars above ground. If the house did not have its own cistern, a large water jar was also kept nearby.

Some houses had their own cisterns. These were large chambers beneath the house, lined with plaster to make them waterproof. Rainwater falling on the roof was channeled to the cistern and stored there until the dry season. Drinking water was kept in a large pottery jar. These jars were excellent water coolers because the water seeped through the unglazed pottery and evaporated on the surface. This process cooled the rest of the water.

Sanitation measures varied considerably, depending upon the period of time and the particular city involved. Many cities had no provisions for the disposal of human waste. It may have been collected in chamber pots, carried outside the city, and used to fertilize the fields. Some rooms with toilets have been discovered by archaeologists. In some cities archaeologists have also discovered pipes buried in the ground, designed to carry water outside the city walls. Caesarea, the major port city in Palestine in the time of Christ, had a clever method of cleansing its sewers. The sewers, built at sea level and connected to the sea, were flushed twice each day by the incoming and outgoing tides.

Trash disposal was a problem in ancient times as it is today, although garbage did not exist in the volume our modern culture produces. Trash was usually carried outside the city and burned or dumped. Burning garbage was so common in the Hinnom Valley just south of Jerusalem that the valley became the source of the Greek word for “hell” used in the New Testament (gehenna).

Houses of the Patriarchal Period. The ancestors of Abraham came from the city of Ur. If this was the famous Ur of southern Iraq, it was a major city. Ur was partially excavated in the early 1900s. Large palaces, royal tombs, and many homes were uncovered. The typical house of Mesopotamia, the entire region between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers, at this time was two stories tall, built right next to adjoining homes. The focus of the house was a central courtyard, surrounded by a series of rooms on both floors. The windows and doors opened onto this courtyard, thus giving privacy.

Rooms on the first floor were used for storage, servants' quarters, and animals. The second floor contained the bedrooms and living quarters of the owners.

Further west toward the Mediterranean Sea, the Canaanites of this time had divided the land into a number of small city-states, each consisting of one large town and several satellite villages. Excavations of these towns have uncovered evidence of a class-oriented society. A few large houses are evident, but the majority of the people lived in crowded quarters, with small homes built on top of one another. No typical layout for the small homes existed. The large houses tended to follow the plan of Mesopotamian homes of that time, with the rooms organized around a central courtyard.

Abraham and his immediate descendants did not live in such houses, since they were nomads, traveling from place to place and living in tents. They did visit towns frequently, however, and were probably familiar with such homes in Mesopotamia and Canaan.

Houses of Israel and Judah. Although houses were built in a variety of styles and sizes during Bible times, there was a distinctly Israelite dwelling; it is usually called the four-room house. It consisted of an open courtyard, with rooms stretching along both sides of this open space. Another room or two was situated at one end so that the overall shape of the house was a rectangle. Entrance into the home was through a door leading into the courtyard. Sometimes one or both of the long rooms flanking the courtyard were open on the side that faced the courtyard. In these houses several large stone pillars supported the roof.

The houses averaged about 900 to 1000 square feet in area, with about one-fourth of that area as the courtyard. Many houses had second stories, almost doubling the size of the dwelling. This style of house has been found at sites all over Israel. Some towns, such as Tell Beit Mirsim, have many of these houses, all about the same size and well-designed. This suggests that they were built at the same time following some overall plan.

Houses of New Testament Times. During this period the homes of the poor were not very different from what they had been centuries earlier. The building materials were similar; walls were built of rubble covered with plaster or mud bricks. Roofs were usually flat, serving also as living space.

The houses of the wealthy gave evidence of the long Persian occupation of the land of Palestine and the later influence of the Greeks. The floors of these more elaborate houses were often paved with mosaic tiles in beautiful designs. Arched roofs of bricks first appeared during the fifth century B.C. By the time of Christ, these were common throughout the land. Courtyards remained a vital part of the house, but they were often surrounded by porches. A few homes in Jerusalem from this time, with fragments of beautiful paintings of animals, have been uncovered by archaeologists.

HOUSEHOLD—all the people who lived together in the same family in Bible times. Israelite families were larger than ours today. The family included the immediate family and all who lived together in the same house. This included slaves, concubines, foreign residents, and servants. When Abraham circumcised all the males in his household (Gen. 17:23, 27), he included his servants and slaves. The household and their possessions moved as a unit (1 Sam. 27:3; 2 Sam. 15:16). When Obed–Edom kept the ark, he and his household were given a special blessing by David (2 Sam. 6:11). In the New Testament, entire households were sometimes baptized together (Acts 16:15; 1 Cor. 1:16). “Household” is also used in a spiritual or symbolic sense. United by God’s election and salvation through Jesus Christ, Christians are included in God’s household of faith (Gal. 6:10; Eph. 2:19).

HOUSEHOLDER—the owner of a house or head of a household (Matt. 13:52). The NKJV translates the same Greek word as "owner" (Matt. 13:27), "landowner" (Matt. 20:1), and "master of the house" (Mark 14:14).

HOUSETOP—the flat roof of a house. In Bible times, the housetop was used as a sitting area. Open to cool breezes in the evening, the housetop overlooked the streets of the city. It was an ideal place for proclaiming public messages; thus Jesus told the disciples to "preach on the housetops" (Matt. 10:27). Also see HOUSE.

HOZAI [HOE zay eye]—an unknown prophet who left a record of some of the events of King Manasseh's life (2 Chr. 33:19).

HUB—the center portion of a wheel to which the spokes are attached (1 Kin. 7:33).

HUKKOK [HUH kahk]—a town on the border of Naphtali near Aznoth Tabor (Josh. 19:34). The site of Hukkok probably is identical with present-day Yakuk (or Yaquq), about 10 kilometers (6 miles) northeast of Capernaum.

HUKOK [HUH kahk]—a city on the boundary of Asher (1 Chr. 6:75), identical with HELKATH (Josh. 19:25).

HUL [huhl]—the second son of Aram and a grandson of Shem (Gen. 10:23).

HULDAH [HUHL duh]—a prophetess consulted when the lost Book of the Law was found (2 Chr. 34:22–28). An indication of the esteem in which Huldah was held can be seen in Josiah's action. When the Book of the Law was found, he consulted her rather than Jeremiah. Huldah prophesied Jerusalem's destruction but added that because Josiah had done what was right in God's sight, it would not happen before Josiah died.

HUMAN SACRIFICE—a pagan rite in which a human being, often the firstborn child, was offered to a god to atone for sin or secure the god's favor. God distinctly prohibited the Hebrew people from imitating their heathen neighbors by offering up human beings as sacrifices (Lev. 20:2–5; Deut. 18:10). God's command to Abraham to sacrifice Isaac was no exception because this was done to test Abraham and his faith (Gen. 22:1–19).

In times of rebellion and idolatry, the Israelites sometimes copied their neighbors in sacrificing children to Molech and other gods. The Valley of HINNOM was often the scene of these activities (Jer. 19:5–6; 32:35). Specific instances of human sacrifice mentioned in the Bible include the burning of his son on the city wall by the king of Moab (2 Kin. 3:26–27) and Kings Ahaz and Manasseh making their sons "pass through the fire" (2 Kin. 16:3; 21:6). Jephthah's offering of his daughter is another example (Judg. 11:29–40).

• An oven in Carthage, where infants were sacrificed as a worship ritual. This practice was strictly forbidden among the Hebrew people because of the high value that God placed on human life (Lev. 20:1–5; Jer. 32:35).

HUMILITY—a freedom from arrogance that grows out of the recognition that all we have and are comes from God. The Greek philosophers despised humility because to them it implied inadequacy, lack of dignity, and worthlessness. This is not the meaning of humility as defined by the Bible. Jesus is the supreme example of humility (Matt. 11:29; Mark 10:45; John 13:4–17; Phil. 2:5–8), and He is completely adequate and of infinite dignity and worth. Biblical humility is not a belittling of oneself (Matt. 6:16–18; Rom. 12:3), but an exalting or praising of others, especially God and Christ (John 3:30; Phil. 2:3). Humble people focus more on God and others than on themselves.

Biblical humility is also a recognition that by ourselves we are inadequate, without dignity and worthless. Yet, because we are created in God's image and because believers are in Christ, we have infinite worth and dignity (1 Cor. 4:6–7; 1 Pet. 1:18–19). True humility does not produce pride but gratitude. Since God is both our Creator and Redeemer, our existence and righteousness depend on Him (John 15:5; Acts 17:28; Eph. 2:8–10).

HUMPS—the fleshy mounds on the backs of camels where reserve food is stored in the form of fat (Is. 30:6; bunches, KJV). These humps enable camels to make long trips with very little food or water.

HUMTAH [HUHM tuh]—a town in the hill country of Judah near Hebron (Josh. 15:54).

HUNCHBACK (see DISABILITIES AND DEFORMITIES).

HUNDRED, TOWER OF THE—a tower on the wall of Jerusalem between the Sheep Gate and the Tower of Hananeel (Neh. 3:1; 12:39; Tower of Meah, KJV). It was one of the most important places on the wall restored by Nehemiah.

HUNGER—a strong need or intense desire for food (Prov. 19:15; Jer. 38:9). The Hebrew word translated "hunger" is also translated "famine" to indicate a widespread and serious shortage of food (Gen. 12:10). Those who partake of Jesus, the Bread of Life, will never hunger (John 6:35).

HUNTER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

HUPHAM [HOO fuhm]—a descendant of Benjamin and the founder of a tribal family, the HUPHAMITES (Num. 26:39). He is also called Huppim (Gen. 46:21).

HUPHAMITES [HOO fuhm ights]—members of a tribal family descended from HUPHAM (Num. 26:39).

HUPPAH [HUH puh] (covering)—a priest responsible for one of the divisions of service in the sanctuary in David's time (1 Chr. 24:13).

HUPPIM [HUH pim]—a form of HUPHAM.

HUR [her]—the name of six men in the Old Testament:

1. A leader who, with Aaron, held up Moses' hands at Rephidim so the army of Israel could defeat the forces of Amalek (Ex. 17:10, 12). Aaron and Hur were also left in charge of the people while Moses went up onto Mt. Sinai (Ex. 24:14).
2. A son of Caleb by Ephrath, grandfather of Bezaleel. Hur was filled with the Spirit by the Lord to work on the tabernacle (Ex. 38:22; 1 Chr. 2:19, 50; 2 Chr. 1:5).
3. One of the five kings of Midian. Hur was killed by the invading forces of Joshua (Num. 31:8; Josh. 13:21).
4. Father of Ben-Hur, an officer in Solomon's administration (1 Kin. 4:8).
5. A son of Judah (1 Chr. 4:1).
6. Father of Rephaiah, who helped repair Jerusalem's wall in Nehemiah's time (Neh. 3:9).

HURAI [HUR igh]—one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:32), also called Hiddai (2 Sam. 23:30).

HURAM [HUR uhm] (lofty brother)—the name of three Old Testament men:

1. A descendant of Bela and grandson of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:5).
2. A king of Tyre who formed an alliance with David and Solomon (2 Chr. 2:3), also called Hiram.

3. A master craftsman from Tyre employed by Solomon (2 Chr. 4:16; Huram-Abi, NIV), also called Hiram (1 Kin. 7:13).

HURI [HUR ree]—the father of Abihail (1 Chr. 5:14).

HURRIANS [HOOR ree unz] (see HORITES).

HUSBAND—a woman's marriage partner. In Hebrew society, the husband was the absolute authority in the home. But the apostle Paul called on husbands to temper their authority with the higher value of love: "Husbands, love your wives" (Eph. 5:25). Paul compared the relationship between Christ and the church to the husband-wife union (Eph. 5:23). Also see FAMILY.

HUSBANDMAN (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

HUSHAH [HUH shah]—a son of Ezer and a member of the family of Judah (1 Chr. 4:4).

HUSHAI [HOO shigh]—a friend and wise counselor of King David (2 Sam. 15:32, 37). During Absalom's revolt, Hushai remained faithful to David and became a spy for him in Jerusalem. He probably was the father of Baana, one of Solomon's twelve officers (1 Kin. 4:16).

HUSHAM [HOO shuhm]—a king of Edom (Gen. 36:34–35).

HUSHATHITE [HOO shuh thight]—a native of HUSHAH (2 Sam. 21:18; 23:27).

HUSHIM [HOO shim]—the name of two men and one woman in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Dan (Gen. 46:23), also called Shuham (Num. 26:42).
2. A son of Aher, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 7:12).
3. A Moabitess and one of the wives of Shaharaim (1 Chr. 8:11).

HUT—a shelter or lean-to made of tree limbs to provide temporary shelter. The prophet Isaiah spoke of God's judgment as a strong wind that would flatten such flimsy buildings (Is. 1:8; 24:10; cottage, KJV).

HUZ [huhz]—the oldest son of Nahor and Milcah (Gen. 22:21; Uz, NASB, REB, NIV).

HUZZAB [HUH zuhb]—the name of an Assyrian queen, or more likely, a poetic reference to Nineveh, the "queen" city of Assyria (Nah. 2:7, KJV).

HYACINTH (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

HYENA (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

HYKSOS [HICK soss] (rulers of foreign countries)—a people of the ancient Near East who ruled Egypt from about 1700–1570 B.C. The origin of the Hyksos is uncertain. They probably came from Asia. Some scholars believe they were Amorites from the Mesopotamian region. The Hyksos apparently also include Hurrian and Indo-European peoples.

While ruling in Egypt, their capital was situated at Avaris (the biblical Zoan), in the northwest corner of the Nile Delta (Num. 13:22; Is. 19:11, 13; Ezek. 30:14). The Hyksos introduced the horse and chariot into the Nile Valley. The Egyptians were quick to adopt this implement of warfare. While they were an important people, the Hyksos are not mentioned in the Bible. Also see EGYPT.

HYMENAEUS [high muh NEE uhs]—an early Christian who denied the faith (1 Tim. 1:19–20; 2 Tim. 2:16–17). His message was heretical because he claimed the resurrection of the dead was already past. His "profane and vain babblings . . . spread like cancer" and destroyed the faith of believers.

HYPOCRISY—pretending to be what one is not. The New Testament meaning of "hypocrisy" and "hypocrite" reflects its use in Greek drama. In the Greek theater, a hypocrite was one who wore a mask and played a part on the stage, imitating the speech, mannerisms, and conduct of the character portrayed.

Throughout His ministry, Jesus vigorously exposed and denounced the hypocrisy of many who opposed Him, especially the scribes and Pharisees. They paraded their charitable deeds, praying and fasting as a theatrical display to win the praise of people (Matt. 6:1–2, 5, 16). They sought to give the appearance of being godly, but they were actually blind to the truth of God (Luke 20:19–20).

The apostle Paul encountered hypocrisy among some Jewish Christians, who refused to eat with the Gentile converts. Paul pointed out that “sincere [literally, unhypocritical] love” is one of the marks of Christian ministry. And he exhorted his readers to behave like Christians: “Let love be without hypocrisy” (Rom. 12:9).

IBEX (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

IBHAR [IB hahr] ([God] chooses)—a son of David born at Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:15).

IBLEAM [IB lih uhm]—a town in the territory of Issachar assigned to the half-tribe of Manasseh west of the Jordan River (Josh. 17:11). The tribe failed to expel the inhabitants, so the Canaanites continued to dwell in the land (Judg. 1:27). Ibleam may be the same place as Bileam (1 Chr. 6:70). The site is Khirbet Bel'ameh, about 16 kilometers (10 miles) southeast of Megiddo.

IBNEIAH [ib NEE uh] (the Lord builds)—a son of Jeroham and the head of a Benjamite family that returned from the captivity (1 Chr. 9:8).

IBNIJAH [ib NIGH juh] (the Lord builds)—a Benjamite and the father of Reuel (1 Chr. 9:8).

IBRI [IB righ]—a Levite during the reign of King David (1 Chr. 24:27).

IBSAM [IB sahm]—a form of JIBSAM.

IBZAN [IB zan]—a judge who ruled over Israel, or a portion of it (Judg. 12:8–10). He had thirty sons and thirty daughters and was a man of wealth and influence.

ICE—frozen water. The Old Testament mentions ice in connection with God's power (Job 37:10; frost, KJV; 38:29). Because Palestine has a mild climate, ice, snow, and frost are rare except in the highest mountains. The summit of Mount Hermon is covered with SNOWall year round. Also see WEATHER.

ICHABOD [IK uh bahd] (inglorious)—a son of Phinehas and grandson of Eli, the high priest. Several national and family tragedies prompted the wife of Phinehas to name her child Ichabod, declaring, “The glory has departed from Israel!” (1 Sam. 4:21).

ICONIUM [eye KOE nih uhm]—the capital of the province of Lycaonia in central Asia Minor. Iconium was visited by Paul and Barnabas when they were expelled from Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:51). Paul’s ministry at Iconium was blessed by the salvation of many Jews and Gentiles (Acts 14:1). But persecution overtook them, and they had to flee for their lives (Acts 14:6; 19, 21). Iconium is known today as Konya, or Konia.

IDALAH [ID uh luh]—a town in the territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:15), known today as Khirbet el-Hawarah, near Nazareth.

IDBASH [ID bash]—one of the sons of the father of Etam (1 Chr. 4:3).

IDDO [IH doe]—the name of six or seven men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Ahinadab, one of Solomon’s twelve administrative officers (1 Kin. 4:14).
2. A Levite of the family of Gershon (1 Chr. 6:21; Gershom, KJV, NRSV, REB). He is also called Adaiah (1 Chr. 6:41).
3. A son of Zechariah. Iddo was a captain of the tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, east of the Jordan River, in David’s time (1 Chr. 27:21).
4. A seer or prophet who wrote concerning three kings of Israel: Solomon (2 Chr. 9:29), Rehoboam (2 Chr. 12:15), and Abijah (2 Chr. 13:22).
5. A grandfather of the prophet Zechariah (Ezra 5:1; 6:14).
6. A leader of the Jews living at Casiphia in Babylonia (Ezra 8:17).
7. The head of a family of priests who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel after the captivity (Neh. 12:4, 16). He may be the same person as No. 5.

IDLE—useless, inactive, lazy. The Bible declares that the idle person will come to poverty and suffer hunger (Prov. 14:23; 19:15).

IDOL, IMAGE—a representation or symbol of an object of worship; a false god. In a few places in the Bible, the word “image” appears in a neutral sense, not referring to a man-made object of worship. Adam, created in the image of God (Gen. 1:26), or Christ, the visible image of the invisible God (2 Cor. 4:4; Col. 1:15), are examples of this.

Most of the time, however, “image” refers to a statue or something of human manufacture that people have substituted for the true and living God. Occasionally it appears in the same sentence with “idol” (Lev. 26:1; 2 Chr. 33:7).

In biblical times idols were made in different ways and of various materials. Judges 17:3 speaks of “a carved image and a molded image.” Some were made of metal or wood, and others were poured into a mold or shaped by hand. The silver or gold idols were poured, but the clay ones could also be shaped by hand. The image in Nebuchadnezzar’s dream (Dan. 2:32–33) was of gold, silver, bronze, iron, and clay.

In a satire on idolatry, the prophet Isaiah provided considerable detail about the making of idols (Is. 44:9–20). He described the smith with his tongs and hammer and the carpenter with his ruler, line, planes, and compass. Isaiah also ridiculed the idol-makers by noting that such a statue has to be nailed down “that it might not totter” (Is. 41:7).

Perhaps the best definition of an idol is something we ourselves make into a god. It does not have to be a statue or a tree. It can be anything that stands between us and God or something we substitute for God.

• Bronze idol of Baal, pagan god of war and fertility. Idols such as this were frequently plated with gold (Is. 40:19).

IDOLATRY—the worship of something created as opposed to the worship of the Creator Himself. Scores of references to idolatry appear in the Old Testament. This shows that idolatry probably was the greatest temptation our spiritual forefathers faced. While we find bowing down to a statue no temptation, they apparently slipped into idolatry constantly. So serious was this sin that the prohibition against the making and worshiping of images was included near the beginning of the Ten Commandments (Ex. 20:4–6).

Israel’s ancient neighbors believed there were many gods. They worshiped whatever gods were necessary at a given time. An equally erroneous notion was that these gods either were the idols themselves or were represented by idols. Some people probably insisted that the idol was only an aid to worship and not the object of worship itself. But this distinction must have been hard to keep in mind. That is why the Bible strictly forbids the making of images of any kind—because they themselves receive the worship that God jealously reserves for Himself.

Archaeologists have discovered idols of most of the pagan gods mentioned in the Bible, in addition to many unidentified ones. Since the Romans began emperor worship late in the New Testament period, some of the elegant statues of the Caesars discovered by archaeologists may have been idols to be worshiped.

Idolatry can take many forms, and it has persisted from the earliest times. Joshua 24:2 states that Abraham’s father served idols. Perhaps the earliest reference in the Bible to idols is the “household idols” or TERAPHIM (small figurines) that Rachel stole from her father Laban when she and Leah fled with Jacob (Gen. 31:34).

The next noteworthy instance of idolatry was Aaron’s making of the golden calf at the foot of Mount Sinai. This happened when the Israelites lost their patience waiting for Moses to return with the revelation of the true and living God (Ex. 32:1–4). Some have tried to defend Aaron’s action by saying that the calf was merely the seat that the invisible God occupied. Certainly Moses did not understand idolatry that way. The incident at Baal of Peor (Num. 25:1–3) also involved the worship of an idol.

The conquest of Canaan by the Hebrews brought new temptations to worship the object created rather than the Creator. Joshua 24:15 poses the classic question: Whom will you serve? The gods of Egypt where you have lived? The gods of the Amorites where you now dwell? Or Yahweh the God of Israel? As always, some made the wrong choices (Judges 17–18). A man made an idol for his personal use, but the tribe of Dan took it over for their own use. The Bible does not indicate what form that statue took or what god it represented.

Others tried the route of compromise: the mixing of idolatry with worship of the true God. So Gideon’s ephod was made an object of worship (Judg. 8:24–27). Much later there was another instance of an otherwise good symbol of God’s deliverance turned into an idol. In King Hezekiah’s time the people worshiped Moses’ bronze snake (Num. 21:9; 2 Kin. 18:4).

While idolatry was held in check during most of the period of the United Kingdom under David and Solomon, it burst forth again after the separation of Israel into two nations in 931 B.C. In fact, Jeroboam I made two calf idols and installed them at the major cities in the north and the south (Dan and Bethel) for the purpose of keeping his people’s religious allegiance within the borders of the new kingdom (1 Kin. 12:27–30). He was afraid that if they returned to Jerusalem they might also return to the Lord, and that would spell political disaster for him.

All the successive monarchs in the northern kingdom of Israel were bad. Invariably their sin involved idolatry. Starting with Elijah, the prophets called on the people to turn from the worship of false gods back to reverence for the true God. Hosea's entire book is devoted to preaching against idolatry. Under the figure of speech of divorcing the Lord and marrying Baal, he tied together the ideas of idolatry, spiritual adultery, and literal adultery (Hos. 2:2; 4:2, 13; 7:4; 8:5; 13:2).

Although there were some good kings in the southern kingdom of Judah, the bad ones invariably fell to idolatry. This prompted the major prophets—Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel—and most of the minor prophets as well to ridicule, condemn, and warn against idolatry. A sampling of courageous declarations from these preachers would include Isaiah 2:8; Jeremiah 50:2; Ezekiel 6:4–6; Micah 1:7; Habakkuk 2:18; and Zechariah 13:2.

The captivity of the people of Israel at the hands of the Babylonians produced a permanent cure for the sin of idolatry. Never again, even to the present time, has Judaism succumbed to idolatry.

In the gospels there is virtually nothing about idolatry, but in the letters of Paul and the other New Testament books Christians are frequently warned against idolatry. The Christians lived in a world filled with idols. Both the Romans and the Greeks used them. Paul's observation about Athens in Acts 17:16 tells it well: "He saw that the city was given over to idols."

In the New Testament period the term "idolatry" began to be used as an intellectual concept. Idolatry became not bowing down before a statue but the replacement of God in the mind of the worshiper. Colossians 3:5 points in this direction: "Put to death . . . covetousness, which is idolatry." (See also Eph. 5:5.) At this point the modern believer must understand the vicious nature of idolatry. While we may not make or bow down to a statue, we must be constantly on guard that we let nothing come between us and God. As soon as anything does, that thing is an idol.

In addition to material objects such as houses, land, and cars, idols can be popular heroes or those whom we love. Objects of worship can even include things like fame, reputation, hobbies, pride, and deeds done in the name of the Lord. Idolatry is a dangerous and deceitful sin. No wonder prophets preached against it so often and so strongly.

IDUMEA [id oo MEE uh]—the Greek name for the land of EDOM (Mark 3:8; also Is. 34:5–6, KJV; Ezek. 35:15, KJV; Ezek. 36:5, KJV; see Map 6, A–5). HEROD the Great was an Idumean.

IEZERITES [eye EE zur ites]—a form of JEEZERITES.

IGAL [EYE gal] (the Lord redeems)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. One of the twelve spies sent by Moses to spy out the land of Canaan (Num. 13:7).

2. One of David’s mighty men (2 Sam. 23:36).
3. A son of Shemaiah and a descendant of King David through King Jehoiachin (1 Chr. 3:22; Igeal, KJV; Igar, REB).

IGDALIAH [ig duh LIGH uh] (great is the Lord)—an ancestor of Hanan (Jer. 35:4).

IGEAL [IGH gih uhl]—a form of IGAL.

IIM [EYE em]—a form of IJIM.

IJE ABARIM [IGH jih AH buh rim]—a place where the Israelites stopped in the wilderness on the southeastern frontier of Moab, between Oboth and the Valley of Zered (Num. 21:11; Iye-abarim, NRSV, NIV, REB).

IJIM [EYE yem] (heaps, ruins)—the name of an encampment and a city in the Old Testament:

1. An encampment of the Israelites during their wilderness wandering, after the Exodus from Egypt (Num. 33:45; Iim, KJV; Iyim, NASB, REB, NIV, NRSV).
2. A city in southern Judah (Josh. 15:29; Iim, KJV, NRSV, NASB, NIV; Iyim, REB).

IJON [IGH jahn] (ruin)—a fortified storage city in the hill country of Naphtali. Ijon was captured from King Baasha of Israel by King Ben-Hadad of Syria (2 Chr. 16:4). Later, the inhabitants of this city were captured by Assyria and carried into captivity (2 Kin. 15:29).

IKKESH [IK esh] (subtle)—a man of Tekoa and the father of Ira (2 Sam. 23:26).

ILAI [IGH ligh] (elevated)—one of David’s mighty men (1 Chr. 11:29), also called Zalmon (2 Sam. 23:28).

ILEX (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

ILLUSTRATION—something used to clarify or explain; an example that helps make something clear. Jesus used an illustration concerning the true shepherd (John 10:1–6; parable, KJV, REB; figure of speech, NRSV, NIV, NASB).

ILLYRICUM [ih LIHR ih kuhm]—a Roman province in the Balkan Peninsula, stretching along the east coast of the Adriatic Sea from Italy to Macedonia (see Map 7, B–1). Paul preached the gospel of Christ “from Jerusalem and round about to Illyricum” (Rom. 15:19). Dalmatia (2 Tim. 4:10) was one of the two major divisions of Illyricum. Today, this region is known as Yugoslavia and Albania.

IMAGE (see IDOL, IMAGE).

IMAGE OF GOD—the characteristics of humankind with which God endowed them at creation, distinguishing them from the rest of God’s creatures.

The expression, “image of God,” appears in Genesis 1:26–27; 9:6, and 1 Corinthians 11:7. Some also see a reference to this image in Romans 8:29, 2 Corinthians 3:18, and allusions to it in Psalm 8:5, 1 Corinthians 15:49, Ephesians 4:24, and Colossians 3:10. Jesus is referred to as being “the image of the invisible God” (Col. 1:15) and “the express image of His [God’s] person” (Heb. 1:3).

One understanding of the image of God is that it refers to qualities or attributes present in the person. Thus, the image of God is identified as human reason, will, or personality. Others believe the image is something present when the person is in a relationship to God, and in fact, is that relationship. The image is present like a reflection in a mirror, rather than like a photo—a permanent image printed on paper. Still others believe the image is something a person does. Immediately after God made people in His image, He gave them dominion or authority over the whole earth (Gen. 1:28). According to this view, this active tending and caring for God’s creation constitutes the image of God in people.

The Bible does not indicate exactly what the image of God in humankind is. It may involve all these ideas. Human beings alone have personal, conscious fellowship with God (Gen. 1:29–30; 2:15–16; 3:8). Man is to take God’s place in ruling over and developing the creation (Gen. 1:26, 28). Yet these are possible only because of certain qualities of personality that people alone have (Ps. 139:14).

To be created in the image of God means that we humans have the ability and the privilege of knowing, serving, and loving God, and that we are most fully human when fulfilling our spiritual potential. Every human life is precious to God, and this is exactly how we should treat the people with whom we share the world.

IMAGE, NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S—a human likeness seen by King Nebuchadnezzar in a dream; a gold statue set up by the king in the plain of Dura.

In a dream, King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon saw a frightening image, consisting of five different types of metal. The head was made of fine gold, the breast and arms of silver, the abdomen and thighs of bronze, the legs of iron, and the feet of iron and clay (Dan. 2:32–33). These materials, representing four world empires, were inferior in quality from the head downward, terminating in clay. While the king was thinking about the meaning of the image, a stone broke loose from the mountains, struck against the lowest part of the image, broke the whole statue into pieces, and ground all of its material to powder (Dan. 2:34–35).

Nebuchadnezzar's dream, as interpreted by the prophet Daniel, symbolized the ultimate end of Gentile world power at the second coming of Christ (Daniel 2 and 7; Luke 21:24; Rev. 16:19). One widely held view is that the four kingdoms represented by his dream were Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. The stone that struck the image and became a great mountain symbolized the triumphant return of Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords (Dan. 2:35, 44).

IMAGERY—the products of a person's imagination. The word imagery is found only once in the NKJV: "the chambers of his imagery" (Ezek. 8:12, KJV; "room of His idols," NKJV). The Hebrew word translated "imagery" may mean mental pictures or carved images, such as those of false gods.

IMAGINATION—the power of the mind to form a mental image. The Bible uses the word imagination to refer to evil plans, purposes, and thoughts (Gen. 8:21; Jer. 7:24; Luke 1:51). It does not use the word to describe forming mental images of things that do not exist.

IMLA [IM luh] (God fulfills)—the father of Micaiah the prophet (2 Chr. 18:7–8), also spelled as Imlah (1 Kin. 22:8–9).

IMMANUEL [im MAN you ell] (with us is God)—a symbolic name from the prophecy of Isaiah applied in later years to Jesus the Messiah.

In the time of the prophet Isaiah, Syria and Israel were attacking Judah in an attempt to force King Ahaz of Judah to join a coalition against Assyria. Isaiah called on Ahaz to put his trust in the word of the Lord so the threat of Syria and Israel would come to nothing (Is. 7:1–9). Then the prophet announced God's intention to give Ahaz a sign that His word was true. Syria and Israel would lose their capacity to be a threat to Judah. But before this peace and prosperity becomes a reality, Isaiah announced there would be a drastic purging judgment at the hands of the king of Assyria. Only a remnant would experience the good future that God had intended for his people (Is. 7:10–25).

The sign that God promised to provide to Ahaz was the birth of a child within whose childhood years these events of promise and judgment would take place. The child would be given the name Immanuel, meaning "God with us," as a symbol of Judah's hope in the midst of adversity (Is. 8:8, 10). God would be with His people, in spite of the devastation wrought by the forces of the Assyrians (Is. 8:7–8). Immanuel offered a future and a hope for those who would place their trust in God.

The identity of this child and the circumstances of his birth are much disputed. This remarkable prophecy achieved its full meaning with the coming of Jesus. But there may have been an initial fulfillment in the eighth century B.C. when Hezekiah was born to the wicked King Ahaz. When Hezekiah took over the throne, he did lead many moral reforms that brought the people of Judah closer to God. Some scholars believe this may have been the child Isaiah had in mind when he announced this prophecy. Others think the child may have been a son born to Isaiah and "the prophetess" (Is. 8:3). In that case, "Immanuel" would have been another name for Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz.

Regardless of Isaiah's understanding, Matthew rightly recognized that hope for restoration through the house of David reached its ultimate fulfillment only with Jesus (Matt. 1:23). With the coming of Jesus, God is with us in the most profound sense. With the virgin birth God's pattern of working out His purposes through special births (Gen. 3:15; 1 Sam. 2:1–10; 2 Sam. 7:12–16) reaches its climax. And in Jesus God is with us always, even to the end of the age (Matt. 28:20).

IMMER [IM uhr]—the name of a man and a place in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of Aaron whose family had become a “father’s house” by the time of David’s reign (1 Chr. 24:14). The family was made the sixteenth of the twenty-four divisions of priests serving the tabernacle. Some members of this family returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:37) and lived in Jerusalem (Neh. 11:13).
2. A place in Babylonia from which Jewish exiles returned to Palestine (Neh. 7:61). They were unable to prove their genealogical lineage as Israelites.

IMMORALITY—behavior contrary to established moral principles. The word is used to describe Israel’s worship of pagan gods (Ezek. 23:8, 17), an adulterous woman (Prov. 2:16), and sexual impurity (1 Cor. 5:1).

IMMORTALITY—exemption from death; the state of living forever. Thus, immortality is the opposite of mortality, or being subject to death. In the Bible, the word “immortality” refers primarily to the spirit but is also used of the resurrected or transformed body.

The pagan Greeks had no concept of a bodily resurrection. Plato taught that spirit is everything and that matter is nothing. He believed the spirit lives on but the body returns to dust. In 1 Corinthians 15, Paul answered this idea. Paul also spoke of immortality and the resurrection in his sermon to the Greek philosophers on Mars’ Hill. Some mocked, while others said, “We will hear you again on this matter” (Acts 17:32).

The biblical concept of immortality is rooted in our creation in God’s image and likeness (Gen. 1:26–27). God is spirit. So the reference in Genesis is not to bodily form but to spiritual nature. As the Eternal, God is also immortal (1 Tim. 6:16). “And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living being” (Gen. 2:7). God made people to live forever, physically and spiritually. At death the body returns to dust (Gen. 3:19), but the spirit lives on.

The ancient Hebrews believed in the survival of the spirit, although they thought of the afterlife as a shadowy existence. But the idea of bodily resurrection gradually developed (Job 19:26; Ps. 16:8–11; Dan. 12:2). In Jesus' time the Sadducees denied bodily resurrection, while the Pharisees believed in it. Jesus clearly taught that the dead rise (Matt. 22:31–32).

The tone of a hope of immortality pervades the entire Old Testament, including the faith of the patriarchs—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—in God's promises (Heb. 11:13). Abraham's near-sacrifice of Isaac (Genesis 22) is interpreted in Hebrews 11:17–19 as an act that involved faith in resurrection.

In Jesus we have God's full revelation about immortality of both body and spirit (John 11:23–26; Rom. 2:6–7; 2 Tim. 1:10). His bodily resurrection is proof of our immortality (1 Cor. 15:12–16).

The nature of the resurrection body is not clear. Some see it as like that of Jesus—a real body, but not subject to time, space, or density (Luke 24:31, 36–43; John 20:19–20, 26–29). But the matter should not be pressed too far. As our present bodies are fitted to conditions on earth, so will our resurrection bodies be suitable for conditions in heaven (1 Cor. 15:38–44).

Although death is an enemy (1 Cor. 15:26), Paul thought of death as necessary in order that believers may receive immortal, incorruptible bodies (1 Cor. 15:50–57). Those living at the Lord's return will receive transformed bodies (1 Cor. 15:51–54).

In 1 Thessalonians 4:14–17 Paul taught that "the dead in Christ will rise first. Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And thus we shall always be with the Lord."

Jesus spoke of "the resurrection of life" and "the resurrection of condemnation" (John 5:29). Thus, we may assume that both believers and unbelievers will receive resurrection bodies—but their eternal destiny will be different (Dan. 12:2).

• The village of Lubban (center of photo between the two highways) is the successor to the biblical city of Lebonah (Judg. 21:19). The surrounding valley is known as the Plain of Lebonah.

IMMUTABILITY—a characteristic of God signifying that He does not change in His basic nature (Mal. 3:6). In Him, "there is no variation or shadow of turning" (James 1:17). God does not "mutate" from being one kind of God to being another, nor is He subject to the limitations of time and space, since in Christ He upholds all things by the word of His power (Heb. 1:3). He is the Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End, "who is and who was and who is to come, the Almighty" (Rev. 1:8). Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, today, and forever" (Heb. 13:8). God is the God of steadfast love (Deut. 5:10; Ps. 103:4; Is. 63:7).

IMNA [IM nuh]—a son of Helem, of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:35).

IMNAH [IM nuh]—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. The oldest son of Asher (1 Chr. 7:30), also spelled Jimna (Num. 26:44) and Jimnah (Gen. 46:17).
2. The father of Kore, a Levite during the reign of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 31:14).

IMPEDIMENT—a hindrance or obstruction. The phrase, “impediment in his speech” occurs in the account of Jesus’ healing of a deaf-mute (Mark 7:31–37). Jesus’ healing of the sick and the disabled was viewed by the gospel writers as a fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah 35:5–6.

IMPORTUNITY—KJV word for persistence in making a request or demand. In Jesus’ parable of the persistent friend (Luke 11:5–8), a man was rewarded for his importunity (persistence, NKJV, NASB; boldness, NIV; persistence, REB) because he kept knocking on the door. Jesus applied this truth to the need for persistence in prayer.

IMPOTENCE (see DISABILITIES AND DEFORMITIES).

IMPRECATORY PSALMS—individual psalms in the Book of Psalms in which the authors call for misfortune and disaster to strike their enemies. The writers of the psalms were often persecuted by ungodly people, so they prayed that God would pour out His wrath and righteous judgment upon their foes. Only by doing so, they believed, could God’s love and justice strike a proper balance. Some examples of imprecatory psalms are Psalms 5, 11, 17, 35, 55, 59, 69, 109, 137, and 140.

IMPURITY (see UNCLEAN, UNCLEANNESS).

IMPUTATION—charging or reckoning something to a person’s account. A good example of the idea of imputation occurs in Philemon 18, where Paul says that any wrong or debt caused by the runaway slave, Onesimus, should be “put on my account.” Three distinct theological truths in the Bible are directly related to the concept of imputation:

1. The Imputation of Adam’s Sin to His Descendants. Romans 5:12–19 declares that God imputes the guilt of Adam’s sin to all other members of the human race: “By one man’s disobedience many were made sinners.” “Through one man’s offense judgment came to all men, resulting in condemnation.” “By the one man’s offense death reigned through the one.” This concept, also called “original sin,” is touched on as well in 1 Corinthians 15:21–22.
2. The Imputation of the Believer’s Sin to Christ. In addition to guilt imputed from Adam’s sin, all people are also charged with guilt for their personal sins. This Paul describes as “imputing their trespasses to them” (2 Cor. 5:19). The Lord Jesus, whose supernatural conception and birth freed Him from guilt from Adam’s sin and who committed no personal sin, had no sin counted against Him. But when He died as our substitute, God “made Him who knew no sin to be sin for us” (2 Cor. 5:21) so that He “bore our sins in His own body on the tree” (1 Pet. 2:24). This is made explicit in the Book of Isaiah, where the prophet says of the Lord Jesus, “The LORD has laid on Him the iniquity of us all” (Is. 53:6).

3. The Imputation of Christ’s Righteousness to the Believer. “The blessedness of the man to whom God imputes righteousness” is the theme of the fourth chapter of Romans (also 1 Cor. 1:30; 2 Cor. 5:21; Phil. 3:9). Jesus became the Holy and Just One (Acts 3:14) through His perfect obedience to God’s Law (Rom. 5:19). These qualities are imputed in turn “to us who believe in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead” (Rom. 4:24). Because of this the believer will appear before God “faultless” (Jude 24). We can stand in God’s presence because Jesus has imputed His righteousness and holiness to us through His sacrificial death on the cross.

IMRAH [IM ruh]—a descendant of Zophah, of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:36).

IMRI [IM righ]—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A son of Bani (1 Chr. 9:4). Imri may be the same as Amariah (Neh. 11:4).
2. The father of Zaccur (Neh. 3:2).

INCANTATION (see MAGIC, SORCERY, AND DIVINATION).

INCARNATION—a theological term for the coming of God’s Son into the world as a human being. The term itself is not used in the Bible, but it is based on clear references in the New Testament to Jesus as a person “in the flesh” (Rom. 8:3; Eph. 2:15; Col. 1:22).

Jesus participated fully in all that it means to live a human life. But if Jesus were merely a man, no matter how great, there would be no significance in drawing attention to His bodily existence. The marvelous thing is that in Jesus, God Himself began to live a fully human life. The capacity of Jesus to reveal God to us and to bring salvation depends upon His being fully God and fully man at the same time (Col. 2:9).

Our human minds cannot understand how Jesus can be both fully God and fully man. But the Bible gives clear indication of how this works out in practice.

No person may see God and live (Ex. 33:20). He dwells in unapproachable light (1 Tim. 6:16). Can we, therefore, only know Him from a distance? No, because God has come near in the person of Jesus (Matt. 1:23). He has taken on a form in which He can be seen, experienced, and understood by us as human beings (John 1:14, 18). Jesus reveals God to us perfectly since in His human life He is the image of God (2 Cor. 4:4), exhibiting full likeness with the Father (John 1:14). Jesus' godhood in His manhood is the key to our intimate knowledge of God.

This does not mean, however, that Jesus' humanity is only a display case for His divinity. Jesus lived out His human life by experiencing all the pressures, temptations, and limitations that we experience (Heb. 2:18; 4:15; 5:2, 7–8). That is why Jesus' life really is the supreme human success story (Heb. 5:8). Jesus was a pioneer (Heb. 2:10, NRSV), showing in practical terms the full meaning and possibility of human life, lived in obedience to God. In this respect, Jesus is a kind of second Adam (Rom. 5:14–15), marking a new beginning for the human race.

Jesus would have performed a great work if He had done no more than set a perfect example. But His full humanity is also the basis on which it is possible for Him to represent us—indeed, take our place—in dying for us. The Bible makes this clear when it speaks of "one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all" (1 Tim. 2:5–6).

When He ascended to His Father after His resurrection, Jesus left behind some of the human restrictions experienced during His earthly life. He received at that time His original divine glory (John 17:5). But the joining together of deity and humanity that marks His incarnation did not come to an end with His ascension. Jesus took His resurrected body with Him back to heaven (Luke 24:51; Acts 1:9). In heaven now

He is our divine Lord, our human leader, and the great High Priest who serves as a mediator between God and humankind (Heb. 3:1).

INCENSE—a sweet-smelling substance that was burned as an offering to God on the altar in the tabernacle and the temple. The purpose of this incense offering was to honor God. Incense symbolized and expressed the prayers of the Hebrew people, which were considered a pleasant aroma offered to God.

The incense used in Israelite worship was of a specific composition, considered very sacred. The four substances from which it was made were stacte, onycha, galbanum, and pure frankincense (Ex. 30:34–35). Some of this was to be ground into powder and placed in front of the Testimony in the tabernacle of meeting (Ex. 30:36). The use of any other composition of incense or of this particular compound for any other purpose was regarded as sin; this incense alone was to be considered holy (Ex. 30:36–38).

According to the law, only the priests descended from Aaron could offer incense (Lev. 2:2). The priest offered holy incense morning and evening on the altar of incense in front of the veil in the Holy Place in the tabernacle or temple.

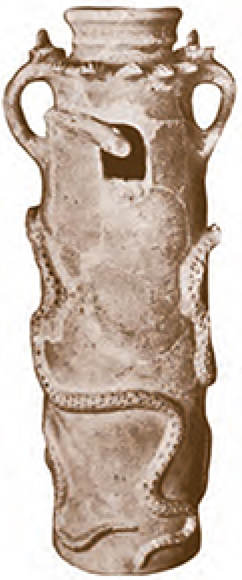
This incense formula specified for use in public ritual was not to be allowed for private use (Ex. 30:37, 38). Apparently some wealthy individuals were tempted to make their own private supply for personal use.

Incense is also mentioned in connection with certain pagan worship practices of the Israelites. The worship of Baal, the queen of heaven, and other foreign gods by means of incense was condemned in the Old Testament (1 Kin. 11:8). The Lord warned that he would destroy the pagan incense altars (Lev. 26:30; 2 Chr. 30:14). The burning of incense at the pagan shrines on “high places” and to other gods was strongly denounced (2 Kin. 22:17; 2 Chr. 34:25). The use of incense appeared widespread in connection with Israelite lapses into pagan worship (Jer. 11:12, 17; 48:35).

Another misuse of incense is mentioned in 2 Chronicles 26:16–21. This passage describes how King Uzziah was afflicted by the Lord, who caused leprosy to break out on his forehead because he had attempted to burn incense in the temple. This duty was reserved for the priestly descendants of Aaron.

The New Testament church did not adopt the use of incense in worship. In fact, the use of it was considered a work of paganism and was banned by the first Christian emperors. However, later in church history incense was again widely used.

In a figurative use of the word, the psalmist requested that his prayer might be brought before the Lord as incense (Ps. 141:2). Incense possibly was also a symbol of a godly life, offered up to God as a pleasant aroma before him.



• This incense burner, decorated with sacred serpents, was discovered in the excavation of the Canaanite temple at Beth Shan.

INCEST—sexual relations with one’s relatives, a sin expressly forbidden by the law of Moses (Lev. 20:12, perversion, NIV, NKJV, NRSV). The Hebrew word expresses the idea of a mixing of unnatural elements. The Hebrew people were called to a higher code of sexual ethics than was practiced by their Canaanite and Egyptian neighbors. Intercourse was forbidden with one’s mother, stepmother, sister, granddaughter, stepsister, aunt, daughter-in-law, sister-in-law, or stepdaughter/granddaughter.

INCH (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

INDIA [IN dih uh]—a country of Asia south of the Himalaya Mountains and irrigated by the Indus River; it marked the eastern limit of the empire of Ahasuerus (Xerxes) king of Persia (Esth. 1:1; 8:9). Solomon's large fleet of ships may have visited India on their three-year voyages for "gold, silver, ivory, apes, and monkeys" (1 Kin. 10:22). This ancient country in Old Testament times covered essentially the same geographical region as the modern nations of India and Pakistan.

INFANT BAPTISM (see BAPTISM).

INFINITY—a theological term implying that God is not bound by time and space (Col. 1:15; Heb. 1:3). God does experience everything that happens within the universe He has created. Not even a sparrow falls to the ground apart from His will. He numbers the very hairs of our head (Matt. 10:30). But at the same time, He is not limited to the process of finite space and time for His experience. God is the great and eternal I AM (Ex. 3:14), who, like the burning bush before Moses, burns with dynamic activity, yet is not consumed (Psalm 139; 147; Isaiah 45). Only an infinite God who is greater than His creation can determine the number of the stars and keep them in their courses.

INFIRMITY (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

INHERITANCE—the receipt of property as a gift or by legal right, usually upon the death of one's father.

In ancient Israel the property of a deceased person was usually distributed according to law or tribal custom. Written wills were rarely used. The real and personal property of a father was normally divided among his sons. A larger amount, usually a double portion, went to the oldest son, who assumed the care of his mother and unmarried sisters.

The birthright of the firstborn son could be denied only because of a serious offense against the father, as in the case of Reuben (Deut. 21:15–17; 1 Chr. 5:1). The sons of concubines normally received presents of personal property. If there were no surviving sons, the inheritance went to daughters. The daughters had to marry within the tribe, however, or lose their inheritance. If a man died childless, his estate was received by his brothers or his father's brothers (Num. 27:9–11).

To the Hebrew mind, the term "inheritance" had strong spiritual and national associations extending far beyond the family estate. The land of Canaan was regarded as an inheritance from the Lord because God had promised the land to Abraham and his descendants (Num. 33:53). Both Moses and Joshua were told by the Lord to divide the land of Canaan among the tribes "as an inheritance" (Num. 26:52–53; Josh. 13:6). God directed that the land be distributed to each tribe by lot according to its population.

Each family, in turn, was assigned a parcel that was to remain in the family's possession. This sense of sacred birthright probably accounted for Naboth's refusal to sell his vineyard to King Ahab: "The LORD forbid that I should give the inheritance of my fathers to you!" (1 Kin. 21:3).

The Greeks relied more on wills for distributing an inheritance than did the Israelites. If a citizen died without a will, his sons in good standing inherited the property in equal parts, the oldest receiving the same as his brothers. Daughters received dowries, which reverted to other heirs if the daughter was divorced or remained childless. If a man had no sons, he usually adopted one to continue the family. If he had daughters, he would arrange for one of them to marry the adopted son. In that instance the major share of the inheritance fell to the daughter and her husband. If only daughters survived, the estate passed to them. If a man died without a will and left no natural or adopted heirs, his closest male relatives received his property.

According to Roman law, the property of a man who died without a will went to his wife and children. But married daughters living with their husbands, or children who had been emancipated from their father's authority, did not share in the inheritance. If a man left no wife and children, the inheritance passed to his male relatives. The Romans held that a child became his father's heir the moment he was born and that the deceased lived through his heirs. Legally adopted children had full inheritance rights.

The apostle Paul’s glorious concept of a spiritual inheritance for Christians is primarily of Jewish origin. But the doctrine was strongly influenced by Greek and Roman inheritance practices. Three of these influences were: (1) inheritance was regarded as immediate as well as ultimate, (2) all legitimate heirs usually shared the inheritance equally and jointly rather than a division favoring a firstborn son, and (3) legally adopted children enjoyed full inheritance rights along with natural offspring.

According to Paul, the Christian’s spiritual inheritance is based strictly on our relationship to Christ. “For you are all sons of God through faith in Jesus Christ. . . . And if you are Christ’s, then you are Abraham’s seed, and heirs according to the promise” (Gal. 3:26, 29). This spiritual birthright cannot be inherited by sinners (1 Cor. 6:9–11). The present possession of the spiritual inheritance as well as its future glory is emphasized in Romans 8: “The Spirit Himself bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, and if children, then heirs—heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, if indeed we suffer with Him, that we may also be glorified together” (Rom. 8:16–17).

Paul also declared that the Spirit’s indwelling power is both the sign and seal that we are heirs of God’s promise: “Having believed, you were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, who is the guarantee of our inheritance” (Eph. 1:13–14). Those who are redeemed, including the Gentiles, become God’s adopted sons with full inheritance rights (Gal. 4:1–7).

Other New Testament passages present the Christian’s spiritual inheritance as a reward for faithfulness and Christlikeness. Jesus invited those showing kindness in His name to “inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world” (Matt. 25:34). Peter counseled suffering saints in the Roman world to be patient in their trials, “That you may inherit a blessing” (1 Pet. 3:9). James declared that the poor of this world have been chosen “to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom” that God promised to those who love Him (James 2:5).

In a burst of joy, Peter celebrated the “living hope” all Christians have of their heavenly inheritance: “To an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that does not fade away, reserved in heaven for you” (1 Pet. 1:3–4).

INIQUITY—unrighteousness, lawlessness. The Bible often uses this word to describe evil and wickedness. Iniquity can suggest different types of evil, such as transgressions of spiritual law and crimes against God (2 Pet. 2:16; Rev. 18:5), moral or legal wrongs (1 Cor. 13:6) or depravity and sin in general (Gen. 15:16; Ps. 51:2, 5, 9).

Also see SIN.

INK—fluid made from powdered charcoal, lampblack, or soot mixed with water and sometimes tree resin (Jer. 36:18). In this form it could be erased with water. Iron or other metal oxides were added to make the ink more permanent and to change the color. Most ancient ink was black. Actual specimens of ink have been found in Palestine from as far back as the time of Ahab, about 850 B.C.

INKHORN—a horn or container that held writing ink. The inkhorn was apparently attached to the writer's belt; "one man among them . . . had a writer's inkhorn at his side" (Ezek. 9:2–3).

INLET—a bay, cove, or other quiet recess along the seashore. According to the judges Deborah and Barak, "Asher continued at the seashore, and stayed by his inlets" (Judg. 5:17). This meant that the people of the territory of Asher were one of the tribes that failed to support Deborah and Barak when they battled against Sisera, the commander of the army of Jabin, king of Canaan.

INN—a lodging place for travelers. Hospitality was a religious duty in Bible times, so most travelers were guests in private residences. Inns were usually primitive shelters or enclosures for travelers and their animals.

In the Old Testament (Gen. 42:27, KJV), the word "inn" referred to a place to rest for the night or the act of pitching a tent. In New Testament times inns were usually built along trade routes. Pilgrims or merchants traveling together for safety would spend the night at these inns. A host or innkeeper provided basic lodging and some necessities such as food for the animals. Bazaars and markets offering provisions and entertainment for the weary traveler were usually located nearby.

Some synagogues had an adjacent inn where needy travelers could receive free food and a night's lodging. Joseph's brothers stayed at an inn near the Egyptian border (Gen. 42:27). A place called the “Three Inns” is mentioned by Luke (Acts 28:15; Three Taverns, NIV, NRSV).

In the New Testament, two inns were the settings for very significant events.

Joseph and Mary were turned away by the innkeeper at Bethlehem, requiring them to seek refuge in a nearby cave where the Son of God was born (Luke 2:7). As Mary laid her Son in a cattle trough for a cradle, the Son of God was displayed in humiliation, identifying Him with all humanity.

The Good Samaritan carried a Jewish traveler who had been robbed and beaten by thieves to an inn where provision was made for his future care (Luke 10:33–37). The Samaritan displayed a spirit of compassion and brotherhood that overcame the prejudices that usually separated Jews from Samaritans.

INNOCENCE—blamelessness; freedom from sin and guilt (Gen. 20:5; Ps. 26:6; Hos. 8:5). Since the Fall, when Adam and Eve brought disobedience into the world (Gen. 3:1–24), no one except Jesus has been totally sinless and blameless (Rom. 3:9–18; 2 Cor. 5:21). People may be called "innocent" only because they have been forgiven of sin and been declared new creations through faith in Christ.

INNOCENTS, SLAUGHTER OF—Herod the Great's attempt to dispose of the infant Jesus by having all the male children of the region who were two years old and under put to death (Matt. 2:16–18). Such an act is in keeping with the cruelty that marked Herod's reign. He thought the security of his throne was threatened when he received news of one "born King of the Jews" (Matt. 2:2). But God protected His Son by directing Joseph in a dream to flee with his family to Egypt (Matt. 2:13–15).

Matthew compared this event with Pharaoh's slaughter of male Israelite babies at the time of Moses' birth (Ex. 1:15–22) and the tragedy of the Babylonian captivity (Jer. 31:15). Such tragedy comes, even on the innocent, when leaders and people do not obey God (Matt. 27:25).

INQUIRE OF THE LORD—to seek God's counsel and guidance. The phrase occurs often in the Old Testament (Gen. 25:22; Judg. 20:27; 2 Sam. 2:1). Methods through which God made His will known included the PILLAR OF FIRE AND CLOUD, the URIM AND THUMMIM, and the words of the prophets.

INSANITY (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

INSCRIPTION—letters carved, engraved, or printed on a surface. The term is applied to the words on a placard above the head of Jesus as He hung on the cross (Mark 15:26; Luke 23:38; superscription, KJV). The full inscription, which read, "This is Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews," stated the crime for which Jesus was unjustly executed.

INSECTS (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

INSPECTION GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

INSPIRATION—a technical term for the Holy Spirit's supernatural guidance of those who received special revelation from God as they wrote the books of the Bible. The end result of this inspiration is that the Bible conveys the truths that God wanted His people to know and to communicate to the world.

The primary purpose of the Bible is to lead people to a personal relationship with God as Savior. But everything taught by the Bible on any subject is helpful and instructive for the complete Christian life (2 Tim. 3:16–17). Because Christianity relates to the real world, the Bible's declarations about the earth and history are completely trustworthy.

Two terms often used in discussion of the inspiration of the Bible are "plenary" and "verbal." "Plenary," a term meaning full or complete, means that each book, chapter, and paragraph of the Bible is equally derived from God. "Verbal" inspiration emphasizes the truth that the wording of the text, as well as the ideas conveyed, is supernaturally inspired by God through the Holy Spirit.

"Inerrancy" is a term used along with plenary verbal inspiration to convey the view that the Bible's teaching is true on everything of which it speaks. The words of Scripture, in the original writings, teach the truth without any admixture of error. The Bible is not just a useful body of human ideas. It makes clear the mind of God Himself.

"Infallibility" is a term often used as a synonym for inerrancy. However, the root meaning of infallibility is "not liable to fail in achieving its purpose." Truth, or inerrancy, is affirmed of the content of the Bible; infallibility refers to the effectiveness of the wording in conveying reliable ideas, as well as the effectiveness of those ideas when used by the all-powerful Holy Spirit (Is. 55:11).

Important as biblical infallibility is, it is not enough without inerrancy. The reason why the Spirit can use Scripture so effectively is that He directed its production from the beginning so that all of it is God's reliable information.

Inspiration, then, is a statement about God's greatness. God is intelligent and able to communicate with human beings, whom He created in His image. God knows everything about all reality in creation and is absolutely faithful and true (Rev. 3:7; 21:5). it follows that ideas communicated by divine revelation are true and conform to reality as God knows it. God overruled human limitations and sinful biases so that His human agents were able to write what He wanted written. God guided the thought conveyed so that it was without error, accomplishing the objectives He intended.

Exactly what role did the human writers of the Bible play in their transmission of God's message? They were not totally passive as those whose hands move automatically in an unconscious state. Their distinctive ways of writing stand out, as in the four gospels, which describe the life and ministry of Jesus Christ. Luke, the beloved physician, used many medical terms not found in Matthew, Mark, or John. Some biblical writers, like Moses and Paul, were highly educated; others were not.

Although some passages of Scripture may have been received by audible dictation (Ex. 4:12; 19:3–6; Num. 7:89), many were guided by a silent activity of the Holy Spirit (Luke 1:1–4). To err is human, and the conscious participation of finite, sinful authors would have led to error if not for this supernatural guidance by the Spirit.

God gave these people the distinctive functions of prophets and apostles, originated what they wrote, and kept them from error in all the writing processes. All of Scripture has prophetic authority. None of it originated in the will of human beings. It came about through the will of God (2 Pet. 1:20–21). All Scripture was given by inspiration of God (2 Tim. 3:16).

Clear standards tested whether a person who claimed to speak for God was a true prophet or a false prophet (Deut. 13:1–5; 18:20–22). People who spoke out of their hearts and by their own independent wills were subject to the death penalty (Deut. 13:6–10). Genuine prophets were inspired by the Holy Spirit as authentic speakers for God.

Although the Bible does not tell exactly how God inspired its writers, it was certainly not in a mechanical way. God the Holy Spirit is the third person of the Trinity who is working with persons. How does one person influence another person? Why do some have a more powerful impact upon people than others? Many factors are involved. We do know for certain that the Scriptures originated with God and that the writers were "moved" or carried along by the Holy Spirit (2 Pet. 1:20–21) as they recorded God's message.

The Holy Spirit’s work in the life of the Virgin Mary is a good example of how the Spirit worked with the biblical writers. A fully human, sinful woman bore a sinless child who would be called the Holy One, the Son of God (Luke 1:35). How could that be? The power of the Highest “overshadowed” her so that she conceived Jesus. Likewise, the power of the Highest “overshadowed” the biblical writers so that what they wrote could be called the Holy Bible, the Word of God.

Followers of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord will follow Him in His view of the Old Testament Scriptures and the entire Bible. He endorsed all three sections of the Hebrew Bible: the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms (Writings). He accepted as fact some of the most controversial historical details: Adam and Eve at the beginning of time (Matt. 19:4); Abel’s murder of Cain (Luke 11:51); Noah, the ark, and the Flood (Matt. 24:37–39); the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and of Lot’s wife (Luke 17:28–30); and Moses’ authorship of the PENTATEUCH (John 5:46). “All things must be fulfilled,” He said, “which were written in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms concerning Me” (Luke 24:44). People were mistaken, Jesus said, “not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God” (Matt. 22:29). He expressed His concern for unbelievers: “O foolish ones, and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken!” (Luke 24:25).

The view that God’s great mind had to accommodate itself to human errors in the production of the Bible does not fit the high view of Scripture that Jesus had. God certainly adapted His truth to a human level of understanding. But a person can adapt truth about the origin of human life to a child’s level of understanding without teaching errors about storks. In a similar way, God adapts His truth in part to our limited understandings, but neither He, nor His Son, nor His Spirit taught error in the name of God.

Belief in the Bible’s inerrancy and infallibility best fits the claims of Jesus about the Bible and the claims the Bible makes for itself. Salvation is the primary purpose of Scripture, but this is not its only function. It teaches truth about the world’s origins, history, and the future.

Those who believe all that the Bible affirms should live faithfully according to its instruction in all personal relationships. Central to the Bible’s teaching is love for God and love for neighbor. If believers in biblical inerrancy do not love God and their neighbors, their defense of scriptural authority will become “a resounding gong or a clanging cymbal” (1 Cor. 13:1, NIV).

INSTANT—a brief unit of time; a split second. The prophet Isaiah warned the city of Jerusalem that God’s judgment would fall in an instant unless the people turned from their sinful ways (Is. 29:5).

INSURRECTION—an act of rebellion against the established government (Ezra 4:19; Ps. 64:2; Acts 21:38). Barabbas, the criminal who was released by Pilate before Jesus’ crucifixion, was guilty of insurrection against the Roman government (Mark 15:7).

INTEGRITY—honesty, sincerity, singleness of purpose. In the Old Testament, Noah (Gen. 6:9), Abraham (Gen. 17:1), Jacob (Gen. 25:27), David (1 Kin. 9:4), and Job (Job 1:1, 8; 2:3, 9; 4:6; 27:5; 31:6) were called people of integrity. Although Jesus did not use the word “integrity,” he called for purity of heart (Matt. 5:8), singleness of purpose (Matt. 6:22), and purity of motive (Matt. 6:1–6).

INTERCESSION—the act of petitioning God or praying on behalf of another person or group. The sinful nature of this world separates human beings from God. It has always been necessary, therefore, for righteous individuals to go before God to seek reconciliation between Him and His fallen creation.

One of the earliest and best examples of intercession of this type occurs in Genesis 18, where Abraham speaks to God on behalf of Sodom. His plea is compassionate; it is concerned with the well-being of others rather than with his own needs. Such selfless concern is the mark of all true intercession.

Another good example is the intercessory prayers of Moses. The leader of a nation and a righteous man, Moses successfully petitioned God on behalf of the Hebrew people (Ex. 15:25). Even the Pharaoh asked Moses to intercede for him (Ex. 8:28). But just as righteous people often succeeded in reconciling Creator and creation, the Bible also reminds us that the ongoing sinfulness of a people can hinder the effects of intercession (1 Sam. 2:25; Jer. 7:16).

The sacrifices and prayers of Old Testament priests (Ex. 29:42; 30:7) were acts of intercession that point forward to the work of Christ. Christ is, of course, the greatest intercessor. He prayed on behalf of Peter (Luke 22:32) and His disciples (John 17). Then in the most selfless intercession of all, He petitioned God on behalf of those who crucified Him (Luke 23:34).

But Christ's intercessory work did not cease when He returned to heaven. In heaven He intercedes for His church (Heb. 7:25). His Holy Spirit pleads on behalf of the individual Christian (Rom. 8:26–27). Finally, because of their unique relationship to God through Christ, Christians are urged to intercede for all people (1 Tim. 2:1).

INTEREST (see USURY).

INTERMEDIATE STATE—the period between a person's death and the final resurrection at the end of time. The Bible does not have a great deal to say about the intermediate state; its emphasis is upon the return of Christ, the final judgment, and the eternal state of humankind. What it does say is sketchy and open to various interpretations.

The New Testament sometimes describes the act of dying as "falling asleep" and the state of death as "sleeping" (Matt. 9:24; 11:11; 1 Cor. 15:20, 51). In 1 Thessalonians 4:13–15, the apostle Paul speaks of "those who have fallen asleep," "those who sleep in Jesus," and "those who are asleep." Death as sleep is a widely used biblical concept signifying rest from earthly care and labor, as is true of natural sleep; "For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation," (2 Pet. 3:4).

Jesus' story of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:19–31) represents the rich man as conscious and tormented in Hades and Lazarus the beggar as conscious and blessed in Abraham's bosom. This passage of Scripture is a parable, which means that every point should not be pressed too far. The parable suggests that after death the righteous are rewarded and the unrighteous receive punishment. The final degrees of both reward and punishment, however, are determined only at the final judgment (Rev. 20:11–15).

On the cross Jesus said to the repentant thief, "Today you will be with Me in Paradise" (Luke 23:43). Paul stated "I know such a man . . . how he was caught up into Paradise and heard inexpressible words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter” (2 Cor. 12:4), evidently equating heaven and Paradise. In the Book of Revelation the crucified and resurrected Christ declared, “To him who overcomes I will give to eat from the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God” (Rev. 2:7). The overall sense of these references identifies Paradise with heaven, to which the righteous go after death.

The apostle Paul’s clearest treatment of the intermediate state is found in 2 Corinthians 5:1–8: “For we know that if our earthly house, this tent, is destroyed, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens” (v. 1). Paul ends this passage by declaring, “We are confident, yes, well pleased rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord” (v. 8). In another place Paul says that when the Lord returns, “God will bring with Him those who sleep in Jesus” (1 Thess. 4:14). This implies that believers who have died go to be with Jesus.

INTERPRETATION (see BIBLE, INTERPRETATION OF).

INTERPRETATION OF TONGUES (see TONGUES, GIFT OF).

INTERTESTAMENTAL PERIOD (see ISRAEL, HISTORY OF).

INTESTINES—the lower part of the stomach through which waste is passed after food is digested by the human body. King Jehoram of Israel died with a mysterious disease of the intestines, just as the prophet Elijah predicted (2 Chr. 21:15–19).

INTESTINES, DISEASE OF (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

IOB [IGH ahb]—a form of JASHUB No. 1.

IPHDEIAH [if DEE uh] (the Lord redeems)—a son of Shashak (1 Chr. 8:25; Iphedeiah, KJV, REB).

IPHTAH [IF tuh]—a form of JIPHTAH.

IPHTAHEL [IF tuh el]—a form of JIPHTHAH EL.

IR [ur]—the father of Shuppim and Huppim (1 Chr. 7:12). Ir may be the same person as Iri (1 Chr. 7:7).

IR HA-HERES [UR hah HE rez] (city of destruction)—a term appearing in the Hebrew text of Isaiah 19:18, which stated that one of the five Egyptian cities will be called the City of Destruction (NKJV, KJV, NIV, NASB). Some English translations assume that the original Hebrew text intended City of the Sun (NRSV, REB), that is, Heliopolis (the biblical ON). The prophet Isaiah may have deliberately changed the name of Heliopolis to "City of Destruction" to denote the downfall of its idolatry.

IR-NAHASH [ur NAY hash] (city of the serpent)—a person or a town of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:12).

IR SHEMESH [ur SHEM esh] (city of the sun)—a city of the tribe of Dan near the border of Judah (Josh. 19:41). Ir Shemesh is apparently identical with BETH SHEMESH (Josh. 15:10; 21:16; Judg. 1:33).

IRA [IGH ruh]—the name of two or three men associated with David:

1. A "chief minister," or "priest" (NIV, NRSV), under David (2 Sam. 20:26).
2. One of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:26).
3. An Ithrite who was one of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:38). He may be the same person as Ira No. 1.

IRAD [IGH rad]—a grandson of Cain (Gen. 4:17–18).

IRAM [IGH ruhm]—an Edomite clan chief of the family of Esau (Gen. 36:43).

IRI [IGH righ]—a son of Bela (1 Chr. 7:7), possibly the same person as Ir (1 Chr. 7:12).

IRIJAH [igh RIGH juh] (the Lord sees)—a sentry who arrested the prophet Jeremiah while Jerusalem was under siege by the Babylonian army (Jer. 37:11–14).

IRON (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

IRON [EYE ron]—a fortified city in the territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:38; Yiron, RSV, NASB). It is probably present-day Yarun, about 16 kilometers (10 miles) northwest of Hazor, in northern Galilee.

IRONSMITH (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

IRPEEL [UR pee uhl] (God heals)—a city of the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:27), near Jerusalem.

IRRIGATION—the watering of crops by artificial means. Irrigation is seldom mentioned in the Bible, because the nation of Israel was far less dependent on major rivers than were Egypt and Mesopotamia. Much of Palestine had an adequate, though intermittent, rainfall, supplemented by the DEW, and many small springs were scattered throughout the land. Sometimes, however, irrigation was used to supplement the natural water supply, particularly for specialized agriculture such as vegetable gardens or orchards.

Water was often collected in CISTERNS for irrigation purposes (2 Kin. 18:31). Channels were constructed from these cisterns or from nearby streams to the fields and vineyards. Water was pumped to the fields by foot power (Deut. 11:10).

IRU [IGH roo]—the oldest son of Caleb (1 Chr. 4:15).

ISAAC [EYE zik] ([God] laughs)—the only son of Abraham by his wife Sarah; father of Jacob and Esau. God promised to make Abraham’s descendants a great nation that would become God’s Chosen People. But the promised son was a long time in coming. Isaac was born when Abraham was 100 years old and Sarah was 90 (Gen. 17:17; 21:5). Both Abraham and Sarah laughed when they heard they would have a son in their old age (Gen. 17:17–19; 18:9–15). This partially explains why they named their son Isaac.

On the eighth day after his birth, Isaac was circumcised (Gen. 21:4). As he grew, his presence as Abraham’s rightful heir brought him into conflict with Ishmael, Abraham’s son by Sarah’s handmaid Hagar. The strained relationship caused Sarah to send away Hagar and Ishmael (Gen. 21:9–21). God comforted Abraham by telling him that Ishmael would also become the father of a great nation (Gen. 21:13).

Birthright. Isaac’s birthright was an important part of his life. The blessings that God gave to Abraham were also given to his descendants.

Thus, to inherit this covenant with God was of far greater value than to inherit property or material goods.

Isaac's life gave evidence of God's favor. His circumcision was a sign of the covenant with God. God's favor toward him was also evident in Ishmael's disinheritance. The dismissal of the sons of Abraham's concubines to the "country of the east" is associated with the statement that Isaac inherited all that Abraham had, including God's blessing. Isaac was in a unique position historically because he would carry on the covenant.

When Isaac was a young man, God tested Abraham's faith by commanding him to sacrifice Isaac as an offering. But when Abraham placed Isaac upon the altar, an angel appeared and stopped the sacrifice, providing a ram instead (Genesis 22). This showed clearly that Isaac was God's choice to carry on the covenant.

Marriage. Isaac married Rebekah when he was forty years old. She became Isaac's wife when God directed one of Abraham's servants to her. The Bible reveals that Isaac loved Rebekah and that she was a comfort to him after his mother Sarah's death (Gen. 24:67). Isaac and Rebekah had twin sons, Jacob and Esau, who were born when Isaac was sixty years old (Gen. 25:20–26).

Famine prompted the family to move to Gerar, where God appeared to Isaac and reaffirmed the covenant. Moving through the Valley of Gerar, where he reopened the wells that Abraham had dug (Gen. 26:23; 28:10), Isaac made a camp at Beersheba. This place became his permanent home. There he built an altar just as his father had done (Gen. 26:24–25).

Jacob and Esau. The older twin, Esau, was Isaac's favorite son, although God had declared that the older should serve the younger (Gen. 25:23). Jacob was Rebekah's favorite. Disagreement arose over which of the twins would receive the birthright and carry on the covenant that God had made with Abraham. Rebekah conspired with Jacob to trick the aging, blind Isaac into giving his blessing to Jacob rather than Esau.

Shortly thereafter, Isaac sent Jacob to Laban in Padan Aram to find a wife and to escape Esau's wrath. Esau soon left his father's household. Many years passed before the two brothers were at peace with each other. But they were united at last in paying last respects to their father after his death. Isaac lived to be 180 years old. He was buried alongside Abraham, Sarah, and Rebekah in the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 35:28–29; 49:30–31).

Isaac's Character. The Bible contains many references to Isaac's good character. The Scripture gives evidence of his submission (Gen. 22:6, 9), meditation (Gen. 24:63), trust in God (Gen. 22:6, 9), devotion (Gen. 24:67), peaceful nature (Gen. 26:20–22), and his life of prayer and faith (Gen. 26:25; Heb. 11:11–17).

New Testament References. In the New Testament, Isaac is called a child of promise (Gal. 4:22–23). The Book of Acts points to his significance as one who received circumcision on the eighth day (Acts 7:8). His position as the channel of the Abrahamic blessing is also emphasized (Rom. 9:7).

In a famous passage, Paul uses Isaac and his mother as historical examples when discussing those who are justified by faith in God's promise (Gal. 4:21–31).

ISAIAH [eye ZAY uh] (the Lord has saved)—a famous Old Testament prophet who predicted the coming of the Messiah; the author of the Book of Isaiah. Isaiah was probably born in Jerusalem of a family that was related to the royal house of Judah. He recorded the events of the reign of King Uzziah of Judah (2 Chr. 26:22). When Uzziah died (740 B.C.), Isaiah received his prophetic calling from God in a stirring vision of God in the temple (Isaiah 6). The king of Judah had died; now Isaiah had seen the everlasting King in whose service he would spend the rest of his life.

Isaiah was married to a woman described as "the prophetess" (Is. 8:3). They had two sons whom they named Shear-Jashub, "A Remnant Shall Return" (Is. 7:3), and Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz, "Speed the Spoil, Hasten the Booty" (Is. 8:3). These strange names portray two basic themes of the Book of Isaiah: God is about to bring judgment upon His people, hence Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz; but after that there will be an outpouring of God's mercy and grace to the remnant of people who will remain faithful to God, hence Shear-Jashub.

After God called Isaiah to proclaim His message, He told Isaiah that most of his work would be a ministry of judgment. Even though the prophet would speak the truth, the people would reject his words (6:10).

Jesus found in these words of Isaiah's call a prediction of the rejection of his message by many of the people (Matt. 13:14–15).

Isaiah's response to this revelation from the Lord was a lament: "Lord, how long?" (Isaiah 6:11). The Lord answered that Isaiah's ministry would prepare the people for judgment, but one day God's promises would be realized. Judah was to experience utter devastation, to be fulfilled with the destruction of the city of Jerusalem by the Babylonians in 586 B.C. (Is. 6:11). This destruction would be followed by the deportation of the people to Babylon (Is. 6:12). But although the tree of the house of David would be cut down, there would still be life in the stump (Is. 6:13). Out of the lineage of David would come a Messiah who would establish His eternal rule among His people.

Isaiah was a writer of considerable literary skill. The poetry of his book is magnificent in its sweep. A person of strong emotion and deep feelings, Isaiah also was a man of steadfast devotion to the Lord. His vision of God and His holiness in the temple influenced his messages during his long ministry.

Isaiah's ministry extended from about 740 B.C. until at least 701 B.C. (Isaiah 37–39). His forty years of preaching doom and promise did not turn the nation of Judah from its headlong rush toward destruction. But he faithfully preached the message God gave him until the very end.

According to a popular Jewish tradition, Isaiah met his death by being sawn in half during the reign of the evil king Manasseh of Judah. This tradition seems to be supported by the writer of Hebrews (Heb. 11:37). Certainly Isaiah is one of the heroes of the faith "of whom the world was not worthy" (Heb. 11:38).

ISAIAH, BOOK OF—a major prophetic book of the Old Testament, noted for its description of the coming Messiah as God’s Suffering Servant. Because of its lofty portrayal of God and His purpose of salvation, the book is sometimes called “the fifth gospel,” implying it is similar in theme to the gospels of the New Testament. The book is named for its author, the great prophet Isaiah, whose name means “The Lord has saved.”

Structure of the Book. With its sixty-six chapters, Isaiah is one of the longest prophetic books of the Old Testament. Most scholars agree that the book falls naturally into two major sections, chapters 1–39 and chapters 40–66. One good way to remember the grand design of the book is to think of the sections as parallel to the two main parts of the Bible. The first section of Isaiah contains the same number of chapters as the number of books in the Old Testament (39). The second part of the book parallels the New Testament in the same way—27 chapters for the 27 books of this section of the Bible.

The general theme of the first part of Isaiah's book is God's approaching judgment on the nation of Judah. In some of the most striking passages in all the Bible, the prophet announces that God will punish His people because of their sin, rebellion, and worship of false gods. But this message of stern judgment is also mingled with beautiful poems of comfort and promise. Although judgment is surely coming, better days for God's Covenant People lie just ahead. This section of Isaiah's book refers several times to the coming MESSIAH. His name will be called IMMANUEL (7:14). As a ruler on the throne of David, he will establish an everlasting kingdom (9:7).

Other significant events and prophecies covered in the first section of Isaiah's book include his call as a prophet (chap. 6), God's judgment against the nations surrounding Judah (chaps. 13–23), and a warning to Judah not to seek help through vain alliances with Egypt (chaps. 30–31).

During Isaiah's time, Judah's safety was threatened by the advancing Assyrians. When the king of Judah sought to protect the nation's interests by forming an alliance with Egypt to turn back the Assyrians, Isaiah advised the nation to look to their God for deliverance—not to a pagan nation led by an earthly ruler. He also prophesied that the Assyrian army would be turned back by God before it succeeded in overthrowing the nation of Judah (30:27–33).

The second major section of Isaiah's book (chaps. 40–66) is filled with prophecies of comfort for the nation of Judah. Just as Isaiah warned of God's approaching judgment in the first part of his book, the twenty-seven concluding chapters were written to comfort God's people in the midst of their suffering after His judgment had fallen. The theme of this entire section may be illustrated with Isaiah's famous hymn of comfort that God directed the prophet to address to the people: " 'Comfort, yes, comfort My people!' " says your God. " 'Speak comfort to Jerusalem, and cry out to her, that her warfare is ended, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she has received from the LORD's hand double for all her sins' " (40:1–2).

Isaiah's message in this part of his book is that after their period of judgment has passed, God's Covenant People will be restored to their place of responsibility in God's plan for the salvation of the world. The great suffering through which they were passing was their period of captivity as exiles in the pagan nation of Babylonia. This theme of suffering on the part of God's people is demonstrated dramatically by Isaiah's famous description of the Suffering Servant. The nation of Israel was God's suffering servant who would serve as God's instrument of blessing for the rest of the world after their release from captivity and restoration as His Chosen People (42:1–9).

But Isaiah's prophecy also points beyond the immediate future to the coming of Jesus Christ as the Messiah several centuries later. The heart of this stunning prophecy occurs in chapter 53, as Isaiah develops the description of God's Servant to its highest point. The Servant's suffering and death and the redemptive nature of His mission are clearly foretold. Although mankind deserved God's judgment because "we have turned, every one, to his own way" (53:6), God sent His Servant to take away our sins. It is through His suffering that we are made right with God, since "the LORD has laid on Him the iniquity of us all" (53:6).

Isaiah closes his book with a beautiful description of the glorious age to come (chaps. 58–66). In that day the city of Zion, or Jerusalem, will be restored. God's people will gather there to worship Him in all His majesty and glory. Peace and justice will reign, and God will make all things new.

Authorship and Date. The question of who wrote the Book of Isaiah is a matter of much disagreement and debate among Bible scholars. In one camp are those who insist the entire book was written by the famous prophet Isaiah who ministered in the southern kingdom of Judah for forty years, from about 740–700 B.C. But other scholars are just as insistent that the entire book was not written by this prophet. They agree that chapters 1–39 of the book belong to Isaiah, but they refer to chapters 40–66 as "Second Isaiah," insisting it was written by an unknown author long after the ministry of this famous prophet of Judah.

Those who assign chapters 40–66 to a "Second Isaiah" point out that the two major sections of the book seem to be set in different times. Chapters 1–39 clearly belong to the eighth century B.C., a turbulent period in the history of Judah. But Isaiah 40–66, according to these scholars, seems to be addressed to the citizens of Judah who were being held as captives in Babylon about 550 B.C. This was two centuries after Isaiah lived and prophesied. In addition, these scholars point to the differences in tone, language, and style between these two major sections as proof that the book was written by two different authors.

But the traditional view cannot be dismissed so easily. Conservative scholars point out that the two sections of the book do have many similarities, although they are dramatically different in tone and theme. Many phrases and ideas that are peculiar to Isaiah appear in both sections of the book. A good example of this is Isaiah's unique reference to God as "the Holy One of Israel" (1:4; 17:7; 37:23; 45:11; 55:5; 60:14). The appearance of such words and phrases can be used to argue just as convincingly that the book was written by a single author.

Conservative scholars also are not convinced that the two major sections of the book were addressed to different audiences living in different times. They believe that in the second section of his book, Isaiah looked into the future and predicted the years of the captivity and the return of the Covenant People to their homeland after the captivity ended. If the prophet could predict the coming of the Messiah over 700 years before that happened, he could certainly foresee this major event in the future of the nation of Judah.

After all the evidence is analyzed, there is no convincing reason to question the traditional view that the entire book was written by the prophet whose name it bears. Perhaps chapters 1–39 were written early in Isaiah's ministry and chapters 40–66 were written near its end.

Isaiah gives us few facts about himself, but we do know he was "the son of Amoz" (1:1). The quality of his writing indicates he was well educated and that he probably came from an upper-class family. Married, he had two children to whom he gave symbolic names to show that God was about to bring judgment against the nation of Judah. He was called to his prophetic ministry "in the year that King Uzziah [Azariah] died" (6:1)—about 740 B.C.—through a stirring vision of God as he worshiped in the temple. He prophesied for about forty years to the nation of Judah, calling the people and their rulers to place their trust in the Holy One of Israel.

Historical Setting. Isaiah delivered his prophecies during a time of great moral and political upheaval. In the early part of his ministry, about 722 B.C., Judah's sister nation, the northern kingdom of Israel, fell to the invading Assyrians. For a while, it looked as if Judah would suffer the same fate. But Isaiah advised the rulers of Judah not to enter alliances with foreign nations against the Assyrian threat. Instead, he called the people to put their trust in God, who alone could bring real salvation and offer lasting protection for the perilous times.

Theological Contribution. The Book of Isaiah presents more insights into the nature of God than any other book of the Old Testament.

To Isaiah, God was first of all a holy God. His holiness was the first thing that impressed the prophet when he saw Him in all His glory in the temple (6:1–8). But God's holiness also reminded Isaiah of his own sin and weakness. "Woe is me," he cried, "for I am undone! Because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips" (6:5). After this confession, Isaiah's lips were cleansed by a live coal from the altar, and he agreed to proclaim God's message of repentance and judgment to a wayward people.

Isaiah also tells us about a God who is interested in the salvation of His people. Even the prophet's name, "The Lord has saved," emphasizes this truth. He uses the word "salvation" twenty-eight times in his book, while all the other Old Testament prophets combined mentioned this word only ten times. In Isaiah's thought, salvation comes from God, not from human beings. God is the sovereign ruler of history and the only one who has the power to save.

The Book of Isaiah also reveals that God's ultimate purpose of salvation will be realized through the coming Messiah, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. No other book of the Bible contains as many references to the coming Messiah as this magnificent book. Isaiah points us to a loving Savior who came to save His people from their sins. When Jesus began His public ministry in His hometown of Nazareth, He quoted from one of these beautiful messianic passages from Isaiah (61:1–2) to show that this prophecy was being fulfilled in His life and ministry. His purpose was "to set at liberty those who are oppressed, to preach the acceptable year of the LORD" (Luke 4:18–19).

Special Considerations. One unusual passage in the Book of Isaiah gives us a clue about how God views His work of judgment and salvation. The prophet describes God's judgment as "His awesome work, and bring to pass His act, His unusual act" (28:21). If judgment is God's unusual act, does this not imply that salvation is the work more typical of Him as a loving God? It is an interesting question to think about as we express thanks to God for the marvelous insights of Isaiah and his important book.

ISAIAH, MARTYRDOM OF (see PSEUDEPIGRAPHA).

ISCAH [IZ kuh]—a daughter of Haran, Abraham’s younger brother. Iscah was a sister of Milcah, the wife of Nahor (Gen. 11:29).

ISCARIOT [iss KER ee uht] (man of Kerioth)—the surname of Judas, one of the Twelve who betrayed Jesus (John 6:71; 12:4; 13:2, 26). Also see JUDAS ISCARIOT.

ISHBAH [ISH buh]—the father of Eshtemoa, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:17).

ISHBAK [ISH bak]—a son of Abraham by Keturah (Gen. 25:2). Ishbak was probably the ancestor of a northern Arabian tribe.

ISHBI-BENOB [ISH bigh BEE nahb]—a descendant of the Philistine giants of Gath. Ishbi-Benob was killed by Abishai, one of David’s mighty men (2 Sam. 21:16).

ISHBOSHETH [ihsh BOE sheth] (man of shame)—a son of Saul whom Abner proclaimed king after Saul’s death (2 Sam. 2:8–10). The tribe of Judah proclaimed David king after the death of Saul and Jonathan at Gilboa, but the eleven other tribes remained loyal to Saul's family. Ishbosheth reigned two turbulent years from Mahanaim, east of the Jordan River, while David ruled Judah from Hebron. Throughout the period, each side attempted unsuccessfully to gain control of the entire kingdom (2 Sam. 2:12—3:1).

Ishbosheth made a grave error in charging Abner with having relations with Saul's concubine, Rizpah. In anger, Abner changed his allegiance to David (2 Sam. 3:6–21). When Joab murdered Abner in Hebron (2 Sam. 3:27), Ishbosheth became discouraged (2 Sam. 4:1). Two captains of his guard, Baanah and Rechab, assassinated Ishbosheth as he lay napping. They carried Ishbosheth's severed head to David, who ordered it buried in the tomb of Abner in Hebron. Then David put the assassins to death (2 Sam. 4:5–12). Saul's dynasty ended with Ishbosheth's death.

ISHHOD [ISH hahd]—a son of Hammoleketh, of the tribe of Manasseh (1 Chr. 7:18; Ishod, KJV).

ISHI [ISH igh]—the name of four men in the Old Testament and a symbolic name for God:

1. A son of Appaim and a member of the family of Jerahmeel (1 Chr. 2:31).
2. A descendant of Judah through Caleb (1 Chr. 4:20).
3. The father of four men who were captains of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:42).
4. A chief of the half-tribe of Manasseh, east of the Jordan River (1 Chr. 5:24).
5. A symbolic name for God used by the prophet Hosea (Hos. 2:16), signifying the close relationship that God desired with His people. Here Ishi means "my husband" (NIV).

ISHIJAH [ish IGH juh]—a son of Harum who divorced his pagan wife (Ezra 10:31; Isshijah, NASB; Isshiah, REB, NRSV).

ISHMA [ISH muh] (may [God] hear)—a brother of Jezreel and Idbash, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:3).

ISHMAEL [IHSH may ell] (God hears)—the name of six men in the Old Testament:

1. The first son of Abraham, by his wife's Egyptian maidservant, Hagar. Although God had promised Abraham an heir (Gen. 15:4), Abraham's wife, Sarah, had been unable to bear a child. When Abraham was eighty-five, Sarah offered her maid to him in order to help fulfill God's promise (Gen. 16:1–2).

   After Hagar learned that she was pregnant, she grew proud and began to despise Sarah. Sarah complained to Abraham, who allowed her to discipline Hagar. Sarah's harsh treatment of Hagar caused her to flee into the wilderness. There she met the angel of God, who told her to return to Sarah and submit to her authority. As an encouragement, the angel promised Hagar that her son, who would be named Ishmael, would have uncounted descendants. Hagar then returned to Abraham and Sarah and bore her son (Gen. 16:4–15).

   When Ishmael was thirteen, God appeared to Abraham to tell him that Ishmael was not the promised heir. God made a covenant with Abraham that was to be passed down to the descendants of Isaac—a son who would be conceived by Sarah the following year. Because Abraham loved Ishmael, God promised to bless Ishmael and make him a great nation (Gen. 17:19–20).

   At the customary feast to celebrate Isaac's weaning, Sarah saw sixteen-year-old Ishmael making fun of Isaac. She was furious and demanded that Abraham disown Ishmael and his mother so Ishmael could not share Isaac's inheritance. Abraham was reluctant to cast out Ishmael and Hagar, but he did so when instructed by God (Gen. 21:8–13).

   Hagar and Ishmael wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba. When their water was gone and Ishmael grew weary, Hagar placed him under a shrub to await death. The angel of God again contacted Hagar and showed her a well. After drawing water, she returned to Ishmael. Ishmael grew up in the wilderness of Paran and gained fame as an archer. Hagar arranged his marriage to an Egyptian wife (Gen. 21:14–21).

   When Abraham died, Ishmael returned from exile to help Isaac with the burial (Gen. 25:9). As God promised, Ishmael became the father of twelve princes (Gen. 25:16), as well as a daughter, Mahalath, who later married Esau, son of Isaac (Gen. 28:9). Ishmael died at the age of 137 (Gen. 25:17).

Ishmael was the father of the ISHMAELITES, a nomadic nation which lived in northern Arabia. Modern-day Arabs claim descent from Ishmael.

2. The son of Nethaniah and a member of the house of David. After the Babylonian conquest of Judah, King Nebuchadnezzar appointed a Jewish captive, Gedaliah, as governor. Gedaliah promised to welcome all Jews who came under his protection. Ishmael and several others accepted Gedaliah's offer with the intent of killing him (2 Kin. 25:22–24). Gedaliah was warned that Ishmael was allied with the Ammonite king in plotting to kill him, but he refused to believe it (Jer. 40:14–16). When Gedaliah invited Ishmael and ten others to a banquet, they murdered everyone in attendance. The killers fled toward the Ammonite country with several hostages, but they were overtaken by pursuers in Gibeon. The hostages were rescued, but Ishmael and eight men escaped to the Ammonites (Jer. 41:1–15).
3. A descendant of Jonathan, son of Saul (1 Chr. 8:38; 9:44).
4. The father of Zebadiah, ruler of the house of Judah and the highest civil authority under King Jehoshaphat (2 Chr. 19:11).
5. A son of Jehohanan. Ishmael was one of five army officers recruited by Jehoiada to help overthrow Queen Athaliah of Judah in favor of the rightful heir, Joash (2 Chr. 23:1).
6. A priest of the clan of Pashhur who divorced his foreign wife after the Babylonian captivity (Ezra 10:22).

• Several Arabs complete a transaction with a Jewish merchant. The Arabs of the Middle East trace their ancestry to Ishmael, son of Abraham by Hagar.

ISHMAELITES [ISH may el ites]—descendants of Ishmael, Abraham's first son. His mother was Sarah's Egyptian servant, HAGAR (Gen. 16:1–16; 1 Chr. 1:28). The Ishmaelites, like the Israelites (Abraham's grandchildren through Sarah), were divided into twelve tribes (Gen. 25:16). Out of respect for Abraham, God made a great nation of the Ishmaelites, even though Ishmael was not Abraham's promised son (Gen. 21:12–13). Ishmael's twelve sons had many descendants who lived as nomads in the deserts of northern Arabia.

The Old Testament eventually used the term Ishmaelite in a broader sense, referring to all the Arabian merchants (Is. 13:20; Ezek. 27:20, 21). Any wild and warlike peoples of the desert could claim to be descendants of Ishmael (Gen. 16:12). This wider use of Ishmaelites is illustrated by an event in the life of Joseph. His older brothers sold him to some caravan traders who were called "a company of Ishmaelites"

(Gen. 37:25) as well as "Midianite" traders (37:28). They were probably a minor clan of the larger Ishmaelite tribe. Muhammad claimed Ishmael as his ancestor, as do most Arabs.

ISHMAIAH [ish MAY uh] (the Lord hears)—the name of two men in David's time:

1. A Gibeonite who was one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 12:4).
2. A son of Obadiah and a chief of Zebulun in David's time (1 Chr. 27:19).

ISHMERAI [ISH muh righ] (the Lord protects)—a son of Elpaal (1 Chr. 8:18).

ISHOD [IGH shahd]—a form of ISHHOD.

ISHPAH [ISH puh]—a form of ISPAH.

ISHPAN [ISH pan]—a son of Shashak (1 Chr. 8:22).

ISHTAR [ISH tahr] (see GODS, PAGAN).

ISH-TOB [ISH tahb] (man of Tob)—a small district east of the Jordan River (2 Sam. 10:6).

ISHUAH [ISH yoo uh]—a form of ISHVAH.

ISHUAI [ISH yoo igh]—a form of ISHVI.

ISHUI [ISH yoo igh]—a form of ISHVI.

ISHVAH [ISH vuh] (he is like)—the second son of Asher, descended from Jacob and Zilpah (Gen. 46:17), also called Ishuah (KJV).

ISHVI [ISH vigh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The third son of Asher and founder of the tribal family of the Ishvites, also spelled Isui (Gen. 46:17, KJV), Ishuai (1 Chr. 7:30, KJV), and Jesui (Num. 26:44, NKJV).
2. A son of King Saul by Ahinoam (1 Sam. 14:49; Ishui, KJV; Ishyo, REB; Jishui, NKJV). Some scholars believe Ishvi was the same person as ISHBOSHETH.

ISHYO [ISH yoe]—a form of ISHVI.

ISLAND—a tract of land completely surrounded by water, not large enough to be called a continent.

In the NKJV the word "island" is found only in the Book of Acts (13:6; 27:16, 26; 28:1) and in the Book of Revelation (1:9; 6:14; 16:20). A number of islands in the Mediterranean Sea are mentioned in connection with the missionary journeys of the apostle Paul; CHIOS (Acts 20:15); CAUDA (Acts 27:16); CRETE (Acts 27:7, 12–13, 21); CYPRUS (Acts 13:4; 15:39); MALTA (Acts 28:1–11); SAMOS (Acts 20:15); and SAMOTHRACE (Acts 16:11).

The KJV uses the word "island" in four ways: (1) an island as usually understood (Jer. 2:10); (2) dry land, or habitable places, as opposed to water (Is. 42:15); (3) a coastland, as the coastland of Palestine and Phoenicia (Is. 20:6); and (4) the farthest regions of the earth—the distant coastlands of people from afar (Ps. 72:10; Is. 11:11; Zeph. 2:11).

ISMACHIAH [is muh KIGH uh] (the Lord supports)—an overseer of the temple in Hezekiah's time (2 Chr. 31:13; Ismakiah, NIV).

ISPAH [IS pah]—a son or descendant of Beriah, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:16; Ishpah, NRSV).

ISRAEL [IS ray ell] (he strives with God)—the name given to JACOB after his great struggle with God at Peniel near the brook Jabbok (Gen. 32:28; 35:10). The name Israel has been interpreted by different scholars as "prince with God," "he strives with God," "let God rule," or "God strives." The name was later applied to the descendants of Jacob. The twelve tribes were called "Israelites," "children of Israel," and "house of Israel," identifying them as the descendants of Israel through his sons and grandsons. ISRAEL, HISTORY OF—The ancient Hebrews were just one of a number of nations living in the ancient Near East. This region of the world included ancient Persia, Mesopotamia (the area between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers), Syria, Anatolia, Palestine, and Egypt. Each of the nations in the area experienced at least one period in its history when it was more powerful or influential than its neighbors. But the nature of empires is such that each of them was destined to fall and to be replaced by a society that was more aggressive than those it overthrew.

The first of these great empires was that of the SUMERIANS. It consisted of about a dozen small city-states located in southern Mesopotamia in an area about 245 kilometers (150 miles) northwest of the Persian Gulf. The Sumerians established the first high culture in human society in the fourth millennium B.C. They made fundamental discoveries in many important areas of life. They were at their height when a person named Sargon founded an aggressive culture at Agade, some 128 kilometers (80 miles) northwest in central Mesopotamia, adopting much of the Sumerian culture.

Sargon's dynasty was overthrown ultimately by a nation that was itself conquered after a century of rule by a powerful Babylonian king named HAMMURAPI (about 1792–1750 B.C.). During Hammurapi's reign, the Sumerian cities were conquered and the First Dynasty of Babylon was established in Mesopotamia.

Abraham and the Patriarchs. It is difficult to assign an exact beginning to Hebrew history. But if we regard ABRAHAM as the forefather of the Israelites, it is clear that they had their roots in ancient Sumer. Abraham came from Ur, a Sumerian city (Gen. 11:31). Abraham became prosperous in HARAN in northwestern Mesopotamia, then later moved to the land of Canaan (Gen. 12:5), where he received God's assurance that he would be the ancestor of a mighty people.

Abraham's promised son ISAAC had two sons of his own, ESAU and JACOB. God chose Jacob for the renewal of His promise to Abraham (Gen. 28:13–15). Jacob later moved from Haran, where he had married LEAH and RACHEL, daughters of LABAN, and settled in Canaan. Jacob, whose name was changed to ISRAEL after an encounter with God (Gen. 32:24–30), had twelve sons. Eleven of these sons plotted to sell their youngest brother Joseph into slavery in Egypt.

Years in Egypt. When God prospered Joseph and made him a high official in Egypt, the brothers were forgiven, after being humiliated. They were instructed to bring their father and other family members to Egypt, where they settled in the fertile GOSHEN area for over two centuries. Then a Pharaoh who did not acknowledge Joseph's achievements came to power. The descendants of Israel, now known as HEBREWS or Israelites, were uprooted from their land and forced to work on the rebuilding of great Egyptian cities.

After the Israelites experienced considerable suffering, God appointed Moses to liberate His people from bondage. Moses had been born to Hebrew slaves. He was set adrift in a basket on the Nile River in an attempt to prevent him from being killed by Pharaoh's troops. An Egyptian princess rescued him and brought him up as her own son.

Fleeing later from Egypt because of a crime that he had committed (Ex. 2:12), Moses experienced a divine revelation in the wilderness. He was ordered by God to return to Egypt where, with AARON his brother, he would confront Pharaoh and demand the release of the captive Israelites. Pharaoh's stubborn refusal resulted in the death of the Egyptian firstborn, after which Moses led the Israelites across the Red Sea to safety in the Sinai region.

The Covenant at Sinai. God appeared to Moses on Mt. Sinai (Horeb) and entered into a relationship with the twelve tribes, which bound them to Himself and made them, in effect, the nation of Israel. The relationship was in the form of a COVENANT, or a written contract.

This covenant is fundamentally important for Israelite history. Through it a number of independent tribes were bonded together into one nation and given a specific destiny as the people chosen by God as a channel for divine revelation. The Israelites, however, were not to behave just like any nation of the ancient world. All of these were pagan, following depraved and corrupt moral practices as part of their worship.

The Israelites were to live as a religious community in which each member cared for the others. The exploitation of such helpless persons as strangers, widows, and fatherless children was strictly forbidden under the Mosaic Law (Deut. 24:17), since God Himself was their champion (Deut. 10:18).

God promised to provide a land for the Israelites in which they could settle in obedience to covenant law as a holy nation (Ex. 19:6) and be witnesses of His existence and power to all the neighboring nations.

Throughout their history, God's covenant people were meant to be an example of spirituality to the world. This, rather than political activity or territorial conquest, was to be their true destiny. Unfortunately, much of Israelite history was marked by periodic disobedience of the covenant laws.

Israelite history began badly with an idolatrous act. The people made and worshiped a golden calf while Moses was still on Mount Sinai (Ex. 32:1–6). After their punishment, the covenant was renewed and work began on the building of the TABERNACLE. The structure was portable, and it moved with the Israelites whenever they wandered in the wilderness. Subsequent Hebrew temples were to reflect something of its structure.

The Wilderness Years. Because the Israelites disobeyed God by refusing to enter Canaan (Num. 14:30–35), they were compelled to wander for a generation in the wilderness. These aimless wanderings are summarized in Numbers 33. The people apparently moved between various oases in the Sinai wilderness. After Aaron’s death (Num. 20:22–29), the Israelites moved steadily toward Moab in TRANSJORDAN and prepared to conquer Canaan. The tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half of the tribe of Manasseh, who owned large herds, were allowed to settle in the conquered Transjordan lands and to raise their cattle. The remainder of the Israelites prepared to cross the Jordan River at Jericho and occupy the Promised Land. Moses was not permitted to lead the Israelites to victory because he had not carried out God’s will properly (Deut. 32:51). Instead he was allowed to view Canaan from the summit of Mount Nebo. After this, he died and was buried in Moab (Deut. 34:6).

Conquest of Canaan. Jericho was like a town under siege when JOSHUA, who had been commissioned as leader shortly before Moses died (Deut. 34:9), advanced to overthrow it. He obeyed God’s instructions regarding the attack upon the fortress-like city that guarded the entrance to Canaan. The Israelite people marched around it daily for six days, and it collapsed dramatically on the seventh day (Josh. 6:12–20).

The next assault was on nearby Ai. This offensive, however, met with disaster because an Israelite named Achan had defied God’s instructions about not taking plunder from Jericho. When his sin was discovered, he and his family were stoned to death (Josh. 7:25), after which Ai was overthrown.

Shortly afterwards, Joshua was tricked into establishing a covenant with the neighboring GIBEONITES. This was followed by a defense of the royal city of Gibeon against the attack of five Canaanite kings who resented the pact made with Joshua. The kings were captured and executed (Josh. 10:16–27). Then Joshua proceeded to conquer the southland, where Lachish and Hebron were important cities. JERUSALEM, however, was not captured at this time, nor was Megiddo.

The final phase of occupation involved northern Canaan, where Joshua was confronted by a military group led by Jabin, king of Hazor. Perhaps because the Israelites were anxious to keep the cities intact, none were destroyed except Hazor, the chief city of the north. This policy proved costly in later years. Although the Israelites had occupied the Promised Land, they had not conquered the people completely.

Once the Canaanites were able to reestablish themselves, they presented serious problems for the Israelites.

Period of the Judges. After Joshua died, individual charismatic leaders known as judges provided leadership for the Israelites. This event coincided with increasingly independent activity by the Israelite tribes, caused partly because of Canaanite resistance to the conquerors. This lack of centralized leadership meant that covenant law was not being observed, and it was being replaced by idolatry.

Although the judges tried hard to correct local problems, they were no match for the increasingly militant Canaanites, or for Eglon, a Moabite ruler who oppressed some of the Israelites for eighteen years before being killed by a left-handed judge named Ehud (Judg. 3:15–30). By this time Hazor had been reoccupied by Canaanites under Jabin, their king, who made several northern tribes his subjects for twenty years (Judg. 4:2–3).

Jabin's forces were superior because they had iron-fitted, horse-drawn chariots. These chariots were effective on level ground, but they proved less threatening in the hill country. Jabin's general Sisera was defeated by Barak and slain by Jael, the wife of an ally named Heber (Judg. 4:21).

The Book of Judges shows clearly that Israel's troubles were the result of rejecting covenant law and adopting various forms of Canaanite idolatry. Canaanite religion was one of the most sensuous and morally depraved that the world has ever known; it contrasted dramatically with the holiness and moral purity demanded of the Israelites by the Sinai covenant.

Because of their persistent idolatry, the Israelites were punished further by Midianite and Ammonite attacks. The most serious threat, however, came from the PHILISTINES. These warlike people had migrated to Canaan in small numbers in the time of Abraham. But they came in a body about 1175 B.C. and settled on the southwestern coast of Canaan. The Philistines established a group of five cities—Gaza, Gath, Ashkelon, Ashdod, and Ekron—and began to push the Israelites into the hill country.

The Philistines were superior in military power because they monopolized the manufacture and sale of iron implements and weapons. SAMSON had delivered the Israelites periodically from Philistine oppression, but after his death (Judg. 16:27–30) they were at the mercy of the enemy once more.

The United Kingdom Years. The social chaos described in the closing chapters of the Book of Judges came to a head in the religious corruption in Israel at the time of SAMUEL's childhood (1 Sam. 2:12–18, 22). Although Samuel himself exercised a wholesome ministry, the Israelites were more intent on being ruled by a king than in living as a holy nation in covenant with their God (1 Sam. 8:19–20). SAUL, son of Kish, was duly anointed by Samuel as a charismatic leader over the nation (1 Sam. 10:1).

But Saul had an unbalanced personality, which soon showed signs of paranoia. He disobeyed God's commands (1 Sam. 13:13), and a successor was chosen and anointed in the person of DAVID, son of Jesse. David gained popular favor by his defeat of the Philistine champion Goliath. Thereafter David was seen as Israel's savior, much to the dislike of Saul, who felt his own position threatened. Saul fought at intervals against both David and the Philistines, but he was ultimately killed along with five sons at Mount Gilboa. The northern tribes then looked to Ishbosheth, the surviving son of Saul, who was made king at Mahanaim in Transjordan by Abner, his father's commander (2 Sam. 2:8–10).

David settled in Hebron (2 Sam. 2:11), and Abner tried to gain favor with him. But Abner was murdered by Joab, David's commander, at Hebron (2 Sam. 3:27). When Ishbosheth was also murdered (2 Sam. 4:5–6), the way was clear for David to assume sole rule of Israel and unify the kingdom. He established his capital at Jerusalem, which he captured from the Jebusites. He also brought the ARK OF THE COVENANT to the city, making it a religious as well as a political center.

For the remainder of his reign, David fought against the Ammonites and Syrians as well as the Philistines. His later years were clouded by family dissension and by a revolt among some of his subjects. In spite of his troubles, he behaved with great courage and managed to overcome all his enemies. Before his death, he proclaimed his son Solomon as his successor. Solomon was duly anointed at Gihon by Zadok the priest (1 Kin. 1:39).

Solomon became renowned for his wisdom. He brought the kingdom of Israel to great prominence at a time when other Near Eastern nations were weak politically. He renewed the alliance that David had made with Hiram, king of Tyre, engaging Hiram's workmen to construct a TEMPLE complex in Jerusalem. Although the finished building had some of the characteristics of the wilderness tabernacle, it also included some pagan features. These included the freestanding columns found in Syrian shrines, while certain aspects of the internal decoration reflected Canaanite religious symbolism.

The cost of Solomon's ambitious building projects in and around Jerusalem was high. Much of the agricultural productivity of the land was sent to Phoenicia to pay for materials and workmen's wages. Although Solomon levied tolls on the caravan trade that passed through his kingdom, he could not meet the rising costs that an increasingly lavish way of life involved. He attempted to replenish his depleted resources by building a fleet of ships near Elath for trading purposes (1 Kin. 9:26).

In desperation, Solomon finally began a program of forced labor that involved 30,000 men working by rotation (10,000 working every third month), laboring in the forests, mines, and cities under harsh conditions.

Rebellion of the Northern Tribes. As he grew older, Solomon entered into political marriages with non-Israelites. These women brought with them the gods of their native lands (1 Kin. 11:7–8), adding to the problem of idolatry in Israel. Before Solomon died, he managed to antagonize almost all his subjects. When he was succeeded by his son Rehoboam, the ten northern tribes led by Jeroboam, a former head of the forced labor units, met with him and sought relief from the burdens of work and taxation.

Rehoboam followed bad advice and refused. The northern tribes declared independence and formed a separate kingdom with Jeroboam as head. They named their kingdom "Israel" (this sometimes causes confusion because the name is also used for the remnant of the Covenant People at a later time). The southern section of the divided kingdom was known as Judah. It soon attracted the attention of Shishak, pharaoh of Egypt (about 945–924 B.C.), who moved into Judah, robbed the temple of its golden objects, and destroyed a number of Judah's fortresses. This event weakened still further an already vulnerable people.

Threat From Syria. Israel's troubles had also begun. The Arameans of Damascus were becoming powerful in Syria and were beginning to put pressure on Israel's northern borders. There was internal instability in the kingdom as well, indicated by the murder of King Nadab (about 908 B.C.), two years after his father Jeroboam's death. His murderer, Baasha, fortified a site close to Jerusalem (1 Kin. 15:17). Asa, the king of Judah (about 911–870 B.C.), appealed to the Syrians for help against Baasha. Baasha's son Elah reigned for two years (about 886–884 B.C.); Elah was murdered by Zimri, who committed suicide after seven days and plunged the nation into civil war.

Four years later the army general Omri gained control of Israel and began his own dynasty. Omri moved Israel's capital from Tirzah to Samaria, which he fortified strongly. He allied with Phoenicia, and arranged a marriage between his son Ahab and Jezebel, a princess of Tyre. When Ahab (about 874–853 B.C.) became king, he continued Omri's policy of resistance to Syria. But his support of pagan Tyrian religion in Israel drew strong criticism from the prophet Elijah (1 Kin. 18:18). The nation was punished by famine, but this did little to halt the widespread spiritual and social corruption.

About 855 B.C. the Syrian Ben-Hadad attacked Samaria (1 Kin. 20:1) but suffered heavy losses, as he also did the following year at Aphek. Israel was saved by the appearance of the powerful Assyrian forces who, under Shalmaneser III (about 859–824 B.C.), attacked allied Syrian and Israelite forces in 853 B.C. at Qarqar on the Orontes River. Ahab died while trying to recover Ramoth Gilead from Syrian control. Meanwhile Mesha, king of Moab, had refused to pay further tribute to Israel; consequently, he was attacked by Ahaziah (about 853–852 B.C.), Ahab's successor.

Jehoram (about 852–841 B.C.) of Israel enlisted Jehoshaphat of Judah (about 873–848 B.C.) in the struggle against Moab, which proved successful (2 Kings 3) as Elisha the prophet had predicted. About 843 B.C. Ben-Hadad was murdered by Hazael (2 Kin. 8:7–13), and two years later Jehu seized the throne of Israel, carrying out a vicious purge of Ahab's house and suppressing pagan religions.

At the same time, Athaliah, queen of Judah, exterminated the royal house except for Jehoash, who was proclaimed king six years later. Jehoash first banned idolatry, but then became attracted to it and subsequently killed the son of the high priest who had protected him earlier. In 841 B.C. Shalmaneser III again attacked a Syrian coalition. But Jehu wished to avoid fighting the Assyrians, so he paid heavy tribute to this powerful nation instead.

Prosperity and the Prophets. For both Israel and Judah the eighth century B.C. was marked by a period of prosperity. Jeroboam II (about 782–752 B.C.) was able to develop agriculture, trade, and commerce because the westward advance of Assyria compelled the Syrian armies to defend their eastern territories. In Judah, Uzziah (790–740 B.C.) raised the prosperity of the country to levels unknown since the time of David. In both nations there was a sense that the true “golden age” had arrived.

Unfortunately, however, idolatry and the rejection of covenant spirituality were prominent, especially in Israel. Prophets such as Amos, Hosea, Micah, and Isaiah spoke out against these abuses. They condemned the exploitation of the poor. They also rebuked the rich for accumulating land and wealth illegally and for forsaking the simple Hebrew way of life for the luxurious living of pagan nations.

Fall of the Northern Kingdom. The end of all this for Israel occurred shortly after Jeroboam’s death. The kingship was left to political opportunists. But they were dwarfed by the powerful Assyrian monarch Tiglath–Pileser III. About 745 B.C. he placed Menahem of Israel (752–741 B.C.) under tribute. But when Menahem died, Israel joined an alliance against Assyria.

Ahaz of Judah, alarmed by this move, appealed to Tiglath–Pileser for help. Tiglath–Pileser overthrew Damascus in 732 B.C. (Is. 8:4; 17:1; Amos 1:4). He then carried people from the territory of Naphtali captive to Assyria (2 Kin. 15:29). But he still had to reckon with the resistance from Samaria under Pekah, whose murderer, Hoshea, was later made an Assyrian vassal.

On Tiglath–Pileser’s death (727 B.C.), Hoshea of Israel rebelled. This brought the Assyrians to Samaria in a siege that ended three years later with the fall of Israel and the deportation of more northern tribesmen in 722 B.C. Isaiah’s prediction that God would use Assyria as the rod of His anger upon Israel (Is. 10:5–6) had been fulfilled.

Fall of the Southern Kingdom. The Southern Kingdom under the godly Hezekiah (716–686 B.C.), son and successor of Ahaz, prospered for a time. This was possible because Hezekiah took advantage of a developing power struggle between Assyria and Egypt to fortify Judah and build up its resources. Some twenty years after Samaria fell, Sennacherib, who succeeded Sargon, invaded Palestine and reduced the cities of Joppa, Ashkelon, and Ekron in quick succession. An Egyptian army sent to relieve Ekron was defeated about 701 B.C., and the frontier fortress of Lachish came under heavy assault.

The Assyrians also threatened Jerusalem. To gain relief, Hezekiah offered to pay tribute to Sennacherib. In the end the Assyrians withdrew as the result of being devastated by a plague (2 Kin. 19:35). Hezekiah's successor, Manasseh (about 687–641 B.C.), encouraged idolatry and depravity in Judah, but he reformed toward the end of his life (2 Chr. 33:10–17).

Manasseh's grandson Josiah reigned until 609 B.C. He finally died at Megiddo while trying to prevent the Egyptians from helping the tottering Assyrian Empire. Assyria collapsed with the fall of Nineveh (612 B.C.) and Haran (610 B.C.) to Babylonian and Median forces. Later the Babylonians turned against Jerusalem. In the days of the prophet Jeremiah, they devastated the city in three assaults between 597 and 581 B.C.

The Captivity Years. With the removal of prisoners to Babylonia (Jer. 52:28–30), the Southern Kingdom collapsed and the shock of captivity began for the Hebrew people. The prophets Ezekiel and Daniel ministered in various ways to the distraught captives. For almost seven decades the Jewish people were occupied in building the Babylonian Empire under Nebuchadnezzar II (605–562 B.C.) and Nabonidus (556–539 B.C.). In this alien environment some captives lost all hope for the future. But through a ministry of prayer, study of the law, memorial observances, worship, and personal testimony to God's power, Ezekiel was able to promote trust in divine mercy. He kept alive the hope that some day a faithful remnant would return to the ancestral homeland.

Return from Captivity. Magnificent as the Babylonian Empire appeared, it was fundamentally weak. It collapsed under the attack of the Persian ruler Cyrus II. Babylon fell in 539 B.C., and the same year Cyrus proclaimed liberty to all captives in Babylonia. The Hebrew remnant that longed to return home was able to do so between 538 and 525 B.C.

The returnees, however, found a desolate land claimed by Arab tribes and the Samaritans. They had to be urged by HAGGAI and ZECHARIAH to reconstruct the ruined temple before they could expect divine blessing (Hag. 1:9–11). Even after this had been done, life was still insecure because Jerusalem lacked a defensive wall.

In 458 B.C. EZRA came from Persia as a royal commissioner to survey the situation and report to King Artaxerxes I (465–423 B.C.). Twelve years passed before action was taken, due to the initiative of NEHEMIAH, a high court official, who in 445 B.C. was appointed governor of Judah. As a preliminary step toward restoring regional security and prosperity, he supervised the reconstruction of Jerusalem's wall in the short period of fifty-two days, after which it was dedicated (Neh. 12:27).

Then Ezra led a ceremony of national confession and commitment to covenant ideals. He also instituted religious reforms that made the law central in community life, as well as reviving tithe-offerings and stressing Sabbath worship. He expelled non-Israelites from the community, regulated the priesthood carefully, and in general laid the foundations of later Judaism.

The Period of Greek Dominance. The restoration of the national life of the Jewish people was achieved quickly because of the peaceful conditions in the Persian Empire. But this phase ended with revolts under Artaxerxes II (404–359 B.C.) and the defeat of Darius III in 331 B.C. by ALEXANDER the Great of Greece. Thereafter Greek culture became firmly established in the ancient world, in spite of the premature death of Alexander in 323 B.C.

The small Judahite community, which had faced extinction before because of Canaanite paganism, now reacted with fear lest it should become engulfed by the idolatry of Greek religion. The adoption of Greek traditions transformed the old Persian Empire. When Egypt became Hellenized, the culture of Greece was represented strongly in cities such as ALEXANDRIA.

The chief threat to the Jewish community was not so much military or political as religious. Greek religion was coarse and superstitious, and its sensuous nature encouraged a wide following. The philosophy of Stoicism attracted some adherents because of its fatalism and the view that God was in everything, while a less rigorous view of life was taught by Epicurus (341–270 B.C.). He stressed the values of friendship, advising his followers to avoid sensual excesses if they wished to enjoy true pleasure.

By contrast, emphasis upon the teachings of the Jewish law became the hallmark of the SCRIBES, who had replaced the wise men as guardians of Jewish religious tradition. About the second century B.C., they were aided by the rise of a separatist or PHARISEE group, which taught scrupulous observance of the Mosaic Law, advocated synagogue worship, and professed belief in angels, demons, and the resurrection of the dead.

Another influential religious group during this period of Jewish history was the SADDUCEES, an aristocratic priestly minority that exercised close control over temple ritual. The Sadducees accepted only the Law as Scripture. They would not allow any doctrine that could not be proved directly from the Law. This brought them into conflict with the Pharisees.

Revolt of the Maccabees. The political conflict in Palestine became critical under the Syrian ruler Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–163 B.C.), who was determined to force Greek culture upon the Jewish community. Greek fashions were imposed upon Jerusalem. This provoked such unrest that Antiochus deliberately polluted the temple in 168 B.C. and forbade traditional Jewish worship. A Jewish family near Jerusalem rebelled against Greek authority. Its leader, Mattathias, began what is known as the Maccabean revolt. This continued under his son, Judas Maccabeus, who finally won concessions from the Syrian regent Lysias.

Even after the Maccabean war ended, Greek culture exerted a considerable influence in Judea. The province came under Roman rule after 64 B.C. with the rise of the Roman Empire, but this did little to stop the threat presented by Greek religion. In spite of all adversity, the faithful remnant of God’s people, Israel, struggled on in hope, looking for the long-promised Messiah who would deliver them from their enemies and bring God’s kingdom upon earth.

Jesus and His Ministry. More than 700 years after the prophet Micah had foretold the birthplace of the Messiah (Mic. 5:2), the birth of a baby was announced by an angel to astonished shepherds in Bethlehem. The child was Jesus, God’s Messiah (Anointed One), who would ultimately die for the sin of the world.

Jesus carried out a ministry of teaching, preaching, and healing for about three years. He came increasingly under suspicion by the Jewish authorities in Jerusalem. His work won for Him widespread acceptance, but He refused to allow His mission of salvation to be set aside in favor of following popular messianic expectations.

When Jesus condemned Jewish legalism (Mark 7:1–23), the Sadducees and Pharisees rose up in anger. The local Roman ruler Herod Antipas was also becoming concerned about Christ’s activities (Luke 13:31). Matters came to a head when He was betrayed to the priests by one of His disciples. The Roman authorities took part in His trial and death, but even His disciples were unprepared for His dramatic resurrection on the first Easter morning.

After forty days Jesus returned to heaven, leaving His disciples with an evangelistic commission (Matt. 28:18–20) which received a powerful impetus at the feast of Pentecost (Acts 2:1–4). The Christian church that came into being on this day spread across Palestine into Europe and ultimately throughout the world. At the forefront of evangelistic activity was a converted Jew, Paul of Tarsus, whose writings form a large part of the New Testament.

In Palestine, Pontius Pilate was removed from office just before Tiberius died in A.D. 37. Seven years later Herod Agrippa died. In the Roman Empire, Caligula followed Tiberius. Four years later he was succeeded by Claudius. During Paul’s missionary journeys, Jews were expelled from Rome (about A.D. 49). About A.D. 52 Felix was made procurator of Judea. Seven years later he was succeeded by Porcius Festus, before whom Paul appeared (Acts 25:1–12).

There were threats of persecution of Christians in the Roman Empire, and these became a reality under Nero. He blamed a disastrous fire in Rome (A.D. 64) upon them to divert suspicion from himself. In A.D. 66 the first revolt against Roman power occurred in Judea. Four years later the Roman emperor Titus marched into Jerusalem, destroyed it, and brought the Jewish state to an end. Thereafter the Jews became a religious group that was scattered across Europe and Asia, while God’s message of redemption and salvation was committed to the Christian church.

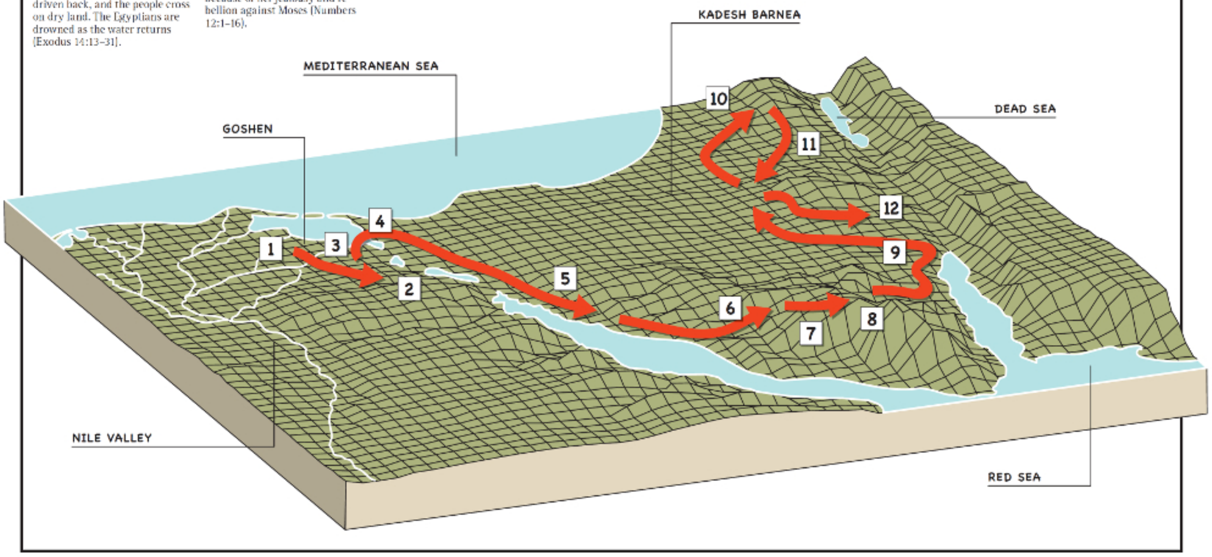
EXIT FROM EGYPT



1 The Israelites are told to leave Egypt by Pharaoh, the Egyptian king. The years of slavery are over (Exodus 12:29–36).

2 They travel to the region of the Bitter Lakes (Exodus 12:37–39; 13:17–14:4).

3 Pharaoh changes his mind and pursues his escaped slaves. He traps the Israelites against the sea (Exodus 14:5–12).

4 God tells Moses to hold out his stick over the sea. The waters are driven back, and the people cross on dry land. The Egyptians are drowned as the water returns (Exodus 14:13–31).

5 After three days they arrive at Marah – but the water is too bitter to drink (Exodus 15:22–26).

6 God first provides manna and quail to eat (Exodus 16).

7 God provides water from rock. The Amalekites attack and are defeated. Moses' father-in-law advises Moses (Exodus 17–18).

8 At Mt. Sinai, Israel receives the Law from God (Exodus 19–32).

9 Miriam becomes leprous because of her jealousy and rebellion against Moses (Numbers 12:1–16).

10 Eleven days after leaving Mt. Sinai, Moses sends 12 spies into Canaan (Numbers 13:1–24).

11 The spies return. Ten bring bad reports, leading the people to rebellion. They want a new leader to take them back to Egypt (Numbers 13:25–14:10).

12 As punishment, God sends them to wander in the desert 40 years before entering Canaan (Numbers 14:11–38).

ISRAELITE [IZ rih uhl ight]—a descendant of Israel, or JACOB (Lev. 23:42–43). Israelites were considered to be children of the COVENANT, faithful servants of the Lord, and heirs to the promises made to Abraham (Rom. 9:4; 11:1). Also see ISRAEL, HISTORY OF.

ISSACHAR [IHZ ah car] (there is hire or reward)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The ninth son of Jacob; the fifth by his wife Leah (Gen. 30:17–18; 35:23). He fathered four sons: Tola, Puvah or Puah, Job or Jashub, and Shimron. He and his sons went with their father Jacob to Egypt to escape the famine (Gen. 46:13; Ex. 1:3; Num. 26:23–24; 1 Chr. 2:1; 7:1). Before his death, Jacob described Issachar as "a strong donkey lying down between two burdens" (Gen. 49:15). In other words, Jacob saw that Issachar could be a strong fighter but that his love of comfort could also cause him to settle for the easy way out.
2. A Levite gatekeeper in David's time (1 Chr. 26:5).

ISSACHAR, TRIBE OF—the tribe made up of Issachar's descendants. It consisted of four clans, the descendendants of Issachar's four sons (Gen. 46:13; Num. 26:23–24; 1 Chr. 7:1). The territory allotted to this tribe was bounded on the north by Zebulun and Naphtali, on the south and west by Manasseh, and on the east by the Jordan River (Josh. 19:17–23). Most of the fertile Valley of JEZREEL, or Esdraelon, fell within Issachar's territory. Its fertile, flat plains were well-suited for the raising of cattle. In spite of its reputation for seeking comfort, the tribe did fight bravely against Sisera (Judg. 5:15).

Moses prophesied a quiet and happy life for Issachar (Deut. 33:18). At the first census, the tribe numbered 54,400 fighting men (Num. 1:28–29); at the second census 64,300 (Num. 26:25). By David's time it numbered 87,000 (1 Chr. 7:5). Its leaders mentioned in the Bible were Nethaneel (Num. 1:8; 2:8; 7:18; 10:15), and Paltiel (Num. 34:26), the judge Tola (Judg. 10:1), King Baasha (1 Kin. 15:27), and Omri (1 Chr. 27:18).

In accordance with Jacob's blessing, the tribe of Issachar showed an unusual insight into political situations. The tribe switched allegiance from Saul to David (1 Chr. 12:32). Although the tribe was a member of the Northern Kingdom, its members attended Hezekiah of Judah's Passover feast (2 Chr. 30:18).

ISSARON (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

ISSHIAH [ih SHY ah]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite, head of the house of Rehabiah (1 Chr. 24:21).
2. A Levite of the house of Uzziel (1 Chr. 24:25), also called Jesshiah (1 Chr. 23:20). Also see JISSHIAH.

ISSHIJAH [is SHIGH juh]—a form of ISHIJAH.

ISUI [ISS yoo igh]—a form of ISHVI.

ITALIAN REGIMENT—a unit of the Roman army stationed in Caesarea (Acts 10:1), to which CORNELIUS was attached as a centurion. The Greek word translated as "regiment" refers to a COHORT, consisting of about 600 men under the command of a tribune.

ITALY [ITT uh lih]—a long, boot-shaped country (see Map 7, A–1) that juts into the Mediterranean Sea (Acts 18:2; Heb. 13:24). It is bounded on the north by the Alps, on the east by the Adriatic Sea, on the south by Sicily and the straits of Messina, and on the west by the Tyrrhenian Sea. Its most important city is Rome. During New Testament times, Rome was the capital of the Roman Empire. Other places in Italy mentioned in the New Testament include RHEGIUM (Acts 28:13), PUTEOLI (Acts 28:13), APPII FORUM (Acts 28:15), and THREE INNS (Acts 28:15). Also see ITALIAN REGIMENT.

ITCH, ITCHING DISEASE (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

ITHAI [IGH thay igh]—a form of ITTAI.

ITHAMAR [ITH uh mahr]—the youngest of the four sons of Aaron and Elisheba (Ex. 6:23). Ithamar was consecrated for the priestly office, along with his father and his three older brothers (Ex. 28:1). His duty was to number the articles collected for the tabernacle (Ex. 38:21) and to supervise two priestly families, the Gershonites and the Merarites (Num. 4:21–33). The priestly family founded by him included the high priest Eli and his descendants (1 Chr. 24:3–7). Although Ithamar's family eventually lost the high priesthood, it continued as a priestly family after the captivity (Ezra 8:2).

ITHIEL [ITH ih el] (God is with me)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A Benjamite who returned from Babylon to Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 11:7).
2. A person to whom AGUR addressed his oracle (Prov. 30:1).

ITHLAH [ITH luh]—a form of JETHLAH.

ITHMAH [ITH muh]—one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:46).

ITHNAN [ITH nan] (constant)—a city in southern Judah near Hazor (Josh. 15:23).

ITHRA [ITH ruh]—a form of JITHRA.

ITHRAN [ITH ran] (excellence)—a son of Dishon and grandson of Seir the Horite (Gen. 36:26). Also see JITHRAN.

ITHREAM [ITH ree uhm] (remnant of the people)—the sixth son born to David and his wife Eglah at Hebron (2 Sam. 3:5).

ITHRITE [ITH right] (belonging to Jether)—a family who lived at Kirjath Jearim (1 Chr. 2:53). Two of David's mighty men, Ira and Gareb, were Ithrites (1 Chr. 11:40).

ITTAH-KAZIN—a form of ETH KAZIN.

ITTAI [IT uh eye]—the name of two of King David's supporters:

1. A native or inhabitant of the Philistine city of Gath who followed David during the dangerous period of Absalom's rebellion. Ittai, Abishai, and Joab each commanded a third of David's army in the battle of the woods of Ephraim, during which Absalom was killed (2 Sam. 15:18–22; 18:2, 5, 12). Joab and Abishai are mentioned after this battle, but Ittai is not. Ittai may have been killed during the battle.

2. A son of Ribai, from Gibeah of Benjamin, and one of David’s mighty men (2 Sam. 23:29), also called Ithai (1 Chr. 11:31).

ITUREA [iht you REE ah] (pertaining to Jetur)—a small territory northeast of the Sea of Galilee at the base of Mount Hermon (see Map 6, C–1). Iturea is mentioned only once in Scripture, in Luke’s description of the territory of Herod Philip (Luke 3:1). The name probably derives from the Jetureans, an Arab tribe descended from Jetur, a son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:15; 1 Chr. 1:31), who colonized the area. The Itureans were known as accurate archers and notorious robbers.

The little territory of Iturea was assigned to several different local rulers during the years of Greek dominance of Palestine. When the Romans came into power, Iturea was awarded to Herod the Great. At Herod’s death, his son Herod Philip took over the territory. Some scholars believe that Iturea and TRACHONITIS referred to the same territory in New Testament times.

IVAH [EYE vuh]—a city-state of Samaria captured by the Assyrians. Ivah was mentioned by the envoys of Sennacherib in an attempt to break the resistance of Hezekiah to the Assyrian siege of Jerusalem (2 Kin. 18:34; Ivvah, NASB, NRSV, REB, NIV). Ivah may be the same place as Ava (2 Kin. 17:24) or Avva (NASB, NRSV, REB).

IVORY—decorative trim made from tusks of elephants. In Bible times, ivory was a rare and expensive item, found only in the palaces of kings and the homes of the very wealthy. Ornate carvings of ivory were inlaid in thrones, furniture, and the paneling used in expensive homes (1 Kin. 10:18; Ps. 45:8; Ezek. 27:6). The prophet Amos condemned the people of Samaria who lived in houses and beds decorated with ivory (Amos 3:15; 6:4) because their wealth was gained through oppression of the common people of the nation of Israel.

Excavation of the royal city of Samaria has yielded evidence of the practice to which Amos referred. About 200 ivory plaques and fragments were discovered in the palace of King Ahab.

• This elaborate ivory carving discovered at Samaria recalls the words of the prophet Amos that Samaria's "houses of ivory" would be destroyed by God's judgment (Amos 3:12–15).

IVVAH [EYE vuh]—a form of IVAH.

IYE-ABARIM [igh ee AH buh rim]—a form of IJE ABARIM.

IYIM [EYE yem]—a form of IJIM.

IZHAR [IZ hahr]—a son of Kohath and the father of Korah (Ex. 6:18, 21). Izhar was the founder of a tribal family, the IZHARITES (Num. 3:27). His name is also spelled Izehar (Num. 3:19, NKJV, KJV).

IZHARITES [IZ hahr ights]—descendants of IZHAR (Num. 3:27 1 Chr. 24:22; Izeharites, KJV).

IZRAHIAH [is ruh HIGH uh] (the Lord will appear)—a descendant of Issachar (1 Chr. 7:3). He may be the same person as Jezrahiah (Neh. 12:42).

IZRAHITE [IZ ruh hight]—a member of the family of Izrah or a native or inhabitant of the town of Izrah (1 Chr. 27:8).

IZRI [IZ righ]—a form of JIZRI.

IZZIAH [iz IGH uh]—a form of JEZIAH.

J

JAAKAN [JAY uh kan]—an ancestor of the "sons of Jaakan" around whose wells the Israelites camped during their wilderness wanderings (Deut. 10:6; Jakan, KJV). At the time of the Exodus, the "sons of Jaakan" lived on the borders of Edom near Mount Hor. Jaakan is also called Akan (Gen. 36:27).

JAAKOBAH [jay uh KOE buh]—a descendant of Simeon, the third son of Jacob (1 Chr. 4:36).

JAALA [JAY uh luh]—the founder of a tribal family whose descendants returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:56; Jaalah, KJV, NRSV).

JAALAM [JAY uh luhm] (he conceals)—a son of Esau and Aholibamah, who became a chief of Edom (Gen. 36:18; Jalam, NRSV).

JAANAI [JAY uh nigh] (the Lord answers)—a chief of a family descended from Gad (1 Chr. 5:12; Janai, NRSV).

JAAR [JAY ur] (woods)—a place where the ARK OF THE COVENANT stayed for many years (Ps. 132:6, NIV, NRSV).

JAARE-OREGIM [JAY uh rih OHR uh jim]—the father of Elhanan (2 Sam. 21:19), also called Jair (1 Chr. 20:5).

JAARESHIAH [jar uh SHIGH uh]—a son of Jeroham (1 Chr. 8:27; Jaresiah, KJV).

JAASAI [JAY uh sigh] (the Lord is maker)—a man of the family of Bani who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:37; Jaasu, NRSV; Jaasau, KJV, REB).

JAASAU [JAY uh saw]—a form of JAASAI.

JAASIEL [jay AY zih uhl] (God is maker)—the name of one or two people in the Old Testament:

1. One of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:47; Jasiel, KJV).

2. A leader of the tribe of Benjamin during David’s reign (1 Chr. 27:21, possibly the same person as No. 1).

JAASU [JAY uh soo]—a form of JAASAI.

JAAZANIAH [jay az uh NIGH uh] (the Lord hears)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Hoshaiah (2 Kin. 25:23), also called Jezaniah (Jer. 40:8; 42:1) and Azariah (Jer. 42:1, NRSV).
2. A chief Rechabite (Jer. 35:3).
3. A son of Shaphan and leader of elders who were offering incense to idols (Ezek. 8:11).
4. A prince who gave wicked counsel to his people (Ezek. 11:1).

JAAZER [jay AZ ur]—a form of JAZER.

JAAZIAH [jay uh ZIGH uh] (may the Lord strengthen)—a Levite, a descendant of Merari (1 Chr. 24:26–27).

JAAZIEL [jay AY zih uhl]—a temple musician in the time of David (1 Chr. 15:18), also called Aziel (1 Chr. 15:20).

JABAL [JAY buhl]—a son of Lamech and Adah (Gen. 4:20).

JABBOK [JAB uhk]—one of the main eastern tributaries of the Jordan River (Deut. 2:37). The stream rose in TRANSJORDAN, in the hills of Bashan near Rabbah of the Ammonites (modern Amman) and entered the Jordan about 25 kilometers (15 miles) north of the Dead Sea (see Map 3, C–3). Near “the ford of Jabbok” Jacob “wrestled with God” and had his name changed to Israel (Gen. 32:22–32).

JABESH [JAY besh] (dry place)—the name of a man and a city in the Old Testament:

1. The abbreviated name of JABESH GILEAD, a city in the territory of Gad (1 Chr. 10:12).
2. The father of Shallum (2 Kin. 15:10, 13–14), a king of Israel.

JABESH GILEAD [JAY besh GIL ih add] (Jabesh of Gilead)—a town of Gilead (1 Sam. 31:11; 2 Sam. 2:4), situated about 16 kilometers (10 miles) southeast of Beth Shan and about 3 kilometers (2 miles) east of the Jordan River (see Map 4, B–3). It was within the territory assigned to the half-tribe of Manasseh (Num. 32:29, 40).

Jabesh Gilead refused to join in the punishment of the Benjamites (Judg. 21:8–14), an offense for which every man was put to the sword. Four hundred young virgins of Jabesh were given to the Benjamites as wives.

During King Saul’s reign, the king of Ammon besieged the city of Jabesh. He promised to spare the lives of those who lived in Jabesh if each of the men would submit to having his right eye put out. A seven-day truce was called and appeal was made to Saul, who mustered an army and defeated the Ammonites (1 Samuel 11).

The people of Jabesh Gilead never forgot this act of Saul. When Saul and his sons were slain at Gilboa, the men of Jabesh Gilead rescued their bodies, cremated them, and buried the ashes near Jabesh (1 Sam. 31:1–13).

Jabesh (1 Chr. 10:12) is the abbreviated name of Jabesh Gilead.

JABEZ [JAY biz]—the name of a place and a person in the Old Testament:

1. An unidentified place where several families of scribes lived (1 Chr. 2:55).
2. The head of a family of the tribe of Judah noted for his honorable character (1 Chr. 4:9–10).

JABIN [JAY bin] (he is perceptive)—the name of two kings of the Canaanite kingdom of Hazor:

1. A king of Hazor defeated by Joshua at the waters of Merom (Josh. 11:1–14). Jabin organized a number of Canaanite princes against the Israelites.
2. A king of Hazor who oppressed Israel for twenty years. His army, led by SISERA, was defeated by DEBORAH and Barak at the River Kishon (Judg. 4:2).

JABNEEL [JAB nih uhl] (God is builder)—the name of two cities of the Old Testament:

1. A city on the northern border of Judah (Josh. 15:11), the same place as the Philistine city of Jabneh (2 Chr. 26:6).
2. A border city of the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. 19:33). This Jabneel is probably the same city as modern Khirbet Yemma, about 8 kilometers (5 miles) southwest of the Sea of Galilee.

JACHAN [JAY kan]—a clan leader of the tribe of Gad (1 Chr. 5:13; Jacan, NRSV).

JACHIN [JAY kin] (he will establish)—the name of two Old Testament men:

1. A founder of a tribal family, the JACHINITES (Num. 26:12; Jakinites, NIV), also called Jarib (1 Chr. 4:24).
2. Head of the twenty-first division of priests during David’s reign (1 Chr. 24:17; Jakin, NIV). Jachin is also used as a family name (1 Chr. 9:10), describing Jachin’s descendants who returned from the captivity.

JACHIN AND BOAZ [JAY kin, BOE az]—the names of twin pillars of cast bronze on each side of the entrance to Solomon’s temple in Jerusalem (2 Chr. 3:17; Jakin, NIV). The pillars stood in front of the temple and apparently had only decorative significance. When Jerusalem was defeated in 586 B.C., both pillars were destroyed and their metal was carried off to Babylon (2 Kin. 25:13).

JACHINITES [JAY ken ites]—descendants of JACHIN, the fourth son of Simeon (Num. 26:12; Jakinites, NIV).

JACINTH (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES; MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

JACKAL (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

JACKAL'S WELL (see SERPENT WELL).

JACKDAW (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

JACOB [JAY cub] (he supplants)—one of the twin sons of Isaac and Rebekah. The brother of Esau, he was known also as Israel (Gen. 32:28).

Jacob was born in answer to his father's prayer (Gen. 25:21), but he became the favorite son of his mother (25:28). He was named Jacob because, at the birth of the twins, "his hand took hold of Esau's heel" (25:26). According to the accounts in Genesis, Jacob continued to "take hold of" the possessions of others—his brother's birthright (25:29–34), his father's blessing (27:1–29), and his father-in-law's flocks and herds (30:25–43; 31:1).

The pattern of Jacob's life is found in his journeys, much like the travels of his grandfather ABRAHAM. Leaving his home in Beersheba, he traveled to Bethel (28:10–22); later he returned to Shechem (33:18–20), Bethel (35:6–7), and Hebron (35:27). At Shechem and Bethel he built altars, as Abraham had done (12:6–7; 12:8). Near the end of his life Jacob migrated to Egypt; he died there at an advanced age (Genesis 46–49).

The most dramatic moments in Jacob's life occurred at Bethel (Gen. 28:10–22), at the ford of the River Jabbok (32:22–32), and on his deathbed (49:1–33).

The experience at Bethel occurred when he left the family home at Beersheba to travel to Haran (a city in Mesopotamia), the residence of his uncle Laban (28:10). On the way, as he stopped for the night at Bethel, he had a dream of a staircase reaching from earth to heaven with angels upon it and the Lord above it. He was impressed by the words of the Lord, promising Jacob inheritance of the land, descendants "as the dust of the earth" in number, and His divine presence. Jacob dedicated the site as a place of worship, calling it Bethel (literally, "house of God"). More than twenty years later, Jacob returned to this spot, built an altar, called the place El Bethel (literally, "God of the house of God"), and received the divine blessing (35:6–15).

The experience at the ford of the River Jabbok occurred as Jacob returned from his long stay at Haran. While preparing for a reunion with his brother, Esau, of whom he was still afraid (32:7), he had a profound experience that left him changed in both body and spirit.

At the ford of the Jabbok, “Jacob was left alone” (32:24). It was night, and he found himself suddenly engaged in a wrestling match in the darkness. This match lasted until the breaking of the dawn. The socket of Jacob’s hip was put out of joint as he struggled with this mysterious stranger, but he refused to release his grip until he was given a blessing. For the first time in the narrative of Genesis, Jacob had been unable to defeat an opponent. When asked to identify himself in the darkness, he confessed he was Jacob—the “heel-grabber.”

But Jacob’s struggling earned him a new name. For his struggle “with God and with men” in which he had prevailed, his name was changed to Israel (literally, “he struggles with God”) [see Hos. 12:3]. In return, he gave a name to the spot that marked the change; it would be called Peniel—“For I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved” (32:30).

In these first two instances, a deep spiritual sensitivity is evident in Jacob. He appears outwardly brash and grasping, always enriching himself and securing his future. Yet he responded readily to these night experiences—the dream and the wrestling contest—because he apparently sensed “the presence of the holy” in each of them. He also proved to be a man of his word in his dealings with Laban (Gen. 31:6), and in the fulfillment of his vow to return to Bethel (35:1–3).

At the end of his life, Jacob—now an aged man (47:28)—gathered his twelve sons about his bed to tell them what should befall them “in the last days” (49:1).

The harshest language came against Reuben, the firstborn, who was rejected by his father for his sin (49:3–4), and Simeon and Levi, who were cursed for their anger and cruelty (49:5–7). The loftiest language was applied to Judah, who would be praised by his brothers and whose tribe would be the source of royalty, even the ruler of the people (49:8–12).

Words of warning were addressed to Dan, called “a serpent” and “a viper,” a life that would be marked by violence (49:16–17). The two longest speeches were addressed to Judah and to Joseph, Jacob's favorite son (49:22–26).

Following this scene, Jacob died and was embalmed by the physicians (Gen. 49:33; 50:2). By his own request Jacob was carried back to the land of Canaan and was buried in the family burial ground in the cave of the field of MACHPELAH (Gen. 49:29–32; 50:13).

JACOB, TESTAMENT OF (see PSEUDEPIGRAPHA).

JACOB'S WELL—the well where Jesus talked to the Samaritan woman (John 4:1–26). The well is not mentioned in the Old Testament. Known today as Bir Ya'qub ("the well of Jacob"), it is near Tell Balatah, the site of ancient Shechem.

JADA [JAY duh] (he cares)—a son of Onam and grandson of Jerahmeel (1 Chr. 2:28, 32).

JADDAI [JAD eye]—an Israelite who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:43; Jadau, KJV).

JADDUA [JAD oo uh] (known)—the name of two priests in the Book of Nehemiah:

1. A Levite who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:21).
2. A son of Jonathan and a descendant of the high priest Jeshua (Neh. 12:11, 22). Jaddua returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity. He was the last HIGH PRIEST mentioned in the Old Testament.

JADE (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

JADON [JAY dahn] (he judges)—an Israelite who helped repair the walls of Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 3:7).

JAEL [JAY uhl] (mountain goat)—the woman who killed Sisera, Israel's mighty enemy, by driving a tent peg through his temple while he slept (Judg. 4:17–22). Sisera accepted Jael's invitation to seek refuge in her tent. She covered him with a mantle, gave him milk to quench his thirst, and promised to stand guard against intruders. Instead, Jael killed Sisera as he slept. In her famous song, the prophetess Deborah honored Jael: "Most blessed above women is Jael" (Judg. 5:24).

JAGUR [JAY gur] (he dwells)—a town in southeastern Judah, near the border with Edom (Josh. 15:21).

JAHALELEEL [juh HAH luh leel] (may God shine forth)—a descendant of Judah through Caleb (1 Chr. 4:16; Jehallelel, NIV, NRSV; Jehaleleel, KJV).

JAHATH [JAY hath]—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Reaiah (1 Chr. 4:2).
2. A son of Libni (1 Chr. 6:20, 43).
3. A son of Shimei (1 Chr. 23:10, 11).
4. A Levite of the family of Kohath (1 Chr. 24:22).
5. A Levite who helped repair the temple during the reign of Josiah (2 Chr. 34:12).

JAHAZ [JAY haz]—a city in the wastelands of Moab where Sihon, king of the Amorites, was defeated by the Israelites when he refused to allow them to pass through his territory (Num. 21:23). Jahaz was assigned to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:18) and set apart for the Merarite Levites (Josh. 21:34–36). Later the city was captured by Mesha, king of Moab, and was part of Moab in the time of the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah (Is. 15:4). Other spellings of Jahaz are Jahaza (KJV), Jahazah (KJV, REB), and Jahaz (NRSV, REB).

JAHAZA [juh HAY zuh]—a form of JAHAZ (Josh. 13:18).

JAHAZAH [juh HAY zuh]—a form of JAHAZ.

JAHAZIAH [jay huh ZIGH uh] (the Lord sees)—a son of Tikvah and one of four men who opposed Ezra’s condemnation of improper marriages (Ezra 10:15, 44).

JAHAZIEL [juh HAY zih uhl] (God sees)—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. A Benjamite warrior who joined David’s army at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:4).
2. A priest who blew a trumpet before the ARK OF THE COVENANT as it was transported to Jerusalem (1 Chr. 16:6).

3. A Levite, the third son of Hebron (1 Chr. 23:19; 24:23).
4. A Levite who encouraged Jehoshaphat and his army to fight against the Ammonite, Edomite, and Moabite invaders (2 Chr. 20:14–17).
5. The father of a clan leader who returned with Ezra from the captivity (Ezra 8:5).

JAHDAI [JAH digh]—a man of Judah, apparently of the family of Caleb (1 Chr. 2:47).

JAHDIEL [JAH dih uhl] (may God rejoice)—a leader in the half-tribe of Manasseh who lived in Transjordan (1 Chr. 5:24).

JAHDO [JAH doe] (may he rejoice)—a son of Buz the Gadite (1 Chr. 5:14).

JAHLEEL [JAH lih uhl] (God waits)—the third son of Zebulun (Gen. 46:14) and ancestor of the JAHLEELITES (Num. 26:26).

JAHLEELITES [JAY lih uhl ights]—descendants of JAHLEEL (Num. 26:26).

JAHMAI [JAH migh]—a son of Tola and a clan leader of the tribe of Issachar (1 Chr. 7:2).

JAHZAH [JAH zuh]—a form of JAHAZ.

JAHZEEL [JAH zih uhl]—a son of Naphtali and ancestor of the Jahzeelites (Gen. 46:24), also spelled Jahziel (1 Chr. 7:13).

JAHZEELITES [JAH zih uhl ights]—descendants of JAHZEEL (Num. 26:48).

JAHZEIAH [jah ZEE uh]—a form of JAHAZIAH.

JAHZERAH [JAH zuh ruh]—a priest whose descendants lived in Jerusalem after the captivity (1 Chr. 9:12), probably the same person as AHZAI (Neh. 11:13).

JAHZIEL [JAH zih uhl]—a form of JAHZEEL.

JAILER—a keeper of a prison (Acts 16:23). The same Greek noun translated "jailer" is also translated "keeper of the prison" (Acts 16:27, 36).

JAIR [JAY ur] (may he shine forth)—the name of four people and one place in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of Judah (Num. 32:41; Deut. 3:14).
2. An abbreviated form of HAVOTH JAIR ("towns of Jair," Josh. 13:30).
3. A Gileadite who judged Israel for twenty-two years (Judg. 10:3, 5).
4. The father of Elhanan (1 Chr. 20:5), also called Jaare-Oregim (2 Sam. 21:19).
5. A Benjamite, the father of Mordecai, Esther's cousin (Esth. 2:5).

JAIRITE [JAY ur ight]—a descendant of JAIR No. 1 (2 Sam. 20:26).

JAIRUS [jay EYE ruhs]—a ruler of a synagogue near Capernaum and the Sea of Galilee. Jairus' daughter was miraculously raised from the dead by Jesus (Mark 5:21–23, 35–43).

JAKAN [JAY kuhn]—a form of JAAKAN.

JAKEH [JAY kuh]—an ancestor of Agur, the wise man who wrote the thirtieth chapter of the Book of Proverbs (Prov. 30:1).

JAKIM [JAY kim] (may he establish)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Shimei (1 Chr. 8:19).
2. A head of a family of priests (1 Chr. 24:12).

JAKIN [JAY kin]—a form of JACHIN.

JALAM [JAY luhm]—a form of JAALAM.

JALON [JAY lahn] (meaning unknown)—a son of Ezrah (1 Chr. 4:17).

JAMBRES [JAM breez] (see JANNES AND JAMBRES).

JAMES—five men in the New Testament:

1. James, the son of Zebedee, one of Jesus' twelve apostles. James' father was a fisherman; his mother, Salome, often cared for Jesus' daily needs (Matt. 27:56; Mark 15:40–41). In lists of the twelve apostles, James and his brother John always form a group of four with two other brothers, Peter and Andrew. The four were fishermen on the Sea of Galilee. Their call to follow Jesus is the first recorded event after the beginning of Jesus' public ministry (Matt. 4:18–22; Mark 1:16–20).

   James is never mentioned apart from his brother John in the New Testament, even at his death (Acts 12:2). When the brothers are mentioned, James is always mentioned first, probably because he was the older. After the resurrection, however, John became the more prominent, probably because of his association with Peter (Acts 3:1; 8:14). James was killed by Herod Agrippa I, the grandson of Herod the Great, sometime between A.D. 42–44. He was the first of the twelve apostles to be put to death and the only one whose martyrdom is mentioned in the New Testament (Acts 12:2).

   James and John must have contributed a spirited and headstrong element to Jesus' band of followers, because Jesus nicknamed them "Sons of Thunder" (Mark 3:17). On one occasion (Luke 9:51–56), when a Samaritan village refused to accept Jesus, the two asked Jesus to call down fire in revenge, as Elijah had done (2 Kin. 1:10, 12). On another occasion, they earned the anger of their fellow disciples by asking if they could sit on Jesus' right and left hands in glory (Matt. 20:20–28; Mark 10:35–45).

   James was one of three disciples—Peter, James, and John—whom Jesus took along privately on three special occasions. The three accompanied Him when He healed the daughter of Jairus (Mark 5:37; Luke 8:51); they witnessed His transfiguration (Matt. 17:1; Mark 9:2; Luke 9:28); and they were also with Him in His agony in Gethsemane (Matt. 26:37; Mark 14:33).
2. James, the son of Alphaeus. This James was also one of the twelve apostles. In each list of the apostles he is mentioned in ninth position (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13).
3. James the Less. This James is called the son of Mary (not the mother of Jesus), and the brother of Joses (Matt. 27:56; Mark 16:1; Luke 24:10). Mark 15:40 refers to him as "James the Less." The Greek word mikros can mean either "small" or "less." It could, therefore, mean James the smaller (in size), or younger (NIV), or James the less (well-known).

4. James, the father of Judas. Two passages in the New Testament refer to a James, the father of Judas (Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13). Judas was one of the twelve apostles; he was the last to be listed before his more infamous namesake, Judas Iscariot.
5. James, the brother of Jesus. James is first mentioned as the oldest of Jesus' four younger brothers (Matt. 13:55; Mark 6:3).

In the third and fourth centuries A.D., when the idea of the perpetual virginity of Mary gained ground, a number of church fathers argued that James was either a stepbrother to Jesus (by a former marriage of Joseph) or a cousin. But both options are forced. The New Testament seems to indicate that Mary and Joseph bore children after Jesus (Matt. 1:25; 12:47; Luke 2:7; John 2:12; Acts 1:14), and that the second oldest was James (Matt. 13:55–56; Mark 6:3). The Gospels reveal that Jesus' family adopted a skeptical attitude toward His ministry (Matt. 12:46–50; Mark 3:31–35; Luke 8:19–21; John 7:5). James apparently held the same attitude, because his name appears in no lists of the apostles, nor is he mentioned elsewhere in the Gospels.

After Jesus' crucifixion, however, James became a believer. Paul indicated that James was a witness to the resurrection of Jesus (1 Cor. 15:7). He called James an apostle (Gal. 1:19), though like himself, not one of the original Twelve (1 Cor. 15:5, 7).

In the Book of Acts, James emerges as the leader of the church in Jerusalem. His brothers also became believers and undertook missionary travels (1 Cor. 9:5). But James considered it his calling to oversee the church in Jerusalem (Gal. 2:9). He advocated respect for the Jewish law (Acts 21:18–25), but he did not use it as a weapon against Gentiles. Paul indicated that James endorsed his ministry to the Gentiles (Gal. 2:1–10).

The decree of the COUNCIL OF JERUSALEM (Acts 15:12–21) cleared the way for Christianity to become a universal religion. Gentiles were asked only "to abstain from things polluted by idols, from sexual immorality, from things strangled, and from blood" (Acts 15:20). The intent of this decree was practical rather than theological. It asked the Gentiles to observe certain practices that otherwise would offend their Jewish brothers in the Lord and jeopardize Christian fellowship with them.

Both Paul and Acts portray a James who was personally devoted to Jewish tradition but flexible enough to modify it to admit non-Jews into Christian fellowship. This James is probably the author of the Epistle of James in the New Testament.

JAMES, EPISTLE OF—a book characterized by its hard-hitting, practical religion. The epistle reads like a sermon and, except for a brief introduction, has none of the traits of an ancient letter. Each of the five chapters is packed with pointed illustrations and reminders designed to motivate the wills and hearts of believers to grasp a truth once taught by Jesus: "A tree is known by its fruit" (Matt. 12:33).

Authorship and Date. The author identifies himself as "James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ" (1:1). At least five personalities named JAMES appear in the New Testament. None has a stronger claim to being the author of this epistle than James, the brother of the Lord. Apparently neither a disciple nor an apostle during Jesus' lifetime, he is first mentioned in Mark 6:3, where he is listed as the first (oldest) of Jesus' four younger brothers. After the ascension of Jesus, James emerged as a leader of the church in Jerusalem (Acts 15:13; 1 Cor. 15:7; Gal. 2:9)—a position he must have occupied for nearly thirty years, until his martyrdom, according to church tradition.

This James is probably the author of the epistle that bears his name. He refers to himself simply as "James," with no explanation added. This indicates he was well-known to his readers. He calls himself a "servant" rather than an apostle; and he begins the epistle with the same "greetings" (1:1) with which he begins the apostolic decree following the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15:23). These factors suggest one and the same James, the brother of the Lord.

The most important argument against authorship by the Lord's brother is that the Epistle of James was virtually unknown in the ancient church until the third century. It remains an unsolved mystery why it was neglected and then accepted into the New Testament canon at a relatively late date if James, the Lord's brother, were its author.

Although this consideration cannot be overlooked, it does not overrule the Lord's brother as the most probable author of the epistle.

The Epistle of James gives few hints by which it might be dated. Estimates range from A.D. 45 to 150, depending on how one regards its authorship. If James, the Lord's brother, is its author, then it must have been written before A.D. 62 (the approximate time of his death). The epistle may have been written after Paul's letters were in circulation, because James' emphasis on works may be intended to offset Paul's emphasis on faith. This would date the epistle around A.D. 60.

Historical Setting. James addresses the epistle "to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad" (1:1). This implies a readership of Jewish Christians living outside Palestine. Elsewhere in the epistle, however, James refers to hired field labor (5:4), and this locates his audience inside Palestine. In James' day only in Palestine did farmers employ hired rather than slave labor, as was customary elsewhere. The epistle makes frequent references or allusions to the Old Testament. Its style and language are reminiscent of the Old Testament, especially wisdom literature and the prophet Amos. All these factors indicate that James was writing to persons of Jewish-Christian background. His emphasis was on the essentials of obedient living in accordance with the true intent of the law of God.

Theological Contribution. The Epistle of James is a sturdy, compact letter on practical religion. For James, the acid test of true religion is in the doing rather than in the hearing, "believing," or speaking. James exalts genuineness of faith, and is quick to encourage the lowly that God gives grace to the humble (4:6), wisdom to the ignorant (1:5), salvation to the sinner (1:21), and the kingdom to the poor (2:5). He is equally quick to condemn counterfeit religion that would substitute theory for practice, and he does so with biting sarcasm. True religion is moral religion and social religion. True religion is doing the right thing in one's everyday affairs. In this respect James echoes clearly the ethical teaching of Jesus, especially as it is recorded in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5–7). "Not everyone who says to Me, 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of My Father in heaven" (Matt. 7:21).

Special Considerations. Some Bible scholars suggest that James and Paul differ in their views on the saving significance of faith and works.

Paul states, “A man is justified by faith apart from the deeds of the law” (Rom. 3:28), and James says, “A man is justified by works, and not by faith only” (James 2:19). A closer reading of the two, however, reveals that they differ more in their definition of faith than in its essence. James writes to readers who are inclined to interpret faith as mere intellectual acknowledgment (James 2:19). As a consequence he stresses that a faith that does not affect life is not saving faith; hence, his emphasis on works. Actually, this is quite close to Paul’s understanding. For Paul, faith is the entrusting of one’s whole life to God through Christ, with the result that one’s life becomes renewed with the “fruit of the Spirit” (Gal. 5:22).

JAMES, PROTEVANGELIUM OF (see APOCRYPHA).

JAMIN [JAY min] (right hand; south)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. Founder of a tribal family, the JAMINITES (Num. 26:12).
2. A son of Ram, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:27).
3. A priest who helped interpret the law for the people after the captivity (Neh. 8:7).

JAMINITES [JAY min ights]—descendants of JAMIN No. 1 (Num. 26:12).

JAMLECH [JAM lek] (he rules)—a chief of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:34, 41).

JANAI [JAN eye]—a form of JAANAI.

JANGLING, VAIN—KJV phrase for the senseless, foolish, and empty chatter of those who talk contrary to God and God's revelation (1 Tim. 1:6; idle talk, NKJV; fruitless discussion, NASB; meaningless talk, NIV; a wilderness of words, REB).

JANIM [JAY nim]—a form of JANUM.

JANNA [JAN uh]—an ancestor of Jesus, "the son of Janna" (Luke 3:24; Jannai, NIV, NRSV).

JANNES AND JAMBRES [JAN iz, jam BREZ]—two men who, according to the apostle Paul, "resisted Moses" (2 Tim. 3:8). Although Jannes and Jambres are not named in the Old Testament, they are common figures in late Jewish tradition. According to legend, they were two Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses' demand that the Israelites be freed. They sought to duplicate the miracles of Moses in an attempt to discredit him before Pharaoh "so the magicians of Egypt, they also did in like manner with their enhancement" (Ex. 7:11–12, 22).

JANOAH [juh NOE uh] (he rests)—a town in northern Naphtali, in upper Galilee, captured by King Tiglath-Pileser of Assyria in 732 B.C. (2 Kin. 15:29).

JANOHAH [juh NOE huh] (he rests)—a town on the northern border of Ephraim (Josh. 16:6–7), possibly present-day Khirbet Yanun, about 11 kilometers (7 miles) southeast of Shechem.

JANUM [JAY nuhm] (he slumbers)—a village in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:53; Janim, NIV, NRSV, REB).

JAPHETH [JAY fehth]—one of the three sons of Noah, usually mentioned after his two brothers Shem and Ham (Gen. 5:32; 6:10; 1 Chr. 1:4). Japheth and his wife were two of the eight people who entered the ark and were saved from the destructive waters of the Flood (Gen. 7:7; 1 Pet. 3:20).

Japheth's descendants spread over the north and west regions of the earth: "The sons of Japheth were Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Tiras" (1 Chr. 1:5). The Medes, Greeks, Romans, Russians, and Gauls are often referred to as his descendants.

JAPHIA [juh FIGH uh] (may he enlighten)—the name of two people and one place in the Old Testament:

1. A king of Lachish, one of five Amorite kings who formed a military alliance to repel the Israelite invasion. They were defeated and executed by Joshua near the cave of Makkedah (Josh. 10:3).
2. A town on the border of Zebulun (Josh. 19:12), identified as Yafa, a site less than 3 kilometers (2 miles) southwest of Nazareth. This was the inheritance of the children of Zebulun.
3. A son of David, born during his reign in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:14–15).

JAPHLET [JAF lit] (may he deliver)—a son of Heber, an Asherite (1 Chr. 7:32–33).

JAPHLETI [jaf LEE tie]—a form of JAPHLETITES.

JAPHLETITES [JAF lih tights]—the descendants of Japhlet (although apparently not the Japhlet mentioned in 1 Chr. 7:32–33). They lived near the southern border of Ephraim (Josh. 16:3; Japhleti, KJV).

JAPHO [JAY foe]—a form of JOPPA.

JAR—a container made of clay, used primarily for liquids but sometimes for dry goods. A jar could be used for both storage (1 Kin. 17:12; cruse, KJV) and serving (1 Kin. 19:6). Similar containers are called by several different names in the Bible. They are sometimes called “waterpots” (John 2:6), or “vessels” (Gen. 43:11).

JARAH [JAHR uh]—a form of JEHOADDAH.

JAREB [JAY rib] (he is great)—a figurative description, perhaps a nickname, of an Assyrian king who received tribute from Israel (Hos. 5:13; 10:6). The NIV and NRSV translate as “the great king.” The name may be a reference to Sargon II, who captured Samaria in 722 B.C.

JARED [JAY rid]—father of Enoch and an ancestor of Abraham and Jesus (Gen. 5:15–16; 1 Chr. 1:2; Luke 3:37).

JARESIAH [jar uh SIGH uh]—a form of JAARESHIAH.

JARHA [JAHR huh]—an Egyptian servant of a man of Judah, Sheshan (1 Chr. 2:34–35). Sheshan gave his daughter in marriage to Jarha, and she later gave birth to Attai.

JARIB [JAY rib] (may he strive)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:24), also called Jachin (Ex. 6:15).
2. A clan leader in Ezra’s time (Ezra 8:15–16).
3. A priest who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:18).

JARMUTH [JAHR muhth] (a height)—the name of two cities in the Old Testament:

1. A city in the lowlands of Judah, formerly belonging to the Amorites, whose king, Piram, was killed by Joshua (Josh. 10:3; 12:11).
2. A city in Issachar assigned to the Levites (Josh. 21:29), probably the same place as Remeth (Josh. 19:21) and Ramoth (1 Chr. 6:73).

JAROAH [juh ROE uh]—father of Huri, of the tribe of Gad (1 Chr. 5:14).

JASHAR [JAY shur]—a form of JASHER.

JASHEN [JAY shuhn]—the father of one of David’s mighty men (2 Sam. 23:32). Jashen was apparently the same person as Hashem (1 Chr. 11:34).

JASHER, BOOK OF [JAY shur]—an ancient collection of verse, now lost, which described great events in the history of Israel. The book contained Joshua’s poetic address to the sun and the moon at the battle of Gibeon (Josh. 10:12–13) and the “Song of the Bow,” which is David’s lament over the death of Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:17–27; Jashar, NIV, NRSV, REB).

- Mount Gilboa, site of the battle in which King Saul and his three sons were killed. The account of this battle was recorded in the Bible (1 Sam. 31:8) as well as the lost book of Jasher.

JASHOBEAM [juh SHOE bih uhm] (the kinsman returns)—the name of two of David’s soldiers:

1. One of David’s mighty men and a chief of his captains (1 Chr. 11:11; 27:2), also called Josheb-Basshebeth (2 Sam. 23:8).
2. A Benjamite who joined David’s army at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:6).

JASHUB [JAY shuhb] (he turns back)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Issachar and founder of a tribal family, the JASHUBITES (Num. 26:24). Jashub is also called Job (Gen. 46:13).
2. A son of Bani who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:29).

JASHUBI-LEHEM [juh SHOO bigh LEE hem]—a descendant of Judah, of the family of Shelah (1 Chr. 4:22).

JASHUBITES [JAY shuhb ights]—descendants of JASHUB No. 1 (Num. 26:24).

JASIEL [JAY sih uhl]—a form of JAASIEL.

JASON [JAY suhn]—the name of one or two early Christians who worked with the apostle Paul:

1. A Christian of Thessalonica who gave lodging to Paul and Silas in his home during their visit to his city (Acts 17:5–7, 9). A mob of “evil men from the marketplace,” incited by “the Jews who were not persuaded,” attacked the house of Jason. When they could not find Paul and Silas, they dragged Jason before the rulers of the city on charges of disturbing the peace.
2. A “kinsman” or fellow countryman of the apostle Paul who sent greetings to Rome, “my kinsmen greet you” (Rom. 16:21). He may be the same person as Jason No. 1.

JASPER (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES; MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

JATHNIEL [JATH nih uhl] (God gives)—a son of Meshelemiah and a gatekeeper of the sanctuary (1 Chr. 26:2).

JATTIR [JAT ur] (preeminence)—a Levitical city in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:48). Jattir was one of the cities to which David sent spoils of war from Ziklag (1 Sam. 30:27). The site is known today as Khirbet Attir, about 21 kilometers (13 miles) southwest of Hebron.

JAVAN [JAY vuhn]—the name of a person and a place in the Old Testament:

1. The fourth son of Japheth, son of Noah. Javan was the father of the Ionians, or Greeks (Gen. 10:2).
2. A town or trading post in southern Arabia (see Map 1, A–1) from which the Syrians obtained wrought iron, cassia (cinnamon), and calamus (cane) (Ezek. 27:13, 19).

JAVELIN (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE).

JAZER [JAY zur]—a fortified Amorite city east of the Jordan River, in or near the region of Gilead (Josh. 13:25). Israel captured Jazer from the Amorites, allotted it to the tribe of Gad, and then gave it to the Levites. Jazer was probably situated on the plain north of Heshbon. Noted for its pasturelands, Jazer and the surrounding region was a good place for livestock (Num. 32:1). It also produced luxuriant grapevines and fruit trees (Is. 16:8–9).

The Ammonites, Amorites, Israelites, and Moabites all contested the possession of Jazer and its productive lands. The KJV also spells the name as Jaazer (Num. 21:32; 32:35).

JAZIZ [JAY ziz]—overseer of King David’s flocks (1 Chr. 27:31).

JEALOUSY OFFERING—part of an adultery trial, also known as the “ordeal of jealousy.” If a man accused his wife of adultery but had no proof of her guilt, the Law provided a ritual to determine whether she was innocent or guilty (Num. 5:11–31). If she swore her innocence, the woman was forced to drink a potion made of holy water mixed with dust from the floor of the tabernacle (v. 17); and the priest burned the offering, made of barley meal, on the altar (v. 26).

If she was guilty of adultery, she would suffer; but if she was innocent, she would be spared. In this way the decision was placed in the hands of God.

JEARIM, MOUNT [JEE uh rim] (mountain of woods)—a mountain on the northern border of Judah, probably the same place as Mount Seir, about 14.5 kilometers (9 miles) north of Jerusalem.

JEATHERAI [jee ATH uh righ]—a Levite of the family of Gershon (1 Chr. 6:21; Jeaterai, KJV).

JEBERECHIAH [jeh bar uh KIGH uh] (the Lord blesses)—father of Zechariah (Is. 8:2), not to be confused with Zechariah the prophet.

JEBUS [JEE buhs]—an early name for the city of Jerusalem (Judg. 19:10–11). The citadel of Jebus, "the stronghold of Zion," was captured by the army of David, who called it "the City of David" (2 Sam. 5:7, 9).

Also see JEBUSITES.

JEBUSITES [JEBB you sites]—the name of the original inhabitants of the city of JEBUS, their name for ancient Jerusalem (Judg. 19:10–11; 1 Chr. 11:4–6). When the Israelites invaded Palestine under the leadership of Joshua, the Jebusites were ruled by Adoni-Zedek (Josh. 10:1, 3), one of five Amorite kings who resisted the Hebrew conquest. These five kings were defeated and slain by Joshua (Josh. 10:16–27). But the Jebusites were not driven out of Jebus (Jerusalem).

After David was anointed king, he led his army against the Jebusites. His military commander, Joab, apparently entered the city through an underground water shaft and led the conquest (2 Sam. 5:6–9; 1 Chr. 11:4–8). David then made this former Jebusite stronghold, now called the "City of David," the capital of his kingdom.

The site on which Solomon's temple was built in Jerusalem was previously a threshing floor that belonged to a Jebusite by the name of Araunah (2 Sam. 24:16–24), or Ornan (1 Chr. 21:24–25). David refused to accept this property as a gift from Araunah and paid him fifty shekels of silver for the land. Apparently David treated the defeated Jebusites humanely, but his son Solomon "raised forced labor" (1 Kin. 9:21) from their ranks.

JECAMIAH [jek uh MIGH uh] (may the Lord establish)—a descendant of Jeconiah, king of Judah (1 Chr. 3:18; Jekamiah, NIV, NRSV).

JECHILIAH, JECOLIAH [jek ih LIGH uh]—forms of JECHOLIAH.

JECHOLIAH [jek uh LIGH uh] (the Lord is able)—the mother of Azariah (or Uzziah), king of Judah (2 Kin. 15:2; 2 Chr. 26:3; Jechiliah, NASB; Jecoliah, NIV, REB, NRSV). She was the wife of King Amaziah of Judah, the father and predecessor of Azariah.

JECONIAH [JEK uh nigh uh]—a form of JEHOIACHIN.

JEDAIAH [juh DAY uh]—the name of seven men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Shimri (1 Chr. 4:37).
2. A priest in Jerusalem (1 Chr. 9:10; 24:7).
3. A priest whose descendants returned from the captivity (Neh. 7:39).
4. An Israelite who helped repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:10).
5. A priest who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 11:10).
6. Another priest who returned with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:7, 21).
7. One of the returned captives who brought gold and silver from Babylon to Jerusalem for the temple (Zech. 6:10, 14).

JEDIAEL [juh DIGH uhl] (known by God)—the name of three or four men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Benjamin and founder of a family (1 Chr. 7:6, 10–11).
2. One of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:45).
3. A Manassite warrior who joined David's army (1 Chr. 12:20). He may be identical with No. 2.
4. A gatekeeper of the tabernacle during David's reign (1 Chr. 26:2).

JEDIDAH [juh DIGH duh] (beloved)—the mother of King Josiah of Judah (2 Kin. 22:1–2). Jedidah was the wife of King Amon of Judah. Her son, Josiah, succeeded Amon as king.

JEDIDIAH [jed uh DIGH uh] (beloved by the Lord)—the name given to Solomon at his birth by Nathan the prophet (2 Sam. 12:25), symbolizing God's forgiveness of the wayward David.

JEDUTHUN [juh DOO thuhn]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite of the family of Merari (1 Chr. 9:16; 16:41–42), appointed a sanctuary musician in David's time. Apparently he was the same person as ETHAN (1 Chr. 6:44).
2. The father of Obed-Edom (1 Chr. 16:38).

JEEZER [juh EE zur]—a form of ABIEZER.

JEEZERITES [juh EE zur ites]—descendants of JEEZER, the son of Gilead, of the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 26:30; Iezerites, NRSV, NIV, NASB). Elsewhere Jeezer is referred to as Abiezer (Josh. 17:2; 1 Chr. 7:18), and his descendants are called Abiezrites (Judg. 6:11, 24).

JEGAR SAHADUTHA [JEE gur say uh DOO thuh] (witness heap)—a pile of stones set up by Jacob and Laban as a reminder of their agreement (Gen. 31:47). Laban gave the pile of stones an Aramaic name, while Jacob gave it the name GALEED (Hebrew for "witness heap").

JEHALELEEL [juh HAH luh leel]—a form of JAHALELEEL.

JEHALELEL [juh HAH lih lel] (may God shine forth)—a Levite who lived during the reign of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 29:12; Jehallelel, NRSV).

JEHALLELEL [juh HAH lih lel]—a form of JAHALELEEL; JEHALELEL.

JEHDEIAH [juh DEE uh] (may the Lord rejoice)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite, a son of Shubael (1 Chr. 24:20).
2. An official in charge of King David's donkeys (1 Chr. 27:30).

JEHEZEKEL [juh HEZ uh kel] (God strengthens)—a priest descended from Aaron (1 Chr. 24:16; Jehezkel, NIV, NRSV).

JEHEZKEL [juh HEZ kel]—a form of JEHEZEKEL.

JEHIAH [juh HIGH uh] (the Lord lives)—a Levite doorkeeper for the ARK OF THE COVENANT in David's time (1 Chr. 15:24).

JEHIEL [juh HIGH uhl] (God lives)—the name of ten or eleven men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite who helped David transport the ARK OF THE COVENANT to Jerusalem (1 Chr. 15:18, 20; 16:5).
2. A Levite of the family of Gershon. Jehiel supervised the treasury of the temple (1 Chr. 23:8; 29:8).
3. A companion of David's sons (1 Chr. 27:32).
4. A son of King Jehoshaphat (2 Chr. 21:2).
5. A son of Heman the singer in the time of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 29:14; Jehuel, NRSV).
6. A Levite in Hezekiah's time who presided over gifts in the temple (2 Chr. 31:13).
7. A ruler of the temple during Josiah's reformation (2 Chr. 35:8).
8. The father of Obadiah (Ezra 8:9).
9. The father of Shechaniah (Ezra 10:2).
10. A priest who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:21).
11. A man of Elam's family who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:26). He may be the same person as No. 8. Also see JEIEL.

JEHIELI [juh HIGH uh ligh] (my God lives)—a Levite and a son of Laadan the Gershonite (1 Chr. 26:21–22).

JEHIZKIAH [jee hiz KIGH uh] (the Lord strengthens)—a son of Shallum and one of the heads of the tribe of Ephraim during the reign of King Pekah of Israel (2 Chr. 28:12).

JEHOADDAH [juh HOE uh duh]—a descendant of King Saul of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:36; Jehoadah, KJV). He was also called Jarah (1 Chr. 9:42).

JEHOADDAN [juh HOE uh duhn]—the mother of Amaziah and the wife of Joash, kings of Judah (2 Kin. 14:1–2; Jehoaddin, NIV, NRSV).

JEHOAHAZ [juh HOE uh haz] (the Lord sustains)—the name of a king of Israel and two kings of Judah:

1. The son and successor of Jehu and the twelfth king of Israel (2 Kin. 10:35). His seventeen-year reign (815–798 B.C.) was a disaster for the nation of Israel. By not renouncing the idolatry of the golden calves set up by Jeroboam I at Dan and Bethel, Jehoahaz "did evil in the sight of the Lord." Hazael of Syria and his son Ben-Hadad severely punished Israel during Jehoahaz's reign. This drove Jehoahaz to the Lord, who heard his prayer and granted temporary deliverance from Syria (2 Kin. 13:2–5). Unfortunately, after the danger passed, Jehoahaz quickly abandoned his faith. After his death, Jehoahaz was succeeded by his son Joash (or Jehoash).
2. A son of King Josiah and ruler of Judah for three months (609 B.C.). At the battle of Megiddo, King Josiah was defeated and slain by the powerful Pharaoh Necho of Egypt. Jehoahaz was appointed king in his place at the age of twenty-three, but he was deposed after only three months by Pharaoh Necho (2 Kin. 23:30–34; 2 Chron. 36:1–4). Jehoahaz was also called Shallum (1 Chr. 3:15; Jer. 22:11).
3. The youngest son of Jehoram, king of Judah (2 Chr. 21:17; 25:23). The sixth king of Judah, Jehoahaz was forty-two years old at the beginning of his reign, which lasted only one year (842 or 841 B.C.). Jehoahaz is usually called Ahaziah (2 Kin. 8:24—14:13; 2 Chr. 22:1–11). Also, an inscription of the Assyrian king Tiglath-Pileser III refers to Ahaz, king of Judah, as Jehoahaz; this was evidently his full name, but the Bible always uses the abbreviated form AHAZ.

JEHOASH [juh HOE ash]—a form of JOASH.

JEHOHANAN [jee hoe HAY nuhn] (the Lord is gracious)—the name of eight men in the Old Testament:

1. A gatekeeper of the tabernacle in David's time (1 Chr. 26:3).
2. One of five captains in King Jehoshaphat's army (2 Chr. 17:15).
3. The father of Ishmael (2 Chr. 23:1).
4. A son of Eliashib (Ezra 10:6; Johanan, KJV).
5. A son of Bebai who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:28).

6. A son of Tobiah the Ammonite, Nehemiah’s opponent (Neh. 6:18; Johanan, KJV).
7. A priest who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel after the captivity (Neh. 12:13).
8. A priest who officiated at the dedication of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:42).

JEHOIACHIN [juh HOI uh kin] (the Lord establishes)—the son and successor of Jehoiakim as king of Judah, about 598 or 597 B.C. (2 Chr. 36:8–9; Ezek. 1:2). Jehoiachin did evil in the sight of the Lord, like his father. But he had little opportunity to influence affairs of state, since he reigned only three months. His brief reign ended when the armies of Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon besieged Jerusalem. When the city surrendered, Jehoiachin was exiled to Babylonia (2 Kin. 24:6–15).

Nebuchadnezzar then made Mattaniah, Jehoiachin’s uncle, king in his place and changed Mattaniah’s name to Zedekiah (v. 17). Zedekiah was destined to rule over a powerless land containing only poor farmers and laborers, while Jehoiachin was held a prisoner in Babylon.

In the thirty-seventh year of his captivity, Jehoiachin was finally released by a new Babylonian king, Evil-Merodach (Amel-Marduk). He must have been awarded a place of prominence in the king’s court, since he ate his meals regularly in the presence of the king himself (2 Kin. 25:27–30).

Jehoiachin is also called Jeconiah (1 Chr. 3:16–17) and Coniah (Jer. 22:24). In the New Testament he is listed by Matthew as an ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:11–12).

JEHOIADA [juh HOI uh duh] (the Lord knows)—the name of six men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Benaiah (2 Sam. 8:18).
2. A priest during the reigns of Ahaziah, Athaliah, and Joash of Judah (2 Kin. 11:1—12:16) who helped hide the young king Joash from the wrath of Queen Athaliah (2 Chr. 22:10–12). By his courageous action, Jehoiada was instrumental in preserving the line of David, since Joash was a descendant of David and an ancestor of Jesus. Jehoiada married Jehoshabeath, daughter of King Jehoram (2 Chr. 22:11). Even after Joash became king, Jehoiada was a powerful influence for good in his kingdom. Under his oversight, the temple of Baal was torn down and the influence of Baalism over the people was reduced. Under the prompting of the young king Joash, the temple of the Lord was restored to its former glory (2 Kings 12; 2 Chronicles 24). Jehoiada lived to be 130 years old. When he died, he was awarded the honor of burial in the royal tombs "because he had done good in Israel, both toward God and His house" (2 Chr. 24:15–16).

3. A leader of the Aaronites who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:27).
4. One of David's aides, or counselors (1 Chr. 27:34).
5. A son of Paseah (Neh. 3:6; Joiada, NIV, NRSV). After the captivity, Jehoiada helped repair a gate in Jerusalem's wall.
6. A priest in Jerusalem in the prophet Jeremiah's time (Jer. 29:26).

JEHOIAKIM [juh HOI uh kim] (the Lord raises up)—an evil king of Judah whose downfall was predicted by the prophet Jeremiah.

A son of the good king Josiah, Jehoiakim was twenty-five years old when he succeeded to the throne. He reigned eleven years in Jerusalem, from 609 B.C. to 598 B.C. During his reign Pharaoh Necho of Egypt exacted heavy tribute from the people of Judah (2 Chr. 36:3, 5). Jehoiakim was forced to levy a burdensome tax upon his people to pay this tribute.

The prophet Jeremiah described the arrogance of Jehoiakim in great detail (Jer. 1:3; 24:1; 27:1, 20; 37:1; 52:2). He censured Jehoiakim for exploiting the people to build his own splendid house with expensive furnishings (Jer. 22:13–23). Unlike his father Josiah, Jehoiakim ignored justice and righteousness. Jehoiakim had no intention of obeying the Lord; he "did evil in the sight of the Lord" (2 Kin. 23:37). His eleven-year reign was filled with abominable acts against God (2 Chr. 36:8). Because of this evil, Jeremiah predicted that no one would lament the death of Jehoiakim.

Jeremiah also told of Jehoiakim's execution of Urijah, a prophet of the Lord (Jer. 26:20–23). Perhaps Jehoiakim's most cynical act was his burning of Jeremiah's prophecies (Jer. 36:22–23). Jeremiah wrote a scroll of judgment against the king, but as this scroll was read, Jehoiakim sliced it into pieces and threw them into the fire.

Jehoiakim could burn the Word of God, but he could not destroy its power. Neither could he avoid Jeremiah's prophecy of his approaching destruction. Recognizing the power of the Babylonians, he made an agreement with Nebuchadnezzar to serve as his vassal king on the throne of Judah. After three years of subjection, he led a foolish rebellion to regain his nation's independence. The rebellion failed and Jerusalem was destroyed by the Babylonians. Jehoiakim was bound and carried away as a captive (2 Chr. 36:6).

JEHOIARIB [juh HOI uh rib] (the Lord contends)—a descendant of Aaron whose name was given to a priestly house identified with the reign of King David. When David divided the priests into twenty-four divisions for the service of the tabernacle, the family of Jehoiarib was made responsible for the first course (1 Chr. 24:7). He is also called Joiarib (Neh. 11:10).

JEHONADAB [juh HAHN uh dab] (the Lord gives)—a son of Rechab (2 Kin. 10:15, 23). He was a zealous supporter of JEHU in the ruthless extermination of the house of Ahab and the violent suppression of Baal worship in Samaria. He is also called Jonadab (Jer. 35:6–19).

JEHONATHAN [juh HAHN uh thuhn] (the Lord gives)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. An overseer of the storehouses in the days of David (1 Chr. 27:25; Jonathan, NIV, NRSV).
2. A Levite sent by Jehoshaphat to teach the law in the cities of Judah (2 Chr. 17:8).
3. Head of the family of Shemaiah in the days of the high priesthood of Joiakim (Neh. 12:18). He is also called Jonathan (Neh. 12:35).

JEHORAM [juh HOHR uhm] (the Lord is exalted)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. The fifth king of Judah, Jehoram was also called Joram. See JORAM No. 2.
2. The ninth king of Israel, Jehoram was also called Joram. See JORAM No. 3.

3. A priest sent by King Jehoshaphat to instruct the people in the law (2 Chr. 17:8).

JEHOSHABEATH [jee hoe SHAB ih ath]—a form of JEHOSHEBA.

JEHOSHAPHAT [juh HAH shuh fat] (the Lord is judge)—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. An official under David and Solomon (2 Sam. 8:16).
2. A son of Paruah and an official responsible for supplying food for King Solomon's table (1 Kin. 4:17).
3. A son of Asa who succeeded his father as king of Judah (1 Kin. 15:24). Jehoshaphat was thirty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned twenty-five years in Jerusalem (2 Chr. 20:31), from about 873 B.C. to about 848 B.C.

   Jehoshaphat received an excellent heritage from his father Asa, who in the earlier years of his reign showed a reforming spirit in seeking God (2 Chr. 15:1–19). Jehoshaphat's faith in God led him to "delight in the ways of the LORD" (2 Chr. 17:6). He attacked pagan idolatry and he sent teachers to the people to teach them more about God (2 Chr. 17:6–9). In affairs of state, Jehoshaphat also showed a willingness to rely on the Lord. In a time of danger he prayed for God's help (2 Chr. 20:6–12).

   Jehoshaphat showed a high regard for justice in his dealings (2 Chr. 19:4–11). He reminded the judges whom he appointed that their ultimate loyalty was to God. His attitude toward impartial justice is reflected in these words: "Behave courageously, and the LORD will be with the good" (2 Chr. 19:11).

   But in his dealings with Ahab, king of Israel, Jehoshaphat made some serious mistakes. Through the marriage of his son, Jehoram, to Ahab's daughter, Jehoshaphat allied himself with Ahab (2 Chr. 21:5–6). This alliance led to even further dealings with the wicked king of Israel (2 Chr. 18:1–34), which the prophet Jehu rebuked (2 Chr. 19:1–3).

   Jehoshaphat and his father Asa are bright lights against the dark paganism that existed during their time. Both father and son had certain weaknesses, but their faith in the Lord brought good to themselves as well as God's people during their reigns.

4. A son of Nimshi and father of Jehu, king of Israel (2 Kin. 9:2, 14).
5. A priest who helped move the ARK OF THE COVENANT from the house of Obed-Edom to Jerusalem (1 Chr. 15:24; Joshaphat, NIV, NRSV).

JEHOSHAPHAT, VALLEY OF [juh HAH shuh fat]—a valley in which, according to Joel 3:2, 12, God will judge the nations at the end of this age. According to Jewish tradition, the Valley of Jehoshaphat was that part of the Kidron Valley between the temple and the Mount of Olives. The name Jehoshaphat means "the Lord is judge." The name may refer to a symbolic "valley of decision" (Joel 3:14) that is connected with divine judgments instead of a literal geographical place.

JEHOSHEBA, JEHOSHABEATH [juh HAH shuh buh, jee hoe SHAB ih ath] (the Lord is her oath)—the courageous woman who rescued her nephew Joash from certain death at the hands of Athaliah, the wicked queen of Judah (2 Kin. 11:1–3; 2 Chr. 22:10–12). Jehosheba was the half-sister of King Ahaziah. When Ahaziah was killed in battle, his mother, Athaliah, attempted to kill all her grandsons and took the throne for herself. But Jehosheba rescued the youngest of Ahaziah's sons (2 Kin. 11:2) and hid him in the temple for six years—until he was old enough to be proclaimed king.

Jehosheba's courageous act preserved "the house and lineage of David" (Luke 2:4), from which Jesus was descended.

JEHOSHUA [juh HAH shoo uh]—a form of JOSHUA.

JEHOVAH [jih HOE vuh] (see GOD, NAMES OF).

JEHOZABAD [juh HOE zuh bad] (the Lord bestows)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A servant of Joash who conspired against his master and assisted in his assassination (2 Kin. 12:21).
2. A son of Obed-Edom (1 Chr. 26:4).
3. A Benjamite chief who was one of Jehoshaphat's military officers (2 Chr. 17:18).

JEHU [JEE hyoo] (the Lord is He)—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. A prophet who announced a message of doom against Baasha, king of Israel (1 Kin. 16:12). Jehu also rebuked Jehoshaphat, king of Judah (2 Chr. 19:2).
2. The eleventh king of Israel (2 Chr. 22:7–9). Jehu was anointed by Elisha the prophet as king; he later overthrew Joram (Jehoram), King Ahab's son and successor, and reigned for twenty-eight years (841–813 B.C.). His corrupt leadership weakened the nation. He is known for his violence against all members of the "house of Ahab" as he established his rule throughout the nation.

   At Jehu's command, Jezebel, the notorious wife of Ahab, was thrown out of the window of the palace to her death, as prophesied by Elijah (1 Kin. 21:23). Ahab's murder of Naboth and the subversion of the religion of Israel had brought terrible vengeance, but more blood was to be shed by Jehu. Next to feel the new king's wrath were the seventy sons of Ahab who lived in Samaria (2 Kings 10). Jehu ordered them killed by the elders of Samaria. Jehu's zeal extended even further, commanding the death of Ahab's advisors and close acquaintances. This excessive violence led the prophet Hosea to denounce Jehu's bloodthirstiness (Hos. 1:4).

   Jehu continued his slaughter against the family of Ahaziah, king of Judah (2 Kin. 10:12–14). Then he made an alliance with Jehonadab, the chief of the Rechabites, to destroy the followers of Baal. Jehu and Jehonadab plotted to conduct a massive assembly in honor of Baal. After assuring the Baal worshipers of their sincerity and gathering them into the temple of Baal, Jehu had them all killed (2 Kin. 10:18–28). So complete was this destruction that Baalism was wiped out in Israel, and the temple of Baal was torn down and made into a garbage dump.

   Although Jehu proclaimed his zeal for the Lord (2 Kin. 10:16), he failed to follow the Lord's will completely (2 Kin. 10:31). He did not completely eliminate worship of the golden calves at Dan and Bethel, and his disobedience led to the conquest of many parts of Israel by the Syrians (2 Kin. 10:32–33).
3. A son of Obed and a descendant of Hezron (1 Chr. 2:38). Jehu was descended from the family of Jerahmeel and the tribe of Judah.
4. A son of Joshibiah, of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:35).

5. A Benjamite of Anathoth (1 Chr. 12:3) who joined David’s army at Ziklag.

JEHUBBAH [juh HUH buh] (he is hidden)—a son of Shemer, of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:34).

JEHUCAL [juh HOO kuhl]—a messenger sent to the prophet Jeremiah to ask for his prayers when the Babylonians besieged Jerusalem (Jer. 37:3), also called Jucal (Jer. 38:1).

JEHUD [JEE huhd]—a town on the border of Dan (Josh. 19:45).

JEHUDI [juh HOO digh] (Judahite)—an officer of Jehoiakim, king of Judah (Jer. 36:14, 21, 23). Jehudi read Jeremiah’s prophecies to the king, who destroyed the scroll.

JEHUDIJAH [jee huh DIGH juh] (the woman from Judah)—one of the two wives of Mered and the mother of Jered, Heber, and Jekuthiel (1 Chr. 4:18; his Judean wife, NIV).

JEHUEL [juh HOO uhl]—a form of JEHIEL No. 5.

JEHUSH [JEE huhsh]—a form of JEUSH No. 3.

JEIEL [jih EYE uhl]—the name of nine or ten men in the Old Testament:

1. A chief of the tribe of Reuben (1 Chr. 5:7).
2. An ancestor of King Saul (1 Chr. 9:35; Jehiel, KJV, REB).
3. One of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:44; Jehiel, KJV). He may be the same person as No. 1.
4. A Levite gatekeeper of the tabernacle during David's reign (1 Chr. 15:18, 21; Jehiel, KJV, NRSV, REB).
5. A Levite of the sons of Asaph (2 Chr. 20:14).
6. A scribe who helped prepare the roll of military personnel for King Uzziah (2 Chr. 26:11).
7. A Levite of the family of Elizaphan in the time of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 29:13; Jeuel, NRSV).
8. A chief Levite at King Josiah's great Passover feast (2 Chr. 35:9).
9. A son of Adonikam who returned with Ezra from the captivity (Ezra 8:13; Jeuel, NRSV).
10. A member of the family of Nebo who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:43).

JEKAMEAM [jek uh MEE uhm]—the fourth son of Hebron and the head of a priestly house (1 Chr. 23:19; 24:23).

JEKAMIAH [jek uh MIGH uh] (may the Lord establish)—a son of Shallum, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:41). See also JECAMIAH.

JEKUTHIEL [juh KOO thih uhl]—a descendant of Caleb the spy and the father of Zanoah (1 Chr. 4:18).

JEMIMAH [juh MIGH muh]—the first of Job's three daughters born after his great trial of suffering was over and his prosperity was restored (Job 42:14; Jemima, KJV).

JEMUEL [JEM yoo uhl]—the oldest son of Simeon and a grandson of Jacob (Ex. 6:15), also called Nemuel (Num. 26:12).

JEPHTHAH [JEF thuh]—the ninth judge of Israel, who delivered God's people from the Ammonites (Judg. 11:1—12:7).

An illegitimate child, Jephthah was cast out of the family by his half-brothers, to prevent him from sharing in the inheritance. He fled to “the land of Tob,” where he gathered a group of “worthless men” and soon engaged in raids throughout the surrounding countryside. When Israel was threatened by the Ammonites, the elders of Gilead asked Jephthah to free them from oppression by organizing a counterattack on Ammon. Jephthah showed shrewd foresight by insisting on a position of leadership in Gilead if he should succeed against the Ammonites. After this assurance (Judg. 11:10–11), he began his campaign.

Jephthah first tried the diplomatic approach, but Ammon wanted war. So Jephthah launched an attack through Mizpah of Gilead (Judg. 11:29) and defeated the Ammonites “with a very great slaughter” (Judg. 11:33). At this point, Jephthah made a rash vow, promising God that in exchange for victory in battle he would offer up as a sacrifice the first thing that should come out of his house to meet him on his return (Judg. 11:31).

The Lord delivered Ammon’s army into Jephthah’s hands. When he returned home, his daughter—his only child—came out to meet him (Judg. 11:34). Jephthah tore his clothing in distress as he realized the terrible rashness of his vow. The text seems to indicate that Jephthah followed through on his vow (Judg. 11:39), although a few scholars believe the verse means she was kept as a virgin dedicated to special service to the Lord for the rest of her life.

After this incident, Jephthah punished an arrogant group of Ephraimites at the Jordan River by using a clever strategy to confuse the enemy. He asked the soldiers to say “shibboleth.” If they were Ephraimites, they would not be able to pronounce the word correctly and would say “sibboleth.” Their accent would betray them as the enemy.

Jephthah was a man with remarkable abilities of leadership. In spite of rejection by his family, he exercised his many talents and rose to a position of great authority. His greatest weakness was his rash, thoughtless behavior. After his death, he was buried in a city of Gilead. The Book of Hebrews lists him as one of the heroes of faith (Heb. 11:32).

JEPHUNNEH [juh FUH nuh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of CALEB the spy (Num. 13:6).
2. A son of Jether, of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:38).

JERAH [JIHR uh] (moon)—the fourth son of Joktan, of the family of Shem (1 Chr. 1:20).

JERAHMEEL [jih RAH mih uhl] (God is compassionate)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Hezron of the tribe of Judah. Jerahmeel had many descendants called Jerahmeelites (1 Chr. 2:9, 25–27, 33, 42).
2. A son of Kish, of the tribe of Levi (1 Chr. 24:29).
3. An official of King Jehoiakim of Judah (Jer. 36:26) sent to arrest Baruch the scribe and Jeremiah the prophet. Jerahmeel is called "the king's son" (Jer. 36:26). A clay impression of his official seal was recently found in a burnt archive in the Jerusalem area.

JERAHMEELITES [jih RAH mih uhl ights]—descendants of JERAHMEEL (1 Sam. 27:10; 30:29).

JERBOA (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

JERED [JEE red]—a man of the tribe of Judah and the father of Gedor (1 Chr. 4:18).

JEREMAI [JER uh migh] (the Lord hurls)—a son of Hashum who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:33).

JEREMIAH [jer uh MIGH uh] (the Lord hurls)—the name of nine men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Hamutal (Jer. 52:1).
2. The head of a family of the tribe of Manasseh (1 Chr. 5:23–24).
3. A Benjamite who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:4).
4. A Gadite who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:10).
5. Another Gadite who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:13).

6. A priest who sealed Nehemiah’s covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:2).
7. A priest who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:1, 12, 34).
8. A son of Habazziniah and father of Jaazaniah, of the house of the Rechabites (Jer. 35:3).
9. The major prophet during the decline and fall of the southern kingdom of Judah and author of the Book of Jeremiah. He prophesied during the reigns of the last five kings of Judah.

Jeremiah was born in Anathoth, situated north of Jerusalem in the territory of Benjamin (Jer. 1:1–2). He was called to the prophetic ministry in the thirteenth year of Josiah’s reign, about 627 B.C. He must have been a young man at the time, since his ministry lasted for about forty years—through the very last days of the nation of Judah when the capital city of Jerusalem was destroyed in 586 B.C.

Jeremiah’s call is one of the most instructive passages in his book. God declared that he had sanctioned him as a prophet even before he was born (Jer. 1:5). But the young man responded with words of inadequacy: “Ah, Lord GOD!” (Jer. 1:6). These words actually mean “No, Lord GOD!” Jeremiah pleaded that he was a youth and that he lacked the ability to speak. But God replied that he was being called not because of age or ability but because God had chosen him.

Immediately Jeremiah saw the hand of God reaching out and touching his mouth. “Behold, I have put My words in your mouth,” God declared (Jer. 1:9). From that moment, the words of the prophet were to be the words of God. And his ministry was to consist of tearing down and rebuilding, uprooting and replanting: “See, I have this day set you over the kingdoms, to root out and to pull down, to destroy and to throw down, to build and to plant” (Jer. 1:10).

Because of the negative nature of Jeremiah’s ministry, judgmental texts abound in his book. Jeremiah was destined from the very beginning to be a prophet of doom. He was even forbidden to marry so he could devote himself fully to the task of preaching God’s judgment (Jer. 16:1–13). A prophet of doom cannot be a happy man. All of Jeremiah’s life was wrapped up in the knowledge that God was about to bring an end to the holy city and cast off His Covenant People.

Jeremiah is often called "the weeping prophet" because he wept openly about the sins of his nation (Jer. 9:1). He was also depressed at times about the futility of his message. As the years passed and his words of judgment went unheeded, he lamented his unfortunate state: "O LORD, You induced me, and I was persuaded; You are stronger than I, and have prevailed. I am in derision daily; everyone mocks me" (Jer. 20:7).

At times Jeremiah tried to hold back from his prophetic proclamation. But he found that the word of the Lord was "like a burning fire shut up in my bones" (Jer. 20:9). He had no choice but to proclaim the harsh message of God's judgment.

Jeremiah did not weep and lament because of weakness, nor did he proclaim evil because of a dark and gloomy personality. He cried out because of his love for his people and his God. This characteristic of the prophet is actually a tribute to his sensitivity and deep concern. Jeremiah's laments remind us of the weeping of the Savior (Matt. 23:37–39).

As Jeremiah predicted, the nation of Judah was eventually punished by God because of its sin and disobedience. In 586 B.C. Jerusalem was destroyed and the leading citizens were deported to Babylonia. Jeremiah remained in Jerusalem with a group of his fellow citizens under the authority of a ruling governor appointed by the Babylonians. But he was forced to seek safety in Egypt after the people of Jerusalem revolted against Babylonian rule. He continued his preaching in Egypt (Jeremiah 43–44). This is the last we hear of Jeremiah. There is no record of what happened to the prophet during these years of his ministry.

In the New Testament (KJV) Jeremiah was referred to as Jeremy (Matt. 2:17; 27:9) and Jeremias (Matt. 16:14). Also see JEREMIAH, BOOK OF.

JEREMIAH, BOOK OF—a major prophetic book of the Old Testament directed to the southern kingdom of Judah just before that nation fell to the Babylonians. The book is named for its author and central personality, the great prophet Jeremiah, who faithfully delivered God's message of judgment in spite of fierce opposition from his countrymen.

Structure of the Book. Jeremiah, consisting of fifty-two chapters, is one of the longest books in the Bible. It is also one of the hardest to follow and understand. Most of the other prophetic books have a chronological arrangement, but not the Book of Jeremiah. Prophecies delivered in the final years of his ministry may appear at any point in the book, followed by messages that belong to other periods in his life.

Mingled with his prophecies of God's approaching judgment are historical accounts of selected events in the life of Judah, personal experiences from Jeremiah's own life, and poetic laments about the fate of his country. It is important to be aware of this if one wants to understand the message of this great prophetic book.

Basically, the first half of the book (chaps. 1–25) contains Jeremiah's prophecies of God's approaching judgment against Judah because of its sin and idolatry. The second half (chaps. 26–52) contains a few of his prophecies, but the main emphasis is on Jeremiah and his conflicts with the kings who ruled in Judah during his ministry. Also included near the end of his book is a report on the fall of Jerusalem and Judah's final days as a nation (chaps. 39–41; 52), along with a narrative about Jeremiah's flight into Egypt with other citizens of Judah following its fall (chaps. 42–44).

Authorship and Date. Most conservative scholars agree that the author of the Book of Jeremiah was the famous prophet of that name who ministered in the southern kingdom of Judah during the final four decades of that nation's existence. But some scholars claim the book's disjointed arrangement proves it was compiled by an unknown author some time after Jeremiah's death. The book itself gives us a clue about how it may have taken its present form.

After prophesying against Judah for about twenty years, the prophet Jeremiah was commanded by God to put his messages in written form. He dictated these to his scribe or secretary, Baruch, who wrote them on a scroll (36:1–4). Because Jeremiah had been banned from entering the royal court, he sent Baruch to read the messages to King Jehoiakim. To show his contempt for Jeremiah and his message, the king cut the scroll apart and threw it in the fire (36:22–23). Jeremiah promptly dictated his book to Baruch again, adding "many similar words" (36:32) that had not been included in the first scroll.

This clear description of how a second version of Jeremiah came to be written shows the book was composed in two or more different stages during the prophet's ministry. The scribe Baruch was probably the one who added to the book at Jeremiah's command as it was shaped and refined over a period of several years. This is a possible explanation for the disjointed arrangement of the book. Baruch must have put the book in final form shortly after Jeremiah’s death, presumably in Egypt.

We can learn a great deal about the prophet Jeremiah by reading his book. He was a sensitive poet who could weep over the sins of his nation: “Oh, that my head were waters, and my eyes a fountain of tears” (9:1). But he was also a courageous man of God who could endure persecution and affliction. He narrowly escaped death several times as he carried out God’s command to preach His message of judgment to a wayward people. A patriot who passionately loved his nation, he drew the tough assignment of informing his countrymen that Judah was about to fall to a pagan power. Many of his fellow citizens branded him a traitor, but he never wavered from the prophetic ministry to which God had called him.

With the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., most of the leading citizens of the nation were carried away as captives to Babylon. But Jeremiah was allowed to remain in Judah with other citizens who were placed under the authority of a ruling governor appointed by Babylon. When the citizens of Jerusalem revolted against this official, Jeremiah and others were forced to seek safety in Egypt, where he continued his prophetic ministry (chaps. 43–44). This is the last we hear of this courageous prophet of the Lord.

Historical Setting. The Book of Jeremiah belongs to a chaotic time in the history of God’s Covenant People. Jeremiah’s native land, the southern kingdom of Judah, was caught in a power squeeze between three great powers of the ancient world: Egypt, Assyria, and Babylonia. As these empires struggled for dominance with one another, the noose grew tighter around Judah’s neck.

To protect its borders, Judah entered into an alliance with Egypt against the Babylonians. But Jeremiah realized the alliance was too little and too late. For years his beloved nation had risked disaster as it rejected worship of the one true God and turned to pagan gods instead. Immorality, injustice, graft, and corruption prevailed throughout the land. God revealed to the prophet that he intended to punish His Covenant People by sending the Babylonians to destroy Jerusalem and carry the people into captivity. Jeremiah preached this message of judgment faithfully for about forty years.

At the beginning of his prophetic ministry, it appeared briefly that conditions might improve. King Josiah (ruled 641/40–609 B.C.) began reforms based on God's Law, but at his death the dark days of paganism returned. Josiah's successors continued their reckless pursuit of idolatry and foolish alliances with Egypt against the Babylonians. At the decisive battle of Carchemish in 605 B.C., the Egyptians were soundly defeated. About eighteen years later the Babylonians completed their conquest of Judah by destroying the capital city of Jerusalem. Just as Jeremiah had predicted, the leading citizens of Judah were carried to Babylonia, where they remained in captivity for half a century.

Theological Contribution. Jeremiah's greatest theological contribution was his concept of the new COVENANT (31:31–34). A new covenant between God and His people was necessary because the people had broken the old covenant; the captivity of God's people by a foreign power was proof of that. Although the old covenant had been renewed again and again throughout Israel's history, the people still continued to break the promises they had made to God. What was needed was a new type of covenant between God and His people—a covenant of grace and forgiveness written on the human heart, rather than a covenant of law engraved in stone.

As Jeremiah reported God's plan for this new covenant, he anticipated the dawning of the era of grace in the person of Jesus Christ more than 500 years in the future: "No more shall every man teach his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, 'Know the LORD,' for they all shall know Me, from the least of them to the greatest of them," says the LORD. "For I will forgive their iniquity, and their sin I will remember no more" (31:34). So important is Jeremiah 31:31–34 in biblical theology that it is the longest continuous Old Testament passage to be quoted in full in the New Testament (Heb. 8:8–12).

Special Considerations. Jeremiah was a master at using figures of speech, metaphors, and symbolic behavior to drive home his messages. He carried a yoke around his neck to show the citizens of Judah they should submit to the inevitable rule of the pagan Babylonians (27:1–12). He watched a potter mar a piece of clay, then reshape it into a perfect vessel. He applied this lesson to the nation of Judah, which needed to submit to the divine will of the Master Potter while there was still time to repent and avoid God's judgment (18:1–11).

But perhaps his most unusual symbolic act was his purchase of a plot of land in his hometown, Anathoth, about three miles northeast of Jerusalem. Jeremiah knew this land would be practically worthless after the Babylonians overran Jerusalem, as he was predicting. But by buying the plot, he symbolized his hope for the future. Even in Judah's darkest hour, Jeremiah prophesied that a remnant would return from Babylonia after their captivity to restore their way of life and to worship God again in the temple (32:26–44). God directed Jeremiah to put the deed to the land in a clay vessel so it would be preserved for the future: "For thus says the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: 'Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land' " (32:15). JEREMIAS, JEREMY [jer uh MIGH ass, JER uh mee]—forms of JEREMIAH.

JEREMOTH [JER e moth]—the name of eight men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Becher, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 7:8, NIV, NRSV, and REB).
2. A son of Beriah, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:14). Jeremoth is probably the same person as Jeroham No. 2.
3. A Levite of the family of Merari and house of Mushi (1 Chr. 23:23), also called Jerimoth (1 Chr. 24:30).
4. A descendant of Heman. Jeremoth was the head of the fifteenth division of musicians during David’s reign (1 Chr. 25:22). He is also called Jerimoth (1 Chr. 25:4).
5. A son of Azriel and chief officer of the tribe of Naphtali during David’s reign (1 Chr. 27:19, NRSV; Jerimoth, KJV, NKJV, and NIV).

6, 7, 8. Three Jews who, after the captivity, divorced their pagan wives (Ezra 10:26, 27, 29). The name is spelled Ramoth in Ezra 10:29 (KJV and NKJV) instead of Jeremoth (NIV, NRSV, and REB).

JERIAH [juh RIGH uh]—a Levite in the time of David (1 Chr. 23:19), also Jerijah (1 Chr. 26:31).

JERIBAI [JER uh bigh] (the Lord contends)—one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:46).

JERICHO [JEHR ih coe]—one of the oldest inhabited cities in the world. Situated in the wide plain of the Jordan Valley (Deut. 34:1, 3) at the foot of the ascent to the Judean mountains, Jericho lies about 13 kilometers (8 miles) northwest of the site where the Jordan River flows into the Dead Sea, some 8 kilometers (5 miles) west of the Jordan.

Since it is approximately 244 meters (800 feet) below sea level, Jericho has a climate that is tropical and at times is very hot. Only a few inches of rainfall are recorded at Jericho each year; but the city is a wonderful oasis, known as "the city of palm trees" (Deut. 34:3) or "the city of palms" (Judg. 3:13). Jericho flourishes with date palms, banana trees, balsams, sycamores, and henna (Song 1:14; Luke 19:4).

There have been three different Jerichos throughout its long history. Old Testament Jericho is identified with the mound of Tell esSultan, about 2 kilometers (a little more than a mile) from the village of er-Riha. This village is modern Jericho, located about 27 kilometers (17 miles) northeast of Jerusalem. New Testament Jericho is identified with the mounds of Tulul Abu el-'Alayiq, about 2 kilometers west of modern Jericho and south of Old Testament Jericho.

By far the most imposing site of the three is Old Testament Jericho, a pear-shaped mound about 366 meters (400 yards) long, north to south, 183 meters (200 yards) wide at the north end, and some 67 meters (70 yards) high. It has been the site of numerous archaeological diggings and is a favorite stop for Holy Land tourists.

Old Testament Jericho. Jericho first appears in the biblical record when the Israelites encamped at Shittim on the east side of the Jordan River (Num. 22:1; 26:3). Joshua sent spies to examine the city (Josh. 2:1–24) and later took the city by perhaps the most unorthodox method in the history of warfare (Joshua 6). Joshua placed a curse on anyone who would attempt to rebuild Jericho (Josh. 6:26).

As the Israelites settled into the land, Jericho was awarded to the tribe of Benjamin, although it was on the border between Ephraim and Benjamin (Josh. 16:1, 7). Jericho is only incidentally mentioned in the reign of David (2 Sam. 10:5) and does not figure prominently again in Old Testament history until the reign of King Ahab (about 850 B.C.; 1 Kin. 16:34), when Hiel the Bethelite attempted to fortify the city and Joshua's curse was realized. During the days of Elijah and Elisha, Jericho was a community of the prophets (2 Kin. 2:5) and was mentioned on other occasions as well (Ezra 2:34; Neh. 3:2; Jer. 39:5).

New Testament Jericho. In the early years of Herod the Great, the Romans plundered Jericho. But Herod later beautified the city and ultimately died there. Jesus passed through Jericho on numerous occasions. Near there He was baptized in the Jordan River (Matt. 3:13–17), and on the adjacent mountain range He was tempted (Matt. 4:1–11). At Jericho Jesus healed blind Bartimaeus (Mark 10:46–52). Here too Zacchaeus was converted (Luke 19:1–10). And Jesus' parable of the Good Samaritan has the road from Jerusalem to Jericho as its setting (Luke 10:30–37).

Excavations at Jericho. From 1907 until 1911, the German scholars Ernst Sellin and Carl Watzinger excavated this site. But it was the British archaeologist John Garstang whose excavations from 1930 to 1936 yielded significant information. Garstang believed he found evidence of Joshua's destruction of the city. He discovered an inner wall about 3.66 meters (12 feet) thick and an outer wall about 1.83 meters (6 feet) thick. Garstang was convinced that he had found the fabled walls of Jericho.

However, archaeologist Kathleen Kenyon began seven seasons of excavation at Jericho in 1952 and found evidence that conflicted with that of Garstang. Kenyon's findings indicated that little of the city in Joshua's day remained and thus the archaeologist must turn to Hazor and other cities captured during Joshua's campaigns for information about this period. The most spectacular finds made by Kenyon were the Stone Age defenses, including a tower dating to about 7000 B.C.

JERIEL [JER ih uhl] (God sees)—a man of the tribe of Issachar (1 Chr. 7:2).

JERIJAH [juh RIGH juh]—a form of JERIAH.

JERIMOTH [JER ih mahth]—the name of eight men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Bela (1 Chr. 7:7).
2. A son of Becher (1 Chr. 7:8; Jeremoth, NIV, NRSV).
3. A Benjamite who became one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 12:5).
4. A Levite of the family of Merari (1 Chr. 24:30), also called Jeremoth (1 Chr. 23:23).
5. A descendant of Heman (1 Chr. 25:4), also called Jeremoth (1 Chr. 25:22).
6. A ruler of the tribe of Naphtali in the days of David (1 Chr. 27:19; Jeremoth, NRSV).
7. A son of David (2 Chr. 11:18).

8. A Levite overseer in the temple during the reign of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 31:13).

JERIOTH [JER ih ahth] (tent curtains)—the second wife, or perhaps a concubine, of Caleb, son of Hezron (1 Chr. 2:18).

JEROBOAM [jehr uh BOE ahm] (let the kinsman plead)—the name of two kings of the northern kingdom of Israel:

1. Jeroboam I, the first king of Israel (the ten northern tribes, or the Northern Kingdom), a state established after the death of Solomon (1 Kin. 11:26—14:20). The son of Nebat and Zeruah, Jeroboam reigned over Israel for twenty-two years (1 Kin. 14:20), from 931/30 to 910/09 B.C.

   Jeroboam I first appears in the biblical record as Solomon's servant: "the officer over all the labor force of the house of Joseph" (1 Kin. 11:28). One day as Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite met him on the road and confronted him with an enacted parable. Ahijah, who was wearing a new garment, took hold of the garment and tore it into twelve pieces. He then said to Jeroboam, "Take for yourself ten pieces, for thus says the Lord, the God of Israel: 'Behold, I will tear the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon and will give ten tribes to you' " (1 Kin. 11:31).

   When Solomon learned of Ahijah's words, he sought to kill Jeroboam. But Jeroboam fled to Egypt, where he was granted political asylum by Shishak I, the king of Egypt. Only after the death of Solomon did Jeroboam risk returning to his native Palestine (1 Kin. 11:40; 12:2–3).

   Solomon's kingdom was outwardly rich, prosperous, and thriving. But the great building projects he undertook were accomplished by forced labor, high taxes, and other oppressive measures. Discontent and unrest existed throughout Solomon's kingdom. When the great king died, the kingdom was like a powder keg awaiting a spark.

   The occasion for the explosion, the tearing of the ten northern tribes from Solomon's successor, came because of the foolish insensitivity of Solomon's son Rehoboam. Rehoboam had gone to Shechem to be anointed as the new king. A delegation led by Jeroboam, who had returned from Egypt following Solomon's death, said to Rehoboam, "Your father made our yoke heavy; now therefore, lighten the burdensome service of your father, and his heavy yoke which he put on us, and we will serve" (1 Kin. 12:4).

But Rehoboam followed the advice of his inexperienced companions and replied, "Whereas my father laid a heavy yoke on you, I will add to your yoke; my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scourges!" (1 Kin. 12:11). After this show of Rehoboam's foolishness, the ten northern tribes revolted against Rehoboam and appointed Jeroboam as their king (1 Kin. 12:16–20).

Jeroboam was concerned that the people of Israel might return to the house of David if they continued to journey to Jerusalem for the festivals and observances at the temple of Solomon. So he proposed an alternative form of worship that was idolatrous. He made two calves of gold that bore a close resemblance to the mounts of the Canaanite pagan god BAAL. The king told his countrymen: "It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem. Here are your gods, O Israel, which brought you up from the land of Egypt!" (1 Kin. 12:28). One calf was erected in Bethel and one in Dan.

Once committed to this sinful direction, Jeroboam's progress was downhill. He next appointed priests from tribes other than Levi. He offered sacrifices to these images and gradually polluted the worship of Israel. The Lord confronted Jeroboam by sending him an unnamed prophet who predicted God's judgment on the king and the nation.

Although outwardly he appeared to be repentant, Jeroboam would not change his disastrous idolatry. His rebellious, arrogant attitude set the pattern for rulers of Israel for generations to come. Eighteen kings sat on the throne of Israel after his death, but not one of them gave up his pagan worship.

2. Jeroboam II, the fourteenth king of Israel, who reigned for forty-one years (793–753 B.C.). Jeroboam was the son and successor of Joash (or Jehoash); he was the grandson of Jehoahaz and the great-grandson of Jehu (2 Kin. 13:1, 13; 1 Chr. 5:17). The Bible declares that Jeroboam "did evil in the sight of the LORD" (2 Kin. 14:24).

Jeroboam was successful in his military adventures. His aggressive campaigns “recaptured for Israel, from Damascus and Hamath, what had belonged to Judah” (2 Kin. 14:28). The boundaries of Israel expanded to their greatest extent since the days of David and Solomon: “He restored the territory of Israel from the entrance of Hamath to the Sea of the Arabah” (2 Kin. 14:25).

Jeroboam II was king during the prosperous interval between the economic reverses of other rulers. Hosea, Amos, and Jonah lived during his reign (Hos. 1:1; Amos 1:1–2; 2 Kin. 14:25). During this time of superficial prosperity, the prophet Amos especially spoke out against the many social abuses in Israel. A severe oppression of the poor had been instituted by the newly prosperous class. Justice was in the hands of lawless judges; dishonest merchants falsified the balances by deceit; and worship was little more than a pious smokescreen that covered the terrible abuses of the poor. Amos prophesied that the destructive fury of God would fall upon the house of Jeroboam (Amos 7:9).

After Jeroboam’s death, his son Zechariah succeeded him on the throne of Israel (2 Kin. 14:29). Zechariah reigned in Samaria only six months before he was assassinated by Shallum (2 Kin. 15:10).

JEROHAM [juh ROE ham]—the name of several men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite, the grandfather of the prophet Samuel (1 Sam. 1:1).
2. The head of a Benjamite family (1 Chr. 8:27). Jeroham may be the same person as Jeremoth No. 2.
3. A Benjamite (1 Chr. 9:8). He may be the same person as No. 2.
4. A priest of Jerusalem (1 Chr. 9:12).
5. A Benjamite of Gedor (1 Chr. 12:7).
6. The father of Azarel (1 Chr. 27:22).
7. The father of Azariah (2 Chr. 23:1).
8. The father of Adaiah the priest (Neh. 11:12). He may be the same person as No. 4.

JERUBBAAL [jer uh BAY uhl] (let Baal plead)—a name given to GIDEON, one of the judges of Israel, by his father after Gideon destroyed the altar of Baal at Ophrah (Judg. 6:32).

JERUBBESHETH [juh RUHB uh sheth] (let "shame" plead)—a name given to JERUBBAAL (or GIDEON) by those who wanted to avoid pronouncing the name of Baal, who was associated with the shameful idol worship of the Canaanites (2 Sam. 11:21).

JERUEL [juh ROO uhl]—a wilderness area between En Gedi and Tekoa (2 Chr. 20:16). A Levite named Jahaziel prophesied that Jehoshaphat would meet the armies of the Moabites and Ammonites and defeat them at Jeruel.

JERUSALEM [jeh ROO sah lem] (city of peace)—sacred city and well-known capital of Palestine during Bible times. The earliest known name for Jerusalem was Urushalem. Salem, of which Melchizedek was king (Gen. 14:18), was a natural abbreviation for Jerusalem. Thus, Jerusalem appears in the Bible as early as the time of Abraham, although the city had probably been inhabited for centuries before that time.

The city of Jerusalem is mentioned directly in the Bible for the first time during the struggle of Joshua and the Israelites to take the land of Canaan (Josh. 10:1–4). Their efforts to take the city were unsuccessful, although the areas surrounding it were taken and the land was given to the tribe of Judah. Still remaining in the fortress of the city itself were the Jebusites. Thus, the city was called Jebus.

Jerusalem Under David. After the death of Saul, the first king of the United Kingdom of the Hebrew people, David was named the new king of Israel. One of his first efforts was to unite the tribes of the north and south by capturing Jerusalem from the Jebusites, making the city the political and religious capital of the Kingdom (1 Chr. 11:4–9). Because it was captured during his reign, Jerusalem also came to be known as the "City of David." The city is often referred to by this title in the Bible.

David built a palace in the section of Jerusalem that served previously as the Jebusite stronghold. This section, situated in the highest part of the city, frequently is referred to as Mount Zion. The location was probably selected because it was easily defended from invaders.

Jerusalem has little to recommend it as a capital city, when compared to other major cities of the ancient world. It was an inland city not situated near a seaport. Moreover, it was not near the major trade routes used during that time. Why, then, did David select Jerusalem as the capital of his nation? The reasons are twofold.

First, Jerusalem was centrally located between the northern and southern tribes. Thus, it was geographically convenient for the nation. The central location of the capital city tended to unite the people into one kingdom.

Second, the topography of the city made it easy to defend. Jerusalem was situated on a hill. The eastern and western sides of the city consisted of valleys that made invasion by opposing forces difficult. The southern portion consisted of ravines that made an attack from this position unwise. The best point from which to attack Jerusalem was the north, which had the highest elevation of any portion of the city. It was from this position that attacks on the city were made in the centuries following the establishment of Jerusalem as the capital.

David also made Jerusalem the religious capital of the nation. He moved the ARK OF THE COVENANT, which had been kept at Kirjath-jearim (Josh. 15:9) to Jerusalem. One of his desires was to build a temple in the capital city, but he was prevented from completing this task. The prophet Nathan instructed him that God did not want him to build the temple because his hands had been involved in so much bloodshed (1 Chronicles 17). David did make preparation for the building of the temple, however, leaving the actual building task to Solomon, his son and successor.

During the reign of David, Jerusalem was firmly established politically and religiously as the capital city of the Israelite nation. The selection of this site resulted in the unification of the nation as David had hoped.

But the selection of Jerusalem as the capital was more than a choice by a human king. Divine providence was also involved. Jerusalem was referred to as “the place which the Lord your God shall choose out of all your tribes to put his name there” (Deut. 12:5, 11, 14, 18, 21).

Jerusalem Under Solomon. The glory of Jerusalem, begun under David, reached its greatest heights under Solomon. Solomon proceeded to construct the temple about which David had dreamed (2 Chronicles 3; 4). He also extended the borders of the city to new limits. Because surrounding nations were engaged in internal strife, Jerusalem was spared from invasions from opposing forces during Solomon's administration.

After completing the temple, Solomon built the palace complex, a series of five structures.

These other buildings were the "house of the Forest of Lebanon," an assembly hall and a storage place for arms; an anteroom for the throne, where distinguished guests were received; the throne room, an ornately carved enclosure that contained the throne, which was made of carved ivory inlaid with gold; the king's palace, which was very large so as to hold the king's family; and the residence for Solomon's Egyptian wives, which adjoined the king's palace.

Solomon also planted vineyards, orchards, and gardens that contained all types of trees and shrubs. These were watered by streams and pools that flowed through the complex. Unfortunately, this splendor came to an end with the death of Solomon about 931 B.C. The division of the kingdom into two separate nations after Solomon's reign resulted in the relapse of Jerusalem to the status of a minor city.

Jerusalem Under Siege. After the death of Solomon, the division that occurred in the kingdom resulted in the ten northern tribes establishing their own capital, first at Shechem and later at Samaria. The southern tribes, consisting of Judah and Benjamin, retained Jerusalem as the capital. Although separated politically from Jerusalem, the northern tribes continued their allegiance to the "holy city" by occasionally coming there for worship.

In 722 B.C., the northern tribes were conquered by the Assyrians. Many of the citizens of the northern kingdom of Israel were deported to the Assyrian nation, never to return to the "promised land." But the Southern Kingdom, with Jerusalem as its capital, continued to exist as an independent nation. Although occasionally threatened and plundered by surrounding nations, Jerusalem remained intact until 586 B.C. At that time, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylonia, ravaged the city and carried the inhabitants into captivity. During the siege of the city, Jerusalem's beautiful temple was destroyed and the walls around the city were torn down. While a few inhabitants remained in the city, the glory of Jerusalem was gone.

The memory of Jerusalem among the Jewish people, however, would not die. They continued to grieve and to remember the City of David with affection. Psalm 137 is a good example of their expression of grief: "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof. For there they that carried us away captive required of us a song; and they that wasted us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion. How shall we sing the LORD's song in a strange land? If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

The Restoration. For more than half a century the Jews remained captives in Babylonia, and their beloved Jerusalem lay in ruins. But this changed when Cyrus, king of Persia, defeated the Babylonians. He allowed the Jewish captives to return to Jerusalem to restore the city. Zerubbabel was the leader of a group that left Babylon in 538 B.C. to return to Jerusalem to rebuild the temple. After a period of over twenty years, the temple was restored, although it was not as lavish as Solomon's original temple had been.

Under the leadership of NEHEMIAH, a second group of Jewish exiles returned to the holy city to restore the wall around the city. Through a masterful strategy of organization and determination, "the wall was finished on the twenty-fifth day of the month of Elul, in fifty-two days" (Neh. 6:15).

During the succeeding years of domination by the Persian Empire, Jerusalem apparently enjoyed peace and prosperity. When ALEXANDER the Great conquered Persia, the Jews were reluctant to pledge loyalty to the Greek ruler, preferring instead to remain under Persian rule. Only by tactful concessions of religious privileges was Alexander able to win the loyalty of the Jews.

Jerusalem During the Period Between the Testaments. The years that followed the death of Alexander brought many contending armies into conflict in the territory that surrounded Jerusalem. But the greatest threat to the Jews was the onslaught of Greek or Hellenistic culture, which threatened to erode the Jewish way of life. When the Jews resisted Greek cultural influence, the Greek leader ANTIOCHUS IV Epiphanes attacked the city and destroyed the temple. Many of the inhabitants fled the city, taking refuge in the surrounding hills.

Led by JUDAS, these inhabitants later recaptured Jerusalem and restored the temple. The successors to Judas Maccabeus were able to gain independence and to set up Jerusalem as the capital of a newly independent Judea—a position the city had not enjoyed since its defeat by the Babylonians four centuries before. This situation prevailed until the Roman Empire conquered Judea and reduced Jerusalem to a city-state under Roman domination. This was the situation that prevailed during New Testament times.

Jerusalem in the New Testament. The wise men who sought Jesus after His birth came to Jerusalem because this was considered the city of the king (Matt. 2:1–2). Although Jesus was born in Bethlehem, Jerusalem played a significant role in His life and ministry. It was to Jerusalem that He went when He was twelve years old. Here He amazed the temple leaders with His knowledge and wisdom (Luke 2:47). In Jerusalem He cleansed the temple, chasing away the moneychangers who desecrated the holy place with their selfish practices. And, finally, it was outside Jerusalem where He was crucified, buried, and resurrected.

The record of the New Testament church indicates that Jerusalem continued to play a significant role in the early spread of Christianity. After the martyrdom of Stephen, the early believers scattered from Jerusalem to various parts of the Mediterranean world (Acts 8:1). But Jerusalem always was the place to which they returned for significant events. For example, Acts 15 records that when the early church leaders sought to reconcile their differences about the acceptance of Gentile believers, they met in Jerusalem. Thus, the city became a holy city for Christians as well as Jews.

The Jerusalem of New Testament times contained a temple that had been built by Herod, the Roman leader. Although the main portion of the temple was completed in eighteen months, other areas of this building were still under construction during Jesus’ ministry. In fact, the temple was not completed until A.D. 67—only three years before it was finally destroyed by the Roman leader, Titus, and the Roman army.

As Jesus had prophesied in Matthew 24, the city of Jerusalem was completely destroyed in A.D. 70. The temple was destroyed, and the high priesthood and the SANHEDRIN were abolished. Eventually, a Roman city was erected on the site, and Jerusalem was regarded as forbidden ground for the Jews.

Modern Jerusalem. In 1919, under a ruling by British officials in Palestine, Jerusalem regained its status as a capital city. During the following three decades, numerous Jews, whose ancestors had been barred from the city, settled in and around Jerusalem. A new city, whose population was predominantly Jewish, was constructed west of the site of the old city. Following the Arab-Israeli War of 1948–49, the new city was allotted to the Jews, while the old city remained in Muslim hands. Less than two decades later, as a result of what has become known as the Six-Day War, the old city and the surrounding countryside were captured by Israel. It has remained occupied by the descendants of the biblical Israelites until the present day.

Topography. Unlike many other ancient cities, Jerusalem is neither a harbor city nor a city situated on trade routes. It sits about 800 meters (2,500 feet) above sea level in mountainous country about 60 kilometers (37 miles) from the Mediterranean Sea and 23 kilometers (14 miles) from the northern end of the Dead Sea. The site seems unattractive because it lacks an adequate supply of water, is surrounded by relatively infertile land, and is hemmed in by deep valleys and difficult roads.

But these disadvantages were probably the major factors that led to its establishment as a capital city. Its location made the city a fortress that could be easily defended against attack—a very important consideration in Old Testament times.

Topographically, Jerusalem was built on two triangle-shaped ridges that converge to the south. On the east lay the ravine known as the KIDRON Valley. On the west lay the deep gorge known as the Valley of HINNOM. At the southern border of the city, the two valleys converged. Only on the northern border was the city vulnerable to attack.

The lack of a water supply was solved by using a natural spring that flowed from the Kidron Valley. During the reign of Hezekiah in the Old Testament period, this spring was diverted underground so that it flowed into the city. Thus, the inhabitants of the city had water, while invading armies did not. According to 2 Chronicles 32:30, “Hezekiah . . . stopped the upper watercourse of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the City of David.” Hezekiah’s new water supply helped save the city when it was attacked by the Assyrians a short time later (701 B.C.).

Jerusalem is considered a holy city not only by Jews and Christians but also by Muslims. The Book of Revelation speaks of a “new Jerusalem” (Rev. 21:2), a heavenly city fashioned by God Himself for those who are known as His people.

JERUSALEM COUNCIL, THE—a conference held in about A.D. 49 between delegates (including Paul and Barnabas) from the church at Antioch of Syria and delegates from the church at Jerusalem. This council met to settle a dispute over whether Gentile converts to Christianity first had to identify with Judaism by being circumcised (Acts 15:1–29).

According to Luke, “Certain men came down from Judea and taught the brethren, ‘Unless you are circumcised according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved’ ” (Acts 15:1). They insisted that Gentiles could not be received into the church unless they were circumcised and brought under the rules of the Mosaic Law. The apostle Paul, champion of Gentile freedom, said that all people—both Jews and Gentiles—are saved by grace through faith in Jesus Christ, apart from the works of the Law. To require circumcision, he argued, would destroy the good news of God’s grace.

The conclusion of the Jerusalem Council, which determined that Gentiles did not have to be circumcised, was a sweeping victory for Paul’s understanding of Christianity. Speaking for the council, the apostle Peter declared, “We believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we [Jews] shall be saved in the same manner as they [the Gentiles]” (Acts 15:11).

Why was the decision of the Jerusalem Council so important? Perhaps this question can be answered by considering another question: What would have happened to the gospel of Christ, and to Christianity, if the council had decided that circumcision is necessary for anyone to become a Christian?

Such a decision would have been disastrous. It would have forced a condition that would have been unacceptable to the Gentiles. The missionary efforts would have become more difficult, and Christianity would have become nothing but a sect within Judaism. Furthermore, the truth of the gospel would have been compromised. Instead of a gospel based on salvation by grace through faith in Jesus Christ, it would have become one based on salvation by works (the Law).

The theological problem was solved, but a practical problem remained. Fellowship between the Jews and Gentiles in the early church remained on a shaky foundation. If the Gentile converts to Christianity flaunted their newfound freedom in Christ, without any concern for the sensitive feelings of the Jewish Christians, the unity of the church could be threatened. The Jerusalem Council decreed, therefore, that the Gentiles should make four reasonable concessions of their own: “We write to them to abstain from things polluted by idols, from sexual immorality, from things strangled, and from blood” (Acts 15:20; also 15:29; 21:25). In other words, Gentile converts should avoid offending the moral and religious convictions of the Jewish believers.

The Jerusalem Council was both a theological and a practical success. The concessions it called for were not “compromises”; indeed, they reaffirmed the integrity of the gospel of salvation by faith alone. They also dealt with a potentially explosive controversy by expressing concern for deeply held convictions. As the Jerusalem Council ended, the first great threat to the unity of the Church brought rejoicing and encouragement instead (Acts 15:31).

JERUSALEM, NEW—the holy city described by John in Revelation 21–22; God's perfect and eternal order of the future. This New Jerusalem is not built by human hands; it is a heavenly city—one built and provided by God Himself (Rev. 21:2).

The New Jerusalem and the new Garden of Eden (symbols of righteousness, peace, and contentment) are the dwelling place of God, Christ, and the church. John saw no temple in the New Jerusalem, "for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are its temple" (Rev. 21:22).

In the Book of Revelation John draws a graphic contrast between the harlot city called "Babylon the Great" (Rev. 14:8; 16:19; 17:1—18:24), the earthly and temporal city of human beings, and the "New Jerusalem" (Rev. 21:2—22:5), the heavenly and eternal city of God. John identifies "the great city, the holy Jerusalem" (Rev. 21:10), as the church, which he calls "the bride, the Lamb's wife" (Rev. 21:9).

JERUSHA [juh ROO shuh] (taken in marriage)—the wife of Uzziah, king of Judah, and the mother of Jotham, who became king of Judah when Uzziah died (2 Kin. 15:33). The name is also spelled Jerushah (2 Chr. 27:1).

JERUSHAH [juh ROO shuh]—a form of JERUSHA.

JESAIAH [juh SIGH uh]—a form of JESHAIAH.

JESHAIAH [juh SHAY uh] (salvation of the Lord)—the name of six men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Hananiah (1 Chr. 3:21; Jesaiah, KJV).
2. A son of Jeduthun (1 Chr. 25:3, 15).
3. A Levite and a son of Rehabiah (1 Chr. 26:25).

4. A son of Athaliah who returned from the Babylonian captivity (Ezra 8:7).
5. A Levite who returned from Babylon with Ezra (Ezra 8:19).
6. The father of Ithiel whose descendants lived in Jerusalem (Neh. 11:7; Jesaiah, KJV).

JESHANAH [juh SHAY nuh] (ancient)—a city in the hill country of Ephraim (2 Chr. 13:19), usually identified as present-day Ain Sinya, about 6 kilometers (4 miles) north of Bethel.

JESHANAH GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

JESHARELAH [jesh uh REE luh]—a musician who presided over the service of song during the reign of King David (1 Chr. 25:14; Asarelah, REB).

JESHEBEAB [juh SHEB ih ab]—head of the fourteenth division of priests in the sanctuary service in David's time (1 Chr. 24:13).

JESHER [JEE shur] (uprightness)—a son of Caleb (1 Chr. 2:18).

JESHIAH [jih SHY uh]—a form of JESSHIAH.

JESHIMON [juh SHIGH muhn] (wasteland)—the name of two wastelands in the land of Israel:

1. The name given in some translations to a wilderness north of the Dead Sea and east of the Jordan River (Num. 21:20, KJV).
2. A wilderness of Judah west of the Dead Sea (1 Sam. 23:19; 26:1, 3).

JESHISHAI [juh SHISH eye]—a son of Jahdo (1 Chr. 5:14).

JESHOHAIAH [jesh oe HAY uh] (the Lord humbles)—a leader of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:36).

JESHUA [JESH oo uh] (the Lord is salvation)—the name of eight men and one city in the Old Testament:

1. Head of the ninth division of priests in David's time (Neh. 7:39; Jeshuah, KJV).

2. A Levite in the days of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 31:15).
3. A priest who returned to Jerusalem from the captivity (Ezra 2:2). Jeshua and his fellow priests and kinsmen built the altar of God to restore the burnt offerings and also began work on the restored temple. He opposed the Samaritans in their efforts to discourage work on the temple (Ezra 4:3–5). In Zechariah 3:1–9 and 6:11, he is called Joshua.
4. The father of Jozabad (Ezra 8:33).
5. A son of Pahath-Moab, whose descendants returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 7:11).
6. The father of Ezer (Neh. 3:19).
7. A Levite who helped Ezra explain the Law to the people (Neh. 8:7).
8. A son of Azaniah (Ezra 2:40).
9. A city of southern Judah occupied by Israelites who returned from the captivity (Neh. 11:26). It is identified with Tell es-Sa'wi, about 19 kilometers (12 miles) northeast of Beersheba.

JESHUAH [jih SHOO uh]—a form of JESHUA No. 1.

JESHURUN [JESH uh ruhn]—a poetic term for the nation of Israel (Deut. 32:15; Is. 44:2; Jesurun, KJV).

JESIAH [jih SIGH uh]—a form of JISSHIAH.

JESIMIEL [juh SIM ih uhl] (God establishes)—a leader of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:36).

JESSE [JES ee] (meaning unknown)—the father of King David (1 Sam. 16:18–19) and an ancestor of Jesus. Jesse was the father of eight sons—Eliab, Abinadab, Shimea (Shammah), Nethanel, Raddai, Ozem, Elihu, and David—and two daughters, Zeruiah and Abigail (1 Chr. 2:13–16). He is called a "Bethlehemite" (1 Sam. 16:1, 18).

On instructions from the Lord, the prophet Samuel went to Bethlehem to select a new king from among Jesse's eight sons. After the first seven were rejected, David was anointed by Samuel to replace Saul as king of Israel (1 Sam. 16:1–13). Later King Saul asked Jesse to allow David to visit his court and play soothing music on the harp. Jesse gave his permission and sent Saul a present (1 Sam. 16:20).

The title "son of Jesse" soon became attached to David. It was sometimes used in a spirit of insult and ridicule, mocking David's humble origins (1 Sam. 20:27; 1 Kin. 12:16). But the prophet Isaiah spoke of "a Rod from the stem of Jesse" (11:1) and of "a Root of Jesse" (11:10)—prophecies of the Messiah to come. For the apostle Paul, the "root of Jesse" (Rom. 15:12) was a prophecy fulfilled in Jesus Christ.

JESSHIAH [jesh EYE uh] (the Lord exists)—the second son of Uzziel and the father of Zechariah (1 Chr. 23:20; Jeshiah, KJV; Isshiah, NIV), also called Isshiah (1 Chr. 24:25).

JESUI [JES yoo igh]—the third son of Asher and founder of a tribal family, the Jesuites (Num. 26:44). He is also called Isui (Gen. 46:17) and Ishvi (1 Chr. 7:30; Ishuai, KJV).

JESUITES [JEZ you ites]—descendants of JESUI, of the tribe of Asher (Num. 26:44; Ishvites, NRSV, NIV, REB, NASB).

JESURUN [JES oo ruhn]—a form of JESHURUN.

JESUS [GEE zus] (the Lord is salvation)—the name of five men in the Bible:

1. Jesus BARABBAS, a prisoner released by the Roman governor Pontius Pilate before Jesus was crucified (Matt. 27:16–17, REB; some manuscripts omit the word Jesus and have simply Barabbas).
2. An ancestor of Christ (Luke 3:29; Jose, KJV, NKJV; Joshua, NASB, REB, NIV).
3. The KJV rendering of Joshua, the son of Nun, in the New Testament (Acts 7:45; Heb. 4:8).
4. Jesus Justus, a Jewish Christian who, with the apostle Paul, sent greetings to the Colossians (Col. 4:11).
5. Jesus, the son of Mary. Also see JESUS CHRIST.

JESUS CHRIST—the human-divine Son of God born of the Virgin Mary; the great High Priest who intercedes for His people at the right hand of God; founder of the Christian church and central figure of the human race.

To understand who Jesus was and what He accomplished, students of the New Testament must study: (1) His life, (2) His teachings, (3) His person, and (4) His work.

The Life of Jesus. The twofold designation Jesus Christ combines the personal name "Jesus" and the title "Christ," meaning "anointed" or "Messiah." The significance of this title became clear during the scope of His life and ministry.

Birth and upbringing—Jesus was born in Bethlehem, a town about 10 kilometers (6 miles) south of Jerusalem, toward the end of Herod the Great's reign as king of the Jews (37–4 B.C.). Early in His life He was taken to Nazareth, a town of Galilee. There He was brought up by His mother, Mary, and her husband, Joseph, a carpenter by trade. Hence He was known as "Jesus of Nazareth" or, more fully, "Jesus of Nazareth the son of Joseph" (John 1:45).

Jesus was His mother's firstborn child; He had four brothers (James, Joses, Judas, and Simon) and an unspecified number of sisters (Mark 6:3). Joseph apparently died before Jesus began His public ministry. Mary, with the rest of the family, lived on and became a member of the church of Jerusalem after Jesus' death and resurrection.

The only incident preserved from Jesus' first thirty years (after his infancy) was His trip to Jerusalem with Joseph and Mary when He was twelve years old (Luke 2:41–52). Since He was known in Nazareth as "the carpenter" (Mark 6:3), He may have taken Joseph's place as the family breadwinner at an early age.

The little village of Nazareth overlooked the main highway linking Damascus to the Mediterranean coast and Egypt. News of the world outside Galilee probably reached Nazareth quickly. During His boyhood Jesus probably heard of the revolt led by Judas the Galilean against the Roman authorities. This happened when Judea, to the south, became a Roman province in A.D. 6 and its inhabitants had to pay tribute to Caesar. Jews probably heard also of the severity with which the revolt was crushed.

Galilee, the province in which Jesus lived, was ruled by Herod Antipas, youngest son of Herod the Great. So the area where He lived was not directly involved in this revolt. But the sympathies of many Galileans were probably stirred. No doubt the boys of Nazareth discussed this issue, which they heard their elders debating. There is no indication of what Jesus thought about this event at the time. But we do know what he said about it in Jerusalem twenty-four years later (Mark 12:13–17).

Sepphoris, about 6 kilometers (4 miles) northwest of Nazareth, had been the center of an anti-Roman revolt during Jesus' infancy. The village was destroyed by the Romans, but it was soon rebuilt by Herod Antipas. Antipas lived there as tetrarch of Galilee and Perea until he founded a new capital for his principality at Tiberias, on the western shore of the Lake of Galilee (A.D. 22). Reports of happenings at his court, while he lived in Sepphoris, were probably carried to Nazareth. A royal court formed the setting for several of Jesus' parables.

Scenes from Israel's history could be seen from the rising ground above Nazareth. To the south stretched the Valley of Jezreel, where great battles had been fought in earlier days. Beyond the Valley of Jezreel was Mount Gilboa, where King Saul fell in battle with the Philistines. To the east Mount Tabor rose to 562 meters (1,843 feet), the highest elevation in that part of the country. A growing boy would readily find his mind moving back and forth between the stirring events of former days and the realities of the contemporary situation: the all-pervasive presence of the Romans.

Beginnings of Jesus' ministry—Jesus began His public ministry when He sought baptism at the hands of John the Baptist. John preached between A.D. 27 and 28 in the lower Jordan Valley and baptized those who wished to give expression to their repentance (Matt. 3:13–17; Mark 1:9–11; Luke 3:21–22; John 1:29–34). The descent of the dove as Jesus came up out of the water was a sign that He was the One anointed by the Spirit of God as the Servant-Messiah of His people (Is. 11:2; 42:1; 61:1).

A voice from heaven declared, "You are My beloved Son; in You I am well pleased" (Luke 3:22). This indicated that He was Israel's anointed King, destined to fulfill His kingship as the Servant of the Lord described centuries earlier by the prophet Isaiah (Is. 42:1; 52:13).

In the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, Jesus' baptism is followed immediately by His temptation in the wilderness (Matt. 4:1–11; Mark 1:12–13; Luke 4:1–13). This testing confirmed His understanding of the heavenly voice and His acceptance of the path that it marked out for Him. He refused to use His power as God's Son to fulfill His personal desires, to amaze the people, or to dominate the world by political and military force.

Apparently, Jesus ministered for a short time in southern and central Palestine, while John the Baptist was still preaching (John 3:22—4:42). But the main phase of Jesus' ministry began in Galilee after John's imprisonment by Herod Antipas. This was the signal, according to Mark 1:14–15, for Jesus to proclaim God's Good News in Galilee: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand. Repent, and believe in the gospel." What is the character of this kingdom? How was it to be established?

A popular view was that the kingdom of God meant throwing off the oppressive yoke of Rome and establishing an independent state of Israel. JUDAS and his brothers and followers had won independence for the Jewish people in the second century B.C. by guerrilla warfare and diplomatic skill. Many of the Jewish people believed that with God's help, the same thing could happen again. Other efforts had failed, but the spirit of revolt remained. If Jesus had consented to become the military leader, which the people wanted, many would gladly have followed Him. But in spite of His temptation, Jesus resisted taking this path.

Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God was accompanied by works of mercy and power, including the healing of the sick, particularly those who were demon-possessed. These works also proclaimed the arrival of the kingdom of God. The demons that caused such distress to men and women were signs of the kingdom of Satan. When they were cast out, this proved the superior strength of the kingdom of God.

For a time, Jesus' healing aroused great popular enthusiasm throughout Galilee. But the religious leaders and teachers found much of Jesus' activity disturbing. He refused to be bound by their religious ideas. He befriended social outcasts. He insisted on understanding and applying the law of God in the light of its original intention, not according to the popular interpretation of the religious establishment. He insisted on healing sick people on the Sabbath day. He believed that healing people did not profane the Sabbath but honored it, because it was established by God for the rest and relief of human beings (Luke 6:6–11).

This attitude brought Jesus into conflict with the scribes, the official teachers of the law. Because of their influence, He was soon barred from preaching in the synagogues. But this was no great inconvenience. He simply gathered larger congregations to listen to Him on the hillside or by the lakeshore. He regularly illustrated the main themes of His preaching by parables. These were simple stories from daily life that would drive home some special point and make it stick in the hearer's understanding.

The mission of the Twelve and its sequel—From among the large number of His followers, Jesus selected twelve men to remain in His company for training that would enable them to share His preaching and healing ministry. When He judged the time to be ripe, Jesus sent them out two by two to proclaim the kingdom of God throughout the Jewish districts of Galilee. In many places, they found an enthusiastic hearing.

Probably some who heard these disciples misunderstood the nature of the kingdom they proclaimed. Perhaps the disciples themselves used language that could be interpreted as stirring political unrest. News of their activity reached Herod Antipas, ruler of Galilee, arousing His suspicion. He had recently murdered John the Baptist. Now he began to wonder if he faced another serious problem in Jesus.

On the return of His twelve apostles, they withdrew under Jesus' leadership from the publicity that surrounded them in Galilee to the quieter territory east of the Lake of Galilee. This territory was ruled by Antipas' brother Philip—"Philip the tetrarch"—who had only a few Jews among his subjects. Philip was not as likely to be troubled by Messianic excitement.

But even here Jesus and His disciples found themselves pursued by enthusiastic crowds from Galilee. He recognized them for what they were, "sheep without a shepherd," aimless people who were in danger of being led to disaster under the wrong kind of leadership.

Jesus gave these people further teaching, feeding them also with loaves and fishes. But this only stimulated them to try to compel Him to be the king for whom they were looking. He would not be the kind of king they wanted, and they had no use for the only kind of king He was prepared to be. From then on, His popularity in Galilee began to decline. Many of His disciples no longer followed Him.

He took the Twelve further north, into Gentile territory. Here He gave them special training to prepare them for the crisis they would have to meet shortly in Jerusalem. He knew the time was approaching when He would present His challenging message to the people of the capital and to the Jewish leaders.

At the city of Caesarea Philippi, Jesus decided the time was ripe to encourage the Twelve to state their convictions about His identity and His mission. When Peter declared that He was the Messiah, this showed that He and the other apostles had given up most of the traditional ideas about the kind of person the Messiah would be. But the thought that Jesus would have to suffer and die was something they could not accept. Jesus recognized that He could now make a beginning with the creation of a new community. In this new community of God’s people, the ideals of the kingdom He proclaimed would be realized.

These ideals that Jesus taught were more revolutionary in many ways than the insurgent spirit that survived the overthrow of Judas the Galilean. The Jewish rebels against the rule of Rome developed into a party known as the Zealots. They had no better policy than to counter force with force, which, in Jesus’ view, was like invoking Satan to drive out Satan. The way of nonresistance that He urged upon the people seemed impractical. But it eventually proved to be more effective against the might of Rome than armed rebellion.

Jerusalem: the last phase—At the Feast of Tabernacles in the fall of A.D. 29, Jesus went to Jerusalem with the Twelve. He apparently spent the next six months in the southern part of Palestine. Jerusalem, like Galilee, needed to hear the message of the kingdom. But Jerusalem was more resistant to it even than Galilee. The spirit of revolt was in the air; Jesus’ way of peace was not accepted. This is why He wept over the city. He realized the way that so many of its citizens preferred was bound to lead to their destruction. Even the magnificant temple, so recently rebuilt by Herod the Great, would be involved in the general overthrow.

During the week before Passover in A.D. 30, Jesus taught each day in the temple area, debating with other teachers of differing beliefs. He was invited to state His opinion on a number of issues, including the question of paying taxes to the Roman emperor. This was a test question with the Zealots. In their eyes, to acknowledge the rule of a pagan king was high treason against God, Israel’s true King.

Jesus replied that the coinage in which these taxes had to be paid belonged to the Roman emperor because his face and name were stamped on it. Let the emperor have what so obviously belonged to him, Jesus declared; it was more important to make sure that God received what was due Him.

This answer disappointed those patriots who followed the Zealot line. Neither did it make Jesus popular with the priestly authorities. They were terrified by the rebellious spirit in the land. Their favored position depended on maintaining good relations with the ruling Romans. If revolt broke out, the Romans would hold them responsible for not keeping the people under control. They were afraid that Jesus might provoke an outburst that would bring the heavy hand of Rome upon the city.

The enthusiasm of the people when Jesus entered Jerusalem on a donkey alarmed the religious leaders. So did his show of authority when he cleared the temple of traders and moneychangers. This was a “prophetic action” in the tradition of the great prophets of Israel. Its message to the priestly establishment came through loud and clear. The prophets’ vision of the temple—“My house shall be called a house of prayer for all nations” (Is. 56:7)—was a fine ideal. But any attempt to make it measure up to reality would be a threat to the priestly privileges. Jesus’ action was as disturbing as Jeremiah’s speech foretelling the destruction of Solomon’s temple had been to the religious leaders six centuries earlier (Jer. 26:1–6).

To block the possibility of an uprising among the people, the priestly party decided to arrest Jesus as soon as possible. The opportunity came earlier than they expected when one of the Twelve, Judas Iscariot, offered to deliver Jesus into their power without the risk of a public disturbance. Arrested on Passover Eve, Jesus was brought first before a Jewish court of inquiry, over which the high priest Caiaphas presided.

The Jewish leaders attempted first to convict Him of being a threat to the temple. Protection of the sanctity of the temple was the one area in which the Romans still allowed the Jewish authorities to exercise authority. But this attempt failed. Then Jesus accepted their charge that He claimed to be the Messiah. This gave the religious leaders an occasion to hand Him over to Pilate on a charge of treason and sedition.

While “Messiah” was primarily a religious title, it could be translated into political terms as “king of the Jews.” Anyone who claimed to be king of the Jews, as Jesus admitted He did, presented a challenge to the Roman emperor’s rule in Judea. On this charge Pilate, the Roman governor, finally convicted Jesus. This was the charge spelled out in the inscription fixed above His head on the cross. Death by crucifixion was the penalty for sedition by one who was not a Roman citizen.

With the death and burial of Jesus, the narrative of His earthly career came to an end. But with His resurrection on the third day, He lives and works forever as the exalted Lord. His appearances to His disciples after His resurrection assured them He was "alive after His suffering" (Acts 1:3). These appearances also enabled them to make the transition in their experience from the form in which they had known Him earlier to the new way in which they would be related to Him by the Holy Spirit.

The Teachings of Jesus. Just as Jesus' life was unique, so His teachings are known for their fresh and new approach. Jesus taught several distinctive spiritual truths that set Him apart from any other religious leader who ever lived.

The kingdom of God—The message Jesus began to proclaim in Galilee after John the Baptist's imprisonment was the good news of the kingdom of God. When He appeared to His disciples after the resurrection, He continued "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God" (Acts 1:3). What did Jesus mean by the kingdom of God?

When Jesus announced that the kingdom of God was drawing near, many of His hearers must have recognized an echo of those visions recorded in the Book of Daniel. These prophecies declared that one day "the God of heaven will set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed" (Dan. 2:44). Jesus' announcement indicated the time had come when the authority of this kingdom would be exercised.

The nature of this kingdom is determined by the character of the God whose kingdom it is. The revelation of God lay at the heart of Jesus' teaching. Jesus called Him "Father" and taught His disciples to do the same. But the term that He used when He called God "Father" was Abba (Mark 14:36), the term of affection that children used when they addressed their father at home or spoke about him to others. It was not unusual for God to be addressed in prayer as "my Father" or "our Father." But it was most unusual for Him to be called Abba. By using this term, Jesus expressed His sense of nearness to God and His total trust in Him. He taught His followers to look to God with the trust that children show when they expect their earthly fathers to provide them with food, clothes, and shelter.

This attitude is especially expressed in the Lord's Prayer, which may be regarded as a brief summary of Jesus' teaching. In this prayer the disciples were taught to pray for the fulfillment of God's eternal purpose (the coming of His kingdom) and to ask Him for daily bread, forgiveness of sins, and deliverance from temptation.

In Jesus' healing of the sick and proclamation of good news to the poor, the kingdom of God was visibly present, although it was not yet fully realized. Otherwise, it would not have been necessary for Him to tell His disciples to pray, "Your kingdom come" (Matt. 6:10). One day, He taught, it would come "with power" (Mark 9:1), and some of them would live to see that day.

In the kingdom of God the way to honor is the way of service. In this respect, Jesus set a worthy example, choosing to give service instead of receiving it.

The death and resurrection of Jesus unleashed the kingdom of God in full power. Through proclamation of the kingdom, liberation and blessing were brought to many more than could be touched by Jesus' brief ministry in Galilee and Judea.

The way of the kingdom—The ethical teaching of Jesus was part of His proclamation of the kingdom of God. Only by His death and resurrection could the divine rule be established. But even while the kingdom of God was in the process of inauguration during His ministry, its principles could be translated into action in the lives of His followers. The most familiar presentation of these principles is found in the SERMON ON THE MOUNT (Matthew 5–7), which was addressed to His disciples. These principles showed how those who were already children of the kingdom ought to live.

Jesus and the Law of Moses—The people whom Jesus taught already had a large body of ethical teaching in the Old Testament law. But a further body of oral interpretation and application had grown up around the Law of Moses over the centuries. Jesus declared that He had come to fulfill the law, not to destroy it (Matt. 5:17). But He emphasized its ethical quality by summarizing it in terms of what He called the two great commandments: "You shall love the Lord your God" (Deut. 6:5) and "You shall love your neighbor as yourself" (Lev. 19:18). "On these two commandments," He said, "hang all the Law and the Prophets" (Matt. 22:40).

Jesus did not claim uniqueness or originality for His ethical teaching. One of His purposes was to explain the ancient law of God. Yet there was a distinctiveness and freshness about His teaching, as He declared His authority: “You have heard that it was said . . . But I say to you” (Matt. 5:21–22). Only in listening to His words and doing them could people build a secure foundation for their lives (Matt. 7:24–27; Luke 6:46–49).

In His interpretation of specific commandments, Jesus did not use the methods of the Jewish rabbis. He dared to criticize their rulings, which had been handed down by word of mouth through successive generations of scribes. He even declared that these interpretations sometimes obscured the original purpose of the commandments. In appealing to that original purpose, He declared that a commandment was most faithfully obeyed when God’s purpose in giving it was fulfilled. His treatment of the Sabbath law is an example of this approach.

In a similar way, Jesus settled the question of divorce by an appeal to the original marriage ordinance (Gen. 1:26–27; 2:24–25). Since husband and wife were made one by the Creator’s decree, Jesus pointed out, divorce was an attempt to undo the work of God. If the law later allowed for divorce in certain situations (Deut. 24:1–4), that was a concession to people’s inability to keep the commandment. But it was not so in the beginning, He declared, and it should not be so for those who belong to the kingdom of God.

Jesus actually injected new life into the ethical principles of the Law of Moses. But He did not impose a new set of laws that could be enforced by external sanctions; He prescribed a way of life for His followers. The act of murder, forbidden in the sixth commandment, was punishable by death. Conduct or language likely to provoke a breach of the peace could also bring on legal penalties. No human law can detect or punish the angry thought; yet it is here, Jesus taught, that the process that leads to murder begins. Therefore, “whoever is angry with his brother . . . shall be in danger of the judgment” (Matt. 5:22). But He was careful to point out that the judgment is God’s, not man’s.

The law could also punish a person for breaking the seventh commandment, which forbade adultery. But Jesus maintained that the act itself was the outcome of a person’s internal thought. Therefore, “whoever looks at a woman to lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart” (Matt. 5:28).

Jesus’ attitude and teaching also made many laws about property irrelevant for His followers. They should be known as people who give, not as people who get. If someone demands your cloak (outer garment), Jesus said, give it to him, and give him your tunic (undergarment) as well (Luke 6:29). There is more to life than abundance of possessions (Luke 12:15); in fact, He pointed out, material wealth is a hindrance to one's spiritual life. The wise man, therefore, will get rid of it: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God" (Mark 10:25). In no area have Jesus' followers struggled more to avoid the uncompromising rigor of his words than in His teaching about the danger of possessions.

Jesus insisted that more is expected of His followers than the ordinary morality of decent people. Their ethical behavior should exceed "the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees" (Matt. 5:20). "If you love [only] those who love you," He asked, "what credit is that to you? For even sinners love those who love them" (Luke 6:32). The higher standard of the kingdom of God called for acts of love to enemies and words of blessing and goodwill to persecutors. The children of the kingdom should not insist on their legal rights but cheerfully give them up in response to the supreme law of love.

The way of nonviolence—The principle of nonviolence is deeply ingrained in Jesus' teaching. In His references to the "men of violence" who tried to bring in the kingdom of God by force, Jesus gave no sign that He approved of their ideals or methods. The course He called for was the way of peace and submission. He urged His hearers not to strike back against injustice or oppression but to turn the other cheek, to go a second mile when their services were demanded for one mile, and to take the initiative in returning good for evil.

But the way of nonviolence did not appeal to the people. The crowd chose the militant Barabbas when they were given the opportunity to have either Jesus or Barabbas set free. But the attitude expressed in the shout, "Not this man, but Barabbas!" (Matt. 27:15–26) was the spirit that would one day level Jerusalem and bring misery and suffering to the Jewish nation.

The supreme example—In the teaching of Jesus, the highest of all incentives is the example of God. This was no new principle. The central section of Leviticus is called "the law of holiness" because of its recurring theme: "I am the Lord your God . . . Be holy; for I am holy" (Lev. 11:44). This bears a close resemblance to Jesus' words in Luke 6:36, "Be merciful, just as your Father also is merciful." The children of God should reproduce their Father's character. He does not discriminate between the good and the evil in bestowing rain and sunshine; likewise, His followers should not discriminate in showing kindness to all. He delights in forgiving sinners; His children should also be marked by a forgiving spirit.

The example of the heavenly Father and the example shown by Jesus on earth are one and the same, since Jesus came to reveal the Father. Jesus' life was the practical demonstration of His ethical teaching. To His disciples He declared, "I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done to you" (John 13:15).

This theme of the imitation of Christ pervades the New Testament letters. It is especially evident in the writings of Paul, who was not personally acquainted with Jesus before he met Him on the Damascus Road. Paul instructed his converts to follow "the meekness and gentleness of Christ" (2 Cor. 10:1). He also encouraged them to imitate him as he himself imitated Christ (1 Cor. 11:1). When he recommended to them the practice of all the Christian graces, he declared, "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 13:14). Throughout the New Testament, Jesus is presented as the One who left us an example, that we should follow in His steps (1 Pet. 2:21).

The Person of Christ. The doctrine of the person of Christ, or Christology, is one of the most important concerns of Christian theology. The various aspects of the person of Christ are best seen by reviewing the titles that are applied to Him in the Bible.

Son of Man—The title "Son of Man" was Jesus' favorite way of referring to Himself. He may have done this because this was not a recognized title already known by the people and associated with popular ideas. This title means essentially "The Man." But as Jesus used it, it took on new significance.

Jesus applied this title to Himself in three distinct ways:

First, He used the title in a general way, almost as a substitute for the pronoun "I." A good example of this usage occurred in the saying where Jesus contrasted John the Baptist, who "came neither eating bread nor drinking wine," with the Son of Man, who "has come eating and drinking" (Luke 7:33–34). Another probable example is the statement that "the Son of Man has nowhere to lay His head" (Luke 9:58). In this instance He warned a would-be disciple that those who wanted to follow Him must expect to share His homeless existence.

Second, Jesus used the title to emphasize that "the Son of Man must suffer" (Mark 8:31). The word "must" implies that His suffering was foretold by the prophets. It was, indeed, “written concerning the Son of Man, that He must suffer many things and be treated with contempt” (Mark 9:12). So when Jesus announced the presence of the betrayer at the Last Supper, He declared, “The Son of Man indeed goes just as it is written of Him” (Mark 14:21). Later the same evening He submitted to His captors with the words, “The Scriptures must be fulfilled” (Mark 14:49).

Finally, Jesus used the title “Son of Man” to refer to Himself as the one who exercised exceptional authority—authority delegated to Him by God. “The Son of Man has power [authority] on earth to forgive sins” (Mark 2:10), He declared. He exercised this authority in a way that made some people criticize Him for acting with the authority of God: “The Son of Man is also Lord of the Sabbath” (Mark 2:28).

The Son of Man appeared to speak and act in these cases as the representative human being. If God had given people dominion over all the works of His hands, then He who was the Son of Man in this special representative sense was in a position to exercise that dominion.

Near the end of His ministry, Jesus spoke of His authority as the Son of Man at the end of time. Men and women “will see the Son of Man coming in the clouds with great power and glory,” He declared (Mark 13:26). He also stated to the high priest and other members of the supreme court of Israel: “You will see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of Power, and coming with the clouds of heaven” (Mark 14:62). He seemed deserted and humiliated as He stood there awaiting their verdict. But the tables would be turned when they saw Him vindicated by God as Ruler and Judge of all the world.

Only once was Jesus referred to as the Son of Man by anyone other than Himself. This occurred when Stephen, condemned by the Jewish SANHEDRIN, saw “the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God” (Acts 7:56). In Stephen’s vision the Son of Man stood as his heavenly advocate, in fulfillment of Jesus’ words: “Whoever confesses Me before men, him the Son of Man also will confess before the angels of God” (Luke 12:8).

Messiah—When Jesus made His declaration before the high priest and His colleagues, He did so in response to the question: “Are You the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?” (Mark 14:61). He replied, “I am” (Mark 14:62). “It is as you said” (Matt. 26:64).

The Christ was the MESSIAH, the Son of David—a member of the royal family of David. For centuries the Jewish people had expected a Messiah who would restore the fortunes of Israel, liberating the nation from foreign oppression and extending His rule over Gentile nations.

Jesus belonged to the family of David. He was proclaimed as the Messiah of David's line, both before His birth and after His resurrection. But He Himself was slow to make messianic claims. The reason for this is that the ideas associated with the Messiah in the minds of the Jewish people were quite different from the character and purpose of His ministry. Thus, He refused to give them any encouragement.

When, at Caesarea Philippi, Peter confessed Jesus to be the Messiah, Jesus directed him and his fellow disciples to tell no one that He was the Christ. After His death and resurrection, however, the concept of messiahship among His followers was transformed by what He was and did. Then He could safely be proclaimed as Messiah, God's Anointed King, resurrected in glory to occupy the throne of the universe.

Son of God—Jesus was acclaimed as the Son of God at His baptism (Mark 1:11). But He was also given this title by the angel Gabriel at the annunciation: "That Holy One who is to be born will be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35). The Gospel of John especially makes it clear that the Father-Son relationship belongs to eternity—that the Son is supremely qualified to reveal the Father because He has His eternal being "in the bosom of the Father" (John 1:18).

At one level the title "Son of God" belonged officially to the Messiah, who personified the nation of Israel. "Israel is My son, My firstborn," said God to Pharaoh (Ex. 4:22). Of the promised prince of the house of David, God declared, "I will make him My firstborn" (Ps. 89:27).

But there was nothing merely official about Jesus' consciousness of being the Son of God. He taught His disciples to think of God and to speak to Him as their Father.

But He did not link them with Himself in this relationship and speak to them of "our Father"—yours and mine. The truth expressed in His words in John 20:17 is implied throughout His teaching: "My Father and your Father . . . My God and your God."

As the Son of God in a special sense, Jesus made Himself known to the apostle Paul on the Damascus Road. Paul said, "It pleased God . . . to reveal His Son in me" (Gal. 1:15–16). The proclamation of Jesus as the Son of God was central to Paul's preaching (Acts 9:20; 2 Cor. 1:19).

When Jesus is presented as the Son of God in the New Testament, two aspects of His person are emphasized: His eternal relation to God as His Father and His perfect revelation of the Father to the human race.

Word and Wisdom—Jesus' perfect revelation of the Father is also expressed when He is described as the Word (logos) of God (John 1:1–18). The Word is the self-expression of God; that self-expression has personal status, existing eternally with God. The Word by which God created the world (Ps. 33:6) and by which He spoke through the prophets "became flesh" in the fullness of time (John 1:14), living among men and women as Jesus of Nazareth.

Much that is said in the Old Testament about the Word of God is paralleled by what is said of the Wisdom of God: "The Lord by wisdom founded the earth" (Prov. 3:19). In the New Testament Christ is portrayed as the personal Wisdom of God (1 Cor. 1:24, 30)—the one through whom all things were created (1 Cor. 8:6; Col. 1:16; Heb. 1:2).

The Holy One of God—This title was given to Jesus by Peter (John 6:69, NIV, NRSV) and remarkably, by a demon-possessed man (Mark 1:24). In their preaching, the apostles called Jesus "the Holy One and the Just" (Acts 3:14). This was a name belonging to Him as the Messiah, indicating He was especially set apart for God. This title also emphasized His positive goodness and His complete dedication to the doing of His Father's will. Mere "sinlessness," in the sense of the absence of any fault, is a pale quality in comparison to the unsurpassed power for righteousness that filled His life and teaching.

The Lord—"Jesus is Lord" is the ultimate Christian creed. "No one can say that Jesus is Lord except by the Holy Spirit" (1 Cor. 12:3). A Christian, therefore, is a person who confesses Jesus as Lord.

Several words denoting lordship were used of Jesus in the New Testament. The most frequent, and the most important in relation to the doctrine of His person, was the Greek word kyrios. It was frequently given to Him as a polite term of address, meaning "Sir." Sometimes the title was used of Him in the third person, when the disciples and others spoke of Him as "The Lord" or "The Master."

After His resurrection and exaltation, however, Jesus was given the title "Lord" in its full, Christological sense. Peter, concluding his address to the crowd in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost, declared, "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God has made this Jesus, whom you crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts 2:36).

The title "Lord" in the Christological sense must have been given to Jesus before the church moved out into the Gentile world. The evidence for this is the invocation “Maranatha” (KJV) or “O Lord, come!” (1 Cor. 16:22). The apostle Paul, writing to a Gentile church in the Greek-speaking world, assumed that its members were familiar with this Aramaic phrase. It was an early Christian title for Jesus which was taken over untranslated. It bears witness to the fact that from the earliest days of the church, the One who had been exalted as Lord was expected to return as Lord.

Another key New Testament text that shows the sense in which Jesus was acknowledged as Lord is Philippians 2:5–11. In these verses Paul may be quoting an early confession of faith. If so, he endorsed it and made it his own. This passage tells how Jesus did not regard equality with God as something that He should exploit to His own advantage. Instead, He humbled Himself to become a man, displaying “the form of God” in “the form of a servant.” He became “obedient to the point of death, even the death of the cross. Therefore God also has highly exalted Him and given Him the name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, . . . and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord” (Phil. 2:8–11).

The “name which is above every name” is probably the title “Lord” in the highest sense that it can bear. The words echo Isaiah 45:23, where the God of Israel swears, “To Me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall take an oath [or, make confession].” In the Old Testament passage the God of Israel denies to any other being the right to receive the worship that belongs to Him alone. But in the passage from Philippians He readily shares that worship with the humiliated and exalted Jesus. More than that, He shares His own name with Him. When human beings honor Jesus as Lord, God is glorified.

God—If Jesus is called “Lord” in this supreme sense, it is not surprising that He occasionally is called “God” in the New Testament. Thomas, convinced that the risen Christ stood before him, abandoned his doubts with the confession, “My Lord and my God!” (John 20:28).

But the classic text is John 1:1. John declared that the Word existed not only “in the beginning,” where He was “with God,” but also actually “was God.” This is the Word that became incarnate as real man in Jesus Christ, without ceasing to be what He had been from eternity. The Word was God in the sense that the Father shared with Him the fullness of His own nature. The Father remained, in a technical phrase of traditional theology, “the fountain of deity.” But from that fountain the Son drew in unlimited measure.

The Bible thus presents Christ as altogether God and altogether man—the perfect mediator between God and mankind because He partakes fully of the nature of both.

The Work of Christ. The work of Christ has often been stated in relation to His threefold office as prophet, priest, and king. As prophet, He is the perfect spokesman of God to the world, fully revealing God’s character and will. As priest, Jesus has offered to God by His death a sufficient sacrifice for the sins of the world. Now, on the basis of that sacrifice, He exercises a ministry of intercession on behalf of His people. As king, He is “the ruler over the kings of the earth” (Rev. 1:5)—the One to whose rule the whole world is subject.

The work of Jesus can be discussed in terms of past, present, and future.

The finished work of Christ—By the “finished” work of Christ is meant the work of atonement or redemption for the human race that He completed by His death on the cross. This work is so perfect in itself that it requires neither repetition nor addition. Because of this work, He is called “Savior of the world” (1 John 4:14) and “the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” (John 1:29).

In the Bible sin is viewed in several ways: as an offense against God, which requires a pardon; as defilement, which requires cleansing; as slavery, which cries out for emancipation; as a debt, which must be canceled; as defeat, which must be reversed by victory; and as estrangement, which must be set right by reconciliation. However sin is viewed, it is through the work of Christ that the remedy is provided. He has procured the pardon, the cleansing, the emancipation, the cancellation, the victory, and the reconciliation.

When sin is viewed as an offense against God, it is also interpreted as a breach of His law. The law of God, like law in general, involves penalties against the lawbreaker. So strict are these penalties that they appear to leave no avenue of escape for the lawbreaker. The apostle Paul, conducting his argument along these lines, quoted one uncompromising declaration from the Old Testament: “Cursed is everyone who does not continue in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them” (Deut. 27:26; Gal. 3:10).

But Paul goes on to say that Christ, by enduring the form of death on which a divine curse was expressly pronounced in the law, absorbed in His own person the curse invoked on the lawbreaker: “Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, having become a curse for us (for it is written, ‘Cursed is everyone who hangs on a tree’)” (Deut. 21:23; Gal. 3:13).

Since Christ partakes of the nature of both God and humanity, He occupies a unique status with regard to them. He represents God to humanity, and He also represents humanity to God. God is both Lawgiver and Judge; Christ represents Him. The human family has put itself in the position of the lawbreaker; Christ has voluntarily undertaken to represent us. The Judge has made Himself one with the guilty in order to bear our guilt. It is ordinarily out of the question for one person to bear the guilt of others. But when the one person is the representative human being, Jesus Christ, bearing the guilt of those whom He represents, the case is different.

In the hour of His death, Christ offered His life to God on behalf of mankind. The perfect life that He offered was acceptable to God. The salvation secured through the giving up of that life is God’s free gift to mankind in Christ.

When the situation is viewed in terms of a law court, one might speak of the accused party as being acquitted. But the term preferred in the New Testament, especially in the apostle Paul’s writings, is the more positive word “justified.” Paul goes on to the limit of daring in speaking of God as “Him who justifies the ungodly” (Rom. 4:5). God can be so described because “Christ died for the ungodly” (Rom. 5:6). Those who are united by faith to Him are “justified” in Him. As Paul explained elsewhere, “He made Him who knew no sin to be sin for us, that we might become the righteousness of God in Him” (2 Cor. 5:21). The work of Christ, seen from this point of view, is to set humanity in a right relationship with God.

When sin is considered as defilement that requires cleansing, the most straightforward affirmation is that “the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanses us from all sin” (1 John 1:7). The effect of His death is to purify a conscience that has been polluted by sin. The same thought is expressed by the writer of the Book of Hebrews. He speaks of various materials that were prescribed by Israel’s ceremonial law to deal with forms of ritual pollution, which was an external matter. Then he asks, "How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (Heb. 9:14). Spiritual defilement calls for spiritual cleansing, and this is what the death of Christ has accomplished.

When sin is considered as slavery from which the slave must be set free, then the death of Christ is spoken of as a ransom or a means of redemption. Jesus Himself declared that He came "to give His life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:45). Paul not only spoke of sin as slavery; he also personified sin as a slaveowner who compels his slaves to obey his evil orders. When they are set free from his control by the death of Christ to enter the service of God, they find this service, by contrast, to be perfect freedom.

The idea of sin as a debt that must be canceled is based on the teaching of Jesus. In Jesus' parable of the creditor and the two debtors (Luke 7:40–43), the creditor forgave them both when they could make no repayment. But the debtor who owed the larger sum, and therefore had more cause to love the forgiving creditor, represented the woman whose "sins, which are many, are forgiven" (Luke 7:47). This is similar to Paul's reference to God as "having canceled the bond which stood against us with its legal demands" (Col. 2:14, NRSV).

Paul's words in Colossians 2:15 speak of the "principalities and powers" as a personification of the hostile forces in the world that have conquered men and women and held them as prisoners of war. There was no hope of successful resistance against them until Christ confronted them. It looked as if they had conquered Him too, but on the cross He conquered death itself, along with all other hostile forces. In His victory all who believe in Him have a share: "Thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15:57).

Sin is also viewed as estrangement, or alienation, from God. In this case, the saving work of Christ includes the reconciliation of sinners to God. The initiative in this reconciling work is taken by God: "God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself" (2 Cor. 5:19). God desires the well-being of sinners; so He sends Christ as the agent of His reconciling grace to them (Col. 1:20).

Those who are separated from God by sin are also estranged from one another. Accordingly, the work of Christ that reconciles sinners to God also brings them together as human beings. Hostile divisions of humanity have peace with one another through Him. Paul celebrated the way in which the work of Christ overcame the mutual estrangement of Jews and Gentiles: “For He Himself is our peace, who has made both one, and has broken down the middle wall of division between us” (Eph. 2:14).

When the work of Christ is pictured in terms of an atoning sacrifice, it is God who takes the initiative. The word “propitiation,” used in this connection in older English versions of the Bible (Rom. 3:25; 1 John 2:2; 4:10), does not mean that sinful men and women have to do something to appease God or turn away His anger; neither does it mean that Christ died on the cross to persuade God to be merciful to sinners. It is the nature of God to be a pardoning God. He has revealed His pardoning nature above all in the person and work of Christ. This saving initiative is equally and eagerly shared by Christ: He gladly cooperates with the Father’s purpose for the redemption of the world.

The present work of Christ—The present work of Christ begins with His exaltation by God, after the completion of His “finished” work in His death and resurrection.

The first aspect of His present work was the sending of the Holy Spirit to dwell in His people. “If I do not go away,” He had said to his disciples in the Upper Room, “the Helper will not come to you; but if I depart, I will send Him to you” (John 16:7). The fulfillment of this promise was announced by Peter on the Day of Pentecost: “Therefore being exalted to the right hand of God, and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He poured out this which you now see and hear” (Acts 2:33).

The promise of the Holy Spirit can be traced back to John the Baptist, who prophesied that the One who was to come after him, mightier than himself, would “baptize you with the Holy Spirit” (Mark 1:8).

But the present work of Christ that receives the main emphasis in the New Testament is His intercession. Paul, quoting what appears to be an early Christian confession of faith, spoke of “Christ who died, and furthermore is also risen, who is even at the right hand of God, who also makes intercession for us” (Rom. 8:34). So too, the writer to the Hebrews says that “He ever lives to make intercession” for His people (Heb. 7:25). He describes in detail Jesus’ exceptional qualifications to be their high priest.

Jesus’ presence with God as His people’s representative provides the assurance that their requests for spiritual help are heard and granted. To know that He is there is a powerful incentive for His followers. No good thing that Jesus seeks for them is withheld by the Father.

The exaltation of Christ is repeatedly presented in the New Testament as the fulfillment of Psalm 110:1: “Sit at My right hand, till I make Your enemies Your footstool.” This means that Christ reigns from His present place of exaltation and must do so until all His enemies are overthrown. Those enemies belong to the spiritual realm: “The last enemy that will be destroyed is death” (1 Cor. 15:26). With the destruction of death, which occurred with the resurrection of Jesus, the present phase of Christ’s work gives way to His future work.

The future work of Christ—During His earthly ministry, Jesus declared that He had even greater works to do in the future. He specified two of these greater works: the raising of the dead and the passing of final judgment. To raise the dead and to judge the world are prerogatives of God, but He delegated these works to His Son. While the Son would discharge these two functions at the time of the end, they were not unrelated to the events of Jesus’ present ministry. Those who were spiritually dead received new life when they responded in faith to the Son of God. In effect, they were passing judgment on themselves as they accepted or rejected the life He offered.

The raising of the dead and the passing of judgment are associated with the second coming of Christ. When Paul dealt with this subject, he viewed Christ’s appearing in glory as the occasion when His people would share His glory and be displayed to the universe as the sons and daughters of God, heirs of the new order. He added that all creation looks forward to that time, because then it “will be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God” (Rom. 8:21).

Both the present work of Christ and His future work are dependent on His “finished” work. That “finished” work was the beginning of God’s “good work” in His people. This work will not be completed until “the day of Jesus Christ” (Phil. 1:6), when the entire universe will be united “in Christ” (Eph. 1:10).

ASLEEP IN THE STORM

1 Jesus calls His 12 disciples on a hill.

2 Jesus and the disciples went home (to Capernaum, where Jesus made his headquarters). Jesus was so busy teaching the crowds that He hardly had time to eat.

3 The disciples and Jesus set out on the Sea of Galilee in the evening.

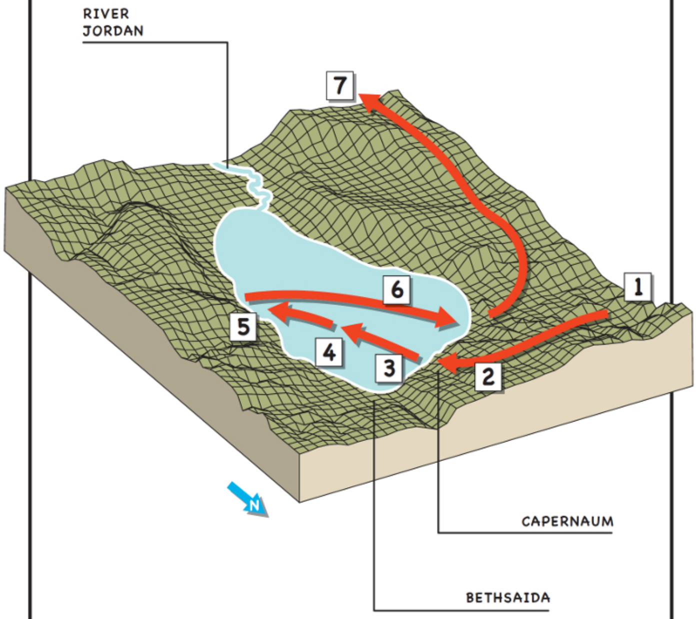
4 A great storm threatens to sink the boat – but Jesus is asleep. The disciples wake him and He calms the storm with a command.

5 They arrive in the territory of Gerasa or Gadara. There Jesus casts out demons from a man.

6 Jesus and the disciples re-cross the lake. Jesus brings Jairus's daughter to life and heals a woman who touched His coat.

7 They go to Nazareth, where Jesus is rejected. He sends out His 12 disciples to preach, heal and cast out demons.

The order of events according to Mark 3:13–6:13. Many incidental details show these to be eyewitness accounts, probably told to Mark by Peter.



THE LAST 24 HOURS

1 Jesus and His disciples eat the Passover at a secret location – the Upper Room (Mark 14:12–26).

2 Judas leaves at night to betray Jesus (John 13:21–30).

3 In Gethsemane, Jesus prays while the disciples sleep (Mark 14:32–42).

4 Judas leads Roman soldiers and temple guards to arrest Jesus. The disciples flee (Mark 14:43–52).

5 Jesus appears before Annas (father-in-law to Caiaphas), to decide the charge (John 18:12–14).

6 Jesus appears before Caiaphas (High Priest) and the Jewish Council. Witnesses disagree. Jesus refuses to answer questions. He is convicted of blasphemy. Peter denies knowing Jesus (Mark 14:53–72).

7 In the early morning, Jesus is taken to Pilate's palace, and charged with political crimes. Pilate thinks Jesus is innocent (Luke 23:1–5).

8 Pilate sends Jesus to Herod Antipas (who had executed John the Baptist) at his palace. Jesus refuses to talk. Herod and some soldiers dress Jesus up as a king (Luke 23:6–12).

9 Pilate offers to release Jesus, but the crowd chooses Barabbas. Jesus is condemned on Gabbatha, a pavement outside palace (John 18:38–19:16).

10 Judas hears and tries to return his betrayal payment to the priests.

11 Judas commits suicide (Matthew 27:3–10).

12 Soldiers mock Jesus (Matthew 27:27-31).

13 On Golgotha (the "Skull"). Jesus is crucified (Matthew 27:32–50).

JESUS JUSTUS (see JUSTUS).

JESUS, SON OF SIRACH—the author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, also called The Wisdom of Jesus, Son of Sirach—one of the longer books of the APOCRYPHA.

JETHER [JEE thur] (abundance)—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Gideon, called his "firstborn" (Judg. 8:20–21).
2. An Ishmaelite (1 Chr. 2:17), also called "Jithra, an Israelite" (2 Sam. 17:25). He was the father of Amasa (1 Kin. 2:5).
3. One of the sons of Jada, a descendant of Judah through Jerahmeel (1 Chr. 2:32).
4. A son of Ezrah and a descendant of Caleb the spy (1 Chr. 4:17).

5. An Asherite and the father of Jephunneh, Pispah, and Ara (1 Chr. 7:38). Also see JITHRAN.

JETHETH [JEE theth]—a chief of Esau (Gen. 36:40), or Edom (1 Chr. 1:51).

JETHLAH [JETH luh]—a village of the tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:42; Ithlah, NIV, NRSV; Jithlah, REB).

JETHRO [JETH roe] (his excellency)—the father-in-law of Moses (Ex. 3:1), also called Reuel (Ex. 2:18), Hobab (Judg. 4:11), and Raguel (Num. 10:29; Reuel, NIV).

After Moses fled from Egypt into the region of the Sinai Peninsula, he married one of Jethro's daughters, Zipporah (Ex. 2:21). Then Moses tended Jethro's sheep for forty years (Acts 7:30) before his experience at the burning bush (Exodus 3), when he was called to lead the Israelites from bondage in Egypt.

During the Exodus, Jethro and the rest of Moses' family joined Moses in the wilderness near Mount Sinai (Ex. 18:5). During this visit, Jethro taught Moses to delegate his responsibilities. He noted that Moses was doing all the work himself and advised Moses to decide the difficult cases and to secure able men to make decisions in lesser matters (Ex. 18:13–23). Following this meeting, Jethro departed from the Israelites.

JETUR [JEE tuhr]—a son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:15). His tribe warred against the tribes of Reuben and Gad and the half-tribe of Manasseh (1 Chr. 5:19).

JEUEL [JOO uhl]—a descendant of Zerah. Jeuel and his clan lived in Jerusalem after the captivity (1 Chr. 9:6). Also see JEIEL.

JEUSH [JEE uhsh]—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Esau and Aholibamah (Gen. 36:5, 14, 18).
2. A Benjamite, son of Bilhan (1 Chr. 7:10).
3. A son of Eshek and a descendant of King Saul (1 Chr. 8:39; Jehush, KJV).
4. A son of Shimei and a Gershonite Levite (1 Chr. 23:10–11).
5. A son of King Rehoboam and grandson of King Solomon (2 Chr. 11:19).

JEUZ [JEE uhz] (he counsels)—a son of Shaharaim and Hodesh (1 Chr. 8:10).

JEWELER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

JEWELRY—objects of precious metals often set with gems and worn for personal adornment. Since the beginning of history, people have adorned themselves with various kinds of jewelry. To be elaborately decorated with jewelry in the ancient world was a symbol of wealth and status (2 Sam. 1:10; Dan. 5:7, 16, 29). The materials commonly used for jewelry were stone, metals, gems, ivory, shells, and carved horns.

The art of making jewelry probably developed very early in Egypt. It was known throughout the biblical world. The Hebrews learned this skill from foreign influences, probably from Egypt (Ex. 32:2–3), and obtained much of their jewelry from spoils of war.

The people of the ancient world placed much value on personal ornaments for political and religious purposes. The priestly garments of Aaron the HIGH PRIEST were elaborately decorated with jewels. The breastplate contained twelve engraved gems (Ex. 28:17–21). The shoulder pieces of the EPHOD were engraved onyx stones (Ex. 28:9–12). During Bible times, crowns were also set with gems (Zech. 9:16). Many ornaments were donated to build the tabernacle (Ex. 35:22) and to decorate the temple (1 Kin. 7:17).

Bracelets were worn by both men and women. They were made of bronze, silver, iron, and gold. Sometimes many bracelets were worn on each arm, covering the entire lower arm. Rebekah's gift from Abraham included a gold bracelet (Gen. 24:22). King Saul wore a bracelet or armlet (2 Sam. 1:10).

Ornaments for the ankles were worn by the women. These were usually made from the same material as the bracelets. Sometimes ANKLETS were fashioned to make a tinkling sound when walking, bringing more attention to the wearer. ANKLE CHAINS were often attached to the feet to encourage smaller steps. The prophet Isaiah disapproved of this practice among the women of Jerusalem (Is. 3:18–21).

Both men and women of Bible times wore necklaces (Judg. 8:25–26). They were made of various metals, often inlaid with precious stones. Necklaces of beads made from stone or jewels were strung with cord. Sometimes crescents, bottles, or other pendants were attached to the necklaces (Is. 3:18). Gold chains were given to Joseph (Gen. 41:42) and Daniel (Dan. 5:29), indicating their high positions in government.

Earrings were worn by men, women, and children in the ancient world (Ex. 32:2–3; Num. 31:50; Judg. 8:25–26). They were loops worn alone or with pendants attached. Earrings were made from various metals and stones and were sometimes inlaid with gems. Nose rings were worn mostly by women (Gen. 24:47) and were sometimes decorated with jewels (Is. 3:21).

Most men wore signet rings for business purposes. These rings were engraved with the owner's name or symbol to show authority or ownership (Gen. 38:18; Ex. 28:11; Esth. 8:8; Dan. 6:17). The signet rings were worn on the finger or strung around the neck. They were usually made of gold and set with an engraved gem. Signet rings were given as gifts for the tabernacle (Ex. 35:22).

In the New Testament jewels were worn much the same way as in the Old Testament. The Greeks emphasized fine, delicately worked jewelry, while the Roman jewelry was much heavier and more elaborate. In the early church the wearing of jewelry was not considered a Christian virtue by the apostle Paul, who exhorted women to modesty (1 Tim. 2:9). James apparently also had a dim view of jewelry (James 2:2).

JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES—Gems held a significant place in the life of the Hebrew people and the surrounding nations. In the ancient world the use of precious stones dates back thousands of years before Christ. Many myths and superstitions about their use existed. People attributed magical powers to many gems and even worshiped some of them. This practice is not evident in the Old Testament; the Hebrew people valued gems for their beauty, usefulness, and hardness.

No gem deposits existed in the land of Palestine. The Israelites secured their jewels from surrounding nations, which resulted in the art of cutting and engraving gems. Precious stones are mentioned thirteen times in the Old Testament, and over twenty specific gems are named in the entire Bible. Since the Hebrews described gems by color or hardness, their precise identification is often difficult.

The majority of gems mentioned in the Old Testament are represented in Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:17–20; 39:10–13). Nine of them are mentioned in Ezekiel 28:13, the jacinth, agate, and amethyst being omitted. Jerome (fifth century A.D.) and others have attempted to establish a relationship between the twelve stones in Aaron's breastplate, the twelve months of the year, and the twelve signs in the zodiac; however, there is no indication of this in Scripture.

The Bible mentions gems used for personal adornment (Ex. 11:2; Is. 61:10) and as gifts (1 Kin. 10:2; Ezek. 16:11, 39). The crown David took from the king of Rabbah was set with gems. "Then he took their king's crown from his head. Its weight was a talent of gold, with precious stones" (2 Sam. 12:30). Precious stones were also used to illustrate spiritual truths (Prov. 11:22; 20:15; Matt. 13:45–46). Amber, coral, and pearls are not actually gemstones, but were as highly prized among the ancients as precious stones.

The following gems and precious stones are mentioned in the Bible.

Adamant. A hard stone of superior strength. The exact identity of this substance is unknown; but it is believed to be corundum, the hardest of all minerals next to the diamond. Pure corundum is colorless; it is the source of such gems as rubies and sapphires.

Because of its hardness, the prophet Ezekiel used adamant as a symbol of the stubborn will of the rebellious Israelites. God strengthened the prophet with a "forehead like adamant stone, harder than flint" to preach to the Israelites (Ezek. 3:9; emery, NASB). Other English translations render the Hebrew word for adamant as diamond (Jer. 17:1, KJV, NASB, NRSV) or flint (Jer. 17:1, NIV).

Also see Diamond.

Agate. One of many fibrous varieties of quartz. Agate is a form of chalcedony with bands or patterns of various colors. The word comes from a Greek term for the river in Sicily where this stone was abundant. It was also found in Egypt, Arabia, and India. The agate was the middle stone in the third row of Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:19; 39:12). The agate was also useful for ornaments (beads) and was considered by the superstitious to possess magical powers.

Also see Chalcedony.

Amber. Fossilized resin formed from the sap of various trees. The ancient Greeks and Romans regarded amber as a gem and used it for beads and other ornaments. Amber is yellowish-orange and can be polished to a high gloss. Apparently abundant in northern Europe, it reached other countries through trade.

The prophet Ezekiel mentioned amber three times. Each time he described it as a brilliant substance (Ezek. 1:4, 27; 8:2). Other English translations use the words gleaming amber (NRSV), brass (REB), metal (NASB, NIV) or sapphire (REB) rather than amber. Whatever the nature of this substance, Ezekiel compared its brilliance to the awe-inspiring glory of God.

Amethyst. A variety of the mineral corundum. Its color varied from light to deep violet and was used for jewelry. It was known in Egypt, India and Ceylon. Amethyst was the third stone in the third row of Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:19; 39:12; jasper, REB). It was also included in the foundation of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20).

Bdellium. A substance found in Havilah in Arabia, a land noted for its precious stones and aromatic gum. With the same color as manna, bdellium was considered to be a gum resin (Num. 11:7). In the Numbers passage, the word for bdellium is rendered as bdellium (REB) and resin (NIV) by some translations. But in Genesis 2:12, bdellium was associated with gold and therefore it was considered a precious stone. Some scholars suggest that bdellium jewels were pearls from the Persian Gulf.

Beryl. A rare silver-white metal similar to aluminum. Beryl ranged in color from bluish green to yellow, white, pink and deep green. It was the first stone in the fourth row of Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:20; 39:13). Other English translations render the word for beryl as chrysolite (NIV) and topaz (REB). The wheels in the prophet Ezekiel's visions were described as resembling beryl (Ezek. 1:16; 10:9; Tarshish stone, NASB). The beryl was also the eighth foundation stone in the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20).

Carbuncle (see Emerald; Turquoise).

Carnelian (see Sardius).

Chalcedony. A translucent variety of quartz occurring in a variety of colors. Chalcedony received its name from Chalcedon, a city in Asia Minor. Agate, bloodstone, carnelian, chrysoprase, flint, jasper, and onyx are all varieties of chalcedony. The chalcedony was the third stone in the foundation of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:19; agate, NRSV). Also see Agate; Chrysoprase.

Chrysolite. A yellow stone that could have been the same as topaz or some other yellow gem such as beryl, zircon, or a yellow quartz. Its name comes from a Greek word that means "gold stone." Chrysolite was the seventh stone in the foundation of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20). The chrysolite known today is the peridot, an olive green silicate of magnesium and iron. This is not believed to be the same gem as that referred to by the Book of Revelation.

Chrysoprase. A variety of chalcedony. Chrysoprase had a light green color. Jewelry made from this precious stone has been found in ancient Egyptian graves. It was the tenth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20; chrysoprasus, KJV). Also see Chalcedony.

Chrysoprasus (see Chrysoprase).

Coral. A limestone formation produced by certain kinds of marine life. Coral is not a mineral, but it does contain the mineral calcite because of its long exposure to seawater.

When the term coral was applied to jewelry, it referred to precious coral—a substance with a polished surface highly prized in the ancient world for various kinds of jewelry (Job 28:18; Ezek. 27:16). It was believed to possess magical powers.

Precious coral was formed in the shape of branches, or small bushes, and was found in the warm waters of the Mediterranean Sea and the Red Sea. The colors included many shades of red.

Cornelian (see Onyx).

Crystal. A colorless transparent quartz or rock (Job 28:17; Rev. 4:6). Crystal was used as jewelry for ornaments. In Roman times it was carved into various household utensils.

There are several different words for crystal in the original languages of the Bible. These words suggest that the pearl and glass (Job 28:17–18, NRSV) may have been called crystal, too.

Diamond. Pure crystallized carbon, the diamond is the hardest mineral known. The Hebrew word rendered “diamond” in Exodus 28:18; 39:11; and Ezekiel 28:13 by the KJV and NKJV must have been some other hard stone. The diamond was not identified in the Mediterranean lands until the first century. Other English translations render the word as emerald (NIV), jade (REB), and jasper (NRSV).

Emerald. A deep green variety of beryl. The emerald was found in Egypt, Cyprus, and Ethiopia. It was the third jewel in the first row of Aaron’s breastplate (Ex. 28:17; 39:10). Emeralds were also an article of trade between Tyre and Syria (Ezek. 27:16). The emerald was the fourth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:19), and was used to describe the rainbow around the throne (Rev. 4:3).

Emery (see Adamant).

Flint (see Diamond).

Gem. Many precious gems were known in Bible times. Special value was attached to each because of its beauty, rarity, and durability. Although the modern method of cutting gems was not known during Bible times, ancient gem cutters rounded and polished each stone, engraving some for seals or signet rings (1 Kin. 21:8; Esth. 3:10). They were also used for various kinds of jewelry (Ex. 11:2) and as gifts (Gen. 24:22). Precious stones in general are often referred to as gems in the Bible.

Glass (see Crystal).

Green Felspar (see Emerald).

Green Jasper (see Jasper).

Gum Resin (see Bdellium).

Jacinth. A yellow-orange variety of the mineral zircon. The jacinth was the first stone in the third row of Aaron’s breastplate (Ex. 28:19; 39:12; ligure, KJV). In the New Testament the jacinth was the eleventh foundation stone in the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20; turquoise, REB).

Jade (see Diamond).

Jasper. An opaque variety of chalcedony, or quartz. Jasper is usually red because of the presence of iron, but it can be brown, yellow, or green. It was the third stone in the fourth row of Aaron’s breastplate (Ex. 28:20; 39:13; green jasper, REB). The Book of Revelation describes the One on the throne as “like a jasper” (Rev. 4:3). The brilliance of the New Jerusalem was “as a jasper, clear as crystal” (Rev. 21:11).

Lapis Lazuli (see Sapphire).

Ligure (see Jacinth).

Onyx. A form of chalcedony with contrasting layers of colors in parallel lines. The colors are usually black and white or brown and white.

The onyx was used for engraving seals and for various ornaments. It was included in the treasures from Havilah, in Arabia (Gen. 2:12). The shoulder stones of Aaron's ephod were onyx with the names of six tribes of Israel engraved on each stone (Ex. 28:9). It was also the second stone in the fourth row of Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:20; 39:6). David included the onyx in the material he gathered for the temple (1 Chr. 29:2). Job considered the wisdom from God a greater possession than even the precious onyx (Job 28:16). The REB renders the word for onyx in all these passages as cornelian.

Pearl. A white translucent jewel created within certain species of mollusks. Although pearls are not minerals, they are composed of mineral substances; and they always have held an important place among the gemstones of the ancient world. Pearls were produced in the Persian Gulf, the Red Sea, and the Indian Ocean.

Pearls were considered valuable jewels and were used for various ornaments. Jesus referred to pearls in a figurative manner to speak of wise thoughts (Matt. 7:6; 13:45–46). Paul admonished women not to adorn themselves with pearls (1 Tim. 2:9). In John's vision of the New Jerusalem, "the twelve gates were twelve pearls: each individual gate was of one pearl" (Rev. 21:21). Jesus taught that people could possess the world's greatest treasure, the "one pearl of great price" (Matt. 13:46)—the spiritual wealth of the kingdom of heaven.

Purple Garnet (see Emerald; Turquoise).

Red Jasper (see Ruby).

Resin (see Bdellium).

Ruby. A variety of corundum, the hardest of all minerals next to the diamond. The ruby has a deep red color because of traces of chromium. Rubies are the rarest and most precious of all jewels. Thus, they serve in the Bible as an appropriate standard for comparing other things that are even more precious (wisdom, knowledge, a good wife, etc). The Hebrew word translated rubies in the NKJV and KJV may have been pink pearl or red coral (Job 28:18; Prov. 3:15; 8:11; 20:15; 31:10; Lam. 4:7). Other words for ruby used by other English translations are agate (Is. 54:12, KJV; rubies, NRSV); red jasper (Is. 54:12, REB); and coral (Lam. 4:7, NASB, REB, NRSV).

Sapphire. The modern sapphire, a blue variety of corundum, was probably not used until the third century B.C. The Hebrew word for sapphire refers to lapis lazuli—a silicate of alumina, calcium, and sodium. It was highly regarded as an ornamental stone (Song 5:14; Lam. 4:7; Ezek. 28:13). Rich beds of sapphire were found in the mountainous regions of ancient Persia deposited in limestone rock.

Sapphire was the second jewel in the second row of Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:18; 39:11). It was also the second stone in the foundation of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:19).

Sardin (see Sardius).

Sardius. A red stone, considered by many to be carnelian, a reddish-brown variety of chalcedony. Sardius was used for jewelry and for royal seals. Archaeologists have found many items of jewelry made from sardius in tombs and cities of Egypt and Palestine. It was the first stone in the first row of Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:17; 39:10) and was included in the adornment of the King of Tyre (Ezek. 28:12–13). Sardius was also the sixth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20).

Other words for sardius used by translations of the Bible are ruby, sardin, and carnelian.

Sardonyx. A red and white variety of chalcedony. Sardonyx is mentioned only once in the Bible as the fifth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20; onyx, NRSV). Sardonyx was obtained in Arabia and India and used for cameos and signet rings. Some scholars believe the Hebrew word translated as onyx may refer to sardonyx. Also see Onyx.

Tarshish Stone (see Beryl).

Topaz. A yellowish-green form of chrysolite, the topaz was the second gem in the first row of Aaron's breastplate (Ex. 28:17; 39:10; chrysolite, REB). The "topaz of Ethiopia" (Job 28:19) was famous for its quality. The topaz was also the ninth foundation stone of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20).

Turquoise. A deep green stone similar to the emerald. The only reference to turquoise in the NKJV occurs in the prophet Ezekiel's description of the adornment of the King of Tyre (Ezek. 28:13; emerald, KJV; turquoise, NRSV; purple garnet, REB). Many scholars believe this stone is essentially the same as the emerald. Also see Emerald.

JEWS—a name applied first to the people living in Judah (when the Israelites were divided into the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah); after the Babylonian captivity, all the descendants of Abraham were called "Jews." The term is used in the New Testament for all Israelites as opposed to the "Gentiles," or those of non-Jewish blood. Since a number of Jews (especially the Jewish leaders) were hostile toward Jesus' ministry, the New Testament sometimes speaks simply of "the Jews" (John 6:41), when it really means "those Jews who did not believe in Jesus." This is especially true in John's Gospel (John 5:16, 18; 6:41, 52; 7:1).

Because the Jews were God's Chosen People, Paul could speak of the true "Jew" as being the person who pleases God, whatever his race (Rom. 2:28–29). In the Christian church, distinctions between "Jews" and "Greeks" (or Jewish people and foreigners) are wiped away (Gal. 3:28; Col. 3:11).

JEZANIAH [jez uh NIGH uh] (the Lord hears)—one of the Judahite "captains" who allied himself with Gedaliah and remained at Mizpah after Judah was deported to Babylon. He was a son of Hoshaiah the Maachathite (Jer. 40:8; 42:1). He is also called Jaazaniah (2 Kin. 25:23).

JEZEBEL [JEZ uh bel] (there is no prince)—the name of two women in the Bible:

1. The wife of Ahab, king of Israel, and mother of Ahaziah, Jehoram, and Athaliah (1 Kin. 16:31). Jezebel was a tyrant who corrupted her husband, as well as the nation, by promoting pagan worship.

   She was reared in Sidon, a commercial city on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, known for its idolatry and vice. When she married Ahab and moved to Jezreel, a city that served the Lord, she decided to turn it into a city that worshiped BAAL, a Phoenician god.

   The wicked, idolatrous queen soon became the power behind the throne. Obedient to her wishes, Ahab erected a sanctuary for Baal and supported hundreds of pagan prophets (1 Kin. 18:19).

   When the prophets of the Lord opposed Jezebel, she had them "massacred" (1 Kin. 18:4, 13). After Elijah defeated her prophets on Mount Carmel, she swore revenge. She was such a fearsome figure that the great prophet was afraid and “ran for his life” (1 Kin. 19:3).

After her husband Ahab was killed in battle, Jezebel reigned for ten years through her sons Ahaziah and Joram (or Jehoram). These sons were killed by Jehu, who also disposed of Jezebel by having her thrown from the palace window. In fulfillment of the prediction of the prophet Elijah, Jezebel was trampled by the horses and eaten by the dogs (1 Kin. 21:19). Only Jezebel’s skull, feet, and the palms of her hands were left to bury when the dogs were finished (2 Kin. 9:30–37).

One truth that emerges from Jezebel’s life is that God balances the scales of justice. Wickedness may prevail for a season, but His righteousness will eventually triumph over the forces of evil.

2. A prophetess of Thyatira who enticed the Christians in that church “to commit sexual immorality and to eat things sacrificed to idols” (Rev. 2:20). John probably called this woman “Jezebel” because of her similarity to Ahab’s idolatrous and wicked queen.

JEZER [JEE zur]—a son of Naphtali (Gen. 46:24) and founder of a tribal family, the JEZERITES (Num. 26:49).

JEZERITES [JEE zur ights]—descendants of JEZER (Num. 26:49).

JEZIAH [juh ZIGH uh]—a son of Parosh who divorced his pagan wife (Ezra 10:25; Izziah, NIV, NRSV).

JEZIEL [JEE zih uhl]—a son of Azmaveth who, with his brother Pelet, joined David’s army at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:1–3).

JEZLIAH [jez LIGH uh]—a form of JIZLIAH.

JEZRAHIAH [jez ruh HIGH uh] (the Lord is shining)—director of the singers at the rededication of the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:42). He may have been the same person as IZRAHIAH (1 Chr. 7:3).

JEZREEL [JEZ reel] (God scatters)—the name of two people, two cities, and a valley or plain in the Old Testament:

1. A man of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:3).
2. A symbolic name given by the prophet Hosea to his oldest son (Hos. 1:4). The name Jezreel signified the great slaughter that God would bring on the house of Jehu because of the violent acts he had committed (2 Kings 9).

3. A city in the hill country of Judah, near Jokdeam and Zanoah (Josh. 15:56). Apparently David obtained one of his wives from this place (1 Sam. 25:43). The site is probably present-day Khirbet Terrama on the Plain of Dibleh.
4. A city in northern Israel, on the Plain of Jezreel about 90 kilometers (56 miles) north of Jerusalem. The city was in the territory of Issachar, but it belonged to the tribe of Manasseh (Josh. 19:18). It was between Megiddo and Beth Shean (1 Kin. 4:12) and between Mount Carmel and Mount Gilboa. The palace of King Ahab of Israel was situated in Jezreel. Here Jezebel and all the others associated with Ahab's reign were assassinated by the followers of Jehu (2 Kings 9–10). The city of Jezreel has been identified with modern Zer'in.
5. The Old Testament name of the entire valley that separates Samaria from Galilee (Josh. 17:16). Some authors now refer to the western part of this valley as ESDRAELON (Greek for "Jezreel"), while the name Jezreel is restricted to the eastern part of the valley.

   The entire valley is the major corridor through the rugged Palestinian hills. It was a crossroads of two major routes: one leading from the Mediterranean Sea on the west to the Jordan River Valley on the east, the other leading from Syria, Phoenicia, and Galilee in the north to the hill country of Judah and to the land of Egypt on the south. Throughout history, the Valley of Jezreel has been a major battlefield of nations.

Also see ARMAGEDDON.

• The Valley of Jezreel, which separated the province of Galilee from the district of Samaria. A rich agricultural district, it was the scene of many battles in the ancient world.

JEZREELITE [JEZ reel ite]—a name applied to NABOTH, who had a vineyard in Jezreel (1 Kin. 21:1, 4, 6–7, 15–16). Jezebel conspired to murder Naboth and seize his vineyard (1 Kings 21).

JEZREELITESS [JEZ ree ehl eye tis]—a female inhabitant of JEZREEL, a town in Judah's hill country. One of the first two wives of David was Ahinoam the Jezreelitess (1 Sam. 27:3; 1 Chr. 3:1).

JIBSAM [JIB suhm]—a son of Tola and a warrior in David's army (1 Chr. 7:2; Ibsam, NIV, NRSV).

JIDLAPH [JID laf]—a son of Nahor (Gen. 22:22).

JIMNAH [JIM nuh]—the firstborn son of Asher (Gen. 46:17) and the founder of the JIMNITES (Num. 26:44; Jimna). He is also called Imnah (1 Chr. 7:30) and Imna (Num. 26:44, REB).

JIMNITES [JIM nights]—descendants of JIMNAH (Num. 26:44).

JIPHTAH [JIF tuh] ([God] breaks through)—a city in the Shephelah (lowland plains) of Judah (Josh. 15:43; Iphtah, NIV, NRSV).

JIPHTHAH EL [JIF thuh el] (God breaks through)—a valley in Zebulun, on the border between the land allotted to the tribes of Zebulun and Asher (Josh. 19:14, 27; Iphtah El, NIV; Iphtahel, NRSV; Jiphtah-el, REB; Jiphthah-el, KJV).

JISHUI [JISH yoo eye]—a son of King Saul by his wife Ahinoam (1 Sam. 14:49). Other spellings are Ishui, KJV; Ishvi, NIV, NRSV; and Ishyo, REB.

JISSHIAH [jish EYE uh]—one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 12:6; Jesiah, KJV; Isshiah, NIV, NRSV, REB).

JITHLAH [JITH luh]—a form of JETHLAH.

JITHRA [JITH ruh] (excellence)—an Israelite who fathered Amasa by Abigail, David's sister or half-sister (2 Sam. 17:25; Ithra, KJV, NRSV, REB; Jether, NIV). Amasa later became the commander of Absalom's rebel army (2 Sam. 19:13; 20:4–12).

JITHRAN [JITH ran] (abundance)—a son of Zophah, of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:37; Ithran, KJV, NIV, NRSV). Apparently, he is the same person as Jether (1 Chr. 7:38).

JIZLIAH [jiz LIGH uh] (the Lord delivers)—a son of Elpaal (1 Chr. 8:18; Jezliah, KJV, REB; Izliah, NRSV, NIV, NASB).

JIZRI [JIZ righ]—a Levite and head of the fourth course of musicians for the sanctuary (1 Chr. 25:11; Izri, KJV). He is also called Zeri (1 Chr. 25:3), a son of Jeduthun.

JOAB [JO ab] (the Lord is father)—the name of three men and one village in the Old Testament:

1. One of the three sons of Zeruiah (2 Sam. 2:13; 8:16; 14:1; 17:25; 23:18, 37; 1 Kin. 1:7; 2:5, 22; 1 Chr. 11:6, 39; 18:15; 26:28; 27:24) who was David's sister (or half-sister). Joab was the "general" or commander-in-chief of David's army (2 Sam. 5:8; 1 Chr. 11:6; 27:34).

   Joab's father is not mentioned by name, but his tomb was at Bethlehem (2 Sam. 2:32). Joab's two brothers were Abishai and Asahel. When Asahel was killed by Abner (2 Sam. 2:18–23), Joab got revenge by killing Abner (2 Sam. 3:22–27).

When David and his army went to Jerusalem, in an attempt to capture that city (then called Jebus), he said, “Whoever attacks the Jebusites first shall be chief and captain” (1 Chr. 11:6). Joab led the assault at the storming of the Jebusite stronghold on Mount Zion, apparently climbing up into the city by way of a water shaft. The city was captured and Joab was made the general of David’s army (2 Sam. 5:8).

Other military exploits by Joab were achieved against the Edomites (2 Sam. 8:13–14; 1 Kin. 11:15) and the Ammonites (2 Sam. 10:6–14; 11:1–27; 1 Chr. 19:6–15; 20:1–3). His character was deeply stained, as was David’s, by his participation in the death of Uriah the Hittite (2 Sam. 11:14–25). In putting Absalom to death (2 Sam. 18:1–14), he apparently acted from a sense of duty.

When Absalom revolted against David, Joab remained loyal to David. Soon afterward, however, David gave command of his army to Amasa, Joab’s cousin (2 Sam. 19:13; 20:1–13). Overcome by jealous hate, Joab killed Amasa (2 Sam. 20:8–13).

Another of David’s sons, Adonijah, aspired to the throne, refusing to accept the fact that Solomon was not only David’s choice but also the Lord’s choice as the new king. Joab joined the cause of Adonijah against Solomon. Joab was killed by Benaiah, in accordance with Solomon’s command and David’s wishes. Joab fled to the tabernacle of the Lord, where he grasped the horns of the altar. Benaiah then struck him down with a sword. Joab was buried “in his own house in the wilderness” (1 Kin. 2:34).

2. A village apparently situated in Judah near Bethlehem (1 Chr. 2:54). The KJV translation, “Ataroth, the house of Joab,” is better rendered by the NKJV, “Atroth Beth Joab.”
3. A son of Seraiah and grandson of Kenaz (1 Chr. 4:13–14). He was the “father of Ge-Harashim” (1 Chr. 4:14), or the founder of a place in Judah called the “Valley of Craftsmen.”
4. A man of the house of Pahath-Moab, some of whose descendants returned from the Exile with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:6; 8:9; Neh. 7:11).

JOAH [JOE uh] (the Lord is brother)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. A recorder in the time of King Hezekiah (Is. 36:3).
2. A descendant of Gershon, of the tribe of Levi (1 Chr. 6:21).
3. A gatekeeper in the tabernacle during David's time (1 Chr. 26:4).
4. A son of Joahaz who served as recorder in the time of King Josiah (2 Chr. 34:8).

JOAHAZ [JOE uh haz] (the Lord helps)—the father of JOAH (2 Chr. 34:8).

JOANNA [joe AN uh] (the Lord has been gracious)—the wife of Chuza, the steward of Herod Antipas. Along with Mary Magdalene, Susanna, and others, she provided for the material needs of Jesus and His disciples from her own funds (Luke 8:3). Joanna was one of the women who witnessed the empty tomb and announced Christ's resurrection to the unbelieving apostles (Luke 24:1–10).

JOANNAS [joe AN us]—a son of Rhesa and the father of Judah in the genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:27; Joanan, NIV, NRSV; Joanna, KJV; Johanan, REB).

JOASH, JEHOASH [JOE ash, juh HOE ash] (the Lord supports)—the name of eight men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Gideon (Judg. 6:11). Apparently Joash was an idolater who built an altar to Baal on his land. Gideon pulled down his father's altar, and the men of the city of Ophrah demanded that Joash put his son to death. But Joash refused, saying, "If he [Baal] is a god, let him plead for himself" (Judg. 6:31). After this event, Joash called his son Jerubbaal, which means "Let Baal plead" (Judg. 6:32).
2. A man who was commanded by Ahab, king of Israel, to imprison the prophet Micaiah (1 Kin. 22:26).
3. The eighth king of Judah; he was a son of King Ahaziah (2 Kin. 11:2) by Zibiah of Beersheba (2 Kin. 12:1). Joash was seven years old when he became king, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem (2 Chr. 24:1), from about 835 B.C. until 796 B.C. He is also called Jehoash (2 Kin. 11:21).

   After Ahaziah died, Athaliah killed all the royal heirs to the throne. But God spared Joash through his aunt, Jehosheba, who hid him for six years in the house of the Lord (2 Kin. 11:2–3). When Joash reached the age of seven, Jehoiada the priest arranged for his coronation as king (2 Kin. 11:4–16).

Early in his reign, Joash repaired the temple and restored true religion to Judah, destroying Baal worship (2 Kin. 11:18–21). But the king who began so well faltered upon the loss of his advisor, Jehoiada. After Jehoiada died, Joash allowed idolatry to grow (2 Chr. 24:18). He even went so far as to have Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada, stoned to death for rebuking him (2 Chr. 24:20–22). God's judgment came quickly in the form of a Syrian invasion, which resulted in the wounding of Joash (2 Chr. 24:23–24). He was then killed by his own servants.

4. The thirteenth king of Israel; he was the son and successor of Jehoahaz, king of Israel, and was the grandson of Jehu, king of Israel. He is also called Jehoash (2 Kin. 13:10, 25; 14:8–17). Joash reigned in Samaria for sixteen years (2 Kin. 13:9–10), from about 798 B.C. to 782/81 B.C.

   Israel was revived during the reign of Joash (2 Kin. 13:7), following a long period of suffering at the hands of the Syrians. But while achieving political success, Joash suffered spiritual bankruptcy: "He did evil in the sight of the LORD; he did not depart from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who had made Israel sin; but he walked in them" (2 Kin. 13:11). He was succeeded by his son Jeroboam II.
5. A descendant of Shelah, of the family of Judah (1 Chr. 4:22).
6. A descendant of Becher, of the family of Benjamin (1 Chr. 7:8).
7. A commander of the warriors who left Saul and joined David's army at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:3).
8. An officer in charge of David's olive oil supplies (1 Chr. 27:28).

JOATHAM [JOE uh tham]—a form of JOTHAM.

JOB [jobe]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The third son of Issachar, and founder of a tribal family, the Jashubites (Gen. 46:13). He is also called Jashub (Num. 26:24; 1 Chr. 7:1).
2. The central personality of the Book of Job. He was noted for his perseverance (James 5:11) and unwavering faith in God, in spite of his suffering and moments of frustration and doubt. All the facts known about Job are contained in the Old Testament book that bears his name. He is described as “a man in the land of Uz” (Job 1:1) and “the greatest of all the |people of the East” (Job 1:3). Uz is probably a name for a region in Edom (Jer. 25:20; Lam. 4:21).

A prosperous man, Job had 7,000 sheep, 3,000 camels, 500 yoke of oxen, 500 female donkeys, and a large household, consisting of seven sons and three daughters. He was also “blameless and upright, and one who feared God and shunned evil” (Job 1:1).

Satan suggested to God that Job would remain righteous as long as it was financially profitable for him to do so. Then the Lord permitted Satan to test Job’s faith in God. Blow after blow fell upon Job: his children, his servants, and his livestock were taken from him and he was left penniless. Nevertheless, “In all this Job did not sin nor charge God with wrong” (Job 1:22).

Satan continued his assault by sneering, “Touch his bone and his flesh, and he will surely curse You to Your face!” (Job 2:5). The Lord allowed Satan to afflict Job with painful boils from the soles of his feet to the crown of his head, so that Job sat in the midst of ashes and scraped his sores with a piece of pottery. “Do you still hold fast to your integrity?” his wife asked him. “Curse God and die!” (Job 2:9). But Job refused to curse God. “Shall we indeed accept good from God,” he replied, “and shall we not accept adversity?” (Job 2:10).

Job’s faith eventually triumphed over all adversity, and he was finally restored to more than his former prosperity. He had 14,000 sheep, 6,000 camels, 1,000 yoke of oxen, and 1,000 female donkeys. He also had seven sons and three daughters. He died at a ripe old age (Job 42:12–13, 16–17).

Job is a model of spiritual integrity—a person who held fast to his faith, without understanding the reason behind his suffering. He serves as a continuing witness to the possibility of authentic faith in God in the most troubling of circumstances.

JOB, BOOK OF—an Old Testament book, written in the form of a dramatic poem, that deals with several age-old questions, among them the question of why the righteous suffer. The book takes its name from the main character in the poem, the patriarch Job. Because Job deals with a number of universal questions, it is classified as one of the Wisdom

Books of the Old Testament. Other books of this type are Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon.

Structure of the Book. Job begins with two introductory chapters, in the form of a narrative or prologue, that set the stage for the rest of the book. Chapters 3 through 37 form the main body of the book. These chapters are poems in the form of dramatic dialogues between Job and his friends. Four additional chapters containing God's response to their arguments are also written in poetic form. The book ends with a final narrative or epilogue (42:7–17) that tells what happened to Job after these discussions had ended.

This prologue–body–epilogue format was used often in writings in the ancient world. The author of Job was a literary craftsman who knew how to bring words together in dramatic fashion to drive home his message.

The story of Job opens with a brief description of the man, his possessions, and his family. "Blameless and upright" (1:1), he owned thousands of sheep, camels, oxen, and donkeys. He also had seven sons and three daughters. In simple terms, Job was considered a wealthy man in the tribal culture of the ancient world. But Satan insists that the integrity of this upright man has never been tested. He accuses Job of serving God only because God has protected him and made him wealthy. God grants permission for the testing to begin.

In rapid fashion, Job's sons and daughters are killed and all his flocks are driven away by his enemies. Finally, Job himself is stricken with a terrible skin disease. In his sorrow he sits mourning on an ash heap, scraping his sores with a piece of pottery while he laments his misfortune. This is when Job's three friends—BILDAD; ELIPHAZ, and ZOPHAR—arrive to mourn with him and to offer their comfort.

But instead of comforting Job, these friends launch into long lectures and philosophical debates to show Job the reason for his suffering. Their line of reasoning follows the generally accepted view of their time—that misfortune is always sent by God as punishment for sin. Job argues just as strongly that he is an upright man who has done nothing to deserve such treatment at the hand of God.

Finally, after Job and his friends have debated this question at length and have failed to arrive at a satisfactory solution, God himself speaks from a whirlwind. He does not enter their discussion about why the righteous suffer; He reveals Himself as the powerful, all-knowing God. God's message to Job is that He does not have to explain or justify His actions. He is the sovereign, all-powerful God who always does what is right, although His ways may be beyond human understanding.

Job is humbled by this outpouring of God's power, and he learns to trust where he cannot understand. This leads to his great affirmation of faith, "I have heard of You by the hearing of the ear, but now my eye sees You" (42:5). Then the book closes with the birth of more sons and daughters and Job's rise to a position of even greater wealth and prominence. Job lived out his additional years as a happy, contented man: "So Job died, old and full of days" (42:17).

Authorship and Date. No one knows who wrote the Book of Job. A few scholars have taken the position that it may have been written by Moses. Others have suggested that the patriarch Job himself may have written this account of his experiences. But these theories have no solid evidence to support them. The only thing we can say for certain is that the book was written by an unknown author.

The exact date of the book's writing is still a mystery. Some believe its unknown author put it in writing as late as the second century B.C. Others insist it must have been written about 450 B.C., long after the Jews returned from the captivity in Babylonia. But many conservative scholars assign the writing of the book to the time of King Solomon, about 950 B.C. Historical evidence favors this date, since this was the golden age of biblical Wisdom Literature.

Historical Setting. The events described in the Book of Job must have occurred many centuries before they were finally written. Job may have lived during the time of the patriarch Abraham, about 2000 B.C. Like Abraham, Job's wealth was measured in flocks and herds. In patriarchal fashion, Job's married children were a part of his household, living in separate tents but subject to his rule as leader of the family clan.

This story of Job and his misfortunes was probably passed down by word of mouth from generation to generation for several hundred years. Finally, it was put in writing by an unknown writer during Solomon's time, thus assuring its preservation for all future generations.

Theological Contribution. The Book of Job teaches us to trust God in all circumstances. When we suffer, it usually is a fruitless effort to try to understand the reasons for the difficulty. Sometimes the righteous must suffer without knowing the reason why; that is why it is important to learn to trust God in everything.

This masterful book also shows very clearly that God is not captive to His world, His people, or our views of His nature. God is free; he is subject to no will but His own. He is not bound by our understanding or by our lack of it. Job also discovered that God is a God of great power and majesty. When we see how great He is, we realize just how little we are. Like Job, we want to bow down in humble submission.

The Book of Job also teaches us that God is good, just, and fair in His dealings. He restored Job's fortunes and gave him more than he had ever enjoyed. God always replaces the darkness of our existence with the light of His presence when we remain faithful to Him.

Special Considerations. The dialogue sections of the Book of Job are written in poetry. Great truths are often expressed in such poetic language. These great truths are worth the slow, reflective reading it sometimes takes to grasp their meaning. Great art like that in this book often challenges our understanding. That is why we need to come back to it again and again.

JOBAB [JOE bab]—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Joktan the Shemite (Gen. 10:29; 1 Chr. 1:23).
2. A king of Edom (1 Chr. 1:44–45).
3. A king of Madon, a royal city of the Canaanites (Josh. 11:1).
4. A son of Shaharaim and Hodesh (1 Chr. 8:9).
5. A son of Elpaal (1 Chr. 8:18).

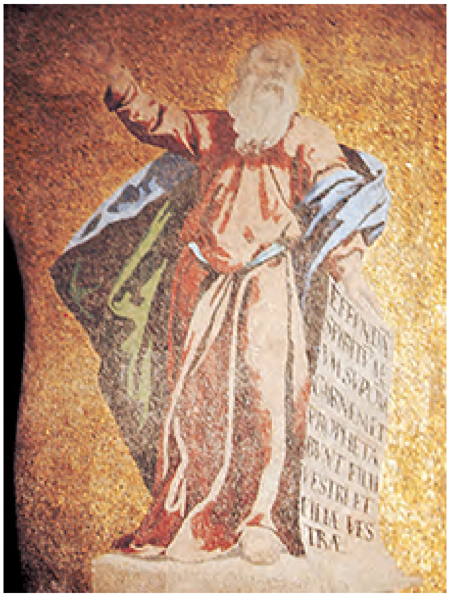
JOCHEBED [JAH kuh bed] (the Lord honors)—a daughter of Levi and the mother of Aaron, Moses, and Miriam. To protect Moses from Pharaoh’s command that every male Hebrew child be killed, she placed him in an ark of bulrushes on the river. After Pharaoh’s daughter discovered the baby, Jochebed became his nurse. She is noted among the heroes of the faith (Heb. 11:23).

JOED [JOE ed] (the Lord is witness)—a Benjamite who lived in Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 11:7).

JOEL [JOE uhl] (the Lord is God)—the name of fourteen men in the Old Testament:

1. The oldest son of Samuel the prophet (1 Sam. 8:2; 1 Chr. 6:28; Vashni, KJV) and the father of Heman the singer (1 Chr. 6:33).
2. A leader of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:35).
3. The father of Shemaiah, of the tribe of Reuben (1 Chr. 5:4).
4. A man of the tribe of Gad and a chief in the land of Bashan (1 Chr. 5:12).

5. A Levite ancestor of Samuel the prophet (1 Chr. 6:36).
6. A chief of the tribe of Issachar (1 Chr. 7:3).
7. One of David’s mighty men (1 Chr. 11:38).
8. A Levite who helped bring the ark of the covenant from the house of Obed-Edom to Jerusalem (1 Chr. 15:7).
9. A keeper of the temple treasuries in David’s time (1 Chr. 26:22).
10. A son of Pedaiah who lived during the time of David (1 Chr. 27:20).
11. A Levite who helped cleanse the temple during the reign of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 29:12).
12. A son of Nebo who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:43).
13. Overseer of the Benjamites in Jerusalem in Nehemiah’s government (Neh. 11:9).
14. An Old Testament prophet and author of the Book of Joel. A citizen of Jerusalem, he spoke often of the priests and their duties (Joel 1:9, 13–14, 16). For this reason, many scholars believe he may have been a temple prophet. He also had an ear for nature (Joel 1:4–7), and included imagery from agriculture and the natural world in his messages. Also see JOEL, BOOK OF.



• A mosaic of the prophet Joel, who prophesied about the outpouring of God’s Spirit in the latter days (Joel 2:28).

JOEL, BOOK OF—a brief prophetic book of the Old Testament that predicted the outpouring of the spirit of God on all people—a prophecy fulfilled several centuries later on the Day of Pentecost (Joel 2:28–32; Acts 2:14–21). The title of the book comes from its author, the prophet Joel.

Structure of the Book. The three brief chapters of this book are divided into two major sections. In the first section (1:1–20) the prophet Joel introduces himself and speaks to his readers about their need to turn from their sins. For the most part, the speaker in the second part of the book (2:1—3:21) is the all-powerful God, who warns His people about the approaching day of judgment and assures them of His abiding presence, in spite of their unworthiness.

In the first section of the book, Joel calls attention to a devastating swarm of locusts that had recently swept through the land (1:4). These destructive locusts stripped the foliage from all trees, shrubs, and crops (1:7). The people and livestock of Judah were facing the threat of starvation because of the famine that followed this invasion (1:15–18). As bad as this natural catastrophe had been, the prophet declares it will be as nothing in comparison to the coming day of the Lord. This is the day of Judgment, when God will vent His wrath upon His sinful and disobedient people.

After Joel delivers his pleas for repentance, God Himself speaks to His wayward people. In spite of the famine, He declares that there will be plenty to eat in the days of blessing to come (2:18–19). This day of renewal will be marked by the outpouring of His Spirit on all people (2:28–29). All the nations of the world will take notice as God gathers His people together in the holy city of Jerusalem to serve as their ruler: “Judah shall abide forever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation” (3:20).

Authorship and Date. The author of this book was the prophet Joel, who identifies himself in the introduction as “the son of Pethuel” (1:1). This is all we know about this spokesman for the Lord. From evidence in the book itself, we can assume that he knew a great deal about Jerusalem, Judah’s capital city, and the rituals associated with temple worship (2:15). But he probably was not a priest, since he called upon the priests to go into mourning because of the sins of the nation (1:13). Indeed, Joel’s many references to agriculture (1:7, 10–12) may indicate he was a farmer or a herdsman, although this is not certain.

It is difficult to determine the exact date of this book’s writing. Unlike most of the other Old Testament prophets, Joel mentions no kings of Judah or Israel and no historical events that might give us some indication about when he wrote his prophecy. The one strong clue is the similarity of Joel’s concept of the day of the Lord to the language of the prophet Zephaniah (Joel 2:2; Zeph. 1:14–16). Zephaniah prophesied during the reign of Josiah, the king of Judah (640–609 B.C.). This also seems the most likely time for the writing of the Book of Joel.

Historical Setting. If Joel did write his book about 600 B.C., he would have lived in the frantic final years of the nation of Judah. After the Babylonian army destroyed Jerusalem in 586 B.C. the leading citizens of Judah were carried into captivity in Babylonia. This invasion of the Babylonians must have given special significance to the terrible “day of the Lord” about which Joel warned his countrymen.

Theological Contribution. The Book of Joel is remarkable because it shows that a message from God can often come packaged in the form of a natural disaster. The truth of the book is rooted in the disastrous invasion of locusts, which Joel describes in such vivid language. This prophet teaches us that the Lord may use a natural disaster to stir in His people a renewed awareness of His will. Any traumatic event of nature—flood, fire, storm, or earthquake—should motivate the sensitive ear to listen again to the words of the Lord.

Special Considerations. Readers of Joel are always impressed with the prediction of the future outpouring of the Holy Spirit (2:28–32). The apostle Peter used this passage to explain the exciting events of PENTECOST to his hearers (Acts 2:16–21). Just as Joel predicted, the Holy Spirit was poured out on all these early followers of Jesus who were gathered in Jerusalem seeking God's will and praying for His divine guidance.

But there is still a future dimension to Joel's prediction. The gifts of the Spirit that began to flow through the people of God on Pentecost were not exhausted on that day. They are still available to all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and who anxiously await His return and the final establishment of His kingdom.

8. A son of Hakkatan, of the clan of Azgad (Ezra 8:12).
9. A son of Eliashib the high priest (Neh. 12:22–23; Ezra 10:6; Jehohanen, NKJV, NIV), also called Jonathan (Neh. 12:11). See also JEHOHANAN No. 6.

JOHN THE APOSTLE—one of Jesus' disciples, the son of Zebedee, and the brother of James. Before his call by Jesus, John was a fisherman, along with his father and brother (Matt. 4:18–22; Mark 1:16–20). His mother was probably Salome (Matt. 27:56; Mark 15:40), who may have been a sister of Mary (John 19:25), the mother of Jesus.

Although it is not certain that Salome and Mary were sisters, if it were so it would make James and John cousins of Jesus. This would help explain Salome's forward request of Jesus on behalf of her sons (Matt. 20:20–28). The Zebedee family apparently lived in Capernaum on the north shore of the Sea of Galilee (Mark 1:21). The family must have been prosperous, because the father owned a boat and hired servants (Mark 1:19–20). Salome the mother provided for Jesus out of her substance (Mark 15:40–41; Luke 8:3). John must have been the younger of the two brothers, for he is always mentioned second to James in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke.

The brothers Zebedee were called by Jesus after His baptism (Mark 1:19–20). This happened immediately after the call of two other brothers, Simon Peter and Andrew (Mark 1:16–18), with whom they may have been in partnership (Luke 5:10). Three of the four—Peter, James, and John—eventually became Jesus' most intimate disciples. They were present when Jesus healed the daughter of Jairus (Mark 5:37; Luke 8:51). They witnessed His TRANSFIGURATION (Matt. 17:1–2; Mark 9:2; Luke 9:28–29), as well as His agony in Gethsemane (Matt. 26:37; Mark 14:33). Along with Peter, John was entrusted by Jesus with preparations for the Passover supper (Luke 22:8).

James and John must have contributed a headstrong element to Jesus' band of followers, because Jesus nicknamed them "Sons of Thunder" (Mark 3:17). On one occasion (Luke 9:51–56), when a Samaritan village refused to accept Jesus, the two offered to call down fire in revenge, as the prophet Elijah had once done (2 Kin. 1:10, 12). On another occasion, they earned the anger of their fellow disciples by asking if they could sit on Jesus' right and left hands in glory (Mark 10:35–45).

Following the ascension of Jesus, John continued in a prominent position of leadership among the disciples (Acts 1:13). He was present when Peter healed the lame man in the temple. Together with Peter he bore witness before the Sanhedrin to his faith in Jesus Christ. The boldness of their testimony brought the hostility of the Sanhedrin (Acts 3–4). When the apostles in Jerusalem received word of the evangelization of Samaria, they sent Peter and John to investigate whether the conversions were genuine (Acts 8:14–25). This was a curious thing to do. The Samaritans had long been suspect in the eyes of the Jews (John 4:9). John himself had once favored the destruction of a Samaritan village (Luke 9:51–56). That he was present on this mission suggests he had experienced a remarkable change.

In these episodes Peter appears as the leader and spokesman for the pair, but John's presence on such errands indicates his esteem by the growing circle of disciples. After the execution of his brother James by Herod Agrippa I, between A.D. 42–44 (Acts 12:1–2), John is not heard of again in Acts. Paul's testimony to John as one of the "pillars," along with Peter and James (the Lord's brother, Gal. 2:9), however, reveals that John continued to hold a position of respect and leadership in the early church.

As might be expected of one of Jesus' three closest disciples, John became the subject of an active and varied church tradition. Tertullian (about A.D. 160–220) said that John ended up in Rome, where he was "plunged, unhurt, into boiling oil." A much later tradition believed that both James and John were martyred. The dominant tradition, however, was that the apostle John moved to Ephesus in Asia Minor, and that from there he was banished to the Island of Patmos (during Domitian's reign, A.D. 81–96). Tradition also held that he returned later to Ephesus, where he died some time after Trajan became emperor in A.D. 98.

Stories that John reclaimed a juvenile delinquent, raised a dead man, and opposed the GNOSTIC heretic Cerinthus survive from this era in his life. It was also the general opinion of the time that from Ephesus John composed the five writings that bear his name in the New Testament (Gospel of John; 1, 2, and 3 John; and Revelation).

Only the Revelation identifies its author as John (1:1, 9). The second and third epistles of John identify the author as "the elder" (2 John 1; 3 John 1). Although 1 John and the Gospel of John do not name their author, he can be none other than "the elder," because style and content in these writings are unmistakably related. It may be, as tradition asserts, that the apostle John wrote all five documents. It appears more likely, however, that four of the five writings were actually penned not by John the apostle but by John the elder, a disciple and friend of John's who relied directly on the apostle's testimony as he wrote the documents. This would explain those passages in the gospel that speak about the beloved disciple (who presumably is John the apostle; John 19:35; 21:24), as well as the reference to "the elder" in 2 and 3 John. The Revelation, however, was probably written directly by the apostle John himself.

JOHN THE BAPTIST—forerunner of Jesus; a moral reformer and preacher of messianic hope. According to Luke 1:36, Elizabeth and Mary, the mothers of John and Jesus, were either blood relatives or close kinswomen. Luke adds that both John and Jesus were announced, set apart, and named by the angel Gabriel even before their birth.

As is true of Jesus, practically nothing is known of John's boyhood, except that he "grew and became strong in spirit" (Luke 1:80). The silence of his early years, however, was broken by his thundering call to repentance some time around A.D. 28–29, shortly before Jesus began His ministry. Matthew reports that the place where John preached was the wilderness of Judea (3:1). It is likely that he also preached in Perea, east of the Jordan River. Perea, like Galilee, lay within the jurisdiction of Herod Antipas, under whom John was later arrested.

The four gospels are unanimous in their report that John lived "in the wilderness." There he was raised (Luke 1:80) and was called by God (Luke 3:2), and there he preached (Mark 1:4) until his execution. The wilderness—a vast badland of crags, wind, and heat—was the place where God had dwelled with His people after the Exodus. Ever since, it had been the place of religious hope for Israel. John called the people away from the comforts of their homes and cities and out into the wilderness, where they might meet God.

The conviction that God was about to begin a new work among this unprepared people broke upon John with the force of a desert storm. He was called to put on the prophet's hairy mantle with the resolve and urgency of Elijah himself. Not only did he dress like Elijah, in camel's hair and leather belt (2 Kin. 1:8; Mark 1:6), he understood his ministry to be one of reform and preparation, just as Elijah did (Luke 1:17). In the popular belief of the time, it was believed that Elijah would return from heaven to prepare the way for the Messiah (Mal. 4:5–6). John reminded the people of Elijah because of his dress and behavior (Matt. 11:14; Mark 9:12–13).

John was no doubt as rugged as the desert itself. Nevertheless, his commanding righteousness drew large crowds to hear him. What they encountered from this "voice . . . crying in the wilderness" (Mark 1:3) was a call to moral renewal, baptism, and a messianic hope.

The bite of John's moral challenge is hard for us to appreciate today. His command to share clothing and food (Luke 3:11) was a painful jab at a society that was hungry to acquire material objects. When he warned the tax collectors not to take more money than they had coming to them (Luke 3:12–13), he exposed the greed that had drawn persons to such positions in the first place. And the soldiers, whom he told to be content with their wages, must have winced at the thought of not using their power to take advantage of the common people (Luke 3:14).

John's baptism was a washing, symbolizing moral regeneration, administered to each candidate only once. He criticized the people for presuming to be righteous and secure with God because they were children of Abraham (Matt. 3:9). John laid an ax to the root of this presumption. He warned that they, the Jews, would be purged and rejected unless they demonstrated fruits of repentance (Matt. 3:7–12).

John's effort at moral reform, symbolized by baptism, was his way of preparing Israel to meet God. He began his preaching with the words, “Prepare the way of the Lord, make His paths straight” (Mark 1:3). He had a burning awareness of one who was to come after him who would baptize in fire and Spirit (Mark 1:7–8). John was a forerunner of this mightier one, a herald of the messianic hope that would dawn in Jesus.

John was a forerunner of Jesus not only in his ministry and message (Matt. 3:1; 4:17) but also in his death. Not until John’s arrest did Jesus begin His ministry (Mark 1:14), and John’s execution foreshadowed Jesus’ similar fate. Imprisoned by Antipas in the fortress of Machaerus on the lonely hills east of the Dead Sea, John must have grown disillusioned by his own failure and the developing failure he sensed in Jesus’ mission. He sent messengers to ask Jesus, “Are You the Coming One, or do we look for another?” (Matt. 11:3). John was eventually killed by a functionary of a puppet king who allowed himself to be swayed by a scheming wife, a loose daughter-in-law, and the people around him (Mark 6:14–29).

Josephus records that Herod arrested and executed John because he feared his popularity might lead to a revolt. The Gospels reveal it was because John spoke out against Herod’s immoral marriage to Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip (Mark 6:17–19). The accounts are complementary, because John’s moral righteousness must have fanned many a smoldering political hope to life.

Jesus said of John, “Among those born of women there has not risen one greater than John the Baptist” (Matt. 11:11). He was the last and greatest of the prophets (Matt. 11:13–14). Nevertheless, he stood, like Moses, on the threshold of the Promised Land. He did not enter the kingdom of God proclaimed by Jesus; and consequently, “he who is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he” (Matt. 11:11).

John’s influence continued to live on after his death. When Paul went to Ephesus nearly thirty years later, he found a group of John’s disciples (Acts 19:1–7). Some of his disciples must have thought of John in messianic terms. This compelled the author of the Gospel of John, writing also from Ephesus some sixty years after the Baptist’s death, to emphasize Jesus’ superiority (John 1:19–27; 3:30).

JOHN, EPISTLES OF—three epistles—one longer (1 John) and two shorter (2 and 3 John)—written by the author of the Gospel of John. These epistles read like a love letter from an elderly saint who writes from long years of experience with Christ and His message. Although unnamed, the author addresses his readers intimately as “little children” (1 John 2:1, 18, 28; 3:7, 18; 4:4; 5:21) and “beloved” (1 John 3:2, 21; 4:1, 7, 11). His tone changes, however, when he bears down on his opponents for making light of the bodily existence of Jesus (1 John 2:18–23; 4:1–3, 20).

Structure of the Epistles. None of the three epistles yields naturally to a structural outline. First John begins with an uncompromising testimony to the bodily existence of Jesus (1:1–4). Since God is light, fellowship with God must result in confession of our sin before Christ, our forgiveness, and our “walking in the light” (1:5—2:2). To know Christ is to keep His commandments, or “to walk just as He walked” (2:6). We cannot be in the light if we hate our brothers and sisters or love the world (2:7–17).

The presence of antichrists, who deny that Jesus is the Christ, is a sign of the end times. But true believers rest secure in the “anointing” of the Holy Spirit which they have from Christ (2:18–27). Since God is righteous, believers are to be righteous in their lives. When the Lord returns, His children will be like Him (2:28—3:3). Whoever abides in Christ does not continue to sin habitually or constantly (3:4–10).

Christian love is not something merely to talk about, but to do (3:11–18). Active love gives us confidence before God (3:19–24). A person must examine various spiritual manifestations to determine if they are of God; only teachers who confess that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh are of God (4:1–6). In His love God sent His Son as an atoning sacrifice for sin. As a consequence we are to love one another (4:7–21).

Faith is victory over the world (5:1–5), and there is a threefold witness to faith: the Holy Spirit, the water (baptism), and the blood (Holy Communion) (5:6–12). Christians may be assured that God hears and grants their requests (5:13–15). The letter concludes with assurance that the Son of God is sufficient to save (5:18–21).

Second John identifies its author as “the elder” and those to whom the letter is written as “the elect lady and her children” (v. 1). The “lady” and “children” are personified ways of referring to the church and its believers. Like 3 John, the letter has the character of a note from the elder, reminding his “children” to walk in truth and love (vv. 4–6). The elder also draws attention to false teachers who deny the bodily existence of Jesus Christ, and he warns against receiving them (vv. 7–11). He hopes to visit the church soon (vv. 12–13).

Third John, also from “the elder,” is addressed to Gaius (v. 1), who has demonstrated his loyalty by offering hospitality to traveling missionaries (vv. 2–8). A certain Diotrephes had previously ignored a letter from the elder, and he receives some stiff criticism for doing so (vv. 9–11). In contrast to Diotrephes, a certain Demetrius is highly commended (v. 12). The elder expresses his hope to visit the church soon (vv. 13–14).

Authorship and Date. Although these three epistles were written by an anonymous author, he wrote affectionately to his readers as “little children” and referred to himself as “the elder” (2 John 1; 3 John 1). He must have been well-known and well-loved by those to whom he wrote.

Eusebius, an early church leader, mentions a John the elder (presbyter) who was a disciple and companion of John the apostle in Ephesus. Although we cannot say for sure, it may be that John the elder is the same “elder” mentioned in 2 and 3 John. If so, then he wrote the Gospel of John as well as these three letters; the style and content in each are very similar.

The inclusion of personal testimony (1 John 1:1–4) indicates that John the elder depended directly on the testimony of the apostle John in writing these documents. The epistles were probably written from Ephesus toward the close of the first century A.D.

Historical Setting. First John has none of the usual features of an epistle: no salutation or identification of author; no greetings; and no references to persons, places, or events. Ironically, although its format is impersonal, like a sermon or treatise, its tone is warm and personal. This suggests that it was written to a broad audience (probably in and around Ephesus) that was very dear to the author.

All three epistles were written to deepen the spiritual life of the churches while guarding against false teaching. The false teachers had arisen within the church, although the content of their teaching betrayed that they were not part of the church (1 John 2:19; 4:4). John fears that such a splinter group will lead true believers astray (1 John 2:26–27; 3:7; 2 John 7). He calls them “antichrists” (1 John 2:18, 22; 4:3; 2 John 7) for denying that Jesus had come in the flesh (1 John 4:1–13; 2 John 7; also 1 John 2:18–25; 4:15).

By emphasizing the divine nature of Jesus, the false teachers appeared to be Christians; but they showed their true colors by denying that God became a true human in Jesus. Claiming to have the Spirit of God, they were actually false prophets (1 John 4:1–6).

Theological Contribution. Like the Gospel of John, the epistles of John are built on the foundation blocks of love, truth, sin, world, life, light, and Paraclete. It emphasizes the great themes of knowing, believing, walking, and abiding. These words seem simple on the surface. But in the hands of one who had pondered the mystery and meaning of Jesus’ existence in human form, they yield many deep truths.

For John, the keystone in the arch of the gospel is that God has appeared in human form (1 John 1:1–4). The INCARNATION is life (1 John 1:2); and this life is available in the Son of God, Jesus Christ (1 John 5:11): “He who has the Son has life; he who does not have the Son of God does not have life” (1 John 5:12). The message of life is the alpha (1 John 1:2) and omega (1 John 5:20), the beginning and the end, of the epistle.

Jesus Christ has transferred us from death to life (1 John 3:14) by destroying the works of the devil (1 John 3:8). God made Jesus a “propitiation” (1 John 2:2; 4:10) in order to forgive sin (1 John 1:7–9; 2:12; 3:5). As a propitiation, Jesus is our “Advocate with the Father” (1 John 2:1) who takes away the guilt of our wrongdoing and gives us confidence to approach the judgment seat of God (1 John 2:28; 4:17). Jesus Christ is both the Son of God and the bearer of sin, the eternal demonstration of the love of God.

For John, love is not a feeling or attitude toward others. God is love (1 John 4:8, 16), and He acts in love on our behalf (1 John 4:9–10). Love, therefore, is something one does, by keeping God’s commandments (1 John 2:2–5; 5:3), “in deed and in truth” (1 John 3:18), and, above all, by loving others (1 John 2:9–11; 3:10). John declares that it is hypocritical to profess love for God and to show hatred toward others (1 John 4:20). The love of God does not take us out of this world. Rather, it draws us into fellowship with God (1 John 1:3) and with others (1 John 1:7).

Fellowship with God is realized by knowing God and abiding in Him. To know God (the verb occurs twenty-five times in the epistles) is not to know about God, but to be joined to Him in righteousness (1 John 2:29), truth (1 John 3:19), and especially love (1 John 4:7–8). The permanence of such knowing is expressed in the word abide, which occurs twenty-six times in these epistles. To abide in God is to share the identity of Jesus Christ and to experience the characteristics of God: light (1 John 2:10), love (1 John 3:17; 4:12), and eternal life (1 John 3:15).

Special Considerations. Many Christians wonder about John’s declaration, “Whoever abides in Him [Jesus Christ] does not sin” (1 John 3:6). This does not mean that if someone sins he is not a Christian. Indeed, in the epistles we are told that Christ came to forgive sins; and we are admonished to confess our sins to Him (1 John 1:6—2:2; 3:5; 4:10). The statement means that Christ has transferred us from death to life and has caused us to share in the nature of God. Consequently, we are no longer confined to darkness because Jesus Christ has broken the power of sin in our lives (1 John 3:8).

John says that believers may pray to God on behalf of others (1 John 5:16–17), unless their sins “lead to death.” The exact meaning of such sin is unclear, although it probably refers to a denial of the bodily existence of Jesus (1 John 2:22; 4:3; 5:12).

JOHN, GOSPEL OF—the fourth and most theological of the Gospels of the New Testament. The first three Gospels portray mainly what Jesus did and how He taught, but the Gospel of John is different. It moves beyond the obvious facts of Jesus' life to deeper, more profound meanings. Events and miracles are kept to a minimum in the Gospel of John. They are used as springboards or "signs" for lengthy discussions that reveal important truths about Christ. On the other hand, John uses a host of key words that symbolize who Jesus is and how we may know God. John is a "spiritual" gospel—not because it is more spiritual than the other three—but because it expresses spiritual ideas in spiritual language. Among the gospels, therefore, John offers a unique portrait of Christ that has been cherished by believers through the centuries.

Structure of the Gospel. The fourth Gospel consists basically of two parts: a book of "signs" and a book of "glory." The signs reveal Jesus' person (chaps. 1–12), and the glory results from Jesus' passion (chaps. 13–20). A prologue (1:1–18) and epilogue (chap. 21) serve as an introduction and conclusion to the gospel. Within this two-part structure, the gospel follows a pattern already presented in the prologue: revelation (1:1–5), rejection (1:6–11), and reception (1:12–18). The corresponding divisions of the gospel are: revelation (1:19—6:71), rejection (chaps. 7–12), and reception (chaps. 13–21).

Authorship and Date. Like the other gospels, John comes to us as an anonymous book. The question of authorship can be resolved only by observing clues within the gospel and by the tradition of the early church. Tradition agrees that the author was John the apostle, who was exiled to the island of Patmos in the Aegean Sea and who later died in Ephesus sometime after Trajan became emperor of Rome in A.D. 98. The gospel claims to come from an eyewitness (1:14; 1 John 1:1–4), and the author is familiar with the geography of Palestine. These external and internal evidences suggest that “the beloved disciple” (13:23; 19:26; 20:2; 21:7, 20), which appears as a title or nickname for John the apostle, composed the fourth gospel.

Other clues within the gospel and epistles of John, however, point beyond the apostle to another author. In 2 and 3 John, verses 1, the author identifies himself as “the elder.” The similarities between the gospel and the epistles of John are too strong for us to conclude that the gospel was written by John the apostle and the epistles by John the elder. Early church tradition referred to an elder who was a disciple of John. Moreover, certain passages in the gospel of John tend to suggest that the writer was not the beloved disciple (19:35; 21:24).

Taking the evidence as a whole, it appears that the gospel was composed by a John the elder (presbyter), who was a disciple of John the apostle and who depended directly on the apostle’s testimony for the content of the gospel. Both Johns are reputed to have lived in Ephesus. Some scholars identify John the elder with John the apostle and view the gospel as composed by the apostle. Ephesus, therefore, becomes the most likely place for the gospel’s origin, sometime around the close of the first century.

Historical Setting. It is difficult to say with certainty to whom this gospel was addressed. Unlike Luke (1:1–4), the author mentions no addressee. Unlike Matthew and Mark, he gives few hints of his intended audience. The gospel uses both Jewish and Greek thought forms in its presentation of Christ.

For John, Jesus goes beyond the bounds of Judaism. This gospel reports a fiercer conflict between Jesus and the Jews than the other gospels do. The gospel begins before time (1:1), and it shows that Jesus is timeless. Jesus speaks not to any one nation or ethnic group, but to the human condition. John portrays Jesus for the widest possible readership. This is one reason why the fourth gospel has spoken so deeply to Christians in all ages.

If there is doubt to whom John writes, there can be little doubt about why John writes. The gospel contains a clear statement of purpose: "These [signs] are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing you may have life in His name" (20:31).

For John, the sole purpose of life is that "you may know and believe that the Father is in me and I in Him" (10:38). Thus, John writes that we might know the Father and experience life eternal through faith in the Son.

Theological Contribution. John writes with a modest vocabulary, but his words are charged with symbolism. Terms like believe, love, truth, world, light and darkness, above and below, name, witness, sin, judgment (eternal) life, glory, bread, water, and hour are the key words of this gospel. In John 3:16–21, a passage of fewer than 150 words in Greek, seven of these terms occur.

The world is where God reveals truth (8:32), light (8:12), and life (14:6) in His Son Jesus Christ. The world is also where persons must decide for or against the witness of Christ, and the decision is judgment (3:18). Sin is to misjudge Jesus—to fail to receive Him as the bread of life (6:35), or not to walk in Him as the light of the world (8:12). The Son has come from above to glorify the Father (17:1), and He does so in His "hour" (12:23; 13:1)—through His suffering on the cross.

In the synoptic gospels—Matthew, Mark, and Luke—Jesus utters short sayings. Longer discourses, such as the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5–7), are either collections of sayings on various themes, or, like Matthew 13, mostly parables. John, on the other hand, records no parables and few of the brief sayings so common to the synoptics. Rather, he expands upon an incident; for example, Nicodemus (chap. 3), the woman at the well (chap. 4), the man born blind (chap. 9), Lazarus (chap. 11), or footwashing (chap. 13). Or he takes up an image; for example, bread (chap. 6), water (chap. 7), light (chap. 8), or shepherd (chap. 10). John then uses these words as symbols to reveal a fuller revelation of Christ. These discourses are blended so completely with John's own style that frequently the reader cannot tell whether it is John or Jesus speaking (3:16).

Why does John present such a different picture of Jesus? John may reveal Jesus as He taught in private, while the other three gospels may recall His public method of address (Mark 4:34). This may be a partial answer. A fuller explanation may be that the other gospels retain the actual form of Jesus' teaching, while John uncovers the essence of Jesus as a person.

This does not imply that John disregards historical truth. At some points his gospel probably preserves the facts of Jesus' life with greater precision than the other gospels do. For example, Matthew, Mark, and Luke leave the impression that Jesus ministered mainly in Galilee, making only one Passover journey to Jerusalem. This leads one to assume that Jesus' ministry lasted less than one year. John, however, mentions at least three Passover journeys (John 2:13, 23; 6:4; 12:1) and longer periods of ministry in Judea. The other gospels do hint of previous visits by Jesus to Jerusalem "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem. . . . How often I wanted to gather your children together" (Matt. 23:37; Luke 13:34).

Nevertheless, it is clear that John is guided more by theological than historical interests. The gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke begin by showing Jesus' role as the fulfiller of the Old Testament promises of salvation. But John begins with the preexistence of Jesus: "In the beginning was the Word" (1:1). Jesus is divine ("the Word was God," 1:1), but He is also human ("the Word became flesh," 1:14). Only as such is He the revealer of the Father.

In the first chapter, John introduces Jesus by seven key titles: Word, Lamb of God, Rabbi, Messiah, King of Israel, Son of God, and Son of Man. Only in John do we find the "I am" sayings: "I am the bread of life" (6:35), "I am the light of the world" (8:12), "before Abraham was, I AM" (8:58), "I am the door of the sheep" (10:7), "I am the good shepherd" (10:11), "I and My Father are one" (10:30), "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (14:6), and "I am the vine" (15:5). In each of these sayings the "I" is emphatic in Greek. It recalls the name of God, "I AM," in the Old Testament (Ex. 3:14).

In the Old Testament God's words were to be reverently received. So it is with Jesus. In John He begins His messages by saying, "Truly, truly I say to you." Just as in the Old Testament God alone was to be worshiped, in John people are to believe in Jesus alone. Here John stresses his concept of "believing." The verb "to believe" is found nearly a hundred times in the gospel, though the noun "belief/faith" does not occur. For John, saving faith is a verb, carrying the sense of active trust in Jesus; it is not a static noun.

When one considers Jesus' moral teaching, another key word emerges. In John Jesus does not enter into questions of prayer, fasting, almsgiving, swearing, marriage, or wealth as he does in the other gospels. Rather, one's relationships to God, others, and the world are summed up in love. The love that God has for his beloved Son (3:35; 15:9) is passed on by the Beloved to "His own" (13:1). As recipients of God's love, Christians are to love God by loving one another (13:34). This love, which unites believers, is also a testimony to the world. The key verse of John expresses the basic theological truth of the gospel: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life" (3:16).

The Gospel of John expresses the uniqueness of the Son's relationship with the Father. The Son existed before the world with the Father; He was sent into the world by the Father; and He goes out of the world to the Father.

Special Considerations. Our present Gospel of John contains a story that probably was not written by the original author. The account of the woman caught in adultery (7:53—8:11) differs markedly in style from the rest of John. It is not found in the earlier and better manuscripts of the book. It was probably added at a later date by an unknown author under God's inspiration to express an important truth about Jesus and His attitude toward sinful people.

JOHN MARK (see MARK, JOHN).

JOHN, REVELATION OF (see REVELATION OF JOHN).

JOIADA [JOY uh duh] (the Lord knows)—a high priest after the captivity. He was succeeded by his son Jonathan (Neh. 12:10–11, 22). See also JEHOIADA No. 5.

JOIAKIM [JOY uh kim] (the Lord raises)—a high priest after the captivity, and the father of Eliashib (Neh. 12:10, 12, 26).

JOIARIB [JOY uh rib] (the Lord contends)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A teacher sent by Ezra to Iddo to request ministers for temple service (Ezra 8:16).
2. An ancestor of a family in Jerusalem in Nehemiah's time (Neh. 11:5).
3. A priest who returned from the captivity and the father of Jedaiah (Neh. 11:10; 12:6, 19). He is also called JEHOIARIB (1 Chr. 24:7).

JOKDEAM [JAHK dee uhm] (meaning unknown)—a city in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:56).

JOKIM [JOE kim] (the Lord sets up)—a descendant of Shelah, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:22).

JOKMEAM [JAHK mee uhm]—a city of the tribe of Ephraim given to the Levites. Jokmeam was in the Jordan Valley near the mouth of the River Jabbok (1 Chr. 6:68). It was probably the same place as Kibzaim (Josh. 21:22).

JOKNEAM [JAHK nee uhm]—the name of two cities in the Old Testament:

1. A city in Zebulun allotted to the Levites (Josh. 21:34).
2. A city in Ephraim (1 Kin. 4:12; Jokmeam, NIV, NRSV, REB).

JOKSHAN [JAHK shan]—a son of Abraham by his concubine Keturah (1 Chr. 1:32).

JOKTAN [JAHK tan] (little)—a son of Eber, of the family of Shem (Gen. 10:25–26, 29).

JOKTHEEL [JAHK thih uhl]—the name of two cities in the Old Testament:

1. A city in the lowlands of Judah (Josh. 15:38).

2. A name given to SELA, the ancient capital of the Edomites, by Amaziah after his army had captured it (2 Kin. 14:7).

JONADAB [JOE nuh dab] (the Lord gives)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Shimeah. Described as "a very crafty man" (2 Sam. 13:3), Jonadab suggested the plan that Amnon used to seduce Tamar. Later, when Absalom murdered Amnon, he reassured David that his other sons were still alive (2 Sam. 13:32–33). This suggests a prior knowledge of the crime.
2. A son of Rechab the Kenite and apparently the founder of the RECHABITES (Jer. 35:1–19), also called JEHONADAB (2 Kin. 10:15, 23). When Jehu suppressed Baal worship, Jonadab became his zealous supporter in exterminating the house of Ahab. Accompanying Jehu to Samaria, Jonadab assisted him in clearing the temple of Baal of all who were not priests of Baal. In this way Jonadab prepared the way for Jehu's massacre of the Baal worshipers (2 Kin. 10:15–28).

JONAH [JOE nuh] (a dove)—the prophet who was first swallowed by a great fish before he obeyed God's command to preach repentance to the Assyrian city of Nineveh. Jonah was not always a reluctant spokesman for the Lord. He is the same prophet who predicted the remarkable expansion of Israel's territory during the reign of Jeroboam II (ruled about 793–753 B.C.; 2 Kin. 14:25). This passage indicates that Jonah, the son of Amittai, was from Gath Hepher, a town in Zebulun in the northern kingdom of Israel.

While Jonah is described as a servant of the Lord in 2 Kings 14:25, he is a sad and somewhat tragic figure in the book bearing his name. It is a mark of the integrity and reliability of the Bible that a prophet like Jonah is described in such a candid manner. The natural tendency of human writers would be to obscure and hide such a character. But the Spirit of God presents valiant heroes along with petty people to illustrate truth, no matter how weak and unpleasant these characters may have been. We know nothing of Jonah after he returned to Israel from his preaching venture in Nineveh.

Also see JONAH, BOOK OF.

JONAH, BOOK OF—a short Old Testament book that emphasizes God's love for all people—pagans and Gentiles as well as his Chosen People, the Israelites. The book is named for its central figure, the prophet Jonah, who learned about God's universal love as he struggled with God's call to service.

Structure of the Book. The book begins with God's call to Jonah to preach in the great city of Nineveh, capital of the Assyrian empire. As staunch political enemies of the Israelites and as worshipers of false gods, the Assyrians also were shunned as pagans and outcasts. But God's call to Jonah showed clearly that He had not given up on Assyria. The prophet was to call Nineveh to repentance, warning the nation of its approaching doom unless it turned to God.

Instead of obeying God's command and heading to Nineveh, Jonah caught a ship traveling in the opposite direction. At sea a great storm arose, and Jonah was tossed overboard by the superstitious sailors in an attempt to appease the prophet's God. Jonah escaped unharmed when he was swallowed by a great fish and was miraculously deposited on shore. This time he obeyed God's command and traveled to Nineveh to carry out his preaching assignment.

But the reluctant prophet was not prepared for the results of his message. The entire city repented, and Jonah sulked in anger because Nineveh escaped God's punishment.

To teach the prophet a lesson, God raised up a plant, perhaps a gourd vine, to shade Jonah from the sun, then allowed a worm to cut it down. A hot wind from the east added to Jonah's misery, and he whined and complained about the missing plant. Then God reminded Jonah that He was a God of compassion who had the right to love and forgive the pagan Assyrians or any other people who turned to Him in obedience and faith. Jonah had been fretting about a plant, while God had turned His attention to a much more important matter—the worth and salvation of people.

Authorship and Date. The traditional view is that the prophet Jonah wrote this book. This would place its writing at about 760 B.C., since this prophet—"the son of Amittai" (1:1)—is the same Jonah who prophesied during the reign of Jeroboam II of Israel, from 793 to 753 B.C. (2 Kin. 14:25). The only other thing we know about Jonah is that he was a native of the village of Gath Hepher in Israel.

Some scholars insist the book was not written until about three centuries later by an unknown author. According to this theory, the writer composed the story of Jonah and his prophecy to combat the narrow-minded views of the Jewish people after their return to Jerusalem following their years of captivity in Babylonia. It is true that the Israelites went to extremes during these years as they tried to cast off all foreign influences and preserve the unique heritage of their faith. And Jonah certainly is a book that emphasizes the universal love of God. But the evidence put forth to support this theory is weak and inconclusive. Thus, the traditional view that the prophet Jonah himself wrote the book after his visit to Nineveh about 760 B.C. has much to commend it.

Historical Setting. The prophet Jonah visited Nineveh during the glorious days of the Assyrian empire. From about 885 to 625 B.C., the Assyrians dominated the ancient world. Numerous passages in the Old Testament report advances of Assyrian military forces against the neighboring kingdoms of Judah and Israel during these years. As early as 841 B.C., Jehu, king of Israel, was forced to pay tribute to the dominating Assyrian ruler, Shalmaneser III. This kind of harassment continued for over a century until Israel finally fell to Assyrian forces about 722 B.C. No wonder Jonah was reluctant to go to Nineveh; God had called him to visit the very heartland of enemy territory and to give the hated Assyrians a chance to repent. It was a radical order that would have taxed the obedience of any prophet. Jonah’s grudging attitude should not blind us to the fact that he did carry out God’s command.

Theological Contribution. One of the great truths emphasized by this book is that God can use people who do not want to be used by Him. Jonah was practically driven to Nineveh against his will, but his grudging message still struck a responsive chord in the Assyrians. This shows that revival and repentance are works of God’s Spirit. Our task is to proclaim His message.

But the greatest insight of the book is that God desires to show mercy and grace to all the peoples of the world. No one nation or group can claim exclusive rights to His love. The task of the Hebrew people was to preach this message about God’s universal love to all the world (Gen. 12:1–3). But they forgot this missionary purpose and eventually claimed God and His blessings as theirs alone. The Book of Jonah cries out against this narrow-minded interpretation of God and His purpose. In the last verse of the book, God makes it plain to Jonah that His mercy and compassion are as wide as the world itself: “And should I not pity Nineveh, that great city, in which are more than one hundred and twenty thousand persons who cannot discern between their right hand and their left, and also much livestock?” (4:11).

Special Considerations. Too much attention has been focused on the “great fish” (1:17) that swallowed Jonah and then spat him out on the shore. We solve nothing by debating whether a fish could swallow a man or whether a person could remain alive for three days in the stomach of such a creature. The point of this part of the story is that God worked a miracle to preserve the life of His prophet so he could get to Nineveh to carry out God’s orders. The text states that God “prepared” this fish specifically for that purpose (1:17). Other miracles that God “prepared” to teach Jonah His purpose for the city of Nineveh were the plant (4:6), the worm that cut the plant down (4:7), and the hot east wind that added to Jonah’s misery (4:8).

Some Bible readers insist on interpreting this book as an allegory or a parable. But these approaches ignore Jesus’ own literal interpretation of Jonah. In speaking of His death and resurrection, Jesus declared, “For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the great fish, so will the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth” (Matt. 12:40; also Luke 11:29–32). Thus, the Book of Jonah is much more than a fish story. It is a beautiful account of God’s grace that lifts our sights to the greatest love story of all—the death of His Son Jesus Christ for the sins of the world. Also see JONAH.

JONAM [JOE nuhm]—a form of JONAN.

JONAN [JOE nuhn] (the Lord has been gracious)—an ancestor of Joseph in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:30; Jonam, NIV, NRSV, REB).

JONAS [JOE nuhs]—Greek form of JONAH.

JONATHAN [JAHN uh thuhn] (the Lord has given)—the name of fourteen men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite from Bethlehem in Judah (Judg. 17:7–9) who was employed by Micah. Jonathan became the priest at Micah's idol shrine in the mountains of Ephraim. When the tribe of the Danites took Micah's graven image, ephod, household idols, and molded image (Judg. 18:18), Jonathan went with them. Jonathan and the Danites settled in the newly captured city of Dan (formerly Laish), and he became their priest (Judges 17–18).
2. The oldest son of King Saul and a close friend of David. The first time Jonathan is mentioned in Scripture he is described as a commander of 1,000 men (1 Sam. 13:2). When Jonathan attacked the Philistine garrison at Geba, his action brought swift retaliation by the Philistines, who subdued and humiliated the Israelites. But Jonathan and his armorbearer courageously attacked the Philistine garrison at Michmash and were successful. This action inspired the Israelites to overthrow their oppressors (1 Sam. 14:1–23).

   Perhaps the best-known fact about Jonathan is his close friendship with David. He made a covenant with David (1 Sam. 18:3–4) and warned David of Saul's plot against his life (1 Sam. 19:1–2). When Saul sought David's life, Jonathan interceded on behalf of David, and Saul reinstated David to his good favor (1 Sam. 19:1–7). Jonathan's loyalty to David was proven time after time as he warned David of Saul's threats of vengeance (1 Samuel 20) and encouraged David in times of danger (1 Sam. 23:16, 18).

The tragic end for Jonathan came at Mount Gilboa when he, his father Saul, and two of his brothers were slain by the Philistines (1 Sam. 31:1–2; 1 Chr. 10:1–6). When David heard of this, he mourned and fasted (2 Sam. 1:12). He then composed a lamentation, the "Song of the Bow," in which he poured out his grief over the death of Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:17–27).

Because David loved Jonathan, he treated Jonathan's lame son, Mephibosheth, kindly (2 Sam. 9:1–13). As a final act of love and respect, David brought the bones of Saul and Jonathan from Jabesh Gilead and buried them "in the country of Benjamin in Zelah, in the tomb of Kish his father" (2 Sam. 21:12–14). In this way David honored God's anointed king, Saul, and recognized the loyal, unselfish love of his friend. The story of David and Jonathan is a good example of the unselfish nature of love.

3. A son of Abiathar, a high priest in David's time (2 Sam. 15:27, 36; 17:17, 20). During Absalom's rebellion, when David and his supporters were forced to flee from Jerusalem, Jonathan relayed messages to David about developments in Jerusalem.
4. A son of Shimeah (2 Sam. 21:21), or Shimea (1 Chr. 20:7), one of David's brothers.
5. One of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:34).
6. A son of Jada (1 Chr. 2:32).
7. An uncle of David. Jonathan was "a counselor, a wise man, and a scribe" (1 Chr. 27:32).
8. The father of Ebed (Ezra 8:6).
9. A son of Asahel who opposed Ezra's proposal that pagan wives should be divorced (Ezra 10:15).
10. A descendant of Jeshua the high priest (Neh. 12:10–11), also called Johanan (Neh. 12:22).
11. A priest descended from Melichu (Neh. 12:14).
12. A priest descended from Shemaiah (Neh. 12:35), also called Jehonathan (Neh. 12:18).
13. A scribe in whose house Jeremiah the prophet was imprisoned (Jer. 37:15; 38:26).
14. A son of Kareah who joined Gedaliah after the fall of Jerusalem (Jer. 40:8).

JONATH-ELEM-RECHOKIM [JOE nath EE luhm ruh KOE kim] (a dove on faraway oak trees)—a phrase used in the title of Psalm 56 (KJV), probably referring to the tune to which the psalm was to be sung.

JOPPA [JAH puh] (beautiful)—an ancient seaport city on the Mediterranean Sea, about 56 kilometers (35 miles) northwest of Jerusalem (see Map 3, A–3).

A walled city, Joppa was built about 35 meters (116 feet) high on a rocky ledge overlooking the Mediterranean. It supposedly received its name "beautiful" from the sunlight that its buildings reflected.

The first mention of Joppa in the Bible indicates it was part of the territory inherited by the tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:46; Japho, KJV). The only natural harbor on the Mediterranean between Egypt and Acco, it was the seaport for the city of Jerusalem and the site of significant shipping in both Old and New Testament times. Rafts of cedar logs from the forests of Lebanon were floated from Tyre and Sidon to Joppa and then transported overland to Jerusalem to be used in building Solomon's temple (2 Chr. 2:16).

In New Testament times Joppa was the home of a Christian disciple, Tabitha (or Dorcas), a woman "full of good works and charitable deeds" (Acts 9:36). After she became sick and died, she was raised to life by Simon Peter. As a result, many believed on the Lord (Acts 9:36–42).

Joppa was also the home of Simon the Tanner (Acts 10:32). Simon Peter stayed many days in Joppa with Simon. On the roof of Simon's house Peter received his vision of a great sheet descending from heaven (Acts 10:9–16)—a vision that indicated that all who believe in Christ, Gentiles as well as Jews, are accepted by God.

• Modern Jaffa on the Mediterranean coast is the successor to the biblical city of Joppa (Acts 10:5–9). Today the city is part of the municipality of Tel Aviv.

JORAH [JOHR uh]—an Israelite whose descendants returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Ezra 2:18). Jorah is also called Hariph (Neh. 7:24).

JORAI [JOHR eye]—a chief of the tribe of Gad (1 Chr. 5:13).

JORAM [JOHR uhm] (the Lord is exalted)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Toi, king of Hamath (2 Sam. 8:9–10). When David defeated the army of Hadadezer, Toi sent Joram—with gifts of gold, silver, and bronze—to greet and bless David.
2. The son and successor of Jehoshaphat as king of Judah (1 Chr. 3:10–11), also called Jehoram (1 Kin. 22:50). Joram reigned eight years (2 Kin. 8:17) while his brother-in-law, also named Joram, reigned in Israel. His marriage to Athaliah, Ahab's daughter, marked the beginning of Joram's downfall. Athaliah influenced Joram to promote Baal worship in Judah. This illustrates the perils of an ungodly marriage.

In addition to promoting religious atrocities (2 Chr. 21:11), Joram is remembered for murdering his six brothers and chief nobles. This mass murder assured his position as king and probably added to his wealth (2 Chr. 21:4). Little else is noted of his reign, with the exception of revolts by Edom and Libnah (2 Chr. 21:8–10).

In spite of Joram's evil ways, "The Lord would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant that He had made with David." But through a letter from Elijah, the Lord did warn Joram of coming judgment (2 Chr. 21:7, 12–15). The king soon lost nearly all his possessions, wives, and children at the hands of Philistine and Arabian raiders as Elijah had prophesied. Joram also contracted an excruciating intestinal disease. After two years of suffering, "he died in severe pain," for "his intestines came out because of his sickness" (2 Chr. 21:19).

Because of Joram's moral and religious depravity, no one mourned his death, and he was not buried in the tombs of the kings. Thus, at the age of forty, his reign was ended prematurely. Within a year, his wife had all of his descendants executed, except one grandson, Joash (2 Kin. 11:1–3).

3. The tenth king of Israel, slain by Jehu (2 Kin. 8:16–29; 9:14–29). The son of Ahab and Jezebel, Joram succeeded his brother, Ahaziah, as king. He was also called Jehoram (2 Kin. 1:17). His twelve-year reign was characterized as an evil time, although he did manage to restrain Baal worship (2 Kin. 3:3).

   One of Joram's first major projects was to enlist Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, and the king of Edom in a campaign against Moab. Joram also defended Israel against Syria. Through the aid of the prophet Elisha, Joram defeated the Syrian invaders. Later, however, Ben-Hadad of Syria besieged Samaria, leading to severe famine and even cannibalism (2 Kin. 6:8–29). In the darkest hour of the siege, however, the Lord miraculously delivered His people, just as Elisha had prophesied (2 Kin. 7:1–20).

   When Hazael replaced Ben-Hadad as king of Syria, Joram made an alliance with his nephew Ahaziah, king of Judah, to occupy the city of Ramoth Gilead by force. Joram was wounded in the battle, and he went back to Jezreel to recover. Jehu, the leader of his army, came to Jezreel and assassinated Joram. Joram's body was then thrown upon the very property that Ahab and Jezebel had stolen from Naboth, thus fulfilling Elijah's prophecy that the house of Ahab would come to an end (1 Kin. 21:21–29; 2 Kin. 9:21–29).

4. A Levite who worked as a treasury official in the tabernacle in David's time (1 Chr. 26:25).

JORDAN [JORE dun] (descending, flowing)—the name of the longest and most important river in Palestine (see Map 3, C–1). The river is part of the great rift valley that runs north to south into Africa. This rift valley is one of the lowest depressions on earth.

The headwaters of the Jordan River, which has three main sources, begin north of Lake Huleh. After the Jordan flows through Lake Huleh, it descends into the Sea of Galilee. It is possible to ford the river just below the lake where the waters are low. In the ancient world, trade caravans going from Damascus to Egypt probably crossed at this point.

At Lake Huleh the headwaters of the Jordan are about 70 meters (230 feet) above sea level. Some 16 kilometers (10 miles) south of the Sea of Galilee the river is about 213 meters (700 feet) below sea level. At the northern end of the Dead Sea (the end of the Jordan), the river has dropped to about 393 meters (1,290 feet) below sea level. This drastic drop is reflected in the name of the river, which means "the descender." The Jordan made a natural boundary as a serious obstacle in any east-to-west movement in the land of Palestine. A number of shallow spots, or fords, occur in the Jordan. Possession of these fords was an important military factor.

The distance that the Jordan covers from the southern tip of the Sea of Galilee to the northern end of the Dead Sea is only about 113 kilometers (70 miles). But the winding, zigzag pattern of the river is such that it curves for about 323 kilometers (200 miles) as it weaves its way north to south. The river varies from 27 to 30 meters (90 to 100 feet) in width and between 1 and 3 meters (3 and 10 feet) deep. The water is not really navigable. With great difficulty flat-bottom boats are able to move along parts of the waterway; they must be towed, however, through sandbars and must survive swift currents because of the descending nature of the valley. There are some twenty-seven series of rapids in the Jordan.

At one time the Jordan valley may have been a large lake. Earthquakes and tremors over the centuries have dumped loose soil and gravel into the river, forcing new courses for the water that produced the switchback design of the Jordan. The northern part of the Jordan has numerous tributaries that flood their banks in winter and spring, allowing for good irrigation of the farmlands nearby. It was probably this fertile area that caught Lot’s attention (Gen. 13:10). The middle and southern areas of Palestine that parallel the Jordan are the badlands with scarcely any rainfall. This type of land is only interrupted by an occasional oasis, such as those at Jericho.

The lower Jordan valley can be divided into three distinct regions. The first region is the Zor, or thickets of underbrush, that because of seasonal flooding has produced a jungle of vines, dense brush, shrubs, willows, and poplar trees. This area is sometimes referred to in the Bible as “Jordan’s dense thickets” (Jer. 12:5; 49:19; Zech. 11:3, REB; the thickets of the Jordan, NRSV; the lush thicket of the Jordan, NIV). The sons of the prophets were cutting down trees in the thickets of the Jordan when Elisha made an iron ax head float on the river, after it had been lost (2 Kin. 6:1–7).

The second area is called the Gattara, or badlands, on the outside of the Zor. This area is covered with sediment, probably from the period when the whole valley was flooded. Until the modern period, the soil was too salty for crops. But modern Israeli scientists have reclaimed the soil by washing it with river water.

The third region of the lower Jordan is the Ghor, or higher region. This area is steep but fertile. It has supported farming especially in the first 40 kilometers (25 miles) of the northern end of the river. The last 8 kilometers (5 miles) at the southern end is too barren for farming.

When the Hebrew tribes approached the Promised Land, they did so from the eastern side of the Jordan. To some degree the Jordan River served as the boundary for the tribes (Num. 34:12). Ancient Israel occupied territory on both sides of the river. The tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half of the tribe of Manasseh settled on the eastern side of the Jordan.

Weak parties often went east of the Jordan to escape from the pressures from their opponents. For instance, Abner took Ishbosheth, the son of Saul, to the eastern side of the Jordan in opposition to David (2 Sam. 2:8). David fled to the eastern side after Absalom’s initial success (2

Sam. 17:22–24; 19:15–18). However, the crossing of the Jordan from east to west was symbolic of the arrival of the Hebrews in the Promised Land. The west side of the Jordan was the area generally thought to have been promised to Abraham.

It was probably at the south end of the river, near Jericho, that ancient Israel entered the region of Canaan (Joshua 3–4). At Gilgal, near the Dead Sea, on the western side of the river about a mile from Jericho, an important shrine area was set up to commemorate the entrance of the Israelites into the land (Josh. 4:19; 1 Sam. 7:16; 10:8).

In the period between the Old Testament and the New Testament, the Jordan River formed the main eastern boundary of the Persian and Greek province of Judea. The DECAPOLIS, a federation of ten Greek cities, was formed on the eastern side of the Jordan in the Greek period. John the Baptist carried out his ministry in the Jordan River region (Matt. 3:5–6; Mark 1:5; Luke 3:3; John 1:28; 3:26). Jesus' ministry was initiated by his baptism in the waters of the Jordan (Matt. 3:13; Mark 1:9; Luke 4:1). Jesus carried out His ministry on both sides of the Jordan (Matt. 4:15, 25; Mark 3:8; John 10:40).

JORIM [JOHR im] (the Lord is exalted)—an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy (Luke 3:29).

JORKOAM [johr KOE uhm]—a son of Raham (1 Chr. 2:44; Jorkeam, NIV, NRSV).

JOSABAD [JAHS uh bad]—a form of JOZABAD.

JOSE [JOE see] (the Lord is salvation)—an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy (Luke 3:29; Joshua, NIV, REB, NRSV).

JOSECH [JOE sek]—an ancestor of Jesus in Luke's genealogy (Luke 3:26).

JOSEPH [JOE zeph] (may he add)—the name of several men in the Bible:

1. The eleventh son of Jacob (Gen. 30:24). Joseph was sold into slavery and later rose to an important position in the Egyptian government.

The account of Joseph’s life is found in Genesis 37–50.

Joseph was the first child of Rachel (30:24) and his father’s favorite son (37:31). This is most clearly shown by the special coat that Jacob gave to Joseph. This favoritism eventually brought serious trouble for the whole family. Joseph’s ten older brothers hated him because he was Jacob’s favorite and because Joseph had dreams that he interpreted to his brothers in a conceited way. It is no surprise that Joseph’s brothers hated him enough to kill him (37:4).

Joseph’s brothers were shepherds in the land of Canaan. One day Jacob sent Joseph to search for his brothers, who were tending the flocks in the fields. When Joseph found them, they seized upon the chance to kill him. The only opposing voice was Reuben’s, but they finally sold Joseph into slavery to passing merchants.

To hide the deed from their father Jacob, Joseph’s brothers took his coat and dipped it in animal blood. When Jacob saw the coat, he was convinced that Joseph had been killed by a wild animal (37:34–35).

Joseph was taken to Egypt, where he was sold to POTIPHAR, an officer of the ruling pharaoh of the nation. His good conduct soon earned him the highest position in the household. Potiphar’s wife became infatuated with Joseph and tempted him to commit adultery with her. When he refused, she accused him of the crime and Joseph was sent to prison.

While in prison, Joseph’s behavior earned him a position of responsibility over the other prisoners. Among the prisoners Joseph met were the pharaoh’s baker and his butler. When each of them had a dream, Joseph interpreted their dreams. When the butler left prison, he failed to intercede on Joseph’s behalf, and Joseph spent two more years in prison.

When the pharaoh had dreams that none of his counselors could interpret, the butler remembered Joseph and mentioned him to the pharaoh. Then Joseph was called to appear before the pharaoh. He interpreted the pharaoh’s dreams, predicting seven years of plentiful food, followed by seven years of famine. He also advised the pharaoh to appoint a commissioner to store up supplies during the plentiful years.

To Joseph’s surprise, the pharaoh appointed him as food commissioner. This was a position of great prestige. Under Joseph’s care, many supplies were stored and the land prospered (41:37–57).

Joseph was given many comforts, including servants and a wife. He was called Zaphenath-Paneah. When the famine struck, Joseph was second only to the pharaoh in power. People from all surrounding lands came to buy food from him.

Many years passed between Joseph’s arrival in Egypt as a slave and his rise to power in the nation during the famine. The famine also struck Canaan, and Joseph’s brothers eventually came to Egypt to buy grain. When they met Joseph, they did not recognize him. He recognized them, however, and decided to test them to see if they had changed. He accused them of being spies. Then he sold them grain only on the condition that Simeon stay as a hostage until they brought Benjamin, the youngest brother, to Egypt with them.

Upon returning to Canaan, the brothers told Jacob of their experiences. He vowed not to send Benjamin to Egypt. But the continuing famine forced him to change his mind. On the next trip Benjamin went with his brothers to Egypt.

When they arrived, Joseph treated them royally, weeping openly at the sight of his youngest brother. Simeon was returned to them. After purchasing their grain, they started home. On their way home, however, they were stopped by one of Joseph’s servants, who accused them of stealing Joseph’s silver cup. The cup was found in Benjamin’s bag, where Joseph had placed it. The brothers returned to face Joseph, who declared that Benjamin must stay in Egypt. At this point Judah pleaded with Joseph, saying that it would break their father Jacob’s heart if Benjamin failed to return with them. Judah’s offer to stay in Benjamin’s place is one of the most moving passages in the Old Testament.

Joseph was overcome with emotion. He revealed himself to them as their brother, whom they had sold into slavery years earlier. At first Joseph’s brothers were afraid that Joseph would take revenge against them, but soon they were convinced that Joseph’s forgiveness was genuine. Judah’s plea on Benjamin’s behalf was evidence of the change that Joseph had hoped to find in his brothers. He sent them back to Canaan with gifts for his father and invited the family to come live in Egypt.

The grace of God working in the family of Jacob is evident in the way Joseph dealt with his brothers. Joseph did not want revenge against them. He realized that his personal suffering had preserved the family as an instrument of God’s will. Joseph also was aware that his rise to power was for the good of his family, not for his own glory (45:7–8).

Other men named Joseph include:

2. The father of one of the spies sent into Canaan (Num. 13:7).
3. A son of Asaph (1 Chr. 25:2, 9).
4. One who married a foreign wife during the Exile (Ezra 10:42).
5. A priest of the family of Shebaniah (Neh. 12:14).
6. The husband of Mary, mother of Jesus (Matt. 1:16–24; 2:13; Luke 1:27; 2:4).
7. A converted Jew of Arimathea in whose tomb Jesus was laid (Matt. 27:57, 59; Luke 23:50–53).
8–10. Three different ancestors of Christ, about whom little is known (Luke 3:24, 26, 30).
11. A disciple (known also as Barsabas and Justus) considered to take the place of Judas Iscariot (Acts 1:23). Also see JOSES.

JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS [joe SEE fis, FLAY vih us]—a Jewish historian and a general of the Galilean Jewish army in the war against Rome (A.D. 66–70). The historical works of Josephus provide important background information for the New Testament and the late intertestamental period. They include information on agriculture, geography, politics, religion, social traditions and practices, and insights into outstanding personalities such as HEROD, and FELIX. Josephus also refers to John the Baptist, James the Lord's brother, and Jesus.

JOSES [JOE seez]—the name of three men in the New Testament:

1. One of the four brothers of Jesus (Matt. 13:55; Mark 6:3), also called Joseph.
2. The brother of James the Less (Mark 15:40, 47), also called Joseph.
3. The original name of BARNABAS (Acts 4:36), also called Joseph.

JOSHAH [JOE shuh]—a son of Amaziah, of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:34).

JOSHAPHAT [JAHSH uh fat] (the Lord judges)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. One of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:43).
2. A priest who preceded the ARK OF THE COVENANT when it was moved to Jerusalem (1 Chr. 15:24; Jehoshaphat, KJV).

JOSHAVIAH [jahsh uh VIGH uh]—one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:46).

JOSHBEKASHAH [jahsh buh KAY shuh]—a son of Heman appointed by David as a singer (1 Chr. 25:4, 24).

JOSHEB-BASSHEBETH [JOE sheb bash EE beth]—a form of JASHOBEAM.

JOSHIBIAH [jah shuh BIGH uh]—a son of Seraiah (1 Chr. 4:35).

JOSHUA [JAHSH oo uh] (the Lord is salvation)—the successor to Moses and the man who led the nation of Israel to conquer and settle the Promised Land.

Joshua was born in Egypt. He went through the great events of the Passover and the Exodus with Moses and all the Hebrew people who escaped from slavery in Egypt at the hand of their Redeemer God. In the Wilderness of Sinai, Moses took his assistant Joshua with him when he went into the mountains to talk with God (Ex. 24:13). Moses also gave Joshua a prominent place at the TABERNACLE. As Moses' servant, Joshua would remain at the tabernacle as his representative while the great leader left the camp to fellowship with the Lord (Ex. 33:11).

When Moses sent spies to scout out the land of Canaan, Joshua was selected as the representative of the tribe of Ephraim (Num. 13:8). Only Joshua and Caleb returned to the camp with a report that they could conquer the land with God's help. The other ten spies complained that they were "like grasshoppers" in comparison to the Canaanites (Num. 13:33). Because of their show of faith, Joshua and Caleb were allowed to enter the land at the end of their years of wandering in the wilderness. But all the other Israelites who lived at that time died before the nation entered the Promised Land (Num. 14:30).

At Moses' death, Joshua was chosen as his successor (Josh. 1:1–2). He led the Israelites to conquer the land (Joshua 1–2), supervised the division of the territory among the twelve tribes, and led the people to renew their covenant with God (Joshua 13–22).

When Joshua died at the age of 110, he was buried in the land of his inheritance at Timnath Serah (Josh. 24:30). As Moses' successor, Joshua completed the work that this great leader had begun. Moses led Israel out of Egypt; Joshua led Israel into Canaan. Joshua's name, an Old Testament form of Jesus, means "the Lord is salvation." By his name and by his life, he demonstrated the salvation that comes from God.

JOSHUA, BOOK OF—an Old Testament book that describes the conquest and division of the land of Canaan by the Hebrew people. The book is named for its central figure, Joshua, who succeeded Moses as leader of Israel.

Structure of the Book. The Book of Joshua has a natural, flowing structure that makes it a joy to read and study. In a brief prologue, the warrior Joshua is introduced as the capable leader selected by God to lead the people. Then the book launches immediately into narratives about the military victories of the Hebrews as they drove the Canaanites out of the land. Joshua's strategy was to divide and conquer. He struck first in central Canaan by taking the city of Jericho and surrounding territory. Then he launched rapid attacks to the south and north. This strategy quickly gave the Covenant People a foothold in the land. After weakening the enemy's position with this strategy, Joshua led numerous minor attacks against them during the next several years.

These accounts of Joshua's military campaigns are followed by a long description of the division of the land among the twelve tribes of Israel. Finally, the book ends with the death of Joshua after he leads the people to renew the covenant and charges them to remain faithful to God.

Authorship and Date. Early Jewish tradition credited Joshua with writing this book. But this is disputed by many modern scholars. One of the strongest objections to his authorship is the final section of the book, which describes Joshua's death and burial (24:29–33). Obviously, Joshua could not have written this material.

But other sections of the book strongly suggest that they were written by Joshua. One passage declares that after giving his farewell address, "Joshua wrote these words in the Book of the Law of God" (24:26). Some of the battle narratives are also written with vivid description and minute detail, suggesting that they may have been composed by the commander on the scene, Joshua himself (see especially chaps. 6–8).

The most logical and believable theory about authorship is that Joshua wrote a major part of the book. But it probably did not reach its finished form until several years after his death. An editor must have added some additional narratives, such as the one about Joshua's death and burial, to complete this important book about Joshua and his contribution. A commonly accepted date for the death of Joshua is about 1375 B.C., so the book may have been completed shortly after this date.

Historical Setting. The Book of Joshua covers about twenty-five years in one of the most important periods of Israel's history—their conquest and final settlement of the land that God had promised to Abraham and his descendants many centuries earlier. The specific years for this occupation must have been from about 1400 to 1375 B.C.

Theological Contribution. One important message of the Book of Joshua is that true and false religions do not mix. Joshua's orders were to destroy the Canaanites because of their pagan and immoral worship practices. But these people never were totally subdued or destroyed. Traces of their false religion remained to tempt the Israelites. Again and again throughout their history, the Hebrew people departed from worship of the one true God. This tendency toward false worship was the main reason for Joshua's moving farewell speech. He warned the people against worshiping these false gods and challenged them to remain faithful to the Lord, who had delivered them. The point of Joshua's message: you cannot worship these false gods and remain faithful to the Lord. "But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord" (24:15).

Special Considerations. Some people have difficulty with God's commanding Joshua to destroy the Canaanites. But behind this command lay God's concern for his Covenant People. He wanted to remove the Canaanites' idolatrous worship practices so they would not be a temptation to the Israelites. This command to Joshua also represented God's judgment against sin and immorality. God used Israel as an instrument of His judgment against a pagan nation.

JOSHUA, GATE OF (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

JOSIAH [joe SIGH uh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The sixteenth king of Judah, the son of AMON, and the grandson of Manasseh (2 Kin. 21:23—23:30). The three decades of Josiah's reign were characterized by peace, prosperity, and reform. Hence, they were among the happiest years experienced by Judah. King Josiah devoted himself to pleasing God and reinstituting Israel's observance of the Mosaic Law. That a wicked king like Amon could have such a godly son and successor is a tribute to the grace of God.

The Bible focuses almost exclusively on Josiah’s spiritual reform, which climaxed in the eighteenth year of his reign with the discovery of the Book of the Law.

Josiah’s reform actually occurred in three stages. Ascending to the throne at age eight, he apparently was blessed with God-fearing advisors who resisted the idolatrous influence of his father. More importantly, however, at the age of sixteen (stage one), Josiah personally “began to seek the God of his father David” (2 Chr. 34:3).

At the age of twenty (stage two), Josiah began to cleanse Jerusalem and the land of Judah of idolatrous objects (2 Chr. 34:3–7). His reform was even more extensive than that of his predecessor, HEZEKIAH (2 Kin. 18:4; 2 Chr. 29:3–36). Josiah extended his cleansing of the land into the territory of fallen Israel; at the time Israel was nominally controlled by Assyria. Josiah personally supervised the destruction of the altars of the Baals, the incense altars, the wooden images, the carved images, and the molded images as far north as the cities of Naphtali. Josiah’s efforts were aided by the death of the great Assyrian king, Ashurbanipal, which brought about a serious decline in Assyria’s power and allowed Josiah freedom to pursue his reforms.

At the age of twenty-six (stage three), Josiah ordered that the temple be repaired under the supervision of Hilkiah, the high priest. In the process, a copy of the Book of the Law was discovered (2 Chr. 34:14–15). When it was read to Josiah, he was horrified to learn how far Judah had departed from the law of God. This discovery provided a new momentum for the reformation that was already in progress.

In 609 B.C. Josiah attempted to block Pharaoh Necho II of Egypt as he marched north to assist Assyria in her fight with Babylon for world supremacy. Despite the pharaoh’s assurance to the contrary, Josiah saw Necho’s northern campaign as a threat to Judah’s security. When he engaged Necho in battle at Megiddo, Josiah was seriously injured. He was returned to Jerusalem, where he died after reigning thirty-one years. His death was followed by widespread lamentation (2 Chr. 35:20–27). In the New Testament, Josiah is referred to as Josias (Matt. 1:10, KJV).

2. A captive who returned to Jerusalem from Babylon in Zechariah's day (Zech. 6:10), also called Hen (Zech. 6:14).

JOSIAS [joe SIGH us]—a form of JOSIAH.

JOT [jaht]—the English rendering of the Greek word iota (Matt. 5:18), the smallest letter of the Greek alphabet. The word is used figuratively to express a matter that seems to be of small importance.

JOTBAH [JAHT buh]—the home of Haruz, whose daughter Meshullemeth was the mother of King AMON of Judah (2 Kin. 21:19).

JOTBATHAH [JAHT buh thuh]—a stopping place of the Israelites in the wilderness between Hor Hagidgad and Abronah (Num. 33:33–34).

JOTHAM [JOE thum] (the Lord is perfect)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. The youngest son of Gideon (Judg. 9:1–21). He escaped death at the hands of Abimelech, another son of Gideon. When the Shechemites made Abimelech king, Jotham stood on Mount Gerizim and pronounced judgment on Abimelech and the Shechemites by telling a parable of the trees (vv. 7–20). In fear for his life, Jotham fled to Beer. No more is recorded of him, except that his curse was fulfilled three years later (Judg. 9:57).
2. A son of Uzziah (or Azariah) and the eleventh king of Judah (2 Kin. 15:32–38; 2 Chr. 26:21–23), who reigned from about 750–732 B.C. Jotham ruled as co-regent with his father when it was discovered that Uzziah had leprosy. His eighteen-year reign was a godly one, although the people persisted in idolatry. He was undoubtedly encouraged by the prophets Isaiah, Hosea, and Micah, who ministered during his reign (Is. 1:1; Hos. 1:1; Mic. 1:1).

   Jotham built the Upper Gate of the temple and strengthened the Jerusalem wall of Ophel. He also built cities and fortified buildings throughout the countryside to further strengthen Judah. He fought and defeated the Ammonites and exacted tribute from them for three years (2 Chr. 27:3–5).

   Jotham's strength and prosperity were attributed to the fact that "he prepared his ways before the LORD his God" (2 Chr. 27:6).

Jotham was an ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:9; Joatham, KJV).
3. A son of Jahdai and a descendant of Caleb (1 Chr. 2:47).

JOY—a positive attitude or pleasant emotion; delight. Many kinds of joy are reported in the Bible. Even the wicked are said to experience joy in their triumphs over the righteous (1 Cor. 13:6; Rev. 11:10). Many levels of joy are also described, including gladness, contentment, and cheerfulness.

But the joy that the people of God should have is holy and pure. This joy rises above circumstances and focuses on the very character of God. For example, the psalmist rejoices over God's righteousness (71:14–16), salvation (21:1; 71:23), mercy (31:7), creation (148:5), word (119:14, 162), and faithfulness (33:1–6). God's characteristics as well as His acts are the cause of rejoicing.

The joy required of the righteous person (Ps. 150; Phil. 4:4) is produced by the Spirit of God (Gal. 5:22). This kind of joy looks beyond the present to our future salvation (Rom. 5:2; 8:18; 1 Pet. 1:4, 6) and to our sovereign God, who works out all things for our ultimate good, which is Christlikeness (Rom. 8:28–30). This kind of joy is distinct from mere happiness. Joy like this is possible, even in the midst of sorrow (1 Cor. 12:26; 2 Cor. 6:10; 7:4).

JOZABAD [JAHZ uh bad] (the Lord bestows)—the name of several men in the Old Testament:

1. A Gederathite who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:4; Josabad, KJV).
2, 3. Two captains of the tribe of Manasseh who defected from Saul to join David's forces at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:20).
4. A Levite overseer in the temple during the reign of Hezekiah (2 Chr. 31:13).
5. A chief Levite during the reign of Josiah (2 Chr. 35:9).
6. A son of Jeshua (Ezra 8:33). He may be the same person as Jozabad No. 8, 9, or 10.
7. A descendant of Pashhur who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:22).
8. A Levite who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:23).

9. A Levite who helped Ezra interpret the Law to the people (Neh. 8:7–8).
10. A chief Levite in Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 11:16).

JOZACHAR [JAHZ uh kahr] (the Lord remembers)—a son of Shimeath and one of two servants of Joash (Jehoash), king of Judah, who formed a conspiracy against Joash. Together they assassinated Joash (2 Kin. 12:20–21; Jozabad, NIV).

JOZADAK [JAHZ uh dak] (the Lord is just)—the father of Jeshua (or Joshua), the high priest in Zerubbabel's time. Jozadak was among those who were carried into Babylonian captivity by Nebuchadnezzar.

JUBAL [JOO buhl]—a descendant of Cain, called "the father of all those who play the harp and the flute" (Gen. 4:21).

JUBILEE [JOO bah lee]—the fiftieth year after seven cycles of seven years, when specific instructions about property and slavery took effect (Lev. 25:8–55).

The word "jubilee" comes from a Hebrew word that means to be "jubilant" and to "exult." The word is related to the Hebrew word for ram's horn or trumpet. The Jubilee year was launched with a blast from a ram's horn on the Day of Atonement, signifying a call to joy, liberation, and the beginning of a year for doing justice and loving mercy.

The fiftieth year was a special year in which to "proclaim liberty throughout all the land" (Lev. 25:10—a verse inscribed on the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia). Specifically, individuals who had incurred debts and had sold themselves as slaves or servants to others were released from their debts and were set at liberty. Since all land belonged to God (Lev. 25:23), land could not be sold; but land could be lost to another for reasons of debt. In the Year of Jubilee such land was returned to the families to whom it was originally given.

Like the SABBATICAL YEARS, the Year of Jubilee was a year for neither sowing nor reaping (Lev. 25:11). The fiftieth year became important in Israel's economic life. If anyone wished to redeem a person in debt, the price for doing so was calculated on the basis of the number of years remaining until the Jubilee.

Part of the reason why God established the Jubilee Year was to prevent the Israelites from oppressing one another (Lev. 25:17). One effect of the Jubilee Year was to prevent a permanent system of economic classes. The Jubilee Year had a leveling effect on Israel's culture; it gave everyone a chance to start over, economically and socially. The Jubilee Year reminds us that God wants people to be free (Luke 4:18–19). It also stands as a witness to God's desire for justice on earth and calls into question any social practices that lead to permanent bondage and loss of economic opportunity.

One may also see God's provision for the land's conservation in the call for the land to rest (Lev. 25:11, 18–22). The people were not to extract the earth's resources in a greedy manner.

The sabbatical year and presumably the Year of Jubilee were also characterized by instruction in the Law (Deut. 31:9–13). In this way the people learned that God's demand to love and obey Him was directly related to his concern for the welfare of all the people of Israel.

JUCAL [JOO kal]—a form of JEHUCAL.

JUDA [JOO duh]—a form of JUDAS.

JUDAEA [joo DEE uh]—a form of JUDEA.

JUDAH [JOO duh] (praise)—the name of seven men and a place in the Old Testament:

1. The fourth son of Jacob and Leah and the founder of the family out of which the messianic line came (Gen. 29:35; Num. 26:19–21; Matt. 1:2).

   Judah was one of the most prominent of the twelve sons of Jacob. He saved Joseph's life by suggesting that his brothers sell Joseph to Ishmaelite merchants rather than kill him (Gen. 37:26–28). In Egypt it was Judah who begged Joseph to detain him rather than Benjamin, Jacob's beloved son. In an eloquent speech Judah confessed what he and his brothers had done to Joseph; shortly thereafter, Joseph identified himself to his brothers (Gen. 44:14—45:1).

It appears that Judah was the leader of Jacob's sons who remained at home. Even though he was not the oldest son, Judah was sent by Jacob to precede him to Egypt (Gen. 46:28). Also Judah, rather than his older brothers, received Jacob's blessing (Gen. 49:3–10). In that blessing, Jacob foretold the rise of Judah: "Your father's children shall bow down before you. . . . The scepter shall not depart from Judah . . . until Shiloh comes" (Gen. 49:8, 10).

Judah had three sons: Er, Onan, and Shelah (Gen. 38:3–5). Er and Onan were killed by divine judgment because of their sins (Gen. 38:7–10). Judah also fathered twin sons, Perez and Zerah, by TAMAR, Er's widow (Gen. 38:29–30). The line of Judah ran through Perez to David and thus became the messianic line (Luke 3:30; Judas, KJV).

2. An ancestor of certain Israelites who helped rebuild the temple after the captivity (Ezra 3:9).
3. A Levite who divorced his pagan wife after returning from the captivity (Ezra 10:23).
4. A son of Senuah (Neh. 11:9).
5. A Levite who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:8).
6. A leader of Judah who participated in the dedication of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:34).
7. A musician and son of a priest (Neh. 12:36).
8. A place on the border of Naphtali (Josh. 19:34).

JUDAH, KINGDOM OF—one of the two nations into which the united kingdom of Israel was divided following King Solomon's death in 931 B.C. (see Map 4, B–5). Judah consisted mostly of the tribes of Judah and part of Benjamin, although Simeon apparently was included later. The kingdom extended in the north as far as Bethel, while in the south it ended in the dry area known as the NEGEV. The Jordan River and the Mediterranean Sea formed the kingdom's eastern and western boundaries respectively. Jerusalem was its capital.

Judah was left suddenly independent when Rehoboam flatly refused to lighten the heavy load of forced labor and high taxation imposed on the Israelites by his father Solomon (1 Kin. 12:1–24). Upon Rehoboam’s refusal, the ten tribes living north of Bethel promptly declared their independence. Under the leadership of Jeroboam, they followed their own way of life. Israel soon slipped into idolatry; and when the sensuous and depraved religion of the Phoenicians was introduced, this idolatry became increasingly worse.

Scarcely had this division occurred when a new and entirely unexpected blow devastated Judah. Shishak, pharaoh of Egypt (about 945–924 B.C.), invaded the country, plundered the treasures of the temple and the royal palace, and destroyed a number of newly built fortresses (2 Chr. 12:1–12). A damaged monument of Shishak recovered from MEGIDDO shows the extent of this conquest.

Judah never recovered from the sudden loss of her national wealth. Because her land was not as fertile as that of the northern kingdom of Israel, Judah never enjoyed the same degree of prosperity.

Rehoboam wanted to attack Israel and reunite the kingdom by force, but Shemaiah the prophet showed him how foolish the attempt would be (1 Kin. 12:21–24). Rehoboam’s son Abijah (about 913–910 B.C.) regained a small area from Israel and tried to make an alliance with Syria against the Northern Kingdom, as did his successor Asa (about 910–869 B.C.). Asa rooted out much of the Canaanite paganism in Judah, and his reign was mostly peaceful and prosperous. He was followed (about 869 B.C.) by Jehoshaphat, who had co-ruled with Asa from about 873 B.C.

Judah prospered under the rule of Jehoshaphat, although he failed in his attempts to revive Solomon’s seagoing trade. An alliance with Ahab of Israel against the Syrians at Ramoth Gilead proved to be even more disastrous (2 Chr. 18:31–32). Jehoshaphat’s son Jehoram (about 848–841 B.C.) married Athaliah, daughter of Ahab and the wicked Queen Jezebel; and their marriage led to Baal worship also being established in Jerusalem (2 Kin. 8:18). Jehoram’s son Ahaziah reigned only for one year (841 B.C.) before he was killed. The pagan queen mother Athaliah (about 841–835 B.C.) seized the throne and nearly brought the Davidic line to extinction by killing most of Ahaziah’s sons. Only the infant Joash escaped; he was rescued by his aunt Jehoshabeath and her husband Jehoiada, the godly high priest (2 Chr. 22:10–12).

After six years Joash was proclaimed the lawful king, and Athaliah was executed. The new king reigned well (about 835–796 B.C.)

whenever he followed Jehoiada's advice. But following the death of the high priest, idolatry crept back into the nation's life. Joash was finally assassinated by his servants following a raid on Jerusalem by the army of Syria, which pillaged the city (2 Chr. 24:23–25).

Judah enjoyed modest prosperity under Amaziah (about 796–767 B.C.), the son and successor of Joash. Amaziah regained control of Edom, which had been independent since the days of Jehoram. Thus he was able to control the trading caravans of western Arabia as Solomon had done. With his victories, Amaziah became overconfident and began worshiping the pagan gods of the Edomites instead of honoring the God of Sinai. Amaziah suffered a severe setback when he fought with Joash, king of Israel (about 798–781 B.C.), and was captured. His release came only after he had permitted Jerusalem's walls to be destroyed and the city's treasure to be removed. Consequently, Judah found it even more difficult to defend itself against Israel than in the days of Rehoboam. Amaziah was murdered at Lachish as the result of a conspiracy (2 Kin. 14:19), and he was succeeded by Azariah (Uzziah) about 767 B.C.

Uzziah had co-ruled with Amaziah from about 791 B.C., and he immediately set about restoring Judah's military and economic strength. He suppressed Baal worship in the kingdom and promoted the traditions of the Sinai covenant. He improved agricultural productivity by constructing cisterns, which increased available water supplies. Uzziah incorporated some Philistine and Ammonite territory into his own realm; he also built new defensive positions in Jerusalem and at the outposts on the borders of Judah. Uzziah became proud of his successes, which led him to take over one of the duties of the high priest (2 Chr. 26:16–21). For this he was struck with leprosy for the rest of his life.

Jotham succeeded his father Uzziah and continued to make the Southern Kingdom productive. His successor, Ahaz (about 732–715 B.C.), was faced with Assyria's rise to power under Tiglath-Pileser III; but Ahaz resisted the urgings of Rezin of Syria and Pekah of Israel to join an alliance against Assyria. Instead, Ahaz sought help from Assyria, against Isaiah's advice, and received assistance in return for heavy tribute. Syria and the kingdom of Israel were destroyed, leaving Judah at the mercy of the Assyrians.

When Hezekiah (about 714–686 B.C.) succeeded Ahaz, he also disregarded Isaiah's advice and became involved in a coalition with Babylonia and Egypt against Assyria. Assyria, now ruled by Sennacherib (about 705–681 B.C.), moved against Jerusalem in 701 B.C. It was at this time that Hezekiah constructed the SILOAM Tunnel to bring water from the Spring of GIHON into the city of Jerusalem (2 Chr. 32:30).

The Assyrians soon withdrew after suffering heavy losses, perhaps from a plague (Is. 37:36). The rest of Hezekiah's reign was marked by a renewal of covenant faith. Hezekiah's renewal was disrupted by his son Manasseh (about 697–641 B.C.), who reacted violently against his father's religious policies. Manasseh introduced a lengthy period of paganism that brought Judah to new depths of depravity (2 Chr. 33:1–20). He was deported to Babylon by Esarhaddon (about 681–669 B.C.) and later was allowed to return home. He then began a religious reformation, but with poor results.

Manasseh's son Amon (about 642–640 B.C.) continued in his father's depravity, but he soon was murdered. His successor Josiah (about 640–609 B.C.) restored traditional covenant religion, which was based on the Book of the Law newly discovered in a temple storeroom (2 Chr. 34:14). Many did not follow Josiah's example, however, and the prophet ZEPHANIAH foretold disaster for the nation.

By 610 B.C. the Assyrian Empire had collapsed under Babylonian attacks, and the victors prepared to march against Egypt, which had been helping the Assyrians. Against Jeremiah's advice, Josiah intervened and was killed at Megiddo (2 Chr. 35:20–27). Pharaoh Necho deposed Jehoahaz (Shallum) in 609 B.C. and made Jehoiakim ruler of Judah, which was now firmly under Egyptian control. The Babylonians swept down upon Jerusalem in 597 B.C. and captured it. A second attack led to Jerusalem's second defeat in 586 B.C. Captives from both campaigns were taken to Babylonia to mark the captivity of the Southern Kingdom.

The Babylonians appointed Gedaliah, a court official in Judah, to oversee what was left of life in the land. After three months as governor, he was assassinated. Judah's kingdom reaped the reward of its idolatry and rebellion against the Lord and disappeared from history.

JUDAH, TRIBE OF—the tribe founded by JUDAH. Its five tribal families sprang from Judah's three sons—Shelah, Perez, and Zerah—and two grandsons, Hezron and Hamul (Num. 26:19–21). In the first census, the tribe of Judah numbered 74,600 men (Num. 1:26–27). In the second census, the tribe numbered 76,500 (Num. 26:22).

Except for Simeon, Judah was the southernmost tribe of the Israelites. However, Simeon seems to have been absorbed into Judah at an early date. Judah's eastern border was the Dead Sea, and its western border was the Mediterranean Sea, although the Philistines usually controlled the plain along the sea. Originally, Judah's northern boundary ran from just south of Jerusalem northwest to Kirjath Jearim and Jabneel. To the south Judah's border ran south to the Ascent of Akrabbim, to the Wilderness of Zin, and south from Kadesh Barnea to the Mediterranean. During the period of the divided kingdom, its northern boundary ran north of Jerusalem.

At its longest point Judah was about 153 kilometers (95 miles) in length. At its widest point it was about 73 kilometers (45 miles) wide, excluding the area controlled by the Philistines.

The tribe of Judah, along with Benjamin, remained true to David's line when the tribes split after Solomon's death. Together they formed the southern kingdom of Judah, which at one time included Edom to the southeast.

JUDAIZERS [JOO dee eye zurs]—early converts to Christianity who tried to force believers from non-Jewish backgrounds to adopt Jewish customs as a condition of salvation. Evidence of this movement within the early church first emerged about A.D. 49, when "certain men came down from Judea and taught the brethren, 'Unless you are circumcised according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved' " (Acts 15:1).

The apostle Paul denounced this idea, insisting that only one thing is necessary for salvation: faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 15:1–29). In the letter to the Galatians, Paul continued this same argument, insisting that the believer is justified by faith alone. To become a new person in Christ is to be set free from the requirements of the Jewish law: "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision avails anything, but a new creation" (Gal. 6:15).

JUDAS [JOO duhs] (praise)—the name of five men in the New Testament:

1. One of the four brothers of Jesus (Matt. 13:55; Mark 6:3; Juda, KJV). Some scholars believe he was the author of the Epistle of Jude.
2. One of the twelve apostles of Jesus. John is careful to distinguish him from Judas Iscariot (John 14:22). He is called "Judas the son of James" (Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13). In the list of the Twelve given in Mark, instead of "Judas . . . of James" a Thaddaeus is mentioned (Mark 3:18). Matthew has Lebbaeus, whose surname was Thaddaeus (Matt. 10:3). He was also called Judas the Zealot. Tradition says he preached in Assyria and Persia and died a martyr in Persia.

3. Judas of Galilee (Acts 5:37). In the days of the census (Luke 2:2), he led a revolt against Rome. He was killed, and his followers were scattered. According to the Jewish historian Josephus, Judas founded a sect whose main belief was that their only ruler and lord was God.
4. A man with whom the apostle Paul stayed in Damascus after his conversion (Acts 9:11).
5. A disciple surnamed Barsabas who belonged to the church in Jerusalem. The apostles and elders of that church chose Judas and Silas to accompany Paul and Barnabas to Antioch; together they conveyed to the church in that city the decree of the Jerusalem Council about circumcision.

Also see JUDAH.

JUDAS ISCARIOT [JOO duhs iss KAR ih uht]—the disciple who betrayed Jesus. Judas was the son of Simon (John 6:71), or of Simon Iscariot (NRSV). The term Iscariot, which is used to distinguish Judas from the other disciple named Judas (Luke 6:16; John 14:22; Acts 1:13), refers to his hometown of Kerioth, in southern Judah (Josh. 15:25). Thus, Judas was a Judean, the only one of the Twelve who was not from Galilee.

The details of Judas' life are sketchy. Because of his betrayal of Jesus, Judas, however, is even more of a mystery. It must be assumed that Jesus saw promise in Judas, or He would not have called him to be a disciple.

Judas' name appears in three of the lists of the disciples (Matt. 10:2–4; Mark 3:16–19; Luke 6:14–16), although it always appears last. His name is missing from the list of the eleven disciples in Acts 1:13; by that time Judas had already committed suicide. Judas must have been an important disciple, because he served as their treasurer (John 12:6; 13:29).

During the week of the Passover festival, Judas went to the chief priests and offered to betray Jesus for a reward (Matt. 26:14–16; Mark 14:10–11). At the Passover supper, Jesus announced that He would be betrayed and that He knew who His betrayer was—one who dipped his hand with him in the dish (Mark 14:20), the one to whom He would give the piece of bread used in eating (John 13:26–27). Jesus was saying that a friend, one who dipped out of the same dish as He, was His betrayer. These verses in John indicate that Judas probably was reclining beside Jesus, evidence that Judas was an important disciple.

Jesus said to Judas, “What you do, do quickly” (John 13:27). Judas left immediately after he ate (John 13:30). The first observance of the Lord’s Supper was probably celebrated afterward, without Judas (Matt. 26:26–29).

Judas carried out his betrayal in the Garden of Gethsemane. By a prearranged sign, Judas singled out Jesus for the soldiers by kissing him. The gospels do not tell us why Judas was needed to point out Jesus, who had become a well-known figure. It is possible that Judas disclosed where Jesus would be that night, so that He could be arrested secretly without the knowledge of His many supporters (Matt. 26:47–50).

Matthew reports that, realizing what he had done, Judas attempted to return the money to the priests. When the priests refused to take it, Judas threw the money on the temple floor, went out, and hanged himself. Unwilling to use “blood money” for the temple, the priests bought a potter’s field, which became known as the “Field of Blood” (Matt. 27:3–10). This field is traditionally located at the point where the Kidron, Tyropoeon, and Hinnom valleys come together.

It is difficult to understand why Judas betrayed Jesus. Since he had access to the disciples’ treasury, it seems unlikely that he did it for the money only; thirty pieces of silver is a relatively small amount. Some have suggested that Judas thought that his betrayal would force Jesus into asserting His true power and overthrowing the Romans. Others have suggested that Judas might have become convinced that Jesus was a false messiah, and that the true Messiah was yet to come, or that he was upset over Jesus’ apparent indifference to the law and His association with sinners and his violation of the Sabbath. Whatever the reason, Judas’ motive remains shrouded in mystery.

Acts 1:20 quotes Psalm 109:8 as the basis for electing another person to fill the place vacated by Judas: “Let another take his office.” When the eleven remaining apostles cast lots for Judas’ replacement, “the lot fell on Matthias. And he was numbered with the eleven apostles” (Acts 1:26).

JUDAS MACCABAEUS [JOO duhs mak uh BEE uhs] (see MACCABEES).

JUDE [jood] (praise)—the author of the Epistle of Jude, in which he is described as "a servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James" (Jude 1). Jude is an English form of the name Judas. Many scholars believe that the James mentioned in this passage is James the brother of Jesus. In Matthew 13:55 the people said concerning Jesus, "Is this not the carpenter's son? Is not His mother called Mary? And His brothers James, Joses, Simon, and Judas?" (Mark 6:3).

If Jude (Judas) was the brother of James and of Jesus, Jude did not believe in Him (John 7:5) until after Jesus' resurrection (Acts 1:14).

JUDE, EPISTLE OF—the last of the general letters of the New Testament and the next to the last book of the Bible. Jude is a brief but hard-hitting epistle written by a man who believed in not allowing negative influences to destroy the church. Jude unmasks false teaching with pointed language and vivid images, while appealing to the faithful to remember the teachings of the apostles.

Structure of the Epistle. A salutation (vv. 1–2) is followed by a warning that "licentiousness" has found its way into the church (vv. 3–4). Such blasphemies will receive the judgment of God, as did sinful Israel (v. 5), rebellious angels (v. 6), and Sodom and Gomorrah (v. 7). Verses 8 through 13 note that the outrage of the blasphemers exceeds that of Satan himself and is similar to the rebellions of Cain (Gen. 4:3–8), Balaam (Numbers 22–24), and Korah (Num. 16:19–35). Their schemes are nothing new; Enoch of old prophesied their punishment (vv. 14–16). Christians need not be victimized by such deceivers; their defense lies in remembering the words of the apostles and by working for the salvation of those caught in such errors (vv. 17–23). A famous benediction concludes the epistle (vv. 24–25).

Authorship and Date. The author of the epistle introduces himself as "Jude, a servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James" (v. 1). There is no further identification, and the James mentioned is probably the Lord's brother (Gal. 1:19). Jude, therefore, would also be a brother of Jesus (Judas, Mark 6:3; Matt. 13:55), although not an apostle (Jude 17). The emphasis on remembering "the words which were spoken before by the apostles" (v. 17) suggests that the epistle was composed sometime after the apostles had taught, thus favoring a date near the close of the first century.

Historical Setting. The Epistle of Jude has the character of a tract or brief essay written for a general Christian audience (v. 1). The author set out to write about “our common salvation” (v. 3), but the more pressing issue of false teachers launched him into a bitter attack on the “ungodly” (v. 15). Their ungodliness took the form of denying the lordship of Jesus Christ and, in the name of grace (v. 4), justifying a life that included immorality of all sorts (vv. 4, 7, 16), mercenary interests (v. 11, 16), cheap talk (v. 16), and utter worldliness (v. 19).

The false teachers attacked by Jude seem to have separated “spiritual” matters from behavior. Apparently they taught that the world is evil, and therefore it makes little difference how one behaves. Like the Nicolaitans (Rev. 2:6, 15), the false teachers deserved the just punishment of God. They refused to recognize the implications of the incarnation—that if God cared enough to send His Son into the world, then He certainly cares how people behave in it.

Theological Contribution. Jude writes as a defender of the faith who is “contending earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints” (v. 3). The “ungodly” are not the heathen outside the church; they are the false teachers inside (v. 12). Their association with the faith, however, does not mean they live in the faith: the ungodly have not the Spirit (v. 19), whereas the faithful do (v. 20); the ungodly remain in eternal darkness (v. 13), but the saints have eternal life (v. 21). Condemning his opponents in sharp imagery, Jude calls them “raging waves of the sea, foaming up their own shame; wandering stars for whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever” (v. 13). The saints, on the other hand, must set their anchor in the teaching of the apostles (v. 17), and in the love of God (v. 21). They must work to retrieve from certain destruction those who have been deceived (vv. 22–23).

Special Consideration. Jude’s last word on the problem of corruption in the church is preserved in a memorable benediction. Only God can keep us from error and bring us to Himself:

“Now to Him who is able to keep you from stumbling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy, to God our Savior, who alone is wise, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and forever. Amen.”

JUDEA [joo DEE uh]—the Greco-Roman name for the land of Judah. Judea is first mentioned in Ezra 5:8 (Judaea, KJV; Judah, NIV), where it is used to designate a province of the Persian Empire. The word Judea comes from the adjective “Jewish,” a term that was used of the Babylonian captives who returned to the Promised Land, most of whom were from the tribe of Judah.

Under the rule of the Persians, Judea was a district administered by a governor; usually this governor was a Jew (Hag. 1:14; 2:2). When Herod Archelaus was banished in A.D. 6, Judea ceased to exist as a separate district and was annexed to the Roman province of Syria. The governors of Judea, called prefects or PROCURATORS, were appointed by the emperor; their official residence was at Caesarea. However, they were supervised by the proconsul of Syria, who ruled from Antioch (Luke 3:1). It was under this political arrangement that Jesus lived and ministered.

Judea extended from the Mediterranean Sea on the west to the Dead Sea on the east, and from a few miles south of Gaza and the southern tip of the Dead Sea north to about Joppa. Thus, Judea measured about 90 kilometers (56 miles) from north to south and from east to west. The region contained four distinctive types of land: the coastal plains along the Mediterranean Sea, the lowlands in the south, the hill country, and the desert.

JUDGE (see LAW; OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

JUDGES, THE—military heroes or deliverers who led the nation of Israel against their enemies during the period between the death of Joshua and the establishment of the kingship. The stories of their exploits are found in the Book of JUDGES.

During the period of the judges, from about 1380–1050 B.C., the government of Israel was a loose confederation of tribes gathered about their central shrine, the ARK OF THE COVENANT. Without a human king to guide them, the people tended to rebel and fall into worship of false gods time and time again. “Everyone did what was right in his own eyes” (Judg. 17:6; 21:25) is how the Book of Judges describes these chaotic times. To punish the people, God would send foreign nations or tribes to oppress the Israelites.

These judges or charismatic leaders would rally the people to defeat the enemy. As God's agents for justice and deliverance, they would act decisively to free the nation from oppression. But the judges themselves were often weak, and their work was short-lived. The people would enter another stage of rebellion and idolatry, only to see the cycle of oppression and deliverance repeated all over again.

The judges themselves were a diverse lot. Some of them received only a brief mention in the Book of Judges. These minor judges were Shamgar (3:31), Tola (10:1–2), Jair (10:3–5), Ibzan (12:8–10), Elon (12:11–12), and Abdon (12:13–15).

The careers of other judges are explored in greater detail in the Book of Judges. Othniel, a nephew of Caleb (3:7–11), was a warrior-deliverer who led the Israelites against the king of Mesopotamia. Ehud (3:12–30) was distinguished by left-handedness and his deftness with the dagger. Jephthah (11:1—12:7) was a harlot's son whose devotion to God was matched only by his rashness. Gideon (6:11—8:35) needed many encouragements to act upon God's call. But he finally led 300 Israelites to defeat the entire army of the Midianites. The most interesting of the judges, perhaps, was Samson (13:1—16:31), whose frailties of the flesh led to his capture by the hated Philistines. The most courageous of the judges was Deborah, a woman who prevailed upon Barak to attack the mighty army of the Canaanites (4:1—5:31).

The stories of the judges make interesting reading because of their rugged personalities and the nature of the times in which they lived. The openness with which they are portrayed in all their weaknesses is one mark of the integrity of the Bible.

JUDGES, BOOK OF—a historical book of the Old Testament that covers the chaotic time between Joshua's death and the beginning of a centralized government under King Saul, a period of over 300 years. The "judges" for whom the book is named were actually military leaders whom God raised up to deliver His people from their enemies. Twelve of these heroic deliverers are mentioned in the book.

Structure of the Book. The introduction to Judges (1:1—3:6) describes the period after Joshua's death as a time of instability and moral depravity. Without a strong religious leader like Joshua to give them clear direction, the people of Israel fell into the worship of false gods. To punish the people, God delivered them into the hands of enemy nations. In their distress the people repented and cried out to God for help, and God answered their pleas by sending a "judge" or deliverer. In each instance after a period of faithfulness and security, the people once again forgot God, renewing the cycle of unfaithfulness all over again. This theme of sin-punishment-repentance-deliverance runs seven times throughout the book; it is introduced by the refrain, "The children of Israel again did evil in the sight of the LORD" (4:1).

The three best-known judges or deliverers described in the book are DEBORAH (4:1—5:31), GIDEON (6:1—8:32), and SAMSON (13:1—16:31). The other nine heroic figures from this period in Israel's history are OTHNIEL, EHUD, SHAMGAR, TOLA, JAIR, JEPHTHAH, IBZAN, ELON, and ABDON.

The Book of Judges contains some of the best-known stories in the Bible. One judge, Gideon, routed a Midianite army of several thousand with a group of 300 warriors. Under the cover of darkness, Gideon and his men hid lighted torches inside empty pitchers, then broke the pitchers and blew trumpets to catch the army by surprise. The mighty Midianites fled in panic (7:15–25).

An interesting part of the Gideon story is the way in which this judge of Israel tested what he perceived to be God's call. First, Gideon spread a piece of wool on the ground and asked God to saturate it with dew but leave the ground around it dry if he wanted Gideon to deliver Israel. This happened exactly that way. Still not satisfied, Gideon asked God to reverse this procedure the second night—to leave the wool dry with wet ground all around it. After this happened, Gideon agreed to lead his band of warriors against the Midianites (6:36–40).

Another famous story in the Book of Judges is about Samson and Delilah. A judge of superhuman strength, Samson defeated superior forces of the Philistine tribe several times by himself. They finally captured him after Delilah betrayed him by cutting his long hair, which was the secret of his strength. In captivity, Samson took thousands of his enemies to their death by pulling down the pillars of the temple where the Philistines were worshipping their pagan god Dagon (16:1–31).

Authorship and Date. Like the authors of several other historical books of the Old Testament, the author of Judges is unknown. But internal evidence gives us a clue about the probable date when it was written. The writer reminds us, “In those days there was no king in Israel; everyone did what was right in his own eyes” (17:6; 21:25). This statement tells us the book was written after the events described in Judges, probably during the days of King Saul or King David, about 1050 to 970 B.C. Early Jewish scholars believed the book was written by Samuel, Israel’s first prophet, who anointed Saul as the nation’s first king. But this is impossible to determine from evidence presented by the book itself. The unknown writer may have been a contemporary of Samuel.

Historical Setting. Israel’s entry into the Promised Land under Joshua was not so much a total conquest as an occupation. Even after the land was divided among Israel’s twelve tribes, the Israelites continued to face the possibility of domination by the warlike Canaanites who were never driven entirely out of the land. These were the enemies who threatened Israel repeatedly during the period of the judges, from about 1380 to 1050 B.C.

The Canaanite problem was intensified by Israel’s loose form of tribal organization. The Israelites were easy targets for a well-organized enemy like the Canaanites. The first big task of the judges whom God raised up as deliverers was to rally the separate tribes behind them to rout the common enemy.

Theological Contribution. The Book of Judges points out the problems of the nation of Israel when the people had a succession of “judges” or military leaders to deliver them from their enemies. This is a subtle way of emphasizing the nation’s need for a king or a strong, centralized form of government. But even the establishment of kingship failed to lead to a state of perfection. Only after the right king, David, was placed on the throne did the nation break free of its tragic cycle of despair and decline. David, of course, as God’s chosen servant, points to the great King to come, the Lord Jesus.

Judges also speaks of our need for an eternal deliverer or a savior. The deliverance of the human judges was always temporary, partial, and imperfect. Some of the judges themselves were flawed and misdirected.

The book points forward to Jesus Christ, the great Judge (Ps. 110:6), who is King and Savior of His people.

Special Considerations. Many readers are troubled by the rash vow of the judge Jephthah in the Book of Judges. He promised God that if he were victorious in battle, he would offer as a sacrifice the first thing to come out of his house to greet him on his return. The Lord did give Jephthah victory. On his return, his daughter came out of the house to greet him. And he was forced to carry out his terrible vow (11:29–40). This text is so troubling to some people that they seek to weaken it by claiming that Jephthah did not actually kill his daughter but only made her remain a virgin. This claim is based on the words, “She knew no man” (11:39). But the text indicates clearly that Jephthah did what he had vowed.

Human sacrifice was never sanctioned by the nation of Israel. Indeed, God condemned it as an evil of the surrounding nations. The point the author of Judges made in recording this deed is the same he had in mind as he recorded the sins and excesses of Samson. The period of the judges was a time of such religious and political chaos that even the best of God’s servants were seriously flawed.

Deborah’s song of victory (chap. 5) demonstrates a high degree of literary skill at this early period in Israel’s history. It also shows clearly that women have made great contributions to God’s work across the centuries. Another insight is that God deserves the praise when His people are victorious in battle.

JUDGMENT—discernment or separation between good and evil. God judges among people and their actions according to the standards of His LAW. Judgment can refer either to this process of discernment or to the punishment meted out to those who fall under His wrath and condemnation (John 5:24).

In the Bible the most important judgment is the final judgment, the ultimate separation of good and evil at the end of history. The precise time of this judgment is appointed by God (Acts 17:31), but it remains unknown to us (Matt. 24:36). The return of the Lord to earth, the resurrection of the dead, and the final judgment, together with the end of the world—all these may be thought of as belonging to a single complex of events at the end of time.

From earliest times it has been recognized that God Himself is the Judge of mankind (Gen. 18:25), and that He has the power and wisdom to judge with righteousness, truth, and justice (Ps. 96:13; 98:9). The final judgment is a task given specifically to God's Son (John 5:22; Acts 17:31) to conclude His work as mediator, deliver His people from sin, and destroy all God's enemies. God's people are associated with Christ in the exercise of this judgment (1 Cor. 6:2–3; Rev. 20:4).

The final judgment will be comprehensive in scope; it will include all people and nations from the beginning of the world to the end of history (Matt. 25:31–46; Rom. 14:10–12), as well as fallen angels (2 Pet. 2:4). Those who trust in the Lord, repent of sin, and walk in His ways will not be condemned but will enter into eternal life (Psalm 1). The purpose of the final judgment is the glory of God through the salvation of the ELECT and the condemnation of the ungodly (2 Thess. 1:3–10).

The final judgment has been anticipated throughout history in a series of judgments brought by God upon the wicked. The whole world was affected by the FLOOD and by the confusion of tongues at the Tower of BABEL (Gen. 6–8; 11:1–9). The heathen nations, such as the Egyptians and Canaanites, also experienced God's judgments, just as God's people, the Israelites, did when they persisted in rebellion. These judgments serve as a continual warning of the consequences of unbelief.

The death of Jesus Christ is unique among these judgments of history. Through His death God paid the judgment price demanded by humankind's sin. The death and resurrection of Jesus are the foundations on which sinners are saved (Is. 53:5) through their trust in Him as Lord and Savior.

God's role as judge is reflected in the leadership functions of political officials, who uphold order in society and execute judgment on evildoers (Rom. 13:1–7). The rulers of Israel bore special responsibility in this respect (Deut. 16:18–19), as do the leaders of the church today (Matt. 18:17–18). Believers also have a responsibility to judge matters of wrongdoing among themselves (Matt. 18:15), but this should always be done fairly and with compassion. Believers are never to take over the task of judgment that belongs to God alone (Heb. 10:30).

JUSHAB-HESED [JOO shub HEE sed] (kindness is returned)—a son of Zerubbabel (1 Chr. 3:20).

JUSTICE—the practice of what is right and just. Justice (or "judgment," KJV) specifies what is right, not only as measured by a code of law, but also by what makes for right relationships as well as harmony and peace.

The English term "justice" has a strong legal flavor. But the concept of justice in the Bible goes beyond the law courts to everyday life. The Bible speaks of "doing justice" (Ps. 82:3; Prov. 21:3), whereas we speak of "getting justice." Doing justice is to maintain what is right or to set things right. Justice is done when honorable relations are maintained between husbands and wives, parents and children, employers and employees, government and citizens, and human beings and God. Justice refers to neighborliness in spirit and action.

Kings, rulers, and those in power are to be instruments of justice (Ps. 72:1), as exemplified by David (2 Sam. 8:15) and Josiah (Jer. 22:15–16). The prophet Micah declared, "He has shown you, O man, what is good; and what does the LORD require of you but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God?" (Mic. 6:8). The Book of Isaiah describes God's suffering servant, a description best fulfilled in Jesus, as one whose task as ruler will be to bring justice to the nations (Is. 42:1–4).

The prophets of the Old Testament were champions of social justice. During those days, justice was often perverted through bribery and favoritism or partiality (Deut. 1:17; Prov. 17:23). But God's rewards come to those who practice justice in all their dealings with others. In the words of the prophet Amos, “Let justice run down like water, and righteousness like a mighty stream” (Amos 5:24).

JUSTICE OF GOD—God’s fair and impartial treatment of all people. As a God of justice (Is. 30:18), He is interested in fairness as well as in what makes for right relationships. His actions and decisions are true and right (Job 34:12; Rev. 16:7). His demands on individuals and nations to look after victims of oppression are just demands (Psalm 82).

As Lord and Judge, God brings justice to nations (Ps. 67:4) and “sets things right” in behalf of the poor, the oppressed, and the victims of injustice (Ps. 103:6; 146:6–9). For the wicked, the unjust, and the oppressor, God as supreme Judge of the earth is a dreaded force. But for all who are unjustly treated, God’s just action is reason for hope.

JUSTIFICATION—the process by which sinful human beings are made acceptable to a holy God.

Justification by Grace. Christianity is unique because of its teaching of justification by grace (Rom. 3:24). Justification is God’s declaration that the demands of His Law have been fulfilled in the righteousness of His Son. The basis for this justification is the death of Christ. Paul tells us that “God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself, not imputing their trespasses to them” (2 Cor. 5:19). This reconciliation covers all sin: “For by one offering He has perfected forever those who are being sanctified” (Heb. 10:14). Justification, then, is based on the work of Christ, accomplished through His blood (Rom. 5:9), and brought to His people through His resurrection (Rom. 4:25).

When God justifies, He charges the sin of man to Christ and credits the righteousness of Christ to the believer (2 Cor. 5:21). Thus, “through one Man’s righteous act, the free gift came to all men, resulting in justification of life” (Rom. 5:18). Because this righteousness is “the righteousness of God” which is “apart from the law” (Rom. 3:21), it is thorough; a believer is “justified from all things” (Acts 13:39). God is “just” because His holy standard of perfect righteousness has been fulfilled in Christ, and He is the “justifier,” because this righteousness is freely given to the believer (Rom. 3:26; 5:16).

Justification by Faith. Although the Lord Jesus has paid the price for our justification, it is through our faith that He is received and His righteousness is experienced and enjoyed (Rom. 3:25–30). Faith is considered righteousness (Rom. 4:3, 9), not as the work of human beings (Rom. 4:5), but as the gift and work of God (John 6:28–29; Eph. 2:8; Phil. 1:29).

The New Testament sometimes seems to speak of justification by works. For example, Jesus spoke of justification (and condemnation) “by your words” (Matt. 12:37). Paul said, “the doers of the law will be justified” (Rom. 2:13). And James concluded that “a man is justified by works, and not by faith only” (James 2:24).

These statements seem to conflict with Paul’s many warnings that “by the deeds of the law no flesh will be justified in His sight” (Rom. 3:20), and that the attempt to be justified through law is equivalent to being “estranged from Christ” and “fallen from grace” (Gal. 5:4).

The solution to this problem lies in the distinction between the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:16–25). Not only is Christ’s righteousness legally accounted to the believer, but Christ also dwells in the believer through the Holy Spirit (Rom. 8:10), creating works of faith (Eph. 2:10). Certainly God’s works may be declared righteous (Is. 26:12). If this is true, then the order of events in justification is grace, faith, and works; or, in other words, by grace, through faith, resulting in works (Eph. 2:8–10).

The Results of Justification. The negative result of justification is what we are saved from: “Having now been justified . . . we shall be saved from wrath” (Rom. 5:9). The positive result is what we are saved to: “Whom He justified, these He also glorified” (Rom. 8:30).

Paul also notes “peace with God” (Rom. 5:1) and access to God’s grace (Rom. 5:2) as positive benefits. The believer in Christ may look forward to the redemption of his body (Rom. 8:23) and an eternal inheritance (Rom. 8:17; 1 Pet. 1:4).

JUSTUS [JUHS tuhs] (righteous)—the name of three men in the New Testament:

1. A surname of Joseph, also called Barsabas, who was one of the two disciples the apostles considered to take the place of Judas Iscariot (Acts 1:23).
2. A godly man of Corinth with whom the apostle Paul lodged (Acts 18:7).

3. A Jewish Christian who sent greetings to the church at Colosse (Col. 4:11), also called Jesus.

JUTTAH [JUH tuh]—a town in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:55) given to the Levites as a city of refuge (Josh. 21:13–16). It is now called Yatta and is about 9 kilometers (5 miles) southwest of Hebron.

K

KAB [kab]—a Hebrew dry measure (2 Kin. 6:25; cab, KJV). According to the Jewish rabbis, a kab was the eighteenth part of an ephah, or about 1.16 dry quarts. Other authorities, however, believe the kab was somewhat smaller, about half a pint. Still others believe it was somewhat larger, between three pints and two quarts.

KABZEEL [KAB zih uhl] (God gathers)—a city in Judah near the border of Edom (Josh. 15:21).

KADESH, KADESH BARNEA [KAY desh bar NEE uh] (consecrated)—a wilderness region between Egypt and the land of Canaan where the Hebrew people camped after the Exodus (see Map 2, C–1). Kadesh Barnea (the modern oasis of Ain el-Qudeirat) was situated on the edge of Edom (Num. 20:16) about 114 kilometers (70 miles) from Hebron and 61 kilometers (50 miles) from Beersheba in the Wilderness of Zin. Kadesh Barnea is also said to be in the Wilderness of Paran (Num. 13:26). Paran was probably the general name for the larger wilderness area, while Zin may have been the specific name for a smaller portion of the wilderness territory.

The first mention of Kadesh Barnea occurred during the time of Abraham. Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and his allied armies waged war against the Amalekites and Amorites from Kadesh (Gen. 14:7). When Hagar was forced by Sarah to flee from Abraham's home, she was protected by the Angel of the Lord, who brought her to the well Beer Lahai Roi, between Kadesh and Bered (16:14). Later Abraham moved to Gerar, situated between Kadesh and Shur (20:1).

The most important contacts of the Israelites with Kadesh Barnea occurred during the years of the wilderness wanderings. During the second year after the Exodus from Egypt, the Israelites camped around Mt. Horeb, or Sinai. God told them to leave Sinai and take an eleven-day journey to Kadesh Barnea (Num. 10:11–12; Deut. 1:2). From here the people would have direct entry into the land of Canaan. Moses selected one man from each tribe as a spy and sent them to "spy out the land" (Num. 13:2). After forty days they returned with grapes and other fruits, proving Canaan to be a fertile, plentiful land.

Ten of these spies reported giants in the land, implying that Israel was too weak to enter Canaan (Num. 13:33). But two of the spies, Joshua and Caleb, said, “Do not fear” (Num. 14:9). The people wanted to stone the two for their report (Num. 14:10), and they went so far as to ask for another leader to take them back to Egypt.

Because of their fear and rebellion at Kadesh (Deut. 9:23), the Israelites were forced to wander in the Wilderness of Paran for thirty-eight years. Kadesh apparently was their headquarters while they moved about during these years. In the first month of the fortieth year of the Exodus, the people again assembled at Kadesh for their final march to the Promised Land.

While they were still camped at Kadesh, a number of the leaders of the people rebelled against Moses and Aaron (Num. 16:1–3). They were killed in an earthquake (16:31, 32). Miriam, Moses’ sister, also died and was buried (20:1). At Kadesh, Moses also disobeyed God by striking the rock to bring forth water (20:8–11). He had been told to speak, not strike the rock. Soon after Moses and the people began to move from Kadesh toward Canaan, Aaron died and was buried (20:23–29).

The events at Kadesh Barnea clearly demonstrate the peril of rebelling against God’s appointed leaders, murmuring and complaining about God’s directions, and refusing to follow God’s orders.

• An exhausted traveler rests in the shade of a broom bush in the wilderness of Kadesh (Num. 20:16).

KADMIEL [KAD mih uhl] (God is foremost)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite whose descendants returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:40).
2. A Levite who helped rebuild the temple after the captivity (Ezra 3:9).
3. A Levite who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 9:4–5).

KADMONITES [KAD muh nights] (people of the east)—a nomadic Canaanite tribe that lived in the Syrian desert between Egypt and Mesopotamia in Abraham's time (Gen. 15:19).

KAIN [kayn] (metalsmith)—the name of a tribe and a town in the Old Testament:

1. A tribe mentioned in Balaam's fourth prophecy (Num. 24:22).
2. A town in the mountain country of Judah (Josh. 15:57), also spelled Cain (KJV; Kain, REB).

KAIWAN (see GODS, PAGAN).

KALLAI [KAL eye]—a priest who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:20).

KAMON [KAY muhn]—a form of CAMON.

KANAH [KAY nuh]—the name of a brook and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A brook (or "gorge," REB) that served as a boundary between the territories of Ephraim and Manasseh (Josh. 16:8).
2. A city on the northern border of the territory of Asher (Josh. 19:28).

KAPH [caf]—the eleventh letter of the Hebrew alphabet, used as a heading over Psalm 119:81–88. In the original Hebrew language, each of these eight verses began with the letter kaph.

Also see ACROSTIC.

KAREAH [kuh REE uh] (bald)—the father of Johanan and Jonathan (Jer. 41:11–16; Careah, 2 Kin. 25:23, KJV).

KARKAA [KAHR kih uh] (floor)—an unknown site on the southern border of the territory of Judah (Josh. 15:3; Karka, NIV).

KARKOR [KAHR kohr]—a place in TRANSJORDAN where Gideon and his army defeated the remnants of the Midianite army (Judg. 8:1–21).

KARNAIM [kar NAY im] (two horns)—a city in northern TRANSJORDAN (Amos 6:13). It is probably the same place as Ashteroth Karnaim (Gen. 14:5).

KARTAH [KAHR tuh] (city)—a city in the territory of Zebulun assigned to the Levites (Josh. 21:34).

KARTAN [KAHR tan] (city)—a city in the territory of Naphtali given to the Gershonite Levites (Josh. 21:32). Also called Kirjathaim (1 Chr. 6:76; Kiriathaim, NIV).

KATTATH [KAT ath]—a city in the territory of Zebulun (Josh. 19:15), perhaps the same city as Kitron (Judg. 1:30).

KATYDID (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

KEBAR—a form of CHEBAR.

KEDAR [KEE dur]—the name of a man and a tribe in the Old Testament:

1. The second son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:13).
2. The tribe that sprang from Kedar, as well as the territory inhabited by this tribe in the northern Arabian desert (Is. 21:16–17).

KEDEMAH [KED eh muh] (eastern)—the youngest son of Ishmael and the name of an Arabian tribe (1 Chr. 1:31).

KEDEMOTH [KED uh mahth]—a city of the territory of Reuben assigned to the Levites (Josh. 13:18). From the Wilderness of Kedemoth, Moses sent messengers to Sihon the Amorite, requesting permission to pass through his land (Deut. 2:26–27).

KEDESH [KEE desh] (holy)—the name of three cities in the Old Testament:

1. A city in the territory of Naphtali allotted to the Levites and made a city of refuge (Josh. 21:32; Judg. 4:6; Kedesh-naphtali, KJV).
2. A city in southern Judah (Josh. 15:23).
3. A Canaanite city conquered by Joshua, allotted to the tribe of Issachar and given to the Levites (1 Chr. 6:72). This city is also called Kishion (Josh. 19:20; 21:28; Kishon, KJV).

KEDESH-NAPHTALI [KEE desh NAF tuh ligh]—a form of KEDESH No. 1.

KEDORLAOMER—a form of CHEDORLAOMER.

KEHELATHAH [kee uh LAY thuh] (assembly)—a desert camp of the Israelites between Egypt and the Promised Land (Num. 33:22–23).

KEILAH [kee EYE luh]—the name of a man and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of Caleb, of the family of Judah (1 Chr. 4:19).

2. A fortified city in the lowland plain of the territory of Judah, about 29 kilometers (18 miles) southwest of Jerusalem (Josh. 15:44). David and about 600 of his men attacked the Philistine army at Keilah and “struck them with a mighty blow” (1 Sam. 23:5), saving the city.

KELAIAH [kih LAY uh]—a priest who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:23).

KELAL—a form of CHELAL.

KELITA [kih LIGH tuh]—the name of one or two men in the Old Testament:

1. A priest who interpreted the Law to the people when it was read by Ezra (Neh. 8:7).
2. A Levite who sealed the covenant made by Nehemiah (Neh. 10:10). He may be the same person as No. 1.

KELUB—a form of CHELUB.

KELUHI [keh LOU high]—A form of CHELUH.

KEMOSH—a form of CHEMOSH (see GODS, PAGAN).

KEMUEL [KEM yoo uhl]—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Aram (Gen. 22:21).
2. A leader of the tribe of Ephraim (Num. 34:24).
3. The father of Hashabiah (1 Chr. 27:17).

KENAANAH—a form of CHENAANAH.

KENAN [KEE nuhn]—a form of CAINAN.

KENANI—a form of CHENANI.

KENANIAH—a form of CHENANIAH.

KENATH [KEE nath]—a city on the northeastern border of Israelite territory. Kenath was the easternmost city of the DECAPOLIS. It has been identified with Kanawat, on the western slope of Jebel Hauran (Mount Bashan), about 100 kilometers (62 miles) east of the Sea of Galilee.

KENAZ [KEE naz]—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Eliphaz (Gen. 36:11, 15).
2. The father of Othniel the judge (Judg. 1:13).
3. A son of Elah and grandson of Caleb (1 Chr. 4:15).

KENEZZITES [KEE nuh zights]—an Edomite tribe of Canaan in the time of Abraham (Gen. 15:19; Kenizzites, KJV, NRSV, REB, NIV, NASB). Before the conquest of Canaan by Joshua, the Kenezzites apparently lived in the NEGEV, the desert of southern Judah, and in the border regions of Edom, south of the Dead Sea. Some of the Kenezzites were absorbed by the tribe of Judah and others by the Edomites.

The Kenezzites were related to the Kenites and, like the Kenites, were skilled workers in metal. Their name probably comes from KENAZ, a descendant of Esau (Gen. 36:11, 15); he is listed among the Edomite chieftains (Gen. 36:42). Jephunneh the Kenezzite apparently married a woman of the tribe of Judah; their son CALEB (the spy) was a godly man who followed the Lord God of Israel.

KENITES [KEE nights] (metalsmiths)—the name of a wandering tribe of people who were associated with the Midianites (Judg. 1:16) and, later, with the Amalekites (1 Sam. 15:6). The Kenites lived in the desert regions of Sinai, Midian, Edom, Amalek, and the Negev. The Bible first mentions the Kenites as one of the groups that lived in Canaan during the time of Abraham (Gen. 15:19); their territory was to be taken by the Israelites (Num. 24:21–22). The Kenites were metal craftsmen who may have traced their ancestry to TUBAL–CAIN (Gen. 4:22).

Around the time of Israel’s exodus from Egypt, the Kenites showed kindness to Israel (1 Sam. 15:6). Moses’ father-in-law, Jethro, is called a Midianite (Ex. 18:1) and a Kenite (Judg. 1:16). Some scholars suggest that the skill in smelting and casting the golden calf (Ex. 32) and the bronze serpent (Num. 21) may have been learned by Moses from the Kenites. Some Kenites were among those who entered the Promised Land along with the Israelites in the conquest led by Joshua (Judg. 1:16).

KENIZZITES [KEE nuh zights]—a form of KENEZZITES.

KENOSIS [keh NOE sis]—a theological term used in connection with the dual nature of Jesus as fully human and fully divine. The word comes from a Greek verb meaning "to empty" (Phil. 2:7). The NASB translates this passage, "He emptied Himself," but the KJV and NKJV express it, "He made Himself of no reputation."

The Bible teaches that our Savior was both fully divine and completely human during His earthly life. But nowhere does Scripture explain exactly how Jesus' two natures coexisted. Theologians have struggled for years to explain this mystery. In the 1800s certain scholars formulated the Kenosis theory, which asserts on the basis of Philippians 2:7 that God's divine Son laid aside, or "emptied Himself," of certain divine attributes when He became human. However, these theories of Jesus' INCARNATION have been rejected by orthodox biblical scholars. Such views usually boil down to statements that when He became a man, Jesus stopped being God, or that He was first God, then became a man, and finally returned to being God after His resurrection.

Grammatically, Paul explains the "emptying" of Jesus in the next phrase: "Taking the form of a servant and coming in the likeness of men." He does not say that Jesus stopped being God or that He gave up any divine attributes. Although John 17:5 shows that Jesus' glory as God's eternal Son was veiled during His incarnation (Ex. 33:18, 20; 1 Tim. 6:16), we should take the phrase, He emptied Himself, in a figurative sense as a reference to Christ's humility and willingness to "partake of flesh and blood" (Heb. 2:14). While not ceasing to be God's Son, Christ also became God's Servant.

KEPHAR AMMONI—a form of CHEPHAR HAAMMONI.

KEPHIRAH—a form of CHEPHIRAH.

KERAN—a form of CHERAN.

KEREN–HAPPUCH [KER uhn HAP uhk] (horn of antimony)—the youngest of Job's three daughters, apparently born after his restoration to prosperity and health (Job 42:14). Also see JEMIMAH and KEZIAH.

KERETHITES—a form of CHERETHITES.

KERIOTH [KER ih ahth] (cities)—the name of two cities in the Old Testament:

1. A city of Judah in the Negev near Edom (Josh. 15:25). Judas, the disciple who betrayed Jesus, was probably a native of Kerioth since the name Iscariot means "man of Kerioth."
2. A fortified city in Moab (Jer. 48:24). Kerioth is probably the same place as Ar, the ancient capital of Moab.

KERITH—a form of CHERITH.

KEROS [KIR ahs]—one of the temple servants whose descendants returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:44).

KERUB—a form of CHERUB.

KERYGMA [kay RIG mah]—the proclamation, or preaching, of the message of the gospel in the New Testament church. The word is a transliteration of a Greek word that means "proclamation," "preaching," or "message preached" (1 Cor. 1:21).

KESALON—a form of CHESALON.

KESED—a form of CHESED.

KESIL—a form of CHESIL.

KESITAH [KESS ih tah] (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

KESULLOTH—a form of CHESULLOTH.

KETTLE—a cooking pot in which meat was prepared by worshipers before being offered to God as a SACRIFICE, or PEACE OFFERING (1 Sam. 2:14). Phinehas and Hophni, the evil and corrupt sons of Eli the high priest, were not content with the priest's portion (Lev. 7:14). They also reached into the worshiper's cooking pot with a fork to add to what was rightfully theirs.

KETURAH [keh TUR uh]—a wife of Abraham (Gen. 25:1, 4), also called Abraham’s concubine (1 Chr. 1:32–33). Some suggest that Keturah had been Abraham’s “concubine-wife,” before the death of Sarah. After Sarah died, Keturah was then elevated to the full status of Abraham’s wife. Keturah bore to Abraham six sons: Zimran, Jokshan, Medan, Midian, Ishbak, and Shuah (Gen. 25:1–4). These men were the founders or ancestors of six Arabian tribes in southern and eastern Palestine. Late Arabian genealogies mention a tribe by the name of Katura dwelling near Mecca.

Keturah’s sons were not on the same level as Abraham’s promised son, Isaac. Through Isaac God would carry out His promise to Abraham to make of his descendants a CHOSEN PEOPLE. While he was still alive, therefore, Abraham gave Keturah’s sons gifts and sent them to “the country of the east” (Gen. 25:6).

Abraham was already advanced in years when he married Keturah. She brought him both companionship and children in his old age. Keturah apparently outlived Abraham (Gen. 25:7).

KEVEH [keh VAY]—probably an ancient name for the province of CILICIA, in Asia Minor (modern Turkey). King Solomon imported horses from Egypt and Keveh (1 Kin. 10:28; 2 Chr. 1:16; Kue, NRSV, NASB, NIV; Kue, REB).

KEY—the tool that releases a lock (Judg. 3:25). The key is also spoken of symbolically in the Bible as a sign of authority. The prophet Isaiah described a time when Eliakim, son of Hilkiah, would be elevated as the king’s steward (2 Kin. 18:18). The prophet declared that he would be given “the key of the House of David” (Is. 22:22), or the authority to act in the king’s name. This is probably the background for a proper understanding of the statement of Jesus that the “keys of the kingdom of heaven” were being given to Peter (Matt. 16:19). As the Messiah from the line of David, Jesus was calling on Peter to take on leadership responsibility for the young church.

Jesus condemned the SCRIBES of His day because they had “taken away the key of knowledge” (Luke 11:52). According to their interpretation, only they had the right to explain the meaning of God’s Law, or the Scriptures. They failed to share this knowledge with the common people.

KEYS, POWER OF—a phrase used by Jesus to describe the authority given by Him to His disciples. In ancient times a KEY expressed the idea of authority, power, or privilege. Jesus told Peter that He would give him “the keys of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt. 16:19). The result of this authority in Peter’s life would be the power to bind or loose, carrying the idea of excommunication and reinstatement, or determining objects either clean or unclean.

The general Protestant view is that the church is the agent of this power or authority to bind or loose, either through its official leaders or through all believers. This authority or power was best applied in New Testament times when the apostles announced the conditions for entrance into the kingdom. This authority was continued through the preaching of the gospel by Peter and the church as described in the Book of Acts.

KEZIAH [kih ZIE uh] (cinnamon)—a daughter of Job born after his restoration to prosperity and health (Job. 42:14; Kezia, KJV).

KEZIB—a form of ACHZIB.

KEZIZ [KEE ziz]—a form of EMEK KEZIZ.

KIBROTH HATTAAVAH [KIB rahth huh TAY uh vuh] (the graves of gluttony)—a campsite on the Sinai Peninsula between the Wilderness of Sinai and Hazeroth (Num. 11:34–35). The name of this place came from the many Israelites who died from a plague in this region.

KIBZAIM [kib ZAY uhm] (double gathering)—a city of Ephraim assigned to the Kohathite Levites (Josh. 21:22).

KID (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

KIDNAPPER—one who captures a person by force (Ex. 21:16; 1 Tim. 1:10; slave trader, NIV). In biblical times the motive for kidnapping was to sell into slavery and not to extort a ransom, as in modern times. According to the Law of Moses, the kidnapping of an Israelite, either to sell him into slavery or to treat him as a slave, was a crime punishable by death (Deut. 24:7).

KIDNEY—either of the organs in people and animals that discharges waste material into the urinary tract. The kidneys and the connected fat of sacrificial animals were burned on the altar as part of several of the offerings commanded in the Law (Lev. 3:4; 4:9; 7:4). When kidney refers to human beings, it is always used symbolically to mean someone's mind (Ps. 16:7; Jer. 12:2) or innermost being (Job 17:3; Prov. 23:16). Sometimes when kidney is used this way, it is translated "heart." A common biblical expression is that God examines the "kidneys and heart"—that He thoroughly knows a person's inner thoughts and motives (Ps. 7:9; 26:2; Jer. 11:20; Rev. 2:23; reins and heart, KJV).

KIDON—a form of CHIDON.

KIDRON [KIH drun] (gloomy)—a valley on the eastern slope of Jerusalem through which a seasonal brook of the same name runs. The meaning of the name is fitting, in view of the great strife that has surrounded the Kidron throughout Bible times. A torrent in the winter rains, it contains little water in the summer months.

The ravine of the Kidron valley begins north of Jerusalem, running past the temple, Calvary, the Garden of Gethsemane, and the Mount of Olives to form a well-defined limit to Jerusalem on its eastern side. From there the valley and the brook reach into the Judean wilderness, where the land is so dry that the brook takes the name of Wady en-Nar or "fire wady." Finally its dreary course brings it to the Dead Sea.

Kidron was the brook crossed by David while fleeing from Absalom (2 Sam. 15:23, 30). While the brook is not large, the deep ravine is a significant geographical obstacle. When David crossed the Kidron and turned east to retreat from Absalom to the safety of Hebron, he signaled his abandonment of Jerusalem (2 Sam. 15:23).

On the west side of the Kidron is the spring of GIHON which King Hezekiah tapped for city water before the Assyrians besieged Jerusalem. Hezekiah also blocked the Kidron and lesser springs in the valley to deny water to the besieging Assyrians.

Asa, Hezekiah, and Josiah, the great reforming kings of Judah, burned the idols and objects of worship of the pagan cults that they suppressed in the Kidron valley (1 Kin. 15:13). Beside the brook King Asa destroyed and burned his mother's idol of Asherah (1 Kin. 15:13). After this, the valley became the regular receptacle for the impurities and abominations of idol worship when they were removed from the temple and destroyed (2 Kin. 23:4, 6, 12; 2 Chr. 29:16; 30:14).

From the Kidron valley Nehemiah inspected the walls of Jerusalem at night, probably because the walls were clearly visible along that side (Neh. 2:15). In the time of Josiah, this valley was the common cemetery of Jerusalem (2 Kin. 23:6; Jer. 26:23). When Jesus left Jerusalem for the Garden of Gethsemane on the night of His arrest, He crossed the Kidron along the way.

• The Kidron Valley, just outside the eastern wall of Jerusalem. Jesus and His disciples crossed this valley and its brook on their way to the Garden of Gethsemane (John 18:1).

KILION—a form of CHILION.

KILMAD—a form of CHILMAD.

KILN—an oven or furnace used for hardening brick (Nah. 3:14). Brick kilns were rare in Palestine; some scholars believe, therefore, that in David’s time the reference is likely to a brick mold rather than to a brick kiln.

KIMHAM—a form of CHIMHAM.

KINAH [KIGH nuh] (lamentation)—a city on the southern boundary of Judah, probably not far from the Dead Sea (Josh. 15:22).

KINDNESS, LOVINGKINDNESS—God’s loyal love and favor toward His people. In the Old Testament, the word translated as “kindness” or “lovingkindness” refers to God’s long-suffering love—His determination to keep His promises to His chosen people in spite of their sin and rebellion (Deut. 7:12; Hos. 2:14–23). This attribute of God was shown through His divine mercy and forgiveness toward sinners when payment of sins through the sacrificial system was no longer effective (Deut. 22:22; Ps. 51:1).

In the New Testament, the Greek word translated as “grace” best represents the idea of God’s kindness or lovingkindness. Because God has been gracious toward believers, they should treat all people with kindness or grace (Luke 6:35). All people are created in God’s image and should be treated accordingly, no matter how badly they have twisted and deformed that image (Jas. 3:9). Kindness is not an apathetic response to sin, but a deliberate act to bring the sinner back to God (Hos. 2:14–23; Rom. 2:4).

KINDRED—blood kin or relatives. Family was important among the Hebrew people because the clan or tribe was the basic social unit, at least until the time of the United Kingdom under David and Solomon. The family had the responsibility for protecting and preserving its members from injustices at the hand of others (Gen. 34:1–31) or from slavery or loss of land due to poverty.

Protection against loss of land was provided for by the kinsman-redeemer, who would pay the loan or buy the land to keep it within the family group (Lev. 25:23–38, 47–53). If a member of the family was killed, another family member acted as the avenger of blood and retaliated against the killer (Ex. 21:14; Num. 35:19).

God Himself has special care for His family, which includes all who believe in Jesus Christ (John 1:12; 2 Cor. 6:18).

KINE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

KING, KINGDOM—ruler of a nation or territory, especially one who inherits his position and rules for life; a state or nation with a form of government in which a king or queen serves as supreme ruler.

In the ancient world a king was generally the ruler over a specific region or city. His office was usually hereditary and his authority derived from it. In Egypt the king, or pharaoh, was regarded as a god; in Assyria the king represented a god. Both the Canaanites and the Philistines had kings as early as the time of Abraham (Gen. 14:2; 20:2). Many of the other nations related to Israel—Edom, Moab, Midian, and Ammon—adopted the kingship form of government earlier than Israel (Gen. 36:31; Judg. 11:13).

Long before the Israelites chose Saul as their first king, Israel had been a religious community with God Himself as the ruler. God had promised Abraham that kings would come from him (Gen. 17:6). The same promise was given to Jacob (Gen. 35:11).

During the Exodus of the Hebrew people from Egypt and the conquest of Canaan several years later, Moses and Joshua exercised "royal" authority but only as representatives of God. Following Joshua's death, various cities and villages had ELDERS (Josh. 24:31; Judg. 11:5) to whom the people looked for leadership. Occasionally God appointed certain leaders called JUDGES who would lead an army against foreign oppression (Judg. 2:16–19). These leaders, however, were not strong religious personalities. They had no official authority, and their rule was local and temporary.

At the insistence of the people of Israel, Samuel anointed Saul as the first king of the Hebrew nation (1 Sam. 10:1). Samuel regarded the demand for a king as an act of rebellion (1 Samuel 8), because the moral decline of the nation had created a desire for a monarchy that would be similar to the form of government of all the surrounding nations. Some scholars argue, however, that the introduction of the kingship in Israel was a historical necessity, brought about by a desperate political situation—oppression by the Philistines.

After establishment of the kingship under Saul and David, SOLOMON became king of the United Kingdom. Under his administration, the people of Israel reached new levels of prestige and power. Solomon entered trade agreements with other nations and completed many impressive building projects. But to pay for all these great accomplishments, Solomon placed burdensome taxes upon the people and even forced them to work as laborers on his building projects. At Solomon's death, the United Kingdom split into two separate nations—Judah in the south and Israel in the north. During the rest of their history, these two nations were ruled by their own individual kings. Accounts of the reigns of all of these kings are found in the books of 1 and 2 Kings in the Old Testament.

The New Testament speaks of several specific kings, including Herod the king (Matt. 2:1) and King Agrippa (Acts 25:24). They were actually governors or rulers over political provinces or territories of the ROMAN EMPIRE, serving under appointment by the Roman emperor.

A kingdom that would typify Christ's coming kingdom was in God's plan (Deut. 17:15). Israel's king was supposed to be responsible to God alone. This king was God's servant and only the earthly representative of the Lord, who was Israel's true king. In that office he was expected to know and do the Law of God (Deut. 17:18–20). He was to be a proclaimer and teacher of the law and one who judged wisely and righteously (1 Kin. 3:28; 2 Chr. 17:7).

David was clearly God's choice to be king (1 Sam. 16:7, 12–13). The hereditary kingship, therefore, began with him; from him would descend Jesus Christ, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David" (Rev. 5:5). In the light of the Messiah's descent from David, the meaning of God's COVENANT with David becomes clear: "I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever" (2 Sam. 7:13; also Ps. 2; 110; Is. 11:1–4).

The Bible used the title "king" not only of human rulers, but also of God as the Supreme Ruler of the world (Ps. 47:2, 7; Matt. 5:35). As the Creator of the world, it is His right to rule the universe. Only by His authority do earthly kings reign (Deut. 10:17; Dan. 4:17).

Christ Jesus the Messiah was born a king (Matt. 2:2), came preaching the kingdom of God (Mark 1:15), died as a king (Mark 15:32), and will yet be seen as King of kings and Lord of lords (1 Tim. 6:15; Rev. 19:16). He functions as a King–Priest (Heb. 5:6; 7:1; Rev. 11:15), enabling us to become heirs of the kingdom He has established through His sacrificial death on the cross.

KINGDOM OF GOD, KINGDOM OF HEAVEN—God's rule of grace in the world, a future period foretold by the prophets of the Old Testament and identified by Jesus as beginning with His public ministry. The kingdom of God is the experience of blessedness, like that of the Garden of Eden, where evil is fully overcome and where those who live in the kingdom know only happiness, peace, and joy. This was the main expectation of the Old Testament prophets about the future.

John the Baptist astonished his hearers when he announced that this expected and hoped-for kingdom was "at hand" in the person of Jesus (Matt. 3:2). Jesus repeated this message (Matt. 4:17; Mark 1:15), but He went even further by announcing clearly that the kingdom was already present in His ministry: "If I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, surely the kingdom of God has come upon you" (Matt. 12:28). Jesus was the full embodiment of the kingdom.

The entire ministry of Jesus is understood in relation to this important declaration of the presence of the kingdom. His ethical teachings, for example, cannot be understood apart from the announcement of the kingdom. They are ethics of the kingdom; the perfection to which they point makes no sense apart from the present experience of the kingdom. Participation in the new reality of the kingdom involves a follower of Jesus in a call to the highest righteousness (Matt. 5:20).

The acts and deeds of Jesus likewise make sense only in the larger context of proclaiming the kingdom. When John the Baptist asked whether Jesus was “the Coming One,” or the Messiah, Jesus answered by recounting some of His deeds of healing (Matt. 11:5). The reference in these words to the expectation of a MESSIAH, especially of the prophet Isaiah (Is. 29:18–19; 35:5–6; 61:1), could not have been missed by John. At the synagogue in Nazareth, Jesus read a passage from Isaiah 61 about the coming messianic age and then made the astonishing announcement, “Today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing” (Luke 4:21).

All that Jesus did is related to this claim that the kingdom of God has dawned through His ministry. His healings were manifestations of the presence of the kingdom. In these deeds there was a direct confrontation between God and the forces of evil, or Satan and his demons. Summarizing His ministry, Jesus declared, “I saw Satan fall like lightning from heaven” (Luke 10:18). Satan and evil are in retreat now that the kingdom has made its entrance into human history. This is an anticipation of the final age of perfection that will be realized at Christ’s return.

Although the gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John focus on the present aspect of the kingdom of God, it is also clear that the kingdom will be realized perfectly only at the SECOND COMING. The kingdom that comes through the ministry of Jesus dawns in the form of a mystery. Although it is physically present in the deeds and words of Jesus, it does not overwhelm the world. The judgment of God’s enemies is postponed. The kingdom that arrived with Jesus did not include the triumphal victory so longed for by the Jews. It arrived secretly like leaven, inconspicuously like a mustard seed, or like a small pearl of great value that can be hidden in one’s pocket (Matt. 13:31–46).

The Jewish people expected the kingdom of God to bring the present evil age to an end. But it arrived mysteriously without doing so. The new reality of the kingdom overlapped the present age, invading it rather than bringing it to an end. The demons reflect this oddity when they ask Jesus, “Have you come here to torment us before the time?” (Matt. 8:29). The future kingdom will bring the present age to an end and usher in the perfect age promised in the prophets. The present kingdom is both an anticipation and a guarantee of this future bliss.

The expression “kingdom of God” occurs mostly in the gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. The Gospel of John and the epistles of the New Testament refer to the same reality but in different language, using phrases such as “eternal life” or “salvation.” The apostle Paul identified the kingdom of God as “righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit” (Rom. 14:17). Perhaps one reason why he described it this way is that the kingdom of God was a Jewish expression unfamiliar and possibly misleading to Gentiles.

Some interpreters of the Bible have described the phrase “kingdom of God” as a more comprehensive term referring to both heaven and earth. Likewise, they believe “kingdom of God” is a more restricted term referring to God’s rule on earth, especially in relation to the nation of Israel. In this view Jesus offered the literal kingdom of heaven to Israel, but the Jews refused to accept it. Thus, it has been postponed until the Second Coming of Christ.

A careful study of the gospels, however, shows that the two phrases are used interchangeably. In parallel passages, Matthew uses “kingdom of heaven” while Mark and Luke have “kingdom of God” (Matt. 4:17; Mark 1:15). Even in Matthew the two phrases are sometimes used interchangeably, as in Matthew 19:23–24, where they are used one after the other in the same connection.

KINGDOM OF ISRAEL (see ISRAEL).

KINGDOM OF JUDAH (see JUDAH, KINGDOM OF).

KINGS, BOOKS OF—two Old Testament books that recount the history of God's chosen people during four turbulent centuries, from 970 to 586 B.C. The narratives in these books of history are organized around the various kings who reigned during these centuries, thus explaining the titles by which the books are known.

Structure of the Books. As originally written in the Hebrew language, 1 and 2 Kings consisted of one unbroken book. It formed a natural sequel to the Books of 1 and 2 Samuel, which also appeared originally in the Hebrew Bible as a single book. The writer of Samuel traced the history of Israel up to the final days of David's reign. This is where the Book of 1 Kings begins—with the death of David and the succession of his son, Solomon, to the throne.

The first half of the Book of 1 Kings describes Solomon's reign. Included are accounts about his vast wealth, his great wisdom, his marriage to foreign wives, and his completion of the temple in Jerusalem. But 1 Kings also reveals that all was not well in Solomon's empire. Many of the people grew restless and rebellious because of the king's excesses and the high taxes required to support his ambitious projects. At his death the people in the northern part of the empire rebelled and formed their own nation, known as the Northern Kingdom of Israel. Those who remained loyal to the house of David and Solomon continued as the Southern Kingdom, or the nation of Judah.

From this point on in the Books of 1 and 2 Kings, the narrative grows complex and difficult to follow. The historical writer traces the history of a king of Israel, then switches over to touch on the high points in the administration of the parallel king of Judah. This can be very confusing to the Bible reader unless this parallel structure is known.

But we do these books a great injustice if we assume they are filled with nothing but dry historical statistics and minute details. First and Second Kings contain some of the most interesting stories in the Bible. Here we come face to face with the fiery prophet ELIJAH, who challenged the false god BAAL and hundreds of his prophets in a dramatic showdown on Mount Carmel. The prophet's faith was verified as God proved himself superior to Baal by answering Elijah's fervent prayer.

In these books we also meet a proud Syrian commander, NAAMAN the leper, who almost passed up his opportunity to be healed by his reluctance to dip himself in the waters of the Jordan River. Fortunately, his servants convinced him to drop his pride, and he emerged from the river with his skin restored "like the flesh of a little child" (2 Kin. 5:14).

During the four centuries covered by these books, a total of nineteen different kings ruled the nation of Israel, while twenty-two different kings (if David and Solomon are included) occupied Judah's throne. The writer covers some of these kings with a few sentences, while he devotes several pages to others. Apparently, this author selected certain kings for major attention because they illustrated the conditions that led to the eventual collapse of the nations of Judah and Israel.

Some of these kings were honest, ethical, and morally pure. But the good kings always were the exception. The majority of the rulers led the people astray, some even openly encouraging them to worship false gods. Thus, the most familiar refrain in 1 and 2 Kings is the phrase, “He did evil in the sight of the Lord” (2 Kin. 8:18).

Israel was the first nation to collapse under the weight of its disobedience and depravity. This kingdom ended in 722 B.C. with the fall of its capital city, Samaria, to the Assyrians. The citizens of the Southern Kingdom of Judah struggled on for another 136 years under a succession of kings before their nation was overrun by the Babylonians in 586 B.C. The Book of 2 Kings comes to a close with the leading citizens of Judah being held captive in Babylon.

Authorship and Date. These books cover, in chronological fashion, about 400 years of Judah and Israel’s history. The last event mentioned in this chronology is the captivity of Judah’s citizens by the Babylonians. This means the book had to be compiled in its final form some time after the Babylonians overran Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

Early tradition credited the prophet Jeremiah with the writing of these two books. Whether this is correct is uncertain. We do know that this famous prophet preached in Jerusalem before and after the fall of the city. Two chapters from 2 Kings also appear in the Book of Jeremiah (compare 2 Kings 24–25 and Jeremiah 39–42; 52). This led many scholars to the natural assumption that Jeremiah had written the book.

Most scholars today no longer hold to the Jeremiah theory. The evidence points to an unknown prophet who worked at the same time as Jeremiah to compile this long history of his nation’s religious and political life. His purpose was to show that the two kingdoms fell because of their unfaithfulness and to call the people back to renewal of the COVENANT.

While this prophet–writer is not named in the Books of 1 and 2 Kings, he does reveal the sources he used. He speaks of “the chronicles of the kings of Israel” (1 Kin. 14:19) and “the chronicles of the kings of Judah” (1 Kin. 14:29). These were probably the official court documents and historical archives of the two nations. He must have drawn from them freely as he wrote.

Historical Setting. The four centuries covered by 1 and 2 Kings were times of change and political upheaval in the ancient world as the balance of power shifted from one nation to another. Surrounding nations that posed a threat to Israel and Judah at various times during this period included Syria, Assyria, and Babylonia.

The Assyrian threat was particularly strong during the last fifty years of the Northern Kingdom. Under Tiglath–Pileser III, this conquering nation launched three devastating campaigns against Israel in 734, 733 and 732 B.C. It was a blow from which Israel never recovered, and the nation fell to Assyrian forces just ten years later in 722 B.C.

While Syria and Assyria were threats to Judah at various times, their worst enemy turned out to be the nation of Babylon. The Babylonians took captives and goods from Jerusalem in three campaigns—in 605 and 597 B.C. and in a two-year siege beginning in 588 B.C. Jerusalem finally fell in 586 B.C. The temple was destroyed, and thousands of Judah's leading citizens were carried into captivity in Babylon.

Theological Contribution. The Books of 1 and 2 Kings present an interesting contrast between King David of Judah and King Jeroboam I, the first king of the northern kingdom of Israel.

Jeroboam established a legacy of idol worship in this new nation by setting up golden calves at Bethel and Dan (1 Kin. 12:25–33). These were symbols of the fertility religion of Baal. His strategy was to mix this false religion with worship of the one true God in an attempt to win the loyalty and goodwill of the people and bind them together as a distinctive nation. This act of idolatry was condemned by the writer of 1 and 2 Kings. Each succeeding king of Israel was measured against the standard of Jeroboam's idolatry. Of each king who led the people astray, it was written, "He did not depart from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who had made Israel sin" (2 Kin. 15:9).

Just as Jeroboam was used as a bad example by the writer of 1 and 2 Kings, King David was used as a standard of righteousness and justice. In spite of David's moral lapses, he became the measure of righteousness for all kings who followed him. The Northern Kingdom was marked by rebellion and strife as opposing factions struggled for the right to reign, but the house of David continued in the Kingdom of Judah without interruption for nearly four centuries. The writer explained that the evils of kings such as Abijam (or Abijah) did not cancel out the love and mercy that God had promised to the house of David: "Nevertheless for David's sake the Lord his God gave him a lamp in Jerusalem, by setting up his son after him and by establishing Jerusalem; because David did what was right in the eyes of the Lord" (1 Kin. 15:4–5).

Special Considerations. The writer of 1 Kings reported that Solomon had "seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines" (1 Kin. 11:3). In the ancient world, the number of wives held by a ruler symbolized his might and power. Rulers also took on wives to seal political alliances and trade agreements. But Solomon cannot be totally excused for his excesses because of these cultural factors. According to the writer of 1 Kings, he let his foreign wives turn away his heart from worshiping the one true God (1 Kin. 11:1–3). This was a fatal flaw in his character that eventually led to rebellion and the separation of Solomon's empire into two opposing nations (1 Kin. 11:11–13).

The Books of 1 and 2 Kings describe several miracles wrought by God through the prophets Elijah and Elisha. In addition to proving God's power, these miracles are also direct attacks on the pagan worship practices of the followers of Baal. Elijah's encounter with the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel, for example, was a test of the power of Baal—whether he could send fire from heaven (lightning bolts) to ignite the sacrifice and bring the rains that were needed to end the drought. Baal was silent, but God thundered—and the rains came, as Elijah had predicted (1 Kin. 18:20–46).

KINNERETH—a form of CHINNERETH.

KINSMAN—a male relative; a man sharing the same racial, cultural, or national background as another. In the Old Testament the word "kinsman" is often used as a translation of a Hebrew word that means, "one who has the right to redeem."

Since an Israelite could sell himself, his family, or his land (Lev. 25:39–43) in cases of poverty, the kinsman-redeemer (Lev. 25:25) was provided to protect the clan. This person, a near relative, had the first option by law to buy any land being sold, thus allowing it to be kept within the clan (Lev. 25:23–28; Jer. 32:6–10).

An example of the kinsman-redeemer in the Old Testament occurs in the story of RUTH and BOAZ (Ruth 4). Boaz, a near kinsman of Naomi (Ruth's mother-in-law), acted as a redeemer in accordance with Israelite law, and married Ruth.

On another level, God is the "kinsman" who redeems. In the Old Testament the focus of God's redemptive activity is the EXODUS, the deliverance of Israel from slavery in Egypt (Deut. 7:8; 2 Sam. 7:23).

In the New Testament, Jesus is described as our brother (Heb. 2:11–12, 17), who redeems us from the power of sin.

KIOS—a form of CHIOS.

KIR [kir] (wall)—the name of a region and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A city of Moab mentioned by Isaiah in his prophecy against Moab (Is. 15:1), perhaps the same as Kir Haraseth.
2. The original home of the Syrians (Amos 9:7).

KIR HARASETH [kir HAHR uh seth]—a fortified city of Moab (2 Kin. 3:25), also spelled Kir Hareseth (Is. 16:7), Kir Heres (Is. 16:11; Jer. 48:31, 36), and Kirharesh (Is. 16:11, KJV). Kir of Moab (Is. 15:1) is also thought to be identical with Kir Haraseth.

Mesha, king of Moab, fled to Kir Haraseth after he was defeated by Jehoram, king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat, king of Judah. Accompanied by the king of Edom, these two rulers crushed the rebellion Mesha had started (2 Kin. 3:4). Because Kir Haraseth was the only city of Moab that could not be overthrown, it was the last refuge of Mesha (2 Kin. 3:25).

The prophets foretold God's certain destruction of Kir Haraseth, a seemingly invincible city (Is. 16:7). Many commentators identify Kir Haraseth with present-day el-Kerak, about 80 kilometers (50 miles) southeast of Jerusalem (see Map 4, B–4).

KIR HARESETH [kir HAHR uh seth]—a form of KIR HARASETH.

KIR HERES [kir HEE reez]—a form of KIR HARASETH.

KIR OF MOAB—a form of KIR HARASETH.

KIRHARESH [kir HAHR esh]—a form of KIR HARASETH.

KIRIATHAIM [KIR ih ath AY uhm]—a form of KIRJATHAIM.

KIRIATH ARBA [KIR ih ath AHR buh]—a form of KIRJATH ARBA.

KIRIATH BAAL [KIR ih ath BAY uhl]—a form of KIRJATH JEARIM.

KIRIATH HUZOTH [KIR ih ath HUH zahth]—a form of KIRJATH HUZOTH.

KIRIATH JEARIM [KIR ih ath JEE uh rim]—a form of KIRJATH JEARIM.

KIRJATH [KIR jath] (city)—a city of the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:28), sometimes equated with KIRJATH JEARIM (Josh. 18:14–15).

KIRJATH ARBA [KIR jath AHR buh] (city of the four)—the ancient name of HEBRON (Gen. 23:2; Kiriath Arba, NIV, NRSV). Near this city was the Cave of Machpelah where, according to a Jewish tradition, Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are buried (hence, "city of the four"). Caleb captured Kirjath Arba from the ANAKIM, after whose leader, Arba, the city was named (Josh. 14:15). Kirjath Arba was in the hillcountry district of Judah, about 32 kilometers (20 miles) southwest of Jerusalem.

KIRJATH BAAL [KIR jath BAY uhl]—a form of KIRJATH JEARIM.

KIRJATH HUZOTH [KIR jath HUH zahth] (city of streets)—a city of Moab where BALAK, king of Moab, lived. Kirjath Huzoth was the first place to which Balak took BALAAM the soothsayer (Num. 22:39; Kiriath Huzoth, NIV, NRSV).

KIRJATH JEARIM [KIR jath JEE uh rim] (city of forests)—a fortified city that originally belonged to the Gibeonites (see Map 6, B–4). Kirjath Jearim is first mentioned as a member of a Gibeonite confederation of four fortress cities, which also included Gibeon, Chephirah, and Beeroth (Josh. 9:17). Kirjath Jearim was also known as Baalah (Josh. 15:9), Baale Judah (2 Sam. 6:2), and Kirjath Baal (Josh. 15:60), and Kirjath (Josh. 18:28, NKJV, KJV). These names suggest that perhaps it was an old Canaanite "high place," a place of idolatrous worship.

Originally assigned to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:60), and later assigned to Benjamin (Josh. 18:14–15, 28), Kirjath Jearim was on the western part of the boundary line between Judah and Benjamin (Josh. 15:9). When the ARK OF THE COVENANT was returned to the Israelites by the Philistines, it was brought from Beth Shemesh to Kirjath Jearim and entrusted to a man named Eleazar (1 Sam. 7:1–2). The Ark remained in Kirjath Jearim, in the house of Abinadab, the father of Eleazar, for many years. It was from here that David transported the Ark to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:2–3).

This ancient town has been identified by some scholars with Abu Ghosh, about 13 kilometers (8 miles) northwest of Jerusalem on the Jaffa Road.

KIRJATH SANNAH [KIR jath SAN uh]—a city in the mountain country of Judah assigned to the Levites (Josh. 15:49). The city is also called Debir and Kirjath Sephen (Josh. 21:15).

KIRJATH SEPHER [KIR jath SEE fur] (city of books)—a city in the mountain country of Judah assigned to the Levites (Josh. 15:15). Kirjath Sepher was the former name of DEBIR, which is equated with KIRJATH SANNAH (Josh. 15:49).

KIRJATHAIM [kir JATH ay uhm] (double cities)—the name of two cities in the Old Testament:

1. An ancient city of the EMIM occupied and rebuilt by the tribe of Reuben (Num. 32:37; Kiriathaim, NIV, NRSV).
2. A city in the territory of Naphtali given to the Levites (1 Chr. 6:76; Kiriathaim, NIV, NRSV).

KISH [kish]—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of King Saul (1 Chr. 12:1).
2. A Levite who lived in David’s time (1 Chr. 23:21–22; 24:29). He was a son of Mahli and a grandson of Merari.
3. A Levite who helped cleanse the temple during the reign of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 29:12).
4. A Benjamite ancestor of MORDECAI (Esth. 2:5).

• Ancient Kish in Mesopotamia was apparently one of the first cities to be rebuilt after the Flood. Recent excavations have uncovered the city's impressive wall system.

KISHI [KISH eye]—a Levite of the Merari family (1 Chr. 6:44), also called Kushaiah (1 Chr. 15:17).

KISHION [KISH ih uhn]—a city on the boundary of the tribe of Issachar assigned to the Levites (Josh. 19:20; 21:28; Kishon, KJV, REB).

KISHON [KIGH shuhn]—a river in Palestine, which flows from sources on Mount Tabor and Mount Gilboa westward through the Plain of Esdraelon and the Valley of Jezreel, then empties into the Mediterranean Sea near the northern base of Mount Carmel (see Map 3, B–2). Because the Kishon falls slightly as it crosses the level plain, it often becomes swollen and floods much of the valley during the season of heavy rains.

At the River Kishon the Israelites won a celebrated victory over Sisera under the leadership of Deborah and Barak (Judg. 4:7). Fully armed with 900 chariots of iron (Judg. 4:13), the forces of Sisera became bogged down in the overflow of the Kishon (Judg. 5:21), and the Israelites defeated them. It was at the Brook Kishon, also, that the prophets of Baal were executed following their contest with Elijah on Mount Carmel (1 Kin. 18:40).

KISLON—a form of CHISLON.

KISLOTH TABOR—a form of CHISLOTH TABOR.

KISS—a symbolic act done to various parts of the body, especially cheeks, feet, forehead, and lips (Prov. 24:26). Ideally, a kiss shows a close relationship to another person, although the relationship and purpose may vary greatly.

Romantic kisses are mentioned infrequently in the Bible, whether genuinely loving (Song 1:2; 8:1) or seductive (Prov. 7:13). The most common type of kiss, however, was that between relatives (Gen. 29:11–13). A kiss could serve either as a greeting (Ex. 4:27) or a farewell (Ruth 1:9, 14; Acts 20:37). It could even express one's anticipation of departure by death (Gen. 48:10). The family kiss was extended in the New Testament to apply to the Christian family (1 Cor. 16:20; 1 Pet. 5:14).

Friends might kiss in greeting (1 Sam. 20:41; 2 Sam. 19:39), although occasionally such a kiss could be given insincerely (Prov. 27:6). Kissing also has figurative meaning when righteousness and peace are pictured as harmonious friends kissing each other (Ps. 85:10). A kiss can also mean betrayal. Judas' treachery is eternally symbolized by a kiss (Luke 22:47–48).

KITCHEN—one of four small subcourts at the corners of the outer court of the temple in the prophet Ezekiel's vision (Ezek. 46:24; boiling places, NASB). People could have their sacrifices boiled here before they were offered in the temple.

KITE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

KITHLISH [KITH lish]—a city in the Shephelah, or lowland plain, of Judah (Josh. 15:40; Chitlish, NRSV; Kitlish, NIV).

KITLISH [KIT lish]—a form of KITHLISH.

KITRON [KIT rahn]—a city in the territory of Zebulun inhabited by the Canaanites (Judg. 1:30), perhaps the same city as Kattath (Josh. 19:15).

KITTIM [KIT im]—a Hebrew name for part or all of Cyprus (Jer. 2:10) and named after a son of Javan (Gen. 10:4). Kittim also became a symbol of Rome (Dan. 11:30). The Israelites must have been familiar with Kittim, or Cyprus (see Map 1, B–2). From the oracle of Balaam (Num. 24:24), it is evident that the Israelites associated Cyprus with ships. The prophet Jeremiah saw Kittim as the western boundary of the known world (Jer. 2:10), and Ezekiel reported that Cyprus supplied Phoenicia with pines for Phoenician ships (Ezek. 27:6).

KNAPSACK—a bag worn on the back in which supplies, equipment, and personal belongings were carried (2 Kin. 4:42; sack, NRSV, NASB).

KNEAD, KNEADING—the mixing of flour, water, and oil in preparation for the baking of bread (Deut. 28:5). In Bible times, these ingredients were mixed in a wood or earthenware trough, with a piece of dough from the previous batch. This “sourdough” method provided raised bread through the activity of yeast or leaven in the old dough.

KNEADING BOWL—a shallow vessel—usually made of wood, baked clay, or bronze—in which dough was worked into a well-mixed mass in preparation for baking (Ex. 8:3; 12:34; troughs, KJV, REB, NIV). After the dough was mixed and leavened, it was left in the kneading bowl to rise and ferment. The kneading bowl was among the objects of the Lord’s blessing (Deut. 28:5).

KNEELING—falling to one’s knees as a gesture of reverence, obedience, or respect. In the dedication of the temple in Jerusalem, Solomon knelt before God (1 Kin. 8:54). Daniel knelt in prayer three times a day (Dan. 6:10).

KNIFE (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE; TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

KNOB—an ornament that served as a detail of the seven-branched lampstand in the tabernacle (Ex. 25:31–36; knop, KJV). It was perhaps an imitation of the fruit of the almond. In other passages, the same Hebrew word (kaphtor) translated "ornamental knob" in the Book of Exodus refers to the capital of a column (Zeph. 2:14).

KNOP—a form of KNOB.

KNOWLEDGE—the truth or facts of life that a person acquires either through experience or thought. The greatest truth that a person can possess with the mind or learn through experience is truth about God (Ps. 46:10; John 8:31–32). This cannot be gained by unaided human reason (Job 11:7; Rom. 11:33). It is acquired only as God shows Himself to people—in nature and conscience (Ps. 19; Rom. 1:19–20); in history or providence (Deut. 6:20–25; Dan. 2:21); and especially in the Bible (Ps. 119; Rev. 1:1–3).

Mental knowledge by itself, as good as it may be, is inadequate; it is capable only of producing pride (1 Cor. 8:1; 13:2). Moral knowledge affects a person's will (Prov. 1:7; Phil. 3:11–12; 1 John 4:6). It is knowledge of the heart, not the mind alone. The Book of Proverbs deals primarily with this kind of knowledge. Experiential knowledge is that gained through one's experience (Gen. 4:1; 2 Cor. 5:21; 1 John 4:7–8).

The apostle Paul's wish for the church at Colosse was that they might increase in the "knowledge of God" (Col. 1:10).

KOA [KOE uh]—a people described as enemies of Jerusalem (Ezek. 23:23).

KOHATH [KOE hath]—the second son of Levi (Gen. 46:11). Kohath went to Egypt with Levi and Jacob (Gen. 46:11) and lived to the age of 133 (Ex. 6:18). He was the founder of the KOHATHITES.

KOHATHITES [KOE hath ights] (belonging to Kohath)—the descendants of KOHATH, son of Levi (Ex. 6:16). Kohath was the father of Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel (Ex. 6:18). Consequently, the Kohathite clan was subdivided into these four families (1 Chr. 26:23).

During Israel's journey after leaving Egypt, the Kohathites were responsible for caring for and transporting "the ark [of the covenant], the table, the lampstand, the altars, the utensils of the sanctuary with which they ministered, the screen, and [for doing] all the work related to them" (Num. 3:31).

When the Israelites camped, the Kohathites were stationed on the south side of the tabernacle (Num. 3:29, 31). At different times, the Bible specifies their numbers (Num. 3:28; 4:36). Aaron and Moses were Kohathites (Ex. 6:16, 18, 20).

KOHELETH [koe HEL eth]—the Hebrew title of the author of the Book of Ecclesiastes, translated as "preacher" in many English versions of the Bible (Eccl. 1:1; teacher, NIV). The Hebrew word actually means "speaker before an assembly." Also see ECCLESIASTES, BOOK OF.

KOLAIAH [koe LAY uh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Maaseiah whose descendants lived in Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 11:7).
2. The father of AHAB, the false prophet condemned by Jeremiah (Jer. 29:21–23).

KOPH [cofe] (see QOPH).

KOR, KORS (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

KORAH—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. The third son of Esau by his wife Aholibamah (Gen. 36:5, 14). Born in Canaan, Korah became a chief of an Edomite tribe (Gen. 36:18).
2. The grandson of Esau through Eliphaz. Korah was an Edomite chief (Gen. 36:16).
3. The Levite who, along with Dathan, Abiram, and On of the tribe of Reuben, led a revolt against the leadership of Moses and Aaron (Num. 16:1–49). Korah was the son of Izhar and a first cousin of Moses and Aaron (Ex. 6:21). He was equal in rank with Aaron within the tribe of Levi.

   Korah apparently was jealous that Aaron held the position of high priest. The Reubenites were the descendants of Jacob's oldest son. They thought the responsibility for leading Israel should rest with their tribe rather than the Levites. The four ringleaders gathered 250 leaders of the congregation, publicly charging Moses and Aaron with abusing their power. They claimed that all members of the congregation should have equal access to the Lord.

Moses placed the dispute in the hands of the Lord, directing Korah and his company to bring containers of incense as an offering to the Lord. Korah complied with this and went with his congregation to the door of the tabernacle where the Lord appeared, threatening to "consume them in a moment" (Num. 16:21). Moses and Aaron interceded, saving the nation of Israel from destruction. The decision of leadership was again placed before the Lord as Moses instructed the congregation to "depart from the tents of these wicked men" (Num. 16:26). The decision in favor of Moses was dramatized as "the earth opened its mouth" and swallowed all the men of Korah (Num. 16:32).

Apparently some of the descendants of Korah survived to become ministers of music in the tabernacle during the time of David (1 Chr. 6:31–37).

4. The oldest son of Hebron, a descendant of Caleb and Judah (1 Chr. 2:43).

KORAHITES [KOR uh hights]—that part of the Kohathite Levites descended from KORAH, the son of Izhar and grandson of Levi. Many Korahites held responsible tabernacle positions (Ex. 6:24). The name is also spelled Korathites (Num. 26:58). Eleven psalms bear the title, "the sons of Korah" (Psalms 42; 44–49; 84–85; 87–88).

KORAZIN—a form of CHORAZIN.

KORE [KOR ih] (one who proclaims)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Shallum and Meshelemiah, who were gatekeepers at the tabernacle (1 Chr. 9:19).
2. A son of Imnah the Levite. Kore was the keeper of the East Gate of the temple (2 Chr. 31:14).

KORHITES [KOR hights]—a form of KORAHITES.

KOROS (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

KOZ [kahz]—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of Caleb, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:8; Coz, KJV).
2. The ancestor of a priestly family that returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:61). HAKKOZ (1 Chr. 24:10) may be the same person.
3. An ancestor of a person who helped repair the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:4, 21).

KUE [KOO ay]—a form of KEVEH.

KUSHAIAH [koo SHAY uh]—a form of KISHI (1 Chr. 15:17).

L

LAADAH [LAY uh duh]—a son of Shelah and grandson of Judah (1 Chr. 4:21).

LAADAN [LAY uh dan]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of Ephraim and an ancestor of Joshua (1 Chr. 7:26; Ladan, NIV, NRSV).
2. A Levite of the family of Gershon (1 Chr. 23:7–9; Ladan, NIV, NRSV), also called Libni (Ex. 6:17).

LABAN [LAY bihn] (white)—father-in-law of Jacob. Laban lived in the city of Nahor in Padan Aram where Abraham sent his servant to find a wife for Isaac. Laban, brother of Rebekah, is introduced when he heard of the servant's presence, saw the golden jewelry given Rebekah, and eagerly invited Abraham's emissary into their home (Gen. 24:29–60). Laban played an important role in the marriage arrangements. His stubbornness and greed characterized his later dealings with Rebekah's son, Jacob.

Many years later, Jacob left home to escape Esau's wrath. At the well of Haran he met Rachel, Laban's daughter. Laban promised her to his nephew Jacob in return for seven years of labor from Jacob. Laban consequently dealt with Jacob with deception and greed; he gave him the wrong wife and then forced him to work seven more years for Rachel. Then he persuaded Jacob to stay longer, but the wages he promised were changed ten times in six years (Genesis 29–30).

When family situations became tense, Jacob quietly left with his wives, children, and possessions, only to be pursued by Laban (Genesis 31). Laban and Jacob eventually parted on peaceful terms, but they heaped up stones as a mutual testimony that they would have no further dealings with one another. They called upon God as their witness that they would not impose upon one another again (Gen. 31:43–55).

LABORER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

LACE—KJV word for twisted cord or thread used to bind items together. This word is used of the cord that bound the priestly ephod to the breastplate (Ex. 28:28). It also refers to a rope (Judg. 16:9; yarn, NKJV), a tassel (Num. 15:38), or a belt (Gen. 38:18; cord, NKJV, NIV).

LACHISH [LAY kish]—an ancient walled city in the lowlands of Judah captured by Joshua and the Israelites. Lachish was situated about 49 kilometers (30 miles) southwest of Jerusalem and about 9.5 kilometers (15 miles) west of Hebron (see Map 3, A–4). The city covered about 18 acres and was inhabited for many years before the invasion by Joshua and the Israelites. The city is mentioned in early Egyptian sources as an important military stronghold.

After the Israelites overran the cities of Jericho and Ai, King Japhia of Lachish and four other kings formed an alliance against Israel (Josh. 10:1–4). God aided Israel against these five armies by causing the sun to stand still (Josh. 10:5–14). After a two-day siege, Lachish itself was captured (Josh. 10:31–33). It then was included in the allotment of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:39).

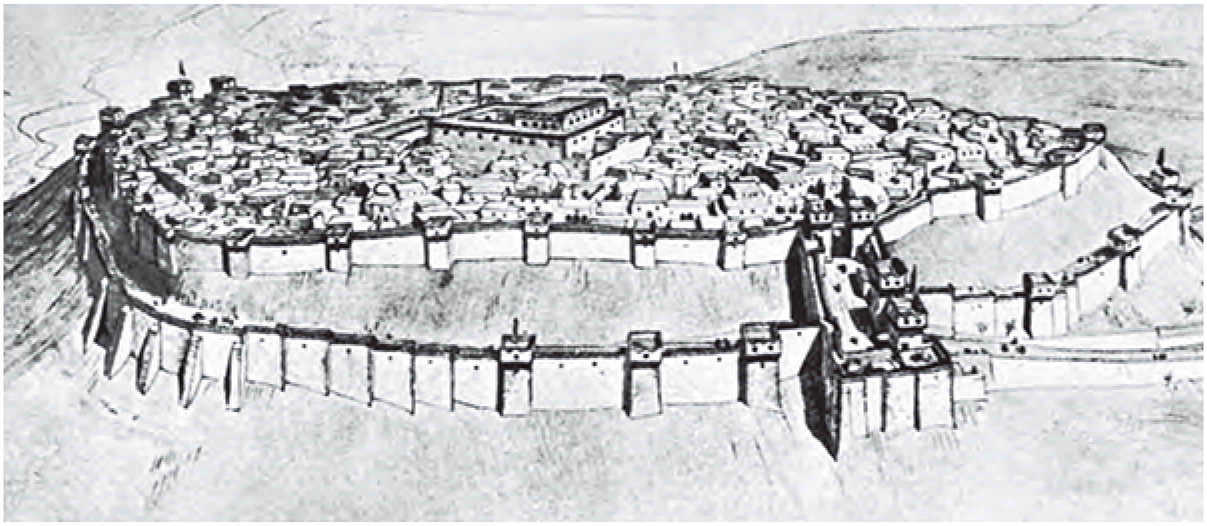
Little is known of the city until the time of Solomon, when Solomon's son Rehoboam rebuilt Lachish to protect Judah from Egypt (2 Chr. 11:5–12). Many years later Amaziah, king of Judah, fled from an uprising in Jerusalem to Lachish. Because Amaziah had turned away from following God, judgment was imposed upon him; he was killed while hiding in the city (2 Kin. 14:19; 2 Chr. 25:27).

During the time of Hezekiah (701 B.C.), Sennacherib, king of Assyria, attacked Lachish (2 Kin. 18:13–17; 2 Chr. 32:9). Its capture was so important to Sennacherib that he memorialized it in a magnificent relief on the wall of his palace at Nineveh. He also sent a letter to Hezekiah, demanding his surrender (2 Kin. 18:14, 17; 19:8).

About 100 years later, Lachish was again a stronghold in the nation of Judah. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, attacked and defeated the city when he took Judah into captivity in 586 B.C. (Jer. 34:7). When the Jews returned from their years of CAPTIVITY in Babylon, the city of Lachish was inhabited again (Neh. 11:30).

Archaeologists have excavated Lachish (modern Tell ed-Duweir), and it has become one of the most significant sites in the Holy Land. A small temple with an altar for burnt offerings was discovered here; and the bones of many animals also were found—perhaps representing portions of the animals that the priests ate during sacrificial observances (Lev. 7:32–34). Also discovered was a deep well that probably provided water for the city when it was under siege.

Other important finds consisted of early Hebrew writings on bowls, seals, and a stone altar. Twenty-one pottery sherds, on which were written letters about the attack on Lachish and Jerusalem by Babylon in 586 B.C., were also found. One of the letters states that signals from Azekah could no longer be seen. It was written shortly after the events noted in Jeremiah 34:7, which observe that Lachish and Azekah were the only fortified cities left in Judah.



• Drawing of Lachish, a walled city of the southern kingdom of Judah, which was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon in 586 B.C.

LADAN [LAY duhn]—a form of LAADAN.

LADDER—a device consisting of two long sidepieces, joined at intervals by parallel rungs, used for climbing up or down. This word occurs only once in Scripture—in the account of Jacob's dream at Bethel (Gen. 28:12). In this incident Jacob learned that in spite of all the underhanded things he had done, he had not been deserted by God.

LADLE—a long-handled spoon and a deep bowl that held incense for use in the tabernacle and the temple (1 Kin. 7:50; 2 Chr. 4:22; spoons, KJV; saucers, REB; dishes for incense, NRSV). These ladles were among the bronze utensils carried away from the temple by the conquering Babylonians in 586 B.C. (2 Kin. 25:14; Jer. 52:18–19).

LAEL [LAY uhl] (belonging to God)—a Levite of the family of Gershon (Num. 3:24).

LAHAD [LAY had]—son of Jahath (1 Chr. 4:2).

LAHAI ROI [luh HIGH roy]—a form of BEER LAHAI ROI.

LAHMAS [LAH mahs]—a city in the SHEPHELAH, or lowland, of Judah (Josh. 15:40). It is possibly Khirbet el-Lahm, about 4 kilometers (2.5 miles) east of Lachish.

LAHMI [LAH migh] (warrior)—a brother of Goliath, the Philistine giant killed by David (1 Chr. 20:5).

LAISH [LAY ish] (lion)—the name of one man and two places in the Old Testament:

1. A Canaanite city in northern Palestine conquered by the tribe of Dan. Its name was changed from Laish to Dan (Judg. 18:29). Dan was also called Leshem (Josh. 19:47).
2. Father of Palti (1 Sam. 25:44), or Paltiel (2 Sam. 3:15).
3. A village in the territory of Benjamin (Is. 10:30; Laishah, NRSV).

LAKE OF GENNESARET (see GENNESARET).

LAKKUM [LAK uhm]—a border city in northeastern Naphtali near the Jordan River (Josh. 19:33; Lakum, KJV).

LAMA [LAH muh]—a Hebrew word meaning “why.” It is found twice in the New Testament (Matt. 27:46; Mark 15:34), as one of Jesus’ “seven words” from the cross: “My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?”—a quotation from Psalm 22:1.

LAMB (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LAMB OF GOD—a phrase used by John the Baptist to describe Jesus (John 1:29, 36). John publicly identified Jesus as “the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world!” Elsewhere in the New Testament Jesus is called a lamb (Acts 8:32; 1 Pet. 1:19; Rev. 5:6). The Book of Revelation speaks of Jesus as a lamb twenty-eight times.

John’s reference to Jesus as the Lamb of God calls to mind the Old Testament sacrificial system. In the sacrifice God accepted the blood of animals as the means of atonement for sin. It is likely that John had many themes from the Old Testament in mind when he called Jesus the Lamb of God. These themes probably included the sin offering (Leviticus 4), the trespass offering (Leviticus 5), the sacrifice on the Day of Atonement (Leviticus 16), and the Passover sacrifice (Exodus 12).

But the strongest image from the Old Testament is the suffering servant who “was led as a lamb to the slaughter” (Is. 53:7) and who “bore the sins of many” (Is. 53:12). Thus, this vivid description of Jesus was a pointed announcement of the ATONEMENT He would bring about on our behalf.

Also see JESUS CHRIST.

LAME, LAMENESS—a disability in one or more limbs, especially in a foot or leg, so that a person experiences difficulty in walking or moving freely. Lameness is one of the physical imperfections that excluded a priest from entering the holy place or offering sacrifices (Lev. 21:17–21). Jesus healed many lame people (Matt. 11:5; Luke 7:22). Peter and John also healed a man who had been lame from birth (Acts 3:1–11). Also see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE.

LAMECH [LAY mik]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Methushael and a descendant of Cain (Gen. 4:18–24). Lamech is the first man mentioned in the Bible as having two wives (Gen. 4:19). By Adah he had two sons, Jabal and Jubal; and by Zillah he had a son, Tubal-Cain, and a daughter, Naamah.
2. The first son of Methuselah, and the father of Noah (Gen. 5:25–26, 28–31). Lamech lived to be 777 years old (Gen. 5:31). He is mentioned in the genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:36).

LAMED [LAH mid]—the twelfth letter of the Hebrew alphabet, used as a heading over Psalm 119:89–96. In the Hebrew language, the first word of each of these eight verses begin with the letter lamed. Also see ACROSTIC.

LAMENT (see MOURN, MOURNING).

LAMENTATIONS, BOOK OF—a short Old Testament book, written in poetic form, that expresses deep grief over the destruction of the city of Jerusalem and the temple. Its English title comes from a Greek verb meaning "to cry aloud," which accurately describes the contents of the book.

Structure of the Book. The book consists of five poems, one for each chapter. The first, second, and fourth poems are written as acrostics, with each successive verse beginning with the next letter of the Hebrew alphabet. The third poem is also an acrostic, although in an expanded form giving three verses to each of the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet. The fifth poem departs from the acrostic pattern, but it contains twenty-two verses, the same number as poems one, two, and four.

It is clear that the writer of Lamentations went to much trouble to compose this book. He wove several literary devices together, under the inspiration of God's Spirit, to give these poems a somber tone. Nothing less could express his deep sorrow over the plight of Jerusalem at the hands of the invading Babylonians.

Authorship and Date. Lamentations itself gives no clue concerning its author, but many conservative Bible scholars agree on the prophet Jeremiah as the most likely candidate. The book is realistic in its portrayal of conditions in Jerusalem just before its fall, suggesting that the author was an eyewitness of these events. This supports Jeremiah's authorship, since he prophesied in Jerusalem during this period of his nation's history. In addition, the Septuagint (an ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament) attributes the authorship of Lamentations to Jeremiah.

Some of the language in Lamentations and the Book of Jeremiah is also similar. For example, the phrase "daughter of" appears about twenty times in each book. In addition, Jeremiah was a very sensitive prophet who expressed his feelings about his nation's sins and approaching doom in rich symbols and metaphors. A deep outpouring of sorrow is characteristic of Lamentations as well as some sections of Jeremiah. All this evidence supports the view that the prophet wrote the Book of Lamentations. The date of the writing was probably some time shortly after the fall of the city in 586 B.C.

Historical Setting. The fall of Jerusalem to Babylonian forces under NEBUCHADNEZZAR was one of Israel's most bitter experiences. Many of the nation's leading citizens were carried into captivity in Babylonia and lived there for almost fifty years. Their idolatry and unfaithfulness had resulted in the loss of two of the focal points of their faith: Jerusalem and the temple. Jeremiah must have expressed their collective shock and sorrow as he wrote this poetic book.

Theological Contribution. Why was there such despondency over the destruction of a city? The reasons become clear when we sense the importance of Jerusalem in the purpose of God.

Jerusalem was more than the capital of the nation or the city of Israel's beloved King David. Jerusalem was the site of the temple of God, the place where God's presence dwelt and where sacrifice could be made to him. In later years Jerusalem became the focal point of God's final work of salvation in the person of Jesus Christ. Lamentations reminds us of the central role that this city has always played in God's work of redemption in the world.

Special Considerations. Lamentations has many strange expressions such as "daughter of Zion" (2:1), "daughter of Judah" (2:5), and "daughter of Jerusalem" (2:15). These do not refer to daughters of these cities but to the cities themselves as daughters of the Lord. In this context, these phrases refer to supreme grief. As such they remind us of the profound sorrow associated with God's judgment of His sinful people; yet, since they remain daughters, these cities speak of great hope during desperate times.

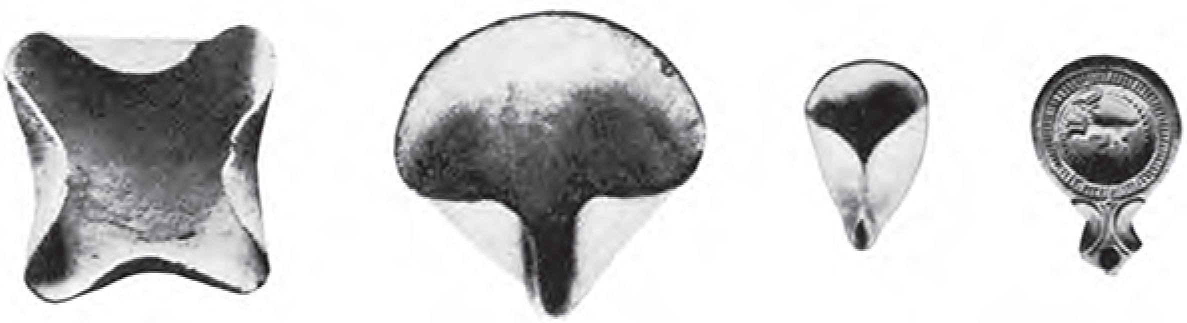
LAMP—a simple oil-burning vessel used for lighting houses and public buildings in Bible times. Pottery lamps either had lips or were completely enclosed, with a hole in the middle, or a spout in the rim, for the wick. Such lamps were often decorated, and many had handles for convenient carrying. Jewish lamps were decorated with the symbol of the MENORAH, the seven-branched lampstand. Christian lamps were decorated with Christian symbols such as crosses, fish, and the alpha and omega. The typical Palestinian lamp in Christ’s day was plain and round, with a filling hole for oil and a spout for the wick.

Lamps could be held by hand or placed on a support, like a shelf or a lampstand. More light was provided by additional wicks. Lamps with up to seven spouts have been discovered by archaeologists. Some lamps were made of metal.

A seven-branched lampstand of pure gold stood in the TABERNACLE (Ex. 25:31–40). Solomon made ten similar lampstands for the TEMPLE (1 Kin. 7:49).

Lamps burned olive oil or fat. Those with a single wick would burn from two to four hours. Occasionally the flax wick would have to be trimmed. WICK TRIMMERS were used for this purpose.

The lamp became a symbol of understanding (2 Sam. 22:29), guidance (Prov. 6:23), and life (Job 21:17). John the Baptist was “the burning and shining lamp” in whose light the Jews of his day rejoiced (John 5:35). In Jesus’ parable of the wise and foolish virgins (Matt. 25:1–13), taking enough oil to keep the lamps burning represented good works done in obedience to Jesus’ teaching. Not taking enough oil to keep the lamps burning represented disobedience to Christ.



- Photos of oil lamps, showing how the lamp evolved into a more efficient light-giving instrument from about 2000 B.C. to New Testament times and beyond.

LANCE, LANCET (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE).

LAND—a plot of ground, or soil, on which trees, vegetables, and shrubs grow; a portion of the earth. The Old Testament ideal was that every Hebrew family was to own a portion of land, where every person could sit under his own vine and fig tree (1 Kin. 4:25; Mic. 4:4). The land of Canaan belonged to the Lord, and He had given it to His people (Josh. 24:11–13). They were His tenants (Lev. 25:23).

After the conquest of the land under Joshua, the whole country was divided among the individual tribes and families (Joshua 13–22). Boundary stones were not to be removed (Deut. 19:14). Naboth’s refusal to sell family land even to the king (1 Kings 21) illustrates the ideal that land should become a permanent family heritage. Although land could be sold in difficult times, a near relative had the right to buy this land back so it did not pass permanently from a family's hands (Ruth 4:2–4). Land was eventually supposed to revert to the original family at the Year of the JUBILEE, every fiftieth year (Lev. 25:23–28). Inheritance laws also sought to ensure that property remained within the family or the tribe (Num. 27:7–11).

In practice, however, acquisition of property by wealthier families increased throughout Bible history. The prophets condemned the practice (Is. 5:8; Mic. 2:2) because it led to wider divisions between rich and poor, depriving families of basic rights under the Mosaic law. Renting of land is first mentioned in Jesus' parable of the tenants (Matt. 21:33–41).

LANDMARK—a boundary line indicated by a stone or other monument. These monuments were erected to mark the separation of fields, territories, and nations. The law of Moses prohibited the removal of these landmarks (Deut. 19:14) and pronounced a curse upon those who did (Deut. 27:17). When Job complained of violence on the earth, the first crime he mentioned was the removal of landmarks (Job 24:2). Also, the prophet Hosea complained, "The princes of Judah are like those who remove a landmark" (Hos. 5:10); therefore, God's wrath would be poured out on them.

LANE—a narrow or constricted passageway in a town or city, crowded by buildings on both sides (Luke 14:21; alleys, NIV, REB).

LANGUAGES OF THE BIBLE—the languages in which the Bible was originally written. The most famous of these are HEBREW, the original language of most of the Old Testament, and GREEK, used in the writing of most of the New Testament. But several other languages also had a bearing on the writing or transmission of the original texts of the Bible.

Aramaic. Spoken from at least about 2000 B.C., Aramaic eventually replaced many of the languages of the ancient world in popularity and usage. Parts of the books of Ezra (4:8—6:18; 7:12–26) and of Daniel (2:46—7:28) were written in Aramaic. Aramaic was the language spoken in Palestine in the time of Jesus. While the New Testament was written in the Greek language, the language Jesus spoke was probably Aramaic. “Talitha, cumi” (Mark 5:41) and “Ephphatha” (Mark 7:34) are two Aramaic phrases spoken by Jesus that have been preserved in English versions of the New Testament. Another name for the Aramaic dialect is Syriac.

Latin. The New Testament also refers to Latin, the language that sprang from ancient Rome (Luke 23:38; John 19:20). Most of the Roman Empire also used Greek in Jesus’ day. But as Roman power spread throughout the ancient world, Latin also expanded in use. The influence of Latin on the Mediterranean world in the time of Jesus is shown by the occurrence of such Latin words as “denarii” (Matt. 18:28) and “praetorian” (Phil. 1:13, imperial guard, NRSV, NASB; palace guard, NIV) in the New Testament.

Persian. This language was spoken by the people who settled the area east of the Tigris River in what is now western Iran. When the Jewish people were taken as captives to Babylon in 586 B.C., they may have been exposed to this distinctive language form, which used a combination of pictorial and phonetic signs in its alphabet. Several words derived from Persian are found in the Old Testament (for example, satrap; Dan. 6:1–2).

LANTERN—a light source mentioned in the account of the betrayal of Jesus (John 18:3). Scholars believe a lantern was much like a LAMP (Matt. 25:1). It probably had some type of simple globe or covering to keep its flame from being blown out by the wind.

LAODICEA [LAY ah duh SEE uh]—a city in the Lycus Valley of the province of PHRYGIA where one of the seven churches of Asia Minor was situated (Rev. 3:14). About 65 kilometers (40 miles) east of Ephesus and about 16 kilometers (10 miles) west of Colossae, Laodicea was built on the banks of the river Lycus, a tributary of the Maeander River.

The words of the risen Christ to Laodicea in Revelation 3:14–22 contain allusions to the economic prosperity and social prominence of the city. Founded by the SELEUCIDS and named for Laodice, the wife of Antiochus II (261–247 B.C.), Laodicea became extremely wealthy during the Roman period. For example, in 62 B.C. Flaccus seized the annual contribution of the Jews of Laodicea for Jerusalem amounting to twenty pounds of gold. Moreover, when the city was destroyed by an earthquake in A.D. 60 (along with Colossae and Hierapolis), it alone refused aid from Rome for rebuilding (compare the self-sufficient attitude of the church of Laodicea in Revelation 3:17). Laodicea was known for its black wool industry; it manufactured garments from the raven-black wool produced by the sheep of the surrounding area.

The apostle Paul does not seem to have visited Laodicea at the time he wrote Colossians 2:1. Epaphras, Tychicus, Onesimus, and Mark seem to have been the early messengers of the gospel there (Col. 1:7; 4:7–15). A letter addressed to the Laodiceans by Paul (Col. 4:16) has apparently been lost; some consider it to be a copy of the Ephesian letter. A church council was supposedly held at Laodicea (A.D. 344–363), but all that has come down to us are statements from other councils.

The site of Laodicea is now a deserted heap of ruins that the Turks call Eski Hisar, or “old castle.”

According to the comments about the church at Laodicea in the Book of Revelation, this congregation consisted of lukewarm Christians (Rev. 3:14–22). The living Lord demands enthusiasm and total commitment from those who worship Him.

LAP—the top of the thighs of a person sitting. The two uses of the word in the NKJV refer to the clothes that cover the lap (2 Kin. 4:39; Prov. 16:33).

LAPIDOTH, LAPPIDOTH [LAP uh doth] (flames)—the husband of Deborah the prophetess, whose home appears to have been "between Ramah and Bethel in the mountains of Ephraim" (Judg. 4:4–5).

LAPIS LAZULI (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

LAPPED, LAPS—to drink by licking up liquid with the tongue. The Lord told Gideon this would be the standard by which his army would be tested. Those who lapped water with their tongues, as a dog laps, would be retained for battle. Those who got down on their knees to drink would be sent home (Judg. 7:5–7).

LAPWING (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LASCIVIOUSNESS—KJV word for LICENTIOUSNESS.

LASEA [luh SEE uh]—a seaport on the southern coast of Crete. The ship that carried Paul toward Rome passed by Lasea, “we came to a place called Fair Havens, near the city of Lasea” (Acts 27:8).

LASHA [LAY shuh]—an ancient Canaanite site on the southeastern border of Palestine (Gen. 10:19), mentioned with Sodom and Gomorrah and other CITIES OF THE PLAIN. It was situated near the Dead Sea.

LASHARON [luh SHAR uhn]—a Canaanite city whose king was defeated by Joshua (Josh. 12:18; Aphek-in-Sharon, REB).

LAST DAYS (see ESCHATOLOGY).

LAST SUPPER (see LORD’S SUPPER).

LATCHET—KJV word for a leather strap, thong, or cord used to fasten a sandal on the foot (Mark 1:7). Also see SANDAL.

LATIN (see LANGUAGES OF THE BIBLE).

LATIN VERSION (see BIBLE VERSIONS AND TRANSLATIONS).

LATTER DAYS (see ESCHATOLOGY).

LATTICE NETWORK—ornamental trim on the capitals, or tops, of JACHIN AND BOAZ, the twin pillars that stood before the porch of the temple (1 Kin. 7:17; checker work, KJV).

LAUGH, LAUGHTER—to show mirth or joy. In the Bible, however, laughter is usually an expression of mockery or scorn. Both Abraham (Gen. 17:17) and Sarah (Gen. 18:12–15; 21:6) laughed when they were told they would become parents at an old age. God’s laughter at human pride and rebellion is also the laughter of mockery and scorn (Ps. 2:4).

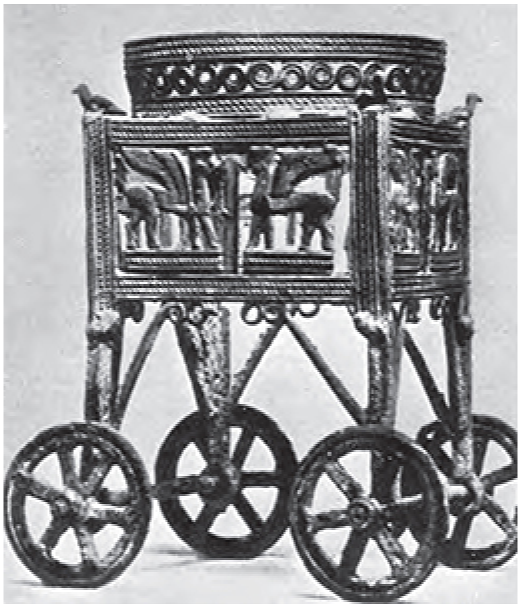
LAUNDERER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

LAUREL (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

LAVER—a basin in which the priests washed their hands for purification purposes while officiating at the altar of the TABERNACLE or the TEMPLE. Moses was commanded to make a laver, or basin, so Aaron and the Levitical priests could wash their hands and feet before offering sacrifices (Ex. 30:18–21). The laver and its base were made from the bronze mirrors of the serving women (Ex. 38:8). It stood between the Tent of Meeting and the altar.

Hiram made ten bronze lavers for Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 7:27–39). Each laver rested on a bronze cart, and each cart rested on two pairs of wheels. The panels on the carts were decorated with lions, oxen, and cherubim. The lavers were divided into two groups of five and were used for washing sacrifices. The priests, however, washed in the BRONZE SEA (2 Chr. 4:6). Later in Judah's history, King Ahaz cut the panels off the carts and removed the lavers (2 Kin. 16:17).

The ten lavers are not mentioned in the prophet Ezekiel's description of the new temple. The rebuilt temples under ZERUBBABEL and HEROD each had a single laver.



• This laver on a stand with wheels dates to about the 12th century B.C. It was discovered in the excavation of a tomb on the island of Cyprus.

LAW—an orderly system of rules and regulations by which a society is governed. In the Bible, particularly the Old Testament, a unique law code was established by direct revelation from God to direct His people in their worship, in their relationship to Him, and in their social relationships with one another.

Israel was not the only nation to have a law code. Such collections were common among the countries of the ancient world. These law codes generally began with an explanation that the gods gave the king the power to reign, along with a pronouncement about how good and capable he was. Then came the king's laws grouped by subject. The code generally closed with a series of curses and blessings.

The biblical law code, or the Mosaic Law, was different from other ancient Near Eastern law codes in several ways. Biblical law was different, first of all, in its origin. Throughout the ancient world, the laws of most nations were believed to originate with the gods, but they were considered intensely personal and subjective in the way they were applied. Even the gods were under the law, and they could suffer punishment if they violated it—unless, of course, they were powerful and able to conquer the punishers. The king ruled under the god whose temple and property he oversaw. Although he did not live under a written law code, he had a personal relationship to the god. Therefore, law was decided case by case and at the king's discretion. For most of a king's lifetime, his laws were kept secret.

By contrast, the biblical concept was that law comes from God, is issued from His nature, and is holy, righteous, and good. Furthermore, at the outset of God's ruling over Israel at Sinai, God the great King gave His laws. These laws were binding on His people, and He upheld them. Furthermore, His laws were universal. Ancient oriental kings often tried to outdo their predecessors in image, economic power, and political influence. This was often their motivation in setting forth law codes. God, however, depicts His law as an expression of His love for His people (Ex. 19:5–6).

In Israel all crimes were crimes against God (1 Sam. 12:9–10). Consequently, He expected all His people to love and serve Him (Amos 5:21–24). As the final judge, He disciplined those who violated His law (Ex. 22:21–24; Deut. 10:18; 19:17). The nation or community was responsible for upholding the law and ensuring that justice was done (Deut. 13:6–10; 17:7; Num. 15:32–36).

God’s law, unlike those of other nations of the ancient world, also viewed all human life as especially valuable, because people are created in God’s image. Thus, biblical law was more humane. It avoided mutilations and other savage punishments. Victims could not inflict more injury than they had received. Neither could criminals restore less than they had taken or stolen simply because of a class distinction. Everyone was equal before God’s law.

The “eye for eye” requirement of the Mosaic Law was not a harsh statement that required cruel punishment. Instead, it was a mandate for equality before the law (Ex. 21:24). Each criminal had to pay for his own crime (Num. 35:31). Under the law codes of some pagan nations, the rich often could buy their way out of punishment. God’s law especially protected the defenseless widow, fatherless child, slave, and stranger from injustice (Ex. 21:2, 20–21; 22:21–23).

Some scholars refer to Leviticus 17–26 as the “holiness code.” Although it does not contain all of God’s directions for ceremonial holiness, it does set forth much of what God requires. These chapters contain moral and ritual specifications regarding the tabernacle and public worship as well as the command to love one’s neighbor as oneself (19:18). The nation of Israel was to be characterized by separation from other nations. Several of these laws prohibited pagan worship. Because God is holy (21:8), Israel was to be holy and separated from other nations (20:26).

The Book of Deuteronomy is sometimes called the Deuteronomic Code. This book contains the command to love God with all one’s heart, soul, and might (Deut. 6:5) as well as a second record of the Ten Commandments (Deuteronomy 5).

Biblical law is more than a record of human law. It is an expression of what God requires of people. It rests on the eternal moral principles that are consistent with the very nature of God Himself. Therefore, biblical law (the Ten Commandments) is the summary of moral law. As such it sets forth fundamental and universal moral principles.

What is often called the civil law includes those laws in the Pentateuch (first five books of the Old Testament) that regulate civil and social behavior. All laws are fundamentally religious since God is the lawgiver and ruler over everything. There are eight distinct categories of civil law in the Old Testament: (1) laws regulating leaders, (2) laws regulating the army, (3) laws respecting criminals, (4) laws dealing with crimes against property, (5) laws relating to humane treatment, (6) laws about personal and family rights, (7) laws about property rights, and (8) laws regulating other social behavior.

Laws Regulating Leaders. Several different types of laws in this category of civil law were designed to keep Israel's leadership strong and free of graft and corruption.

Exclusion laws—God commanded that several categories of people not be allowed to vote or serve in office. These included the physically handicapped, sexually maimed, those of illegitimate birth, and those of foreign extraction, such as Moabite or Ammonite (Deut. 23:1–3). These laws were another of the attempts by God to teach Israel in a concrete manner that they were to be spiritually clean and perfect before Him.

Laws about the king—Long before Israel had a human king, God specified that if a king were to be appointed, he should follow all the laws God had given. Other specifications were that he should be a true Israelite, that he should not trust in a large army for protection, and that he should not be a polygamist or a greedy person (Deut. 17:14–20). The judges of the Book of Judges functioned as temporary military leaders. They also handled some of the functions of a modern judge. Israel's kings were different from these judges, in that they were permanent and they maintained a standing army, a governmental network, and a royal court supported by taxation.

Laws about judges—Judges were of two classes, priestly and non-priestly (elders). The priestly judges presided over religious lawsuits, and elders presided over civil lawsuits (Deut. 17:8–13; 2 Chr. 19:8, 11). Judges, also called elders, were to be elected from among heads of households (Ex. 18:13–26).

Laws about the judicial system—God commanded Israel to organize its ruling system into layers of courts (Ex. 18:21–22; Deut. 1:15), with lesser matters decided by lesser courts and greater matters decided by greater courts (Deut. 16:18). Matters that involved foundational principles or that were too hard for the lower courts were brought to the highest courts or the chief judge (2 Chr. 19:10–11). The highest court was God Himself (Ex. 22:21–24; Deut. 10:18).

Judges were charged not to be partial in favor of the rich or against the poor, widows, aliens, or others who might be helpless (Ex. 23:6–9; Deut. 16:18–20; 27:19). Consequently, they were to hear the witnesses carefully, examine the evidence, and make their decisions on the basis of what God had revealed in His written law. They also presided over making or nullifying all contracts.

Laws about witnesses—Witnesses were charged by God to tell the truth (Lev. 19:16). If they did not do so, they were judged by Him. If their deception was discovered, they were to bear the penalty involved in the case (Ex. 23:1–3; Deut. 19:15–19). Conviction of serious crimes required two or more witnesses (Num. 35:30). Indeed, no one could be convicted on the testimony of one witness. Written documents and other testimony could be used as evidence against the accused (Deut. 17:6; 19:18).

Laws about law enforcement—Refusal to comply with what the court decided (contempt of court) brought a sentence of death (Deut. 17:12–13). The citizens of ancient Israel were the policemen, bailiffs, etc. (Deut. 16:18). Usually executions were in the hands of the citizens (Deut. 13:9–10; 15:16). Later, the king's private army enforced his will, while Levites also served as policemen (2 Chr. 19:11).

Laws about refuge cities—Judges controlled the entrance into the refuge cities. These were the cities where those who had committed accidental murder (manslaughter) could flee to safety. When the high priest of the nation died, refugees were free to go home without penalty (Ex. 21:12–14; Deut. 19:1–13). Israel was responsible for keeping the roads to such cities as safe as possible so the fugitive could outrun the avenger—the relative responsible for the fugitive's execution to repay the kinsman's death.

Laws about prophets—God's law strictly prohibited idolatry and provided for the death of those who would lead Israel into idolatry. The test of a true prophet was not his ability to work miracles but his faithfulness to God and His revelation (Deut. 18:14–22). On the other hand, Israel was to obey the words of true prophets. If they did not do so, God Himself would punish the people.

Laws Regulating the Army. The second category of civil law consisted of laws regulating the army. All Palestine belonged to God. Within its borders His people were commanded to wage war to gain and maintain the territory. To this end all Israelite males twenty years of age and older formed a militia (Num. 1:21–43), with fifty probably being the exemption age (Num. 4:3, 23). If only a small-scale war was being fought, a selective service system operated by the casting of lots (Num. 31:3–6). Kings were to maintain only small standing armies. Their first defense from outside attack was to be the Lord Himself (Deut. 17:16; 23:9–14).

Certain citizens were exempt from the military: priests and Levites (Num. 1:48–49), the man who had not yet dedicated his newly built home (Deut. 20:5), anyone who had not gathered the first harvest from a field or vineyard (Deut. 20:6), a groom who had not yet consummated his recent marriage (Deut. 20:7), or any man who had been married within a year of the call to arms (Deut. 24:5).

All war was holy war—that is, it was fought under the lordship of God. Therefore, God promised to protect and fight for His army (Deut. 20:1–4), keeping them from harm and marshaling the forces of nature against the enemy (Josh. 10:11; 24:7). But God's protection required ritualistic separation from sin and death, dedication to God, and the following of His direction about the battle (Deut. 23:9–14). God was the commander-in-chief and the one to whom thanksgiving was due for the victory (Num. 10:9–10).

Within Palestine every non-Israelite was to be killed and all their possessions and goods offered to God (Deut. 20:16–18; 2:34; 3:6). Thus, they were to purify the territory and guard themselves from Canaanite idolatry. When the Israelites were fighting outside Palestine, the city being attacked was to be offered peace before the attack. Refusal triggered the attack. All the citizens and goods of that city then became rightful slaves and booty (Deut. 20:10–15).

Laws Respecting Criminals. The third category of civil law consisted of laws against specific criminal offenses. In His law God defined what a criminal offense was and what the proper punishment for each offense was to be. All crimes were sins, or offenses, against God's law. Since there were degrees of punishments, there were degrees of sin under the law. God prohibited the Israelites from punishing criminals excessively (Deut. 25:1–3).

Crimes against God—Under God's law, all of life was religious, but some crimes were considered especially directed against the worship system God had established. Conviction in these cases resulted in death, because such crimes struck out pointedly against God and life itself.

These crimes against God included worshiping other gods alongside God (Ex. 22:20; 34:14); turning from God to worship other gods (Deut. 13:1–18); seeking to control other people and future events by magic or sorcery (Ex. 22:18; Deut. 18:9–14); sacrificing children to false gods (Lev. 18:21; 20:2–5); blasphemy (Lev. 24:16); false prophecy (Deut. 18:18–20); and Sabbath labor other than that permitted by God (Ex. 35:2, 3; Matt. 12:1–8).

Crimes against society—Certain crimes struck at society as a whole. Among these were the perversion of justice through bribery, torture of witnesses, and false testimony or perjury (Ex. 23:1–7; Deut. 19:16–21). Judges were commanded to treat all people equally.

Crimes against sexual morality—Biblical law relating to sexual morality protected and sanctified the family. The sexual union of two persons made them one flesh, and this was the only such union they were to experience.

1. Fornication. In Israel the sexual union was most sacred. A newly married woman charged with premarital sex with a man other than her husband was to be put to death if the charge was proven. If the charge was not proven, her husband had to pay a large fine and keep her as his wife. Also, he could never divorce her (Deut. 22:13–21).
2. Adultery. Under God’s law adultery was a serious crime, perhaps because tearing apart the two who had become one amounted to murder. Those convicted of adultery were to be put to death (Lev. 20:10–12; Deut. 22:22). A betrothed woman (virgin) was protected by the law, but she was also considered to be married in some cases. If she and some man other than her betrothed had sexual union, they were to be put to death (Deut. 22:23–24).
3. Homosexuality. Sodomy or male homosexuality was pointedly condemned and prohibited. It brought death under God’s law (Lev. 20:13). By implication, the same penalty was probably also meted out for female homosexuality, or lesbianism.
4. Prostitution. Prostitutes of every guise (male or female, cultic or non-cultic) were to be put to death (Gen. 38:24; Lev. 19:29; 21:9).

5. Incest. Sexual union with one’s own offspring or near relative was to result in death (Lev. 20:11–14).
6. Bestiality. Having sex with a beast (a common feature of Canaanite worship) was an offense punishable by death (Ex. 22:19; Lev. 18:23; Deut. 27:21).
7. Transvestiture. The distinction between the sexes was to be retained in their outward appearance. Hence, transvestiture (wearing the clothing of the opposite sex) was forbidden.

Crimes against an individual’s person—Crimes of violence against others were serious criminal offenses. The following crimes are cited in biblical law.

1. Murder. The willful and premeditated taking of a human life was punishable by death. Accidental killing, killing as an act of war, and lawful executions were not considered murder (Ex. 21:12–14; Num. 35:14–34). The sixth commandment is, “You shall not murder.” Jesus pointed to the spirit of this commandment when He expanded it to forbid hatred, anger, bitter insults, and cursing (Matt. 5:21–22).
2. Assault and battery. God’s law expected people to live at peace with one another. But realizing that offenses might occur, God provided legislation about assault and battery. If injuring a person caused the victim to lose time but no further harm was done, the offender had to pay his victim for the time lost. Presumably the courts established the fine in such cases (Ex. 21:18–19). If someone maimed his foe in a struggle, he would pay for the lost time; but he would also suffer the same disfigurement at the hands of the court (Lev. 24:19). Some important exceptions to this punishment should be noted.

   If the victim were a slave, disfigurement resulted in his freedom (a very heavy financial loss to the guilty party). If the slave died, the offender was to die. If the slave survived and was not disfigured, there was no penalty on the master, except that exacted for loss of time (Ex. 21:20–21, 26–27).

   If a son or daughter attacked either parent, the attacker was to be put to death (Ex. 21:15). One law called for the severing of the hand of a woman who attacked a man’s genitals, even though she may have been trying to protect her husband (Deut. 25:11–12).

3. Miscarriage. Miscarriage, or the death of the mother resulting from a blow by someone in a fight, brought death upon the attacker. Premature birth caused by this offense required a money fine determined by the husband as governed by the courts (Ex. 21:22).
4. Rape and seduction. A man who raped a betrothed woman was to be put to death (Deut. 22:25–27). However, if he raped or seduced an unattached woman, he was to pay a large fine and propose marriage. A girl's father could refuse the marriage and keep the money; but if he approved, the rapist had to marry the girl and could never divorce her (Ex. 22:16–17; Deut. 2:28–29). If the seduced girl was a betrothed slave, she was considered unattached (for she had not yet been released from slavery). Consequently, the attacker was not put to death. But the man had to bring a guilt offering before God to make restitution for his sin.
5. Oppression. In Israel the defenseless were to be defended. Those without rights or power to enforce their rights were protected by God. These included the alien passing through the area and the alien who was a permanent resident. The widow, fatherless child, deaf, blind, slave, hired hand, and poor were to be given just wages, paid immediately, given interest-free loans (except aliens) in emergencies, gifts of food at festivals, and the privilege of gleaning, etc. (Ex. 22:21–24; Lev. 19:14, 33; Deut. 24:14; 27:18–19).
6. Kidnapping. Capturing a person to sell or use him as a slave was a capital offense (Deut. 24:7). This prohibition extended to foreigners (unless they were prisoners of war; Ex. 22:21–24), the blind and deaf (Lev. 19:14), and all people (Deut. 27:19).
7. Slander. Slander (making malicious statements about another person) was strictly forbidden and punished if the crime was committed during a trial (Ex. 23:1). This was viewed as a mortal attack on a person (Lev. 19:16).

Laws Dealing with Crimes Against Property. Biblical law, unlike other ancient near Eastern codes, placed a higher value on human life than on possessions. But it also allowed people to have private possessions by protecting them from theft and fraud. The following crimes against property are dealt with in the Bible.

Stealing—God prohibited anyone from stealing from another. Heavy financial penalties were levied upon the thief. If he could not pay, he was required to serve as an indentured servant to pay the restitution price in labor (Ex. 22:1–3).

Blackmail and loan fraud—God's law counted these crimes as a kind of theft, mandating heavy penalties and possible indentured service as penalties (Ex. 22:1–3; Lev. 6:1–7).

Weights and measures—Ancient Israel did not use money; transactions were in measured, or weighed, precious metal. God prohibited anyone from juggling weights so the goods or metals would be measured out to favor the thief. Such a thief had to repay his victims (Lev. 19:35–36; Deut. 25:13–16).

Lost animals—"Finders, keepers" did not hold in ancient Israel. Straying animals were to be returned to the owner or cared for until claimed; "If you meet your enemy's ox or his donkey going astray, you shall surely bring it back to him again," (Ex. 23:4–5; Deut. 22:1–4).

Boundaries—The land was marked into sections by ancient landmarks, according to the allotments made shortly after it was conquered. To move these landmarks resulted in God's curse. This act was considered stealing from one's neighbor as well as rebellion against God the great landowner (Deut. 19:14; 27:17).

Laws Relating to Humane Treatment. God's law regulated treatment of otherwise defenseless animals and people.

Protection of animals—Some of these laws were also environmental laws. For example, Israel was commanded not to work the land on the seventh year. Whatever grain or fruit grew up was to be left for the animals and the poor. This forced a crop rotation system on the Hebrew people so they would have some harvest every year (Ex. 23:11–12; Lev. 25:5–7). They were allowed to eat certain wild beasts and birds but were forbidden to take a mother. Presumably, they could take the young or the eggs, but they were required to let the mother live (Deut. 22:6–7). An ox or any working beast (or human being) was to be fed adequately to give him strength for doing the work (Deut. 25:4). Animals were not to be cruelly beaten or overloaded. They were to be rested on the Sabbath (Ex. 20:8–11; 23:12; Deut. 22:1–4).

Protection of human beings—The poor, widow, fatherless child, alien, sojourner, blind, deaf, etc., were to receive humane treatment from God’s people (Ex. 22:21–25). To preserve their self-respect, they were given opportunities to earn a living by gleaning and working for wages. They were also to be paid properly (Deut. 24:14–15, 19–22).

The respectable and responsible poor were to be extended interest-free loans (Lev. 25:35–37). Their cloaks, which they used at night as blankets, could not be taken as collateral. Neither could a creditor forcibly enter a person’s house to collect the debt (Deut. 24:10–13).

The elderly were to be respected, cared for, and protected (Lev. 19:32). Travelers could enter fields to gather a meal for themselves, but they were forbidden to take more than they could eat (Deut. 23:24–25). If these provisions did not satisfy the needs of the poor, they could sell themselves into indentured service (temporary servitude). In cases like this, the law demanded that they be treated humanely (Lev. 25:39–43). In general, treatment of others was to be governed by the law of love (Lev. 19:18) or the Golden Rule (Matt. 7:12).

Laws About Personal and Family Rights. Another broad category of civil law dealt with personal and family rights. The following situations were covered by these statutes.

Parents and children—The law of God assumed that parents would act responsibly and feed and clothe their children even as God fed and clothed them. Parents also were to discipline and teach their children (Deut. 6:6–7). A father was responsible for circumcising his sons (Gen. 12–13), redeeming his firstborn from God (Num. 18:15–16), and finding his children proper marriage partners (Gen. 24:4).

Children were commanded to respect and obey their parents (Ex. 20:12). Disrespect in the form of striking or cursing a parent and delinquency (stubbornness and disobedience expressed in gluttony and drunkenness) were punishable by death (Ex. 21:15, 17; Deut. 21:18–21). Minor children were under their parents’ authority and could not make binding vows. Unmarried girls were not allowed to make binding vows without their fathers’ or their male guardians’ agreement (Num. 30:3–5).

Marriage—God prohibited the Israelites from marrying near relatives and members of their own immediate family (Lev. 18:6–18; Deut. 27:20–23). He also forbade intermarriage with the Canaanites because these pagans would lead their mates into idolatry (Deut. 7:1–4). But if Canaanites converted and became Israelites (members of God’s covenantal community), no legal and religious bar prevented marriage with them. A man could marry a woman prisoner of war after she mourned her parents’ deaths for a month. This did not necessarily mean her parents were actually dead, but only that this woman now became an Israelite. If her husband divorced her, she had to be set free. Her marriage had made her a full citizen under the law—an Israelite.

Special laws also regulated the marriage of priests. A priest was not to marry a former harlot, a woman who had been previously married, or one who had previously had sexual relations. His bride had to be a virgin Israelite (Lev. 21:7, 13–15). for consistency with previous paragraph

Within the marriage bond, women were protected from undue male harshness by the laws relating to the dowry, the large sum of money given to the girl and held in part by her father in case of their divorce or the husband’s death. Laws also called for severe penalties for violent crimes (usually perpetrated by men), as well as severe penalties for the beating and maiming of household members. God also admonished the man to love the woman as his own body and to treat her accordingly (Deut. 21:10–14).

The wife and mother was to be honored by the children (Ex. 20:12). Sexual relations were forbidden during a woman’s menstrual period—perhaps for sanitary reasons, but certainly to emphasize the sanctity of life and the life-giving process (Lev. 18:19; 20:18). A woman of child-bearing age left childless at the death of her husband was to be married to one of his surviving near relatives so she could bear children to carry on the family name (Deut. 25:5–10). This also provided her with an advocate and protector in the civil court (Deut. 22:13–19) and a representative before God’s altar (Deut. 16:16).

The husband was given primary authority in the family. His wife was under his authority in all matters. Obviously, this did not reduce her to a slave status or to an inferior position, since the two had become one. It did, however, establish a clear authority structure that minimized internal familial struggles and allowed the family to function socially, economically, and religiously (Num. 30:6–15).

Infidelity was punishable by death. Divorce was granted under certain circumstances (Deut. 24:1–4). When a man wrongfully accused his wife of infidelity, “Then the elders of that city shall take that man and punish him” (Deut. 22:17–19); he could not divorce her.

Hired servants—God especially protected the poor from the ravages of the rich. One such measure was the law requiring employers to pay their hired help a just and fair wage and to do so at the end of each work day (Lev. 19:13; Deut. 24:14).

Slaves—Slaves were of two classes, indentured and permanent. Hebrews who were unable to pay debts were indentured, or committed to temporary servitude. The indenture lasted only six years or until the year of JUBILEE. He might be given a wife while in this state, but the wife and children resulting from the union were bound to the master. Such a man could bind himself permanently to the master either for the master’s sake or for that of his family (Ex. 21:2–6).

An Israelite indentured because of poverty was not to be thought of or treated as a slave. He could not be treated with the rigor of slavery. He was to be treated as a hired servant. For example, he was to be paid (Deut. 15:12–14). He could be bought out of the situation by his relatives, or by himself—presumably by savings resulting from his wages while indentured (Lev. 25:39–43, 47–55).

A woman sold to a man as a wife was especially protected. She could be redeemed by her family if the master was not satisfied with her. She could not be sold as a slave to foreign people. She was to be treated as a daughter and provided for in the same way as other wives. If these laws were disobeyed, her freedom was granted (Ex. 21:2–6).

Permanent slaves could be acquired by purchase or as prisoners of war. They were only to be taken from the nations and peoples outside Palestine (Lev. 25:44–46). Fugitive slaves were not to be returned to their owners or treated as slaves—a provision that worked to force masters to treat slaves humanely (Deut. 23:15–16).

Slaves were considered permanent members of their master’s household, circumcised, and admitted to Passover (Ex. 12:43–44) and all the special meals eaten before the Lord, except the guilt offering (Deut. 12:17–18; 16:10–11). A slave could be forced to work; but if beaten severely, he was to be freed (Ex. 21:20–32). If a slave was killed, the master was to be put to death (Ex. 21:20).

Aliens—Aliens could convert to Judaism, be circumcised, and become full members of the covenant (Num. 9:14; 15:12–15). Even if aliens temporarily or permanently living as free people in Israel did not convert, they were to receive full privileges under the civil law (Num. 15:29–30). Unlike Israelites, aliens ate foods declared unclean by God; such foods could be sold or given to them (Deut. 14:21).

Israelites were forbidden to take advantage of the poor Israelite by charging him interest for the loan of food, clothing, money, or anything else (Ex. 22:25; Lev. 25:35–37). But the poor and desperate alien could be charged interest, perhaps because the Israelites considered his state a result of God's judgment (Deut. 23:20).

Laws Regulating Property Rights. Another broad category of civil law consisted of those laws that regulated property rights. The following situations were covered by these laws.

Lost property—Under Mosaic law, all lost property was to be returned to its owner if the owner was known or to be held until claimed by him (Deut. 22:1–4).

Damaged property—Property held in trust was protected under the law. A person caught stealing had to restore to the owner double the value of the goods stolen. If the goods were stolen through carelessness by a trustee of the property, the trustee had to repay the full amount missing. If the loss was accidental or not due to the trustee's carelessness, that trustee was not liable for the loss, provided he was willing to swear before God that the loss was not his fault (Ex. 22:7–13). Borrowed goods had to be returned. If they were damaged or lost while borrowed, they had to be replaced by the borrower (Ex. 22:14–15).

Unsafe property—Owners were held responsible for unsafe property. Thus, if someone was hurt because of an owner's property, the owner had to pay a penalty. In the case of death, the owner of the property lost his life (Ex. 21:28–36; Deut. 22:8).

Land ownership—Ultimately, God owned all the land (Lev. 25:23). He demanded that His tenants rest the land every seventh year by not planting a crop (Lev. 25:1–7). During this seventh year, all travelers and the poor were allowed to eat of the produce of the land without paying for it. All parcels of land were assigned permanently to certain families; they reverted back to those original owners or their heirs every fiftieth year (Lev. 25:8–24). The land could also be purchased by those owners at its original selling price (Lev. 25:29–31) in the interim.

Furthermore, it was a serious matter to move the ancient markers that designated the boundaries of the land. Within walled cities, only Levites owned houses in a permanent sense (Lev. 25:32–34).

Inheritance laws—Normally only legitimate sons were to inherit all the family's property. The firstborn son received twice as much as the others (Deut. 21:15–17; 25:6). He was responsible for caring for elderly family members and providing a respectable burial for them. A wicked son could be disinherited. If no sons were born to a family, legitimate daughters were to inherit the property (Num. 27:7–8). Such heiresses had to marry within their own tribe or lose the inheritance (Num. 36:1–12).

Laws Regulating Other Social Behavior. The final category of civil law included those statutes that regulated specific social behavior. God commanded the Hebrew people to keep themselves from pagan religious and cultic practices (Ex. 20:3–5; Lev. 19:27). Among these practices were boiling a kid in its mother's milk (Deut. 14:21), shaving one's head in a particular way (Lev. 13:33; 21:5), worshiping idols (Deut. 7:5, 25; 12:2–3), sacrificing children (Lev. 20:2), participating in homosexuality and temple prostitution (Lev. 19:29), slashing or tattooing one's body (Lev. 19:28), and practicing magic, sorcery, or divination (Lev. 19:26, 31).

God's people were to preserve and study the Lord's law (Deut. 4:2; 6:6–7), revere His name (Deut. 8:6; 10:12), be grateful and thankful (Deut. 8:10), and obey, love, and serve their redeemer God (Deut. 10:14–16; 6:4–5; 11:1, 13–14).

LAW, ROMAN (see ROMAN LAW).

LAWGIVER—one who gives a code of laws to a people. John wrote that the Law was given through Moses (John 1:17; 7:19). But above and beyond Moses stands God as the supreme Lawgiver, “For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver” (Is. 33:22).

LAWYER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

LAYING ON OF HANDS (see HANDS, LAYING ON OF).

LAZARUS [LAZ ah russ] (God has helped)—the name of two men in the New Testament:

1. The beggar in Jesus’ story about a rich man and a poor man (Luke 16:19–25). The wealthy man despised the beggar, paying no attention to his needs when he passed him each day. After the death of Lazarus, the poor man, he was carried by angels to Abraham's bosom, where he found comfort. But the rich man at death found himself in HADES, in eternal torment.

This story was not intended to praise the poor and condemn the rich. It shows the dangers of turning away from the needs of others. It teaches that our attitude on earth will result in an eternal destiny that parallels our attitude. This note is sounded frequently in the teaching of Jesus (Matt. 7:24–27; Luke 16:9).

2. The brother of Martha and Mary of Bethany (John 11:1). One long account in the Gospel of John tells about his death and resurrection at the command of Jesus (John 11). A second account in the same gospel describes him as sitting with Jesus in the family home after the resurrection miracle (John 12:1–2). Because of the publicity surrounding this event, the chief priest plotted to kill Lazarus (John 12:9–11).

   Twice John's gospel records Jesus' love for Lazarus (John 11:3, 5). Yet, upon hearing of the sickness of his friend, Jesus delayed in returning to Bethany. When He finally arrived, both Martha and Mary rebuked Jesus for not coming sooner. Jesus showed His impatience at their unbelief (11:33) as well as His personal sorrow ("Jesus wept"). Then he brought Lazarus back to life (11:43).

LAZINESS—inactivity, idleness, or a refusal to work—a condition condemned by many biblical writers. “Because of laziness the building decays,” wrote the author of Ecclesiastes, “and through idleness of hands the house leaks” (Eccl. 10:18). The New Testament speaks of a “wicked and lazy servant” (Matt. 25:26) and of “lazy gluttons” (Titus 1:12).

LEAD (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

LEAGUE—an association of nations or states united by common interests (Dan. 11:23; alliance, NRSV, NASB; alliances REB; agreement, NIV). The Hebrew word translated as “league” in this passage is usually translated as “covenant”; it can also mean confederacy, federation, or peace treaty.

LEAH [LEE uh]—the older daughter of Laban, who deceitfully gave her in marriage to Jacob instead of her younger sister Rachel (Gen.

29:16–30). Although Rachel was the more beautiful of the two daughters of Laban and obviously was Jacob's favorite wife, the Lord blessed Leah and Jacob with six sons—Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah (Gen. 29:31–35), Issachar, and Zebulun (Gen. 30:17–20)—and a daughter, Dinah (Gen. 30:21). Leah's maid, Zilpah, added two more sons: Gad and Asher (Gen. 30:9–13).

Leah was the less-favored of the two wives of Jacob, and she must have been painfully conscious of this during all the years of her marriage. But it was Leah rather than Rachel who gave birth to Judah, through whose line Jesus the Messiah was eventually born.

Apparently Leah died in the land of Canaan before the migration to Egypt (Gen. 46:6). She was buried in the Cave of Machpelah in Hebron (Gen. 49:31).

LEANNOTH (see MUSIC).

LEATHER—the dressed and tanned hide of an animal used for making clothes, such as sheepskin, goatskin, and badger skin (Lev. 15:17; Num. 31:20). The trade of a TANNER, a person who tans hides, is mentioned in Acts 9:43 and 10:6, 32. Animal skins were sometimes used also as containers for liquids. Also see WINESKIN.

LEATHER WORKER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

LEAVEN—a substance used to produce fermentation in dough (Ex. 12:15, 19–20; yeast, NIV). In Bible times leaven was usually a piece of fermented dough retained from a previous baking that was placed in the new dough to cause it to rise.

The use of leaven was prohibited in food offerings dedicated to the Lord by fire (Lev. 2:11). However, leavened bread was required for the peace offering (Lev. 7:13) and for the two wave loaves offered at the Feast of Weeks, or Pentecost (Lev. 23:17). During the Exodus, the Israelites had eaten unleavened bread because of their hasty departure from Egypt (Ex. 12:34, 39). The practice of this first Passover was continued in all subsequent observances of the Passover. At the beginning of the Passover season every year, all leaven was expelled from the house (Ex. 12:15) and was kept from the house for seven days (Ex. 12:19). These days, called the "Days of Unleavened Bread" (Acts 12:3), commemorated the eating of unleavened bread at the time of departure from Egypt.

Leaven is used metaphorically in the Bible of an influence that can permeate whatever it touches. Leaven is used as a symbol of either good or bad influence. In one parable, Jesus used the word “leaven” in a good sense:

“The kingdom of heaven is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till it was all leavened” (Matt. 13:33). The action of the leaven in the meal—hidden, yet powerful, relentless, and pervasive—is a symbol of the growth of God’s spiritual rule in the world.

On the other hand, Jesus also used the word “leaven” in an evil sense to illustrate the “fermentation” of moral and political corruption: “Take heed and beware of the leaven [doctrine] of the Pharisees and the Sadducees” (Matt. 16:6, 12).

LEAVES—the foliage of plants or trees. Leaves are mentioned literally in the Bible as clothing for Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:7), as evidence of the earth’s renewal following the Flood (Gen. 8:11), and as building material for constructing the booths required in the observance of the Feast of Tabernacles (Neh. 8:15).

Withered leaves serve as a metaphor for the Lord’s judgment that brings death (Is. 1:30), or for unproductiveness in serving the Lord (Is. 64:6). Green and growing leaves are figures of speech for the righteous and their productivity in the kingdom (Ps. 1:3. Hence, trees that bear leaves which do not wither and which serve “for the healing of nations” symbolize the unending blessing of the age to come (Rev. 22:2).

LEB KAMAI [leb KAY my]—a code name for Chaldea, or Babylonia (Jer. 51:1; Leb-Kamai, REB; Leb-gamai, NRSV; Leb-qamai, NRSV margin).

LEBANA [leh BAY nuh]—a form of LEBANAH.

LEBANAH [lih BAY nuh] (whiteness)—the head of a family of Nethinim (temple servants). Some of his descendants returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:45). The name is also spelled Lebana (Neh. 7:48).

LEBANON [LEB uh none] (white)—a nation of the Middle East that includes much of what was ancient PHOENICIA in Bible times (see Map 9, C–1). This territory has been an important trade center linking Europe and Asia for more than 4,000 years.

In ancient times the Phoenicians used the city-states of Byblos, Sidon, and Tyre as the base of a great sea-trading empire in what is now Lebanon. Over the years, these city-states were conquered by Egyptians, Assyrians, Persians, and the Greeks under Alexander the Great. Later still, Lebanon became part of the Roman Empire, and many inhabitants became Christians. But when the Arabs conquered Lebanon in the seventh century A.D., many turned to the Muslim religion.

Early in the sixteenth century, the Arabs were overthrown by the Turks. Then in 1918 the British and French forces broke up the Turkish or Ottoman Empire and placed Lebanon under French rule. In 1943, Lebanon achieved independence. The country has continued to be the scene of strife and turmoil involving Israelis, Syrians, and Palestinian guerrillas. Civil war at times between Muslims and Christians has also added to the strife of this war-torn country.

Lebanon takes its name from the Lebanon Mountains, which run parallel to the coast of the MEDITERRANEAN SEA for almost the length of the country. The range consists of snow-capped limestone peaks that rise sharply from the shoreline, leaving just enough space for a coastal road. The 160-kilometer-long (100-mile-long) mountains are made up of two parallel ranges, the Lebanons and the Anti-Lebanons. Between the two is the fertile plain of el-Bekaa, measuring about 48 kilometers (30 miles) by 16 kilometers (10 miles), which was also called the Valley of Lebanon (Josh. 11:17).

The scenic beauty of the country has inspired many symbolic references in the Bible (Ps. 92:12; Song 4:15; 5:15). The rich vegetation of Lebanon became a symbol of fruitfulness and fertility (Ps. 72:16; Ps. 92:12).

Originally, the famed Cedars of Lebanon covered the region. But bands of marauding conquerors from Mesopotamia, Egypt, Israel, and Tyre destroyed the forests by using the wood for palaces, furniture, ships, coffins, and musical instruments. By the sixth century A.D., the beautiful groves were almost gone. Egyptian texts from many different periods refer to trade with the Phoenician cities that supplied them with lumber from Lebanon. Ugaritic and Mesopotamian texts mention that cedars from Lebanon were used in building their important temples and palaces.

In recent years a program of reforestation has been conducted in national parks. The prophets of the Old Testament used the destruction of these magnificent trees by aggressors as a symbol of Israel's destruction (Jer. 22:7; Ezek. 27:5; Zech. 11:2).

The climate of Lebanon ranges from the almost tropical heat and vegetation of the plain of Dan to heavy snow in the plain of el-Bekaa. Mainly it has a Mediterranean climate with cool, wet winters and hot, dry summers. In the spring or summer, a searing desert wind sometimes blows in from Syria.

The Lebanon Mountains formed the northwest boundary of the land of Palestine, the "Promised Land" to the Hebrew people (Deut. 1:7; 11:24). The original inhabitants of Lebanon were independent, warlike tribes of Phoenician stock. Further north were the HIVITES and the GEBALITES. It is occupied today by various sects of Christians and Muslims.

LEBAOTH [LEB ah ohth]—a form of BETH LEBAOTH.

LEBBAEUS [leh BEE uhs] (man of heart)—one of the twelve apostles, also called THADDAEUS (Matt. 10:3). According to a church tradition, Lebbaeus is the same person as “Judas the son [or brother] of James” (Luke 6:16).

LEBONAH [lih BOE nuh] (incense)—a town of Ephraim (Judg. 21:19), situated on the “highway” that led north from Jerusalem to Shechem.

LECAH [LEE kuh]—a son of Er, descended from Judah (1 Chr. 4:21).

LEECH (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LEEK (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

LEES—the sediments or settlings of wine during fermentation and aging; the dregs remaining in a skin of wine. In Bible times, the sediment or lees was often left in the wine to improve its flavor. “A feast of wines on the lees . . . of well-refined wines on the lees” (Is. 25:6) is a symbol of the happiness and enjoyment of the righteous in the age to come. But to drink the dregs, or lees, of the cup of God’s wrath (Ps. 75:8) means to drain the cup, to endure the judgment and punishment that falls upon the wicked.

LEFT—the side of the body where the heart is located. In the Bible the word “left” is often used with the word “hand.” Among the Hebrews the left hand indicated the north (Gen. 14:15; Ezek. 16:46, KJV). Also see LEFT-HANDED.

LEFT HAND—among the Hebrews, a way of indicating the north. The Hebrew method of noting directions assumed that a person was facing the sunrise, the east. The left hand, therefore, would indicate the north; and the right hand would indicate the south. In the Bible, the right hand is the hand of strength and blessing, but the left hand usually indicates deception and treachery (Judg. 3:15, 21).

When the Son of Man judges the nations, he will divide His sheep from the goats. His sheep, the righteous, will be placed at His right hand—the place of honor. But He will set the goats, the unrighteous, on His left hand—the place of condemnation (Matt. 25:31–46).

LEGACY—an inheritance (Prov. 3:35).

LEGION—the principal unit of the Roman army, consisting of 3,000 to 6,000 infantry troops and 100 to 200 cavalrymen. The New Testament does not use the word "legion" in its strict military sense, but in a general sense to express a large number. When Jesus healed a man possessed by unclean spirits or demons, He asked the man his name. He replied, "My name is Legion; for we are many" (Mark 5:9). The man was inhabited by many demons.

LEHABIM [lih HAY bim]—a son of Mizraim (Gen. 10:13).

LEHI [LEE high] (jawbone)—a place in the hill country of Judah (Judg. 15:9, 14, 19) where Samson killed a thousand Philistines with the jawbone of a donkey. Lehi probably was about halfway between Jerusalem and the Mediterranean Sea.

LEMUEL [LEM yoo uhl]—an unknown king who records "the utterance which his mother taught him" (Prov. 31:1). Some of the early Jewish rabbis identified Lemuel with Solomon. Other scholars believe he was Hezekiah, or even an Arabian prince.

LENTIL (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

LEOPARD (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LEPROSY—a slowly progressing and incurable skin disease. In the Bible the word “leprosy” refers to a variety of symptoms. Modern medicine now recognizes that some of these symptoms belonged to diseases other than leprosy.

There are several types of leprosy. Biblical leprosy was most likely a severe type of psoriasis, a form of the disease relatively rare in modern times.

Old Testament Law was quite detailed in its instructions regarding recognition and quarantine of leprous persons. The Bible never implies that leprosy can be cured by nonmiraculous means, even though it does contain guidelines for readmitting cured lepers into normal society. The Old Testament contains no references to treatment or remedy. Jehoram’s exclamation “Am I God, to kill and make alive, that this man sends a man to me to heal him of his leprosy?” (2 Kin. 5:7) implies the belief that leprosy could be cured only by a miracle.

Leprosy is a chronic, infectious disease characterized by sores, scabs, and white shining spots beneath the skin. Modern medicine has all but eliminated the disease after learning proper methods of treatment.

The Mosaic Law was very specific about the proper methods of purification where leprosy was concerned. The priest was the central figure in the Old Testament regulations for the care of patients and for sanitary precautions.

If the symptoms of leprosy showed up in a person, the priest was to decide if this was leprosy or some other disease. Because of the need to control the spread of a disease for which there was no cure, the law required that a leper be isolated from the rest of society (Lev. 13:45–46). While thus excluded, lepers were required to wear mourning clothes, leave their hair in disorder and cry “Unclean! Unclean!” so everyone could avoid them.

Leprosy in a house showed up in a greenish or reddish color on the walls. When the owner of a house noticed these symptoms, he reported them to the priest. The priest purified the dwelling if the disease could be controlled, or he ordered it destroyed if the signs of leprosy lingered on (Lev. 14:33–53).

In Old Testament times, linen and woolen garments were also said to be leprous when they had patches of mildew, mold, or fungus growth (Lev. 13:47–59). Leprosy in clothes, fabrics, and leather was also indicated by greenish or reddish spots. These spots were reported to the priest, who ordered the affected article to be purified or burned (Lev. 13:47–59).

Any contact with lepers defiled the persons who touched them. Sometimes leprosy victims were miraculously cured. Moses (Ex. 4:7), Miriam, his sister (Num. 12:10), and Naaman (2 Kin. 5:1, 10) are prominent examples of such miracles.

King Uzziah was a leper from middle age until death (2 Chr. 26:19–21). The leprosy inflicted upon him (2 Kin. 15:5; 2 Chr. 26:23) for his unwarranted assumption of the priesthood began in his forehead.

In the New Testament, cleansing of lepers is mentioned as a specific portion of Jesus' work of healing. On one occasion Jesus healed ten lepers, but only one returned to thank him (Luke 17:11–15).

Also see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE.

LESHEM [LESH uhm]—a form of LAISH.

LETTERS—written messages between persons separated by distance. In the Old Testament David wrote a letter to Joab, sending Uriah the Hittite into the heat of battle and ensuring his death. In Bible times, letters were written on sheets of PARCHMENT, or animal skins; fragments of pottery; papyrus; and clay tablets.

In the New Testament, Saul of Tarsus went to the high priest in Jerusalem and secured letters from him to the synagogues of Damascus. These letters authorized Saul to arrest Christians and bring them to Jerusalem (Acts 9:2; 22:5). The Jerusalem Council also sent a letter to Christians expressing their decision (Acts 15:23, 30).

LETUSHIM [lih TOO shuhm]—a son of Dedan (Gen. 25:3).

LEUMMIM [LEE uh mim] (people)—a son of Dedan (Gen. 25:3).

LEVI [LEE vigh] (joined)—the name of four men and one tribe in the Bible:

1. The third son of Jacob and Leah (Gen. 29:34). His three sons were ancestors of the three main divisions of the Levitical priesthood: the GERSHONITES, the KOHATHITES, and the MERARITES (Gen. 46:11). Levi participated in the plot against Joseph (Gen. 37:4) and later took his family to Egypt with Jacob. On his deathbed Jacob cursed Simeon and Levi because of their "cruelty" and "wrath," and foretold that their descendants would be divided and scattered (Gen. 49:5–7). Levi died in Egypt at the age of 137 (Ex. 6:16).

2. A tribe descended from Levi (Ex. 6:19). Also see LEVITES.
3. Another name for MATTHEW, one of the twelve apostles (Mark 2:14). Levi was formerly a tax collector.
4. An ancestor of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:24). Levi was a son of Melchi and the father of Matthat.
5. Another ancestor of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:29). This Levi was a son of Simeon and the father of Matthat.

LEVIATHAN [lih VIE uh thuhn]—a large sea creature (Job 41) that sometimes represented a cruel enemy defeated by God (Job 3:8). Some interpreters see Leviathan as a symbol of the cruel enemies of God's people, such as Egypt (Ps. 74:13–14) and the Assyro-Babylonian Empire (Is. 27:1). In "that day"—the day of the Lord's judgment—the Lord "will punish Leviathan . . . that twisted serpent; and He will slay the reptile that is in the sea" (Is. 27:1).

LEVIRATE MARRIAGE—a form of marriage prescribed by the Law of Moses in which a man was required to marry the widow of a brother who died with no male heir. The term "levirate" means "husband's brother." The purpose of the law was to provide an heir for the dead brother, thereby preserving his name and estate. The law also was designed to provide for the welfare of widows (Deut. 25:5–10).

The story of Ruth and Boaz, recorded in the Book of Ruth, is a good example of the levirate form of marriage. Reference to levirate marriage was also made by the Sadducees, who tested Jesus with a question about the resurrection (Matt. 22:23–33).

LEVITES [LEE vytes]—descendants of Levi who served as assistants to the PRIESTS in the worship system of the nation of Israel. As Levites, AARON and his sons and their descendants were charged with the responsibility of the priesthood—offering burnt offerings and leading the people in worship and confession. But all the other Levites who were not descended directly from Aaron were to serve as priestly assistants, taking care of the tabernacle and the temple and performing other menial duties (Num. 8:6).

The choice of the Levites as a people who would perform special service for God goes back to the days of the Exodus when the children of Israel were camped at Mount Sinai.

The people grew restless while they waited for Moses to return from talking with the Lord on the mountain. Breaking their covenant with God, they made a golden calf and began to worship it. The Levites were no less guilty than the other tribes. But when Moses returned and called for those on the Lord's side to come forward, the descendants of Levi were the only ones who voluntarily rallied to his side, showing zeal for God's honor (Ex. 32:26–28).

Even before this event, Aaron and his sons had been set apart for the priesthood. But many helpers were needed to attend to the needs of the tabernacle, which was built later at God's command in the Wilderness of Sinai. The Levites were chosen for this honor.

The designation of a tribe for special service to God grew out of an unusual concept of the Hebrew people known as the firstfruits. According to this principle, the first part of a crop to be harvested was dedicated to God. This principle even extended to the first children to be born in a family. Just before the Exodus from Egypt, when God sent the death angel to kill the firstborn of every Egyptian family, He instructed the Israelites to put blood on their doorposts, that their firstborn might be spared the same fate. Thus, the firstborn of every Israelite family became God's special property, dedicated to Him as a memorial. But because the Levites were the ones who voluntarily returned to their Lord after worshiping the golden image, they were chosen for service to the sanctuary, thus replacing the firstborn as God's representatives of the holiness of His people (Num. 3:12–13, 41).

A Levite's special service to God began with his consecration at about age twenty-five. First he was sprinkled with the "water of purification" (Num. 8:7). Next, the hair was shaved from his entire body, his clothes were washed, and sacrifice was made of two young bulls, and a grain offering of fine flour mixed with oil (Num. 8:7–8). After this purification, he was brought before the door of the tabernacle and set apart for service by the laying on of the hands of the elders (Num. 8:9–15).

Young Levites began as assistants to the priests and chief Levites, then progressed through the higher duties and offices such as doorkeeper, member of the temple orchestra, or administrator. In the days before the temple was built and the people worshiped in the tabernacle, the Levites always transported the tabernacle and its furniture when the camp was moved. Then they erected and cared for the tent in its new location. They guarded it, cleaned it, and cleaned the furniture (Num. 1:50–53; 3:6–9; 4:1–33).

Since the Levites served under the priests, they were forbidden to touch any sacred furniture or the altar until it had been covered by the priests (Num. 4:15). Temple slaves often assisted the Levites in the heavier, more menial duties such as cutting wood and carrying water (Josh. 9:21; Ezra 8:20).

The Levites also prepared the SHOWBREAD and did whatever baking was needed in connection with the sacrifices. They helped the priests slaughter and skin the animals for sacrifices, examined the lepers according to the Law, and led music during worship. Retiring from active service at age fifty, the Levites were free to remain in the temple as overseers or to give assistance to their young successors (Num. 8:25–26).

Unlike the other tribes of Israel, the Levites received no territorial inheritance in the promised land of Canaan. Their portion was to be God Himself (Num. 18:20), who commanded that forty-eight cities be set apart for them, along with enough pasture for their cattle (Num. 35:1–8). They were to receive the tithes due God from the fruits of the fields, the flocks and herds, the fruits of the firstborn, and certain portions of the people's sacrificial offerings (Num. 18:24). Of these tithes, the Levites had to turn over a tithe (a tenth part) to the priests (Num. 18:26).

The Levites were not required to devote all their time to the sanctuary. During most of the year, they lived in their own cities. Then at fixed periods they came to the tabernacle to take their turn at work. For example, during David's reign, the Levites were divided into four classes: (1) assistants to priests in the work of the sanctuary, (2) judges and scribes, (3) gatekeepers, and (4) musicians. Each of these classes, with the possible exception of the second, was subdivided into twenty-four courses or families who served in rotation (1 Chr. 24–25; Ezra 6:18).

During the long period of Old Testament history, the Levites waxed hot and cold in their devotion to God, just like the rest of the nation of Israel. During the period of the judges, for example, a Levite agreed to hire his services to a man who was known as a worshiper of false gods (Judg. 17:8–13). By New Testament times, both Levites and priests presided over a form of worship that had lost its warmth and human concern (John 1:19).

In His parable of the Good Samaritan, Jesus insisted that true worship consisted of doing good to others. This is demonstrated by the lowly Samaritan traveler, who stopped to help a wounded man. His compassion is a contrast to the hands-off approach of a priest and a Levite, both of whom "passed by on the other side" (Luke 10:31–32).

LEVITICAL CITIES [luh VIT uh cull]—Forty-eight cities assigned to the tribe of Levi. When the land of Canaan was divided among the tribes of Israel, each tribe, except Levi, received a specific region or territory for its inheritance. The tribe of Levi, however, was made up of priests who were to serve the religious and spiritual needs of the other tribes. Thus, instead of receiving a territory of their own, they were scattered throughout the entire land.

Numbers 35:1–8 sets forth a plan whereby the tribe of Levi was to live in forty-eight cities scattered throughout Palestine. (This plan was fulfilled according to assignments described in Josh. 20–21 and 1 Chr. 6:54–81.) The forty-eight cities were apportioned in this way: the AARONITES, one of the families of the Kohathites, received thirteen cities (Josh. 21:4, 9–19; 1 Chr. 6:54–60); the rest of the KOHATHITES received ten cities (Josh. 21:5, 20–26; 1 Chr. 6:61). The GERSHONITES received thirteen cities (Josh. 21:6, 27–33; 1 Chr. 6:62), and the MERARITES received twelve cities (Josh. 21:7, 34–40; 1 Chr. 6:63). These forty-eight cities and their surrounding common lands—pastures, fields, and vineyards—were to be used exclusively by the Levites.

Six of these Levitical cities were to be CITIES OF REFUGE (Num. 35:6, 9–34; Josh. 20–21). A person who caused the death of another could flee to one of these cities for protection from anyone who wanted to avenge the life of the person killed (see AVENGER OF BLOOD). The “refugee” thus was protected until he received a fair trial, or until the high priest of that particular city of refuge died (after which he was free to return home and claim the protection of the authorities).

Three of the cities of refuge were east of the Jordan River: Bezer (in the tribe of Reuben), Ramoth in Gilead (in Gad), and Golan (in Manasseh; Josh. 20:8). The other three cities of refuge were west of the Jordan: Kedesh (in the tribe of Naphtali), Shechem (in Ephraim), and Kirjath Arba, also known as Hebron (in Judah; Josh. 20:7). According to this plan, the Levites were situated throughout the land and could assist the other Israelites in spiritual matters. As a practical matter, since six of the Levitical cities were cities of refuge, citizens living in every part of Palestine had a refuge that was relatively near their homes. A look at a map will demonstrate how carefully the cities were spaced out to facilitate ease of access. Some of the ancient Levitical cities, such as Gibeon, Beth Aven, Gilead, Bethel, and Gilgal, became an important part of the religious system of Israel (1 Kin. 3:4; Hos. 4:15; 12:11; Amos 4:4–5).

LEVITICUS, BOOK OF—an Old Testament book filled with worship instructions for God's Chosen People, Israel. The Levites, members of the tribe of Levi, were the priestly family of the nation; the title of the book seems to indicate that its instructions were given specifically for them. Because of its emphasis on holiness, sacrifice, and atonement, the book has an important message for modern believers.

Structure of the Book. Leviticus is difficult reading for most Bible students. It contains page after page of detailed instructions about strange worship rituals that seem to have no clear organizing principle. But with careful analysis, the book breaks down into two main divisions.

The first several chapters of the book contain instructions about the ritual of sacrifice, including animal sacrifice, or the burnt offering—a key ingredient of Old Testament worship. Other segments of the book deal with the consecration of the priesthood, personal purification and dietary laws, laws of atonement, holiness of the people, and the redemption of tithes and vows.

Authorship and Date. Most conservative Bible students acknowledge Moses as the author of the Book of Leviticus. But some scholars insist the book was pulled together from many different sources by an unknown editor several centuries after Moses' death. This theory overlooks the dozens of instances in Leviticus where God spoke directly to Moses and Moses wrote down His instructions to be passed along to the people (4:1; 6:1; 8:1; 11:1).

In addition, nothing was more important to the nation of Israel in its earliest years than the development of its system of worship. Thus, worship rules would have been established at a very early stage in Israel's history. This argues convincingly for the early writing of these rules at the hand of Moses, probably about 1400 B.C.

Historical Setting. The Book of Leviticus belongs to the period in Israel's history when the people were encamped at Mount Sinai following their miraculous deliverance from slavery in Egypt. At Sinai Moses received the Ten Commandments and other parts of the Law directly from God. He also built and furnished the tabernacle as a place where the people could worship God (Exodus 40). Just after the tabernacle was filled with God's glory, Moses received instructions for the people regarding worship of God in this holy place. It is these instructions that we find in the Book of Leviticus.

Theological Contribution. The Book of Leviticus is important because of its clear teachings on three vital spiritual truths: ATONEMENT; SACRIFICE, and HOLINESS. Without the background of these concepts in Leviticus, we could not understand their later fulfillment in the life and ministry of Jesus.

Atonement—Chapter 16 of Leviticus contains God's instructions for observing the Day of Atonement. On that day the high priest of Israel entered the most sacred place in the tabernacle and offered an animal sacrifice to atone for his own sins. Then he killed another animal and sprinkled its blood on the altar to atone for the sins of the people. New Testament writers later compared this familiar picture to the sacrifice of Jesus on our behalf. But unlike a human priest, Jesus did not have to offer sacrifices, "first for His own sins and then for the people's, for this He did once for all when He offered up Himself" (Heb. 7:27).

Sacrifice—The Book of Leviticus instructs the Covenant People to bring many types of sacrifices or offerings to God: burnt offerings, grain offerings, peace offerings, sin offerings, and guilt or trespass offerings. These were considered gifts by which a worshiper expressed his loyalty and devotion to God. But a blood offering—presenting the blood of a sacrificed animal to God—went beyond the idea of a gift. It symbolized that the worshiper was offering his own life to God, since the Hebrews believed that "the life of the flesh is in the blood" (Lev. 17:11). Again, this familiar teaching assumed deeper meaning in the New Testament when applied to Jesus. He gave His life on our behalf when He shed His blood to take away our sins.

Holiness—The basic meaning of holiness as presented in the Book of Leviticus is that God demands absolute obedience of His people. The root meaning of the word is "separation." God's people were to be separate from, and different than, the surrounding pagan peoples. This is actually the reason for God's instruction that His people were not to eat certain unclean foods. Only a clean, undefiled people could be used by Him to bring about His purpose of world redemption. Leviticus also makes it clear that the holiness demanded by God extended to the daily behavior of His people. They were expected to practice kindness, honesty, and justice and to show compassion toward the poor (Lev. 19:9–18).

Special Considerations. The blood of bulls and goats so prominent in Leviticus had no power to take away sin. But each of these rituals was “a shadow of the good things to come” (Heb. 10:1). They pointed forward to God’s ultimate sacrifice, given freely on our behalf: “So Christ was offered once to bear the sins of many” (Heb. 9:28).

LEVY—forced labor or taxation. The word is found only once in the NKJV (Num. 31:28). It means “to impose a tax or fine.” But the same Hebrew word translated “levy” in this passage is also used to describe the taskmasters set over Israel in Egypt (Ex. 1:11); conquered foreigners subjected to forced labor (Deut. 20:11); and the labor force of Israelites drafted by Solomon to build the temple (1 Kin. 5:13–14). Also see TRIBUTE.

LEWDNESS—preoccupation with sex and sexual desire; lust (Judg. 20:6; Hos. 2:10; 6:9; Rom. 13:13). The Hebrew word translated as “lewdness” means an evil plan, purpose, or scheme; a wicked thought, especially with reference to sexual unchastity; ideas and practices that are indecent and disgraceful.

LIBERALITY—generosity and openhandedness, as opposed to stinginess. The apostle Paul taught that Christians should be liberal and generous in their financial giving (Rom. 12:8; 2 Cor. 8:2).

LIBERTINES—KJV word for FREEDMEN.

LIBNAH [LIB nuh] (whiteness)—the name of a campsite and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A place where the Israelites camped during their journey in the wilderness (Num. 33:20–21).
2. A Canaanite city captured by Joshua, allotted to the tribe of Judah, and later assigned to the Aaronites as a Levitical city (1 Chr. 6:57). When Jehoram was king of Judah, Libnah revolted against Judah's authority (2 Kin. 8:22). The city had been heavily fortified by the time Sennacherib of Assyria invaded Judah (2 Kin. 19:8).

LIBNI [LIB nigh] (white)—the name of one or two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Gershon and a grandson of Levi (Ex. 6:17), also called Laadan (1 Chr. 23:7–9).
2. A Levite descended from Merari (1 Chr. 6:29). He may be the same person as No. 1.

LIBNITES [LIBB nights]—descendants of Libni (Num. 3:21; 26:58). Libni was a son of Gershon and the grandson of Levi (Ex. 6:17; 1 Chr. 6:17, 20).

LIBRARY—a collection of books for private or personal use. Libraries are depositories of culture; therefore, they are often the only link between the past and the present. For example, excavations of the libraries at Ras Shamra (UGARIT) and Qumran (DEAD SEA SCROLLS) have given scholars vital insights into the meaning of certain biblical words and incidents.

The Bible does not use the word "library," but it does make specific references to a collection of books, scrolls, or parchments. King Solomon's complaint about the making of "many books" suggests that he had access to a large collection of manuscripts in his tenth-century B.C. library (Eccl. 12:12). Centuries later, when some enemies tried to stop the rebuilding of the temple in Jerusalem, King Darius searched through Persia's archives or "house of scrolls" to find King Cyrus' official decree (Ezra 6:1). Also in the fifth century B.C., King Ahasuerus kept careful kingdom records, written in “the book of the chronicles” (Esth. 2:23; 10:2). This indicates a large collection of scrolls, or a library.

Many of the early libraries were located in religious sanctuaries. Hilkiah, the high priest under King Josiah, found the Book of the Law in the temple at Jerusalem (2 Kin. 22:8; 2 Chr. 34:14). Also, Jesus read from Old Testament manuscripts in the synagogue (Luke 4:17). Some type of collection must have been housed here.

As early as A.D. 60, the apostle Paul owned too many manuscripts to carry around with him on his missionary journeys. He asked Timothy to bring “the books, especially the parchments” to him in Rome from Troas (2 Tim. 4:13). By this time libraries for personal and public use were common in the Greek and Roman societies.

The ancient world had a surprising number of libraries. Many of these collections contained thousands of volumes; others, only one manuscript. Some depositories were simple archives. Others housed documents on education, court records, business data, wills, probate, exploration, and worship.

A large library was established by Alexander the Great in Alexandria, Egypt, about 300 years before Christ. Tens of thousands of manuscripts from all over the Greek-dominated world were kept there. Later the ruler’s general, Ptolemy I, built a library annex next to the temple of Jupiter. These 700,000 volumes accounted for the greatest artistic and literary collection of that time.

But libraries existed long before Greece ruled the world. Thousands of clay tablets have been unearthed in the Mesopotamian area between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers. Most of these tablets were written in the Sumerian and Akkadian languages.

These tablets are an important archaeological find because they help scholars in their translation of the Hebrew language. The tablets from Nuzi in the fifteenth century B.C. show many customs similar to Hebrew practices described in the Book of Genesis. The tablets from Mari in the nineteenth and eighteenth centuries B.C. reveal much about the time of Abraham, including geographical, historical, and religious information.

LIBYA [LIB ih uh]—a country of northern Africa west of Egypt (Ezek. 27:10), also called Phut (Ezek. 27:10, KJV) or Put (NIV, NRSV). Some people who lived in “the parts of Libya adjoining Cyrene” (Acts 2:10) were in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost. Simon, the man who carried Jesus’ cross, was from Cyrene, the New Testament name for Libya (Matt. 27:32).

LIBYANS [LIB ih uhnz]—the inhabitants of LIBYA (Jer. 46:9; Nah. 3:9; Lubim, KJV).

LICE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LICENTIOUSNESS—undisciplined and unrestrained behavior, especially a flagrant disregard of sexual restraints (Mark 7:22; 2 Cor. 12:21; lasciviousness, KJV). The Greek word translated as licentiousness means “outrageous conduct,” showing that licentious behavior goes beyond sin to include a disregard for what is right.

LIE—any statement or act designed to deceive another person. The motivation for most lying is a desire either to hurt the one against whom the lie is directed (Gen. 3:1–13; Rom. 3:13) or to protect oneself, usually out of fear or pride (Matt. 26:69–75; Acts 5:1–11).

Lying is emphatically condemned in the Bible (Ex. 20:16; Eph. 4:25). It is wrong because it is contrary to the nature of God (Titus 1:2; Heb. 6:18) and because it shows that a person is not in touch with reality (Rom. 1:25; 1 John 1:6).

On the other hand, it is possible to be truthful with the intention of hurting another person. The Bible teaches believers to be truthful in love (Eph. 4:25).

LIEUTENANT—another word for SATRAP.

LIFE—the physical functions of people, animals, and plants. In physical terms, life is the time between birth and death. Because God is the source of life, it is a gift from Him. He first filled Adam with the breath of life (Gen. 2:7), and He continues to be the source of all life. The Psalmist sang to God, “For with you is the fountain of life” (Ps. 36:9).

The New Testament expanded on the Old Testament idea of life. The word “life” began to refer to more than physical existence. It took on a strong spiritual meaning, often referring to the spiritual life that results from our relationship with God.

Eternal life means more than eternal existence. Eternal life refers to eternal fellowship with God. “This is eternal life,” Jesus declared, “that they may know You, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom You have sent” (John 17:3).

Eternal life is the highest quality of life. According to the apostle Paul, it is freedom from sin, holiness, and a positive relationship with God. This is in contrast to spiritual death, which results from a life of sin (Rom. 6:21–23).

Eternal life comes through faith in Jesus Christ. He taught, “He who believes in Me has everlasting life” (John 6:47). This symbolic meaning of life appears frequently in the Gospel of John. Of Jesus, John wrote, “In Him was life and the life was the light of men” (John 1:4).

LIFE, BOOK OF (see BOOK OF LIFE).

LIFE, TREE OF (see TREE OF LIFE).

LIGHT—illumination; the opposite of darkness. The Bible also speaks of light as the symbol of God’s presence and righteous activity.

Light has been associated with the presence, truth, and redemptive activity of God since creation. Before human beings were created, light was brought into being by the Creator: “Then God said, Let there be light; and there was light. And God saw the light, that it was good” (Gen. 1:3–4). Throughout the Bible, light represents truth, goodness, and God’s redemptive work. Darkness, on the other hand, symbolizes error, evil, and the works of Satan.

Several of the miracles recorded in the Bible are related to light and darkness: the “Pillar of Fire” that guided the Israelites in the wilderness (Ex. 3:21), the sun standing still at Gibeon at Joshua’s request (Josh. 10:12–13), and the fall of darkness at midday when Jesus was being crucified (Matt. 27:45).

Misguided fascination with light caused some cultures of the ancient world to worship the sun and moon. Ur in Babylonia and several of the Canaanite cities had elaborate systems of moon worship. Use of light was common in the festivals of the Greek cults, especially those honoring Dionysus and Apollo.

God or God’s Word, the Bible, are frequently represented as lights or lamps to enlighten and guide the believer (1 John 1:5). “Your word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path” (Ps. 119:105). The Psalmist also declared, “The LORD is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?” (Ps. 27:1). Light is also used as a symbol of holiness and purity. Paul counseled the Christians at Rome to “put on the armor of light” (Rom. 13:12).

The New Testament presents Jesus as the personification of light or divine illumination: “I am the light of the world” (John 8:12). Jesus plainly stated that those who rejected this divine light would bring judgment upon themselves (John 3:19–21). Jesus and the New Testament writers extended the figure of light to include faithful Christian witnesses, who were called “children of light” (Eph. 5:8).

LIGHTNING—a high-tension electrical discharge in the atmosphere and the flash of light that goes with such a discharge. The biblical writers often associated thunder and lightning with the power and majesty of God (2 Sam. 22:15; Job 36:32; Ps. 18:14; Jer. 10:13). The giving of the Ten Commandments on Mount Sinai was accompanied by thundering, lightning flashes, and smoke (Ex. 19:16; 20:18), and Jesus compared His Second Coming to the lightning that comes from the east and flashes to the west (Matt. 24:27). He declared the startling revelation of God’s kingdom that will be visible from horizon to horizon.

Electrical storms occur in Palestine especially in the spring and autumn months. Lightning is accompanied by thunder, wind squalls, and clouds of dust, and often by heavy rains and destructive hail (Ex. 9:23).

LIGHTS, FEAST OF (see FEASTS AND FESTIVALS).

LIGN ALOES (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

LIGURE (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

LIKHI [LIK high]—a son of Shemida, of the tribe of Manasseh (1 Chr. 7:19).

LILY (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

LILY-WORK—the architectural ornamentation on the crowns of JACHIN AND BOAZ, the two freestanding pillars in Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 7:19, 22, NRSV). Some scholars believe this lily-work was patterned after the Egyptian lotus.

LIME (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

LINE—a tool similar to a tape measure for measuring or marking off distance. David divided the Moabites who would be executed from those who would be spared by measuring them off with a line (2 Sam. 8:2). The prophet Amos prophesied judgment by predicting, "Your land shall be divided by survey lines" (Amos 7:17). Zechariah encouraged Zerubbabel with his vision of the angel measuring the ruins of Jerusalem with a line before the process of rebuilding began (Zech. 2:1).

The word "line" is also used of the cord given to Rahab the harlot by the two spies (Josh. 2:18, 21).

LINEAGE (see GENEALOGY).

LINEN—a cloth woven from fibers of the flax or hemp plant. The word "linen" is also used to describe clothes or garments made from this cloth. The Hebrew word meaning "whiteness" also is used to represent linen, because bleached linen was so white.

In Bible times, the finest linen allowed free circulation of air, keeping the wearer cool in hot weather. Because it was so expensive, it was owned by the wealthy (Luke 16:19; Ezek. 16:10), the powerful (2 Sam. 6:14), and the priests. Fine linen was used in the clothing and headdress of the priests. Ordinary linen was used for less expensive clothing and items such as sheets, curtains, and sails of ships. Linen was the material from which the tunic, or undergarment, was often made.

Fine linen garments were especially worn by kings and queens and members of their royal courts. Those who ministered in the TABERNACLE and TEMPLE also wore fine linen. These included the boy Samuel (1 Sam. 2:18), the temple singers (2 Chr. 5:12), and the priests (Ex. 28:39–42). They were surrounded in their places of worship by the veil and curtains, made of the finest linen (Ex. 26:1–37). At the end of time, the heavenly members of God’s court will also wear fine white linen (Ezek. 9:2; Rev. 19:14), symbolizing that God provides them with the costliest and purest of garments.

After His death, the body of Jesus was wrapped in white linen (John 19:40; Luke 23:53). As a part of their burial customs, the Jews tore large linen sheets into strips and wrapped perfume inside them close to the body. Even centuries earlier, the Egyptians had wrapped their dead in the same way. Many Egyptian mummies now in museums are still wrapped in this fashion, although the linen has faded into a brownish or tan color.

The weaving of linen fabric began with the lowly flax plant. These plants were usually pulled out by the roots, dried in the sun, then pounded until the fibers separated. Then the fibers were washed and bleached. This produced a fine fiber that at times was nearly invisible. Israel had craftsmen skilled in weaving fine linen, although the craft probably was first learned in Egypt (Ex. 35:35; 38:23). Guilds of linen weavers also existed in Bible times (1 Chr. 4:21). Palestinian weavers were so skilled that their fine linen was often preferred to that produced in Egypt.

LINTEL—a horizontal beam that supports the wall above the framework of a door or window. At the time of the first PASSOVER, the Lord told Moses to sprinkle the blood of a slain lamb on the doorposts and the lintels of the houses of the Israelites (Ex. 12:7). The blood of the lamb would be a sign of God’s grace; and the Israelites would be spared as death spread throughout the land of Egypt. The word “lintel” is also applied to the entrance to the inner sanctuary of Solomon’s temple (1 Kin. 6:31).

LINUS [LIE nuhs]—a Christian man at Rome who joined the apostle Paul in sending greetings to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:21).

LION (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LIPS—the fleshy, muscular folds that surround the mouth. Beautiful red lips were desirable for women in Bible times (Song 4:3). Lips covered by the hands symbolized mourning or trouble (Lev. 13:45). When Moses spoke of having “uncircumcised lips” (Ex. 6:12), he meant he lacked fluency as a speaker (Ex. 4:10). Telling lies was called "flattering lips" (Ps. 12:2) or "lying lips" (Ps. 31:18). On the other hand, the Bible mentions "joyful lips" (Ps. 63:5) and "righteous lips" (Prov. 16:13), or speech that honors and glorifies God.

LITERATURE—a body of writings on a particular subject. As captives of the Babylonians, Daniel and his three Hebrew friends—Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego—were selected to receive instruction in their language, literature, and wisdom (Dan. 1:4, 17).

LITTER—a portable couch or chair, often enclosed with a cover or a curtain and mounted on shafts (Is. 66:20; wagons, REB, NIV). Litters were widely used in the ancient world to carry a single passenger.

LITTLE OWL (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LIVELIHOOD—a means of support or subsistence. The large offerings of the rich did not impress Jesus, because they gave out of their abundance an amount they would hardly miss. But He commended a poor widow who cast two small copper coins into the temple treasury, because "she out of her poverty put in all that she had, her whole livelihood" (Mark 12:44; to live on, NRSV).

LIVER—an organ in the body that aids in digestion. The liver is referred to most often in connection with animal sacrifice. The "fatty lobe attached to the liver" (Ex. 29:13) was burned on the altar along with the kidneys and inner fat.

LIVING CREATURES—heavenly beings mentioned in the visions of the prophet Ezekiel and the apostle John. In Ezekiel's vision (Ezek. 1:1–28) these creatures had four faces (man, lion, ox, and eagle) and four wings. Later in his book (Ezekiel 10), the prophet identified the four living creatures as CHERUBIM. These four heavenly beings are probably the same as the four living creatures mentioned by John in the New Testament (Rev. 4:6–9).

LIZARD (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

LOAF (see BREAD).

LO-AMMI [loe AM eye] (not my people)—the name given by the prophet Hosea to his second son (Hos. 1:9–10; 2:23) to symbolize God's rejection of the nation of Israel (Rom. 9:25–26).

LO DEBAR [low DEE bahr]—a form of DEBIR No. 3.

LO-RUHAMAH [low roo HAY muh] (not pitied)—a daughter born to Gomer, the prophet Hosea's wife (Hos. 1:6, 8; no longer have pity, NRSV). The name symbolized God's anger and His rejection of the nation of Israel. The faithful remnant of Israel is called Ruhamah, which means "pitied" (Hos. 2:1, 23).

LOCK, LOCKS—wooden bolts that slipped into slots in the doorpost in Bible times. These bolts were secured by wooden pins that dropped into holes in the moveable part of the bolt. Simple latch-type locks could be opened by hand through a hole in the door (Song 5:4–5; bolts, Neh. 3:3, 6, 15). More elaborate locks for use on large doors or city gates had multiple pins that were operated by large wooden or metal keys.

LOCUST (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE; PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

LOD [lahd]—a city about 18 kilometers (11 miles) southeast of Joppa (1 Chr. 8:12) in the fertile Plain of Sharon (see Map 9, B–4). Its strategic location at the intersection of two great trade routes made Lod a rich prize of war among the nations of the ancient world. The prophet Nehemiah placed Lod in the "valley of craftsmen" (Neh. 11:35), referring to the various industries that produced the necessities for travel. The Greek name for the city in New Testament times was LYDDA. The apostle Peter healed a paralyzed man in Lydda (Acts 9:32–35, 38).

LODGE—to spend the night. The common thread that unites most of the words translated "lodge" in the Bible is the idea of a temporary resting place. The two Israelite spies lodged in the house of Rahab (Josh. 2:1); the Israelites lodged by the Jordan River before passing over into the Promised Land; and Peter lodged with Simon the tanner (Acts 10:18). The word "lodge" also refers to the temporary hut built by a watchman in a cucumber field (Is. 1:8).

LOFT—KJV word for UPPER ROOM, an upper story or small room built on the flat roof of a Palestinian house (1 Kin. 17:19; upper chamber, NRSV; roof-chamber, REB).

LOG (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

LOGIA—a term applied to collections of sayings credited to Jesus and used as source materials by the gospel writers in the writing of their gospels. The Greek word logia literally means “oracles, divine responses, utterances, or sayings.” Some scholars see many similarities between the Gospel of Matthew and the Gospel of Luke. They believe there existed an earlier source, now lost, upon which both Matthew and Luke drew in writing their gospels. Perhaps such a source was the logia, or collection of quotations attributed to Jesus.

When the apostle Paul spoke of “the words of the Lord Jesus” (Acts 20:35) he quoted a saying of Jesus not found in any of the four gospels. He may have been citing a quotation from the logia: “It is more blessed to give than to receive.” An example of this type of literature, containing alleged quotations from Jesus not found in the canonical gospels, is the Gospel of Thomas, an early gospel in the APOCRYPHA.

LOGOS (see WORD, THE).

LOINS—the lower abdomen, including the reproductive organs. A man’s loins are described as the source of his offspring (Gen. 35:11, KJV; body, NIV). When a man was ready to work, he put a belt around his waist; then he tucked up his robe so his legs would not be hindered. This is the meaning of “girded up his loins” (1 Kin. 18:46). To “gird up the loins of your mind” (1 Pet. 1:13) means to prepare for strenuous mental activity.

LOIS [LOE iss]—the mother of Eunice and the grandmother of Timothy. A devout Jew, Lois instructed both her daughter and her grandson in the Old Testament. Paul gave Lois and her daughter Eunice credit for Timothy’s spiritual instruction (2 Tim. 3:15). Also see Acts 16:1.

LONGSUFFERING—a word in the KJV and NKJV that refers primarily to God’s patient endurance of the wickedness of the sinful

(Ex. 34:6). The purpose of God's longsuffering is to lead people to repentance (Rom. 2:4; 2 Pet. 3:9, 15). But since God is a God of justice, He cannot endure sin forever. He must ultimately punish all who do not repent and trust in Him (2 Thess. 1:5–10).

Believers are to imitate their heavenly Father in longsuffering (1 Cor. 13:4–5), because He has been patient with us (Eph. 4:31–32) and because vengeance belongs to God alone (Rom. 12:19).

LOOKING GLASS (see MIRROR).

LOOKOUT (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

LOOM (see WEAVING).

LOOP—a heavy thread ring used in the curtains of the tabernacle. Along the sides of the curtains were fifty loops of blue thread. These curtains were joined by gold clasps that passed through the corresponding loops on adjoining curtains.

LORD (see GOD, NAMES OF).

LORD GOD OF ISRAEL (see GOD, NAMES OF).

LORD OF HOSTS (see GOD, NAMES OF).

LORD-IS-MY-BANNER, THE—the name given to an altar built by Moses after a victory over the Amalekites at Rephidim (Ex. 17:15; Jehovah-nissi, KJV). Also see GOD, NAMES OF.

LORD-SHALOM, THE—the name given to an altar built by Gideon at Ophrah, in the territory of Manasseh, on the eve of his destruction of the altar of Baal (Judg. 6:24). Other translations are Jehovah-shalom (KJV; The Lord is Peace, REB) and The Lord is Peace (NIV, NASB, NRSV). Also see GOD, NAMES OF.

LORD-WILL-PROVIDE, THE—the name given to an altar built by Abraham in the land of Moriah (Gen. 22:14; Jehovah-jireh, KJV, NEB). There the Angel of the Lord prevented Abraham from offering his only son Isaac as a sacrifice. Instead, the Lord provided a ram, caught in a thicket by its horns, which Abraham offered on the altar. Also see GOD, NAMES OF.

LORD’S DAY—the first day of the week, or Sunday; the day especially associated with the Lord Jesus Christ.

A special honor was reserved for Sunday, the first day of the week. This was the day on which Jesus was raised from the dead; every Lord’s Day, therefore, is a weekly memorial of Christ’s resurrection. Clearly the early church assembled for worship and religious instruction on Sunday, the Lord’s Day (1 Cor. 16:2).

The Lord’s Day is not to be confused with the SABBATH, the Jewish day of rest. The Jewish Sabbath corresponds with our Saturday, the seventh or last day of the week. This special day to the Jews commemorated the day on which God rested after the creation of the world. The Lord’s Day is our Sunday, the first day of the week; it celebrates the resurrection of Jesus from the dead.

Under the new dispensation of grace, Christians are not to be trapped by the old legalism of observing days and seasons. The JERUSALEM COUNCIL did not include a demand for Sabbath observance in its rules for Gentile Christians (Acts 15:20, 28–29). Some members of the early church “esteemed every day alike”; they made no distinction between days, including Jewish festivals and Sabbaths and possibly also Sunday. The apostle Paul said they were not to be judged if they were acting in good conscience out of the fear of God.

Some Jewish Christians continued to observe the Sabbath and Jewish festivals. Neither should they be judged for “esteeming one day above another,” Paul declared, for their behavior was guided by conscience in the fear of God. Paul believed such observance was a matter of Christian liberty, so long as the convert did not regard the observance as necessary for salvation (Rom. 14:5–6; Gal. 4:10; Col. 2:16–17).

Paul’s principle of Christian liberty about holy places and holy days comes from the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. Jesus described Himself as one who is greater than the temple (Matt. 12:6) and said, “The Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath” (Matt. 12:8; Luke 6:5). When accused by the Pharisees of breaking the Sabbath, Jesus replied, “The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Therefore the Son of Man is also Lord of the Sabbath” (Mark 2:27–28).

The phrase “the Lord’s Day” occurs only once in the New Testament, in Revelation 1:10, where John declared, “I was in the Spirit on the Lord’s Day.” In Asia Minor, where the churches to which John wrote were situated, the pagans celebrated the first day of each month as the Emperor’s Day. Some scholars also believe that a day of the week was also called by this name.

When the early Christians called the first day of the week the Lord’s Day, this was a direct challenge to the emperor worship to which John refers so often in the Book of Revelation. Such a bold and fearless testimony by the early Christians proclaimed that the Lord’s Day belonged to the Lord Jesus Christ and not the emperor Caesar.

LORD’S PRAYER—the model prayer that Jesus taught His disciples (Matt. 6:5–15; Luke 11:1–4). In the Gospel of Matthew the Lord’s Prayer occurs in the Sermon on the Mount. He emphasized that prayer should not be an attempt to get God’s attention by repeating words. Instead, it should be a quiet, confident expression of needs to our heavenly Father. Our attitude in prayer is important; in the Sermon on the Mount Jesus shows His disciples how to pray.

In the Gospel of Luke, the disciples saw Jesus praying, and they asked Him to teach them. The emphasis of this gospel is on what to pray (11:2). It is good to use the Lord’s Prayer as a guide and to repeat its words as well.

The first part of the prayer concerns the glory of God. We call him “Father,” a term that only His children by faith in Christ may rightly use. We request that God’s name be “hallowed,” or honored as holy. It is the mission of God’s people to spread the reputation of His name throughout the world (Ezek. 36:22–23).

Next, we request that God’s kingdom come. This means that we acknowledge God as ruler of the world and obey His will. His will shall be done perfectly when our Lord returns.

Requests relating to our own needs include food for each day, forgiveness, and help in temptation. Workers in Jesus’ time often were hired day by day. They knew their daily need. Our forgiveness for sin comes only through the death of Christ on the cross. Our experience of that forgiveness requires us not to hold things against others and not to deny God’s forgiveness.

“Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil” means, “Do not let us be tested so that we fall into sin; save us from the power of the Evil One (Satan).”

The conclusion of the Lord’s Prayer attributes all power and glory to God forever, through all eternity. This part of the prayer should be evident in our lives each day as we seek to do God’s will on earth as His disciples.

LORD’S SUPPER—the ritualistic practice, usually during a worship service, in which Christians partake of bread and wine (or grape juice) with the purpose of remembering Christ, receiving strength from Him, and rededicating themselves to His cause. It is one of two sacraments or ordinances instituted by Christ to be observed by His church until He returns.

The term “Lord’s Supper” is used only in 1 Corinthians 11:20. The practice is also known as Communion (from 1 Cor. 10:16), the Lord’s Table (from 1 Cor. 10:21), and the Eucharist (from the Greek word for “giving thanks”; Luke 22:17, 19; 1 Cor. 11:24). The expression “breaking of bread” (Acts 2:42, 46; 20:7, 11) probably refers to receiving the Lord’s Supper with a common meal known as the LOVE FEAST (2 Pet. 2:13; Jude 12).

The institution of the Lord’s Supper (Matt. 26:17–30; Mark 14:12–26; Luke 22:1–23; 1 Cor. 11:23–25) took place on the night before Jesus died, at a meal commonly known as the Last Supper. Although there is considerable debate over the issue, the Last Supper probably was the Jewish PASSOVER meal, first instituted by God in the days of Moses (Ex. 12:1–14; Num. 9:1–5).

Many of Jesus’ actions and words at the Last Supper, such as the breaking and distributing of the bread, were part of the prescribed Passover ritual. But when Jesus said, “This is My body” and “This is My blood” while distributing the bread and the cup, He did something totally new. These words, which were intended for our blessing, have been the focus of sharp disagreement among Christians for centuries. In what sense are the bread and wine Christ’s body and blood? What should the Lord’s Supper mean to us? The answers to these questions are often grouped into four categories, although there are variations within these four broad views.

The Transubstantiation View. The first view is that of the Roman Catholic Church (especially before the Second Vatican Council of 1962–1965). This view holds that the bread and wine become the actual body and blood of Christ when the words of institution are spoken by the priest. This doctrine, known as transubstantiation, holds that while the physical properties (taste, appearance, etc.) of the bread and wine do not change, the inner reality of these elements undergoes a spiritual change.

While this view may help to foster a serious attitude toward the Eucharist, it fails to grasp the figurative nature of Jesus' language. Jesus could not have been holding His actual body and blood in His hands. He probably meant, "This bread represents My body" and "This wine represents My blood." Jesus often used figurative language (Luke 8:11, 21), just as a person does today when showing someone a photograph and saying, "This is my father."

The Consubstantiation View. The second viewpoint, developed by Martin Luther, is that Christ's body and blood are truly present "in, with, and under" the bread and wine. The elements do not actually change into Christ's body and blood. But in the same way that heat is present in a piece of hot iron, so Christ is present in the elements. The Lutheran position is often called consubstantiation.

This position can encourage the recipient of the Eucharist with the realization that Christ is actually present at the Supper. But it also misses the figurative use of Jesus' words. It also may tend to draw more attention to the bread and wine than to Christ Himself.

The Symbolic View. The third position, known as the symbolic or memorial view, is derived from the teachings of the Swiss reformer, Ulrich Zwingli. Although his teaching is not completely clear, he basically held that the bread and wine were only symbols of the sacrificed body and blood of Christ. He taught that the Lord's Supper is primarily a memorial ceremony of Christ's finished work, but that it is also to be an occasion when God's people pledge their unity with one another and their loyalty to Christ. This is the viewpoint held by most Baptist and independent churches. While Zwingli's ideas are basically sound, this position tends to place more emphasis on what the Christian does and promises in the Supper than on what God does.

The Dynamic View. Finally, there is the view of John Calvin and the Reformed and Presbyterian churches that follow his teachings. Known as the dynamic or spiritual presence view, it stands somewhere between the positions of Luther and Zwingli.

Calvin agreed with Zwingli that the bread and wine are to be understood symbolically. Christ is not physically present in the elements, because His risen, glorified body is in heaven (Heb. 10:12–13). Still, He is dynamically and spiritually present in the Lord's Supper through the Holy Spirit.

In the worship service (but not at any one precise moment), when the Word of God is proclaimed and the Lord's Supper is received, the glorified Christ actually gives spiritual nourishment from His own glorified body to those who receive it. As bread nourishes the physical body, so Christ's glorified body enlivens the soul. Because of the organic union between Christ, the risen Head, and the members of His body, the church (Eph. 1:18–23; 4:15–16; 5:23), this nourishment is conveyed to Christians by the Spirit who dwells in them (Rom. 8:9–11). Calvin admits that the way the Spirit does this is a genuine mystery. Yet, it is not contrary to reason—just above reason.

Calvin at times places more emphasis on Jesus' glorified flesh and blood than the Scriptures teach. But his position helps to explain why the Eucharist is so important for the Christian to observe, and why it is such a serious offense to misuse it. His view also corresponds well with those Scriptures that speak of God's nourishing and empowering work in His people (Eph. 3:14–21; Col. 2:6–10, 19).

Biblical Teachings. In 1 Corinthians 10:16, the apostle Paul rebuked the Corinthians for their involvement with idolatry. He referred to the cup as "the communion of the blood of Christ" and the bread as "the communion of the body of Christ." The Greek word for "communion" has the meaning of "fellowship, participating, and sharing." From the context it appears that Paul is saying that when Christians partake of the cup and the bread, they are participating in the benefits of Christ's death (referred to as His blood) and resurrection life (His glorified body). The most important of these benefits are the assurance of sins forgiven (through Christ's blood) and the assurance of Christ's presence and power (through His body).

The “one body” (the universal church) in 1 Corinthians 10:17 connects with the “body of Christ” in verse 16 in the sense that the entire church of Christ is organically related to the living, glorified human body of Christ now in heaven. The “one [loaf of] bread” (v. 17), representing Jesus the “bread of life” (John 6:35), is eaten by all believers at the Supper, symbolizing their unity and common participation in the one body of Christ. The great discourse of Jesus on the bread of life (John 6:25–68), while not intended to be a direct theological explanation of the Lord’s Supper, helps to explain how receiving the Eucharist can be one way in which Christians “feed” on the Lord (John 6:55–57). Other important ways are by prayer and the hearing of God’s Word through the Scriptures.

In 1 Corinthians 11:17–34 Paul rebuked the Corinthians for their pride and greed during the meal that accompanied the Eucharist (vv. 17–22). Then (vv. 23–25) he described the institution of the Lord’s Supper and emphasized the need for Christians to partake in a worthy manner. Many of them who had not been doing so were weak and sick, and many had even died as a result of God’s judgment (vv. 27–34).

Why does Paul use such strong language when speaking of the abuse of the Lord’s Supper? The Corinthians were not properly discerning or recognizing the Lord’s body. The wealthy Corinthians who shamed their poorer Christian brothers and sisters by their selfish eating practices (vv. 21–22) were not discerning the true nature of the church as Christ’s body in which all distinctions of social class, race, etc. were blotted out (Gal. 3:28).

On the other hand, Christians who received the bread and the cup after behaving disgracefully were failing to discern that Christ would not automatically bless and empower those who received the sacrament in this manner. Such persons were guilty of sin against the body and blood of Jesus (v. 27).

Meaning for Today. When we ask how the Lord’s Supper should be meaningful to the Christian today, three concepts—relating to the past, present, and future—can be helpful.

First, the Lord’s Supper is a time of remembrance and Eucharist. Jesus said, “Do this in remembrance of Me” (Luke 22:19; 1 Cor. 11:24–25). This is not to be so much our dwelling on the agonies of the crucifixion as it is to be our remembering the marvelous life and ministry of our Savior. The Eucharist is to be an occasion for expressing our deepest praise and appreciation for all Jesus Christ has done for us.

Just as one step in the Jewish Passover meal was to proclaim the Hebrews' deliverance from Egyptian bondage (Ex. 12:26–27), so in the Supper Christians proclaim their deliverance from sin and misery through the death of "Christ, our Passover" (1 Cor. 5:7; 11:26).

Second, the Supper is a time of refreshing and communion. As we participate in the benefits of Jesus' death and resurrection life (Rom. 5:10; 1 Cor. 10:16), we are actually being nourished and empowered from the risen Christ through the Spirit.

John Wesley knew of this strengthening. On the average, he received communion every four or five days throughout his long and fruitful ministerial career. It is not that God cannot empower us without the Lord's Supper, but that He has instituted the Supper for us, even as He has designated prayer and the hearing of Scripture as means of communicating His grace. While the Bible does not tell us how often to observe the Eucharist, Wesley's guideline—"as often as you can"—deserves our serious consideration.

Third, the Supper is a time of recommitment and anticipation. We are to examine (literally "prove" or "test") ourselves and partake in a worthy manner (1 Cor. 11:28–29). In so doing we renew our dedication to Christ and His people, in hopeful anticipation "till He comes" (1 Cor. 11:26). After Christ's return we shall partake with Him—in His physical presence—in the kingdom (Matt. 26:29).

LOT [laht]—Abraham's nephew. Lot accompanied Abraham from Mesopotamia to Canaan and to and from Egypt (Gen. 11:27–31; 12:4–5; 13:1). Both Lot and Abraham had large herds of cattle, and their herdsmen quarreled over their pasturelands. At Abraham's suggestion, the two decided to separate.

Abraham gave Lot his choice of land; and Lot chose the more fertile, well-watered site—the Jordan River valley—as opposed to the rocky hill country. Failing to take into account the character of the inhabitants, Lot "pitched his tent toward Sodom" (Gen. 13:12, KJV).

When the Elamite king Chedorlaomer invaded Canaan with his allies, Lot was taken captive. Abraham attacked Chedorlaomer's forces by night and rescued his nephew (Gen. 13:1—14:16).

When two angels were sent to warn Lot that God intended to destroy Sodom, Lot could not control the Sodomites, who wished to abuse the two visitors carnally. The angels struck the Sodomites blind to save Lot (Gen. 19:1–11), and Lot and his family fled the doomed city. Lot's wife, however, did not follow the angels' orders and looked back at Sodom. Because of her disobedience she was turned into a "pillar of salt" (Gen. 19:26). Our Lord Jesus warned, "Remember Lot's wife" (Luke 17:32), as a reminder of the disastrous results of disobedience.

Following his escape from Sodom, Lot lived in a cave near Zoar (Gen. 19:30–38). His two daughters served their father wine and enticed him into incest. They did this because "there is no man on the earth to come in to us as is the custom of all the earth" (Gen. 19:31). Out of that union came two sons, Moab and Ben-Ammi, the ancestors of the Moabites and the Ammonites respectively.

Lot's character is revealed by the major decisions he made throughout his life. He chose to pitch his tent with the worldly SODOMITES, seeking riches and a life of ease rather than a path of obedience to God. He prospered for a while, but this decision eventually led to his humiliation and the tragic loss of his wife and other members of his family.

LOTAN [LOE tan]—a son of Seir the Horite and a clan chief of a tribe of Horites in the land of Edom (Gen. 36:20, 22, 29).

LOTS, CASTING OF—a way of making decisions in Bible times, similar to drawing straws or casting a pair of dice to determine what course or direction to follow. The word “lots” occurs seventy times in the Old Testament and seven in the New Testament. Most of the occurrences were in the early period when little of the Bible was available and when God approved of this means for determining His will (Prov. 16:33).

For example, the high priest separated the SCAPEGOAT from the one he sacrificed by casting the lot (Lev. 16:8–10). The practice occurs most often in connection with the division of the land under Joshua (Joshua 14–21), a procedure that God directed several times in the Book of Numbers (Num. 26:55; 33:54; 34:13; 36:2).

Various offices and functions in the temple were also determined by lot (1 Chr. 24:5, 31; 25:8–9; 26:13–14). The sailors on Jonah’s ship (Jon. 1:7) also cast lots to determine who had brought God’s wrath upon their ship. Only once in the New Testament did the casting of lots happen with God’s approval. This occurred in the selection of Matthias to fill the spot vacated by Judas among the apostles (Acts 1:26).

After the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2), the casting of lots gradually fell into disfavor because more direct access became available to God’s people in and through the ministry of the Holy Spirit in their lives.

In spite of the many references to casting lots in the Old Testament, nothing is known about the actual lots themselves. They could have been sticks of various lengths, flat stones like coins, or some kind of dice.

LOTUS (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

LOVE—the high esteem that God has for His human children and the high regard which they, in turn, should have for Him and other people. Because of the hundreds of references to love in the Bible, it is certainly the most remarkable book of love in the world. It records the greatest love story ever written—God’s unconditional love for us that sent His Son to die on the cross (John 3:16; 1 John 4:10).

Love is not only one of God’s attributes; it is also an essential part of His nature (Deut. 7:7–8). “God is love,” the Bible declares (1 John 4:8, 16)—the personification of perfect love. Such love surpasses our powers of understanding (Eph. 3:19). Love like this is everlasting (Jer. 31:3), free (Hos. 14:4), sacrificial (John 3:16), and enduring to the end (John 13:1).

Two distinct Greek words meaning “to love” appear in the Bible. The word phileo means “to have ardent affection and feeling”—a type of impulsive love. The other word agapao means “to have esteem” or “high regard.” In the memorable conversation between Jesus and Peter, there is a play upon these two words (John 21:15–17).

The warm word agape is the characteristic term of Christianity. This word for love is used several different ways in the Bible.

1. Agape love indicates the nature of the love of God toward His beloved Son (John 17:26), toward the human race generally (John 3:16; Rom. 5:8), and toward those who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ (John 14:21).
2. Agape love conveys God's will to His children about their attitude toward one another. Love for one another was a proof to the world of true discipleship (John 13:34–35).
3. Agape love also expresses the essential nature of God (1 John 4:8). Love can be known only from the actions it prompts, as seen in God's love in the gift of His Son (1 John 4:9–10). Love found its perfect expression in the Lord Jesus. Christian love is the fruit of the Spirit of Jesus in the believer (Gal. 5:22).

Love is like oil to the wheels of obedience. It enables us to run the way of God's commandments (Ps. 119:32). Without such love, we are as nothing (1 Cor. 13:3). Such Spirit-inspired love never fails (1 Cor. 13:8) but always flourishes.

LOVE, BROTHERLY—love between people who are closely related to each other, whether physically or spiritually (Rom. 12:10; Heb. 13:1; 2 Pet. 1:7). The phrase is used in a symbolic sense to express love of Christians for one another, since all are sons of the same Father. The Greek word translated as "brotherly love" implies more than love for one's "blood brothers," as in pagan writings; it means love for all true believers, for the members of the church, the "household of faith" (Gal. 6:10) and "of God" (Eph. 2:19; also 1 Pet. 2:17; 3:8; 5:9).

Christians are a brotherhood in the service of Christ (Matt. 23:8), a family made up of those who do the will of God (Matt. 12:50; Mark 3:35; Luke 8:21). "A new commandment I give to you," Jesus said to His disciples, "that you love one another; as I have loved you, that you also love one another. By this all will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another" (John 13:34–35).

A Christian's love should extend beyond the Christian brotherhood, however, to all people. "If you greet your brethren only," said Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount, "what do you do more than others?" (Matt. 5:47). The Christian is called not only to love his neighbor and his brother but also to love his enemy (Matt. 5:44).

LOVE FEAST—a meal shared by the early Christians when they met together for fellowship and the Lord's Supper. The term love feast is clearly used only in Jude 12 (feasts of charity; KJV). But some Greek manuscripts support "love feasts" instead of "deceptions" in 2 Peter 2:13. The love feast is also referred to in 1 Corinthians 11:17–34, and probably in Acts 6:1–3, although neither passage in English versions of the Bible uses the term. The Greek word for "love feast" also is one of the New Testament words for "love," indicating that the meal was originally intended to be a rich experience of God's love. The purpose of the love feast was to remember Christ, to encourage His disciples, and to share God's provisions with the needy.

In the time of Christ, communal meals to express friendship and observe religious feasts were practiced in both Greek and Jewish cultures. The yearly Passover meal was the most important such event among the Jews. Jesus chose this occasion to institute the LORD'S SUPPER, or Eucharist (Matt. 26:17–30). Thus it was natural for the early Christians, whenever they celebrated the Lord's Supper, to do it in connection with a common meal. The "breaking of bread," which the very first disciples did daily, most likely refers to this dual experience of common meal and Eucharist (Acts 2:42, 46).

Because of such abuses as those described in the New Testament (1 Cor. 11:17–34; 2 Pet. 2:13), and probably for reasons of convenience, the meal and the Eucharist became separated in some regions by the second century. The meal—known as the love feast, the agape, and even the Lord's Supper—continued for several centuries. However, at times it became merely a charity supper for the poor and at other times a lavish banquet for the wealthy. After much controversy in the church, it was finally abolished at the end of the seventh century. A few Christian groups, however, still observe the agape.

LOVINGKINDNESS (see KINDNESS).

LOWLAND, THE—the southern division of the low area between the coastal plain of Philistia and the Mediterranean Sea on the west and the central highlands of Judah and Samaria on the east (1 Kin. 10:27; the Shephelah, NRSV; low country, plain, vale, valley, KJV; foothills, NIV). The lowland, or Shephelah, contained the valleys of Aijalon, Sorek, Elah, and Zephathah. Some of the more important cities in the lowland were Lachish, Debir, Libnah, and Beth Shemesh.

LUBIM [LOU beam]—another term sometimes used for LIBYANS or the inhabitants of LIBYA, a region of North Africa west of Egypt and bordering on the Mediterranean Sea (2 Chr. 12:3; 16:8; Nah. 3:9). When Shishak, king of Egypt, invaded Palestine, part of his army consisted of the Lubim (2 Chr. 12:2–9).

LUCAS [LOO kuhs]—a form of LUKE.

LUCIFER [LOU see fur] (morning star)—the Latin name for the planet Venus. The word Lucifer appears only once in the Bible “How you are fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How you are cut down to the ground, you who weakened the nations!” (Is. 14:12). Literally, the passage describes the overthrow of a tyrant, the king of Babylon. But many Bible scholars see in this passage a description of SATAN, who rebelled against the throne of God and was “brought down to Sheol, to the lowest depths of the Pit” (Is. 14:15). The same kind of interpretation is often given to Ezekiel 28:11–19. The description of the king of Tyre thus is believed to reach beyond that of an earthly ruler to the archangel who was cast out of heaven for leading a revolt against God.

Other scholars argue that Isaiah 14:12 should be interpreted as a reference to an ancient Canaanite myth. According to this view, Isaiah referred to the myth to dramatize the fall of the king of Babylon.

Also see DEVIL.

LUCIUS [LOO shuhs]—the name of one or two men in the New Testament:

1. Lucius of Cyrene, a teacher in the church in Antioch of Syria (Acts 13:1). Lucius and other church leaders laid their hands on Barnabas and Paul and sent them forth on their first missionary journey.
2. A Jewish Christian, a kinsman of the apostle Paul, who sent greetings from Corinth to Rome (Rom. 16:21). He may be the same person as Lucius No. 1.

LUD [luhd]—the fourth son of SHEM (Gen. 10:22; 1 Chr. 1:17) and the ancestor of a people known as the LUDIM (1 Chr. 1:11).

LUDIM [LOU deam]—the first son of MIZRAIM, who was the second son of Ham (Gen. 10:13; 1 Chr. 1:11). Some scholars, however, believe this term refers not to an individual but to a people; in both passages the NEB translates Lydians and the NIV translates Ludites. Some scholars attempt to identify the Ludim with the LUBIM (2 Chr. 12:3; 16:8; Nah. 3:9), the plural of LIBYAN, a people of North Africa west of Egypt bordering the Mediterranean Sea.

There is no textual authority, however, for identifying Ludim with Lubim. Some confusion also exists because of the ambiguous way the Ludim are associated with both African and Asiatic nations.

LUHITH [LOO hith]—a city of Moab, probably near the south end of the Dead Sea. Luhith was one of the places to which the Moabites fled to escape the invading Babylonians (Is. 15:5).

LUKE—a “fellow laborer” of the apostle Paul (Philem. 24) and the author of the Gospel of Luke and the Acts of the Apostles. By profession he was a physician (Col. 4:14). During one of Paul’s imprisonments, probably in Rome, Luke’s faithfulness was recorded by Paul when he declared, “Only Luke is with me” (2 Tim. 4:11). These three references are our only direct knowledge of Luke in the New Testament.

A bit more of Luke’s life and personality can be pieced together with the aid of his writings (Luke and Acts) and some outside sources. Tradition records that he came from Antioch in Syria. This is possible, because Antioch played a significant role in the early Gentile mission that Luke described in Acts (Acts 11; 13; 14; 15; 18). Luke was a Gentile (Col. 4:10–17) and the only non-Jewish author of a New Testament book. A comparison of 2 Corinthians 8:18 and 12:18 has led some to suppose that Luke and Titus were brothers, but this is a guess.

Luke accompanied Paul on parts of his second, third, and final missionary journeys. At three places in Acts, the narrative changes to the first person (“we”). This probably indicates that Luke was personally present during those episodes. On the second journey (A.D. 49–53), Luke accompanied Paul on the short voyage from Troas to Philippi (Acts 16:10–17). On the third journey (A.D. 54–58), Luke was present on the voyage from Philippi to Jerusalem (Acts 20:5—21:18). Whether Luke had spent the intervening time in Philippi is uncertain, but his connection with Philippi has led some to favor it (rather than Antioch) as Luke's home.

Once in Palestine, Luke probably remained close by Paul during his two-year imprisonment in Caesarea. During this time, Luke probably drew together material, both oral and written, which he later used in the composition of his gospel (Luke 1:1–4). A third "we" passage describes in masterful suspense the shipwreck during Paul's voyage to Rome for his trial before Caesar. Each of the "we" passages involves Luke on a voyage, and the description of the journey from Jerusalem to Rome is full of observations and knowledge of nautical matters (Acts 27).

Luke apparently was a humble man, with no desire to sound his own horn. More than one-fourth of the New Testament comes from his pen, but not once does he mention himself by name. He had a greater command of the Greek language and was probably more broadminded and urbane than any other New Testament writer. He was a careful historian, both by his own admission (Luke 1:1–4) and by the judgment of later history.

Luke's gospel reveals his concern for the poor, sick, and outcast, thus offering a clue to why Paul called him "the beloved physician" (Col. 4:14). He was faithful not only to Paul, but to the greater cause he served—the publication of "good tidings of great joy" (Luke 2:10).

Also see LUKE, GOSPEL OF; ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

LUKE, GOSPEL OF—the third gospel, in which the great truths of Jesus are communicated primarily through vivid stories. Luke is the first of a two-part work. In this work, the history of the gospel is traced from its beginnings in the life of Jesus (the Gospel of Luke) to the founding of the early church (the Acts of the Apostles).

The author of the Gospel of Luke is more interested in persons, especially those in trouble, than in ideas. He also is a skilled writer, and the literary quality of the Gospel of Luke is the highest of all four gospels. Luke often is the most interesting gospel to read. But he is also a serious historian who places Jesus within the context of world history. He presents Jesus and the church as the fulfillment of the history of salvation.

Structure of the Gospel. The literary structure of the Gospel of Luke is constructed primarily around Jesus' ministry in Galilee and in Jerusalem.

The first two chapters of the gospel could be entitled "Introduction and Infancy." Here Luke declares his purpose in writing (1:1–4), and he tells the immortal stories of the births of John the Baptist and Jesus. The ministry of Jesus begins with a note of expectation in chapter 3. The rulers of the Roman world at that time are named. Next, accounts are given of the preaching of John the Baptist and of Jesus' baptism, genealogy, and temptation (3:1—4:13).

Between His TEMPTATION and Transfiguration (4:14—9:28), Jesus conducted His ministry in Galilee. Convinced of His approaching death (9:21–27, 43–45), Jesus steadfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem (9:51) where, like the prophets before Him, He would accept His fate. This journey occupies the central part of Luke (9:51—19:27). The reader is kept in dramatic tension as Jesus moves to Jerusalem and the shadow of the cross darkens His pathway. The cross, however, is not simply unlucky fate; on the contrary, "the Son of Man goes as it has been determined" (22:22) to fulfill the divine plan for which He came (note the use of "must" in 2:49; 4:43; 9:22; 17:25; 22:37; 24:7, 44).

Like Moses, Jesus accomplished for His people a deliverance—a deliverance from sin to salvation. The events of Jesus' final week in Jerusalem (19:28—24:53) conclude the gospel, and the ascension serves as a transition from the end of Luke to the beginning of Acts.

Authorship and Date. The author does not identify himself by name, but he does tell us a good deal about himself. Although not an eyewitness of the events he reports, he has followed them closely enough to write an orderly, reliable narrative (1:1–4). He is an educated man with the best command of Greek of any New Testament writer. He counts among his acquaintances a person of high social standing, the "most excellent" THEOPHILUS, to whom he addresses both Luke (1:3) and Acts (1:1). As a Gentile, the author is interested in Gentiles; he is equally disinterested in matters purely Jewish. At some point in his life he joined the apostle Paul. His experiences with Paul served as a firsthand source for his sequel to the Gospel of Luke.

For the author's name we are dependent on later tradition. Writing about A.D. 175, Irenaeus, bishop of Lyon, identified the author as LUKE, the companion of Paul. Eusebius agreed, adding that Luke was a native of Antioch. The importance of Antioch in Acts (13:1–3) lends credibility to Eusebius' statement. The few glimpses we get of Luke from Paul's epistles—a physician, both beloved and compassionate (Col. 4:14) who was with Paul during his Roman imprisonment (Philem. 24; 2 Tim. 4:11)—parallels what we gather from him in Luke–Acts. The logical conclusion is that Luke wrote Luke–Acts.

The date of Luke's writing can only be guessed from inferences. Luke tells us that he drew upon earlier accounts, some of which were written (1:2). It is likely that two such accounts were Q (about A.D. 50) and the Gospel of Mark (about A.D. 60). The Gospel of Luke probably was written sometime shortly after A.D. 70. (Also see GOSPELS.)

Historical Setting. Luke was written by a Gentile for Gentiles. The author substitutes Greek expressions for nearly all Jewish expressions (amen is one of the few exceptions), and he seldom appeals to Old Testament prophecy. When Luke occasionally quotes from the Old Testament, he usually uses quotations that show that "all flesh [Gentiles as well as Jews] shall see the salvation of God" (3:6). Furthermore, we know that Christianity encountered increasingly hostile opposition in the 50s and 60s. One ancient writer referred to "a class hatred for their abominations, called Christians." It appears that Luke intended to supply influential Romans, like Theophilus, with the solid truth about Christians. Luke shows that in every instance where Christians were suspected of sedition against Rome they were judged innocent (Luke 23:4, 14, 22; Acts 16:39; 17:9; 18:15–16; 19:37; 23:29; 25:25; 26:31).

Although Christianity was regarded by many pagans as a “mischievous superstition” that thrived on secrecy, Luke shows that Jesus associated with all sorts of people and that the early church openly proclaimed the gospel (Acts 2:14; 17:22). The truths of the Christian message did not happen in a corner (Acts 26:26), argued the apostle Paul. An implicit argument of Luke–Acts is that if Judaism had earned the tolerance of the Roman Empire, then Christianity, which was the fulfillment of the Old Testament, should be granted the same status. It is reasonably certain that one of Luke’s reasons for writing his gospel was to show that Christianity was neither superstitious nor subversive.

Theological Contributions. Luke has the most universal outlook of all the gospels; he portrays Jesus as a man with compassion for all peoples. Whereas Matthew traces Jesus’ genealogy back to Abraham, the father of the Hebrew people (1:2), Luke traces it back to Adam, the father of the human race (3:38). In Matthew Jesus sends his disciples “to the lost sheep of the house of Israel” (10:6) only, but Luke omits this limitation.

Luke is also the most socially-minded of the gospels. When He was in the synagogue at Nazareth, Jesus gave the keynote of His ministry by reading from Isaiah:

> “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me,
> Because He has anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor.
> He has sent Me to heal the brokenhearted,
> To preach deliverance to the captives
> And recovery of sight to the blind,
> To set at liberty those who are oppressed,
> To preach the acceptable year of the LORD” (Is. 61:1–2).

In Luke, Jesus’ life is presented as a commentary on this passage of Scripture. He blesses the poor, the hungry, those who weep, and the excluded (6:20–23). In one parable He takes the side of a beggar who sits outside the gate of a rich man (16:19–31); and in another parable He celebrates a tax collector who shies away from the temple because of his sinfulness (18:9–14). Jesus reaches out to a widowed mother who had lost her only son (7:11–17) and to a sinful woman (7:36–50). In another parable the hero of mercy is a despised Samaritan (10:25–37); and after a healing, a Samaritan is praised for his gratitude (17:11–19). The open arms of the Father, as in the parable of the Prodigal Son (15:11–32), await all who return to Him. Jesus' identification with sinners leads Him to open His arms to them on the cross, where "He was numbered with the transgressors" (22:37).

Jesus also criticizes the rich. "Woe to you who are rich" (6:24), He says; for the tables will turn. The rich are fools because they think life consists of possessing things (12:13–21). Those wealthy enough to throw dinner parties ought to invite those who cannot repay—"the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind"—for God will repay "at the resurrection of the just" (14:13–14).

Special Considerations. For Luke the coming of Christ is good news; and his gospel is one of joy. The births of John and Jesus are echoed by songs of praise from Mary (1:46–55), Zacharias (1:67–79), the angels (2:14), and Simeon (2:29–32). Even the unborn leap for joy (1:44). Sad and cruel scenes will follow, but the note of joy that rings from Gabriel at the ANNUNCIATION (1:32–33) is repeated by the apostles at the end of the gospel (24:52–53).

Second, Luke is a gospel of the Holy Spirit. Unlike the other evangelists, Luke emphasizes the activity of the Spirit in the ministry of Jesus. John the Baptist and his parents are filled with the Spirit (1:15, 41, 67), as is Simeon (2:25–35). Jesus begins His ministry "in the power of the Spirit" (4:14; also 4:1, 18; 10:21), and He promises the Spirit to His disciples in their hour of need (12:12). Jesus is not alone; the Spirit is always with Him, within Him, empowering Him to accomplish God's purpose.

Third, Luke is a gospel of prayer. The multitude prays as Zacharias serves at the altar (1:10). Mary prays at the news of salvation (1:46–55). Jesus prays at His baptism (3:21), when He chooses His disciples (6:12), at Peter's confession (9:18), and at His transfiguration (9:29). In the solitude of prayer Jesus takes the first steps of ministry (5:16) and falls to His knees on the Mount of Olives (22:39–46). He gives His final breath back to God in prayer, "Father, into Your hands I commend My spirit" (23:46).

• The pods of the carob tree, a fruit eaten by animals and the poor. This is probably the food the lost son would have gladly eaten, in Jesus' parable of the prodigal in the Gospel of Luke (Luke 15:16).

LUKEWARM—mildly warm; neither hot nor cold; lacking in conviction. Jesus condemned the church at Laodicea because of its lukewarm faith and declared that He was about to spew them out of His mouth (Rev. 3:14–22). Lacking the courage to follow God or to rebel against Him, they were disgusting to Him.

LUNACY, LUNATICK (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

LUST—desire for what is forbidden; an obsessive sexual craving. Although there are legitimate desires for which God makes provision (Deut. 12:15, 20–21), lust refers to the desire for things that are contrary to the will of God. The "lust after evil things" (1 Cor. 10:6) of the Israelites in the wilderness serves as an example of the lusts that should be avoided by Christians.

Christians are able to resist lust through the power of the Holy Spirit. The flesh, with its passions and lusts, is to be crucified (Gal. 5:24; Titus 2:12).

LUTE (see MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE).

LUZ [luhz] (almond tree)—the name of two cities in the Old Testament:

1. A city of the Canaanites renamed BETHEL by Jacob (Gen. 28:19). Assigned to the tribe of Benjamin, Luz was near the border of Ephraim, about 18 kilometers (11 miles) north of Jerusalem.
2. A city of the Hittites (Judg. 1:26). The site is unknown, but some scholars suggest Luweiziyeh, about 7 kilometers (4.5 miles) northwest of Mount Hermon.

LXX—the abbreviation for the SEPTUAGINT, the Greek translation of the Hebrew Old Testament.

LYCAONIA [lik ih OE nih uh]—a Roman province in south central Asia Minor visited by the apostle Paul (Acts 14:6). In apostolic times part of it (the part visited by Paul) was a region of the Roman province of Galatia. Lycaonia was bordered on the south by Cilicia, on the west by Phrygia and Pisidia, on the north by Galatia, and on the east by Cappadocia. Because of its remoteness, Lycaonia enjoyed political independence during much of its history. But it fell under Greek control and influence in the period following the conquests of Alexander the Great.

The apostle Paul visited the three main cities of Lycaonia—Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe—on his three journeys to Asia Minor (Acts 13:51—14:6; 2 Tim. 3:11). Timothy was from Lycaonia; apparently he was a native of Lystra (Acts 16:1).

LYCAONIAN [lick uh OHN ih un]—the language or speech of the people of LYCAONIA, a province of Asia Minor (Acts 14:11). When the apostle Paul healed a crippled man at Lystra, a city of Lycaonia, the people said in the Lycaonian language, “The gods have come down to us in the likeness of men!” (Acts 14:11). Some scholars believe that Lycaonian had its roots in the ancient Assyrian language. By Paul’s time it probably was a corrupt Greek intermingled with Syriac.

LYCIA [LISH ih uh]—a mountainous country in southwest Asia Minor (modern Turkey; see Map 7, C–2). Shut in by rugged mountain ranges, Lycia made contact with the outside world mainly through its seaport cities. Lycia was united by a strong federation of cities. It enjoyed a measure of freedom and independence even under foreign rulers such as Persia, Greece, Egypt, and Rome.

The apostle Paul stopped at two of Lycia's coastal cities, PATARA (Acts 21:1) and MYRA (Acts 27:5), during his ministry.

LYDDA [LID uh]—the Greek name for the Old Testament city of LOD (1 Chr. 8:12; Acts 9:38). When the apostle Peter visited Lydda (see Map 6, A–4), his cure of a paralyzed man encouraged many citizens to turn to the Lord (Acts 9:33–35).

LYDIA [LID ih uh]—the name of a woman and a geographical region:

1. A prosperous businesswoman from the city of THYATIRA who became a convert to Christianity after hearing the apostle Paul speak (Acts 16:12–15, 40). Thyatira was noted for its "purple"—its beautifully dyed cloth. Lydia, who lived in Philippi, sold dyes or dyed goods from as far away as Thyatira. Already a worshiper of God, the usual designation for a PROSELYTE to Judaism, Lydia believed the gospel when Paul preached in Philippi. She became the first convert to Christianity in Macedonia and, in fact, in all of Europe. Lydia is a good example for Christians in the business world today. A devout Christian and a conscientious businesswoman, she used her work to help further God's purpose.
2. A large territory in western Asia Minor (modern Turkey) rich in natural resources (see Map 1, A–1). Its fertile land produced figs, grain, grapes, and olives. The Lydians are mentioned by the prophet Ezekiel as "men of war," or mercenaries, who fought to defend Tyre (Ezek. 27:10) and who made an alliance with Egypt (Ezek. 30:5; Lud, NRSV).

- The Chapel of Lydia by the riverside at Phillippi. Lydia was converted to Christianity through the ministry of the apostle Paul (Acts 16:13–15).

LYDIANS [LID ih unz]—men who fought with the Egyptians (Ethiopians and Libyans) at the Battle of Carchemish (Jer. 46:9; men of Lydia, NIV; men of Ludim, NRSV). Some earlier scholars assumed these soldiers, skilled with the bow, were a people of Africa. But many modern scholars believe they were natives of the Lydian kingdom in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), and were serving as hired soldiers in the Egyptian army. Also see LUD, LUDIM.

LYE—a mineral alkaline that was mixed with oil to produce soap in Bible times (Jer. 2:22; nitre, KJV; soda, NIV). The one other biblical usage of the Hebrew word that is translated lye in Jeremiah 2:22 leaves a question about the exact nature of lye. Proverbs 20, “Like one who takes away a garment in cold weather, and like vinegar on soda, is one who sings songs to a heavy heart.” The fact that the acid in vinegar would neutralize the lye or soda has led some modern versions to translate this phrase, “like vinegar on a wound.” However, since the proverb speaks of the unpleasant reaction of the unhappy person to joy around him, the violent foaming of an acid and an alkali when they are mixed makes a vivid image.

As a cleansing agent in Bible times, lye was effective but harsh. The clothes to be whitened with lye were trampled by the fuller, or launderer, in a vat to work this powerful agent thoroughly into the clothes. Jesus’ robe, as witnessed by the three disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration, was gloriously white—whiter than a launderer using lye could have made it (Mark 9:3).

LYRE (see MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE).

LYSANIAS [lih SAY nih uhs]—the tetrarch or governor of the region of Abilene in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, emperor of Rome (Luke 3:1). Lysanias was a contemporary of John the Baptist and Jesus.

LYSIAS, CLAUDIUS [LIS ih uhs, KLAW dih uhs]—the commander of the Roman garrison at Jerusalem who rescued the apostle Paul from an angry mob (Acts 21:31–38). Claudius Lysias sent Paul to Caesarea by night under military escort to the Roman governor, Felix (Acts 22:24—23:35). His letter to Felix (Acts 23:25–30) is an example of Roman military correspondence.

Claudius Lysias was a commander (commandant, REB; tribune, NRSV). The Greek noun is chiliarchos which means “ruler of a thousand.” A tribune was a Roman military officer commanding a cohort, a unit of from 600 to 1,000 men.

LYSTRA [LISS truh]—a city of LYCAONIA, in central Anatolia in modern Turkey, where Paul preached after being driven from Iconium (see Map 7, D–2). Lystra was built on a small hill about 46 meters (150 feet) above the plain that stretched northeastward to Iconium and southeastward to Derbe.

Apparently, Lystra was the home of Timothy (Acts 16:1–2). Paul wrote to Timothy mentioning his persecutions and afflictions at Antioch (of Pisidia), Iconium, and Lystra (2 Tim. 3:11). At Lystra, when Paul healed a crippled man, the people thought they were gods, calling Barnabas Zeus and Paul Hermes (Mercury). But Jews from Antioch and Iconium later came to the city, persuading the multitudes to stone the apostle Paul (Acts 14:19).

M

MAACAH [MAY ah kah]—the name of four women and one man in the Old Testament:

1. One of David's wives and the mother of Absalom (2 Sam. 3:3; 1 Chr. 3:2).
2. Apparently, an Aramean king from whom the Ammonites hired a thousand men to fight David's army (2 Sam. 10:6; the king of Maacah, NIV).
3. A wife of Rehoboam and the mother of Abijah, kings of Judah (1 Kin. 15:2; 2 Chr. 11:20–22). Maacah was the favorite wife of Rehoboam, and she bore him Abijah, Attai, Ziza, and Shelomith (2 Chr. 11:20–21). Abijah, or Abijam (1 Kin. 14:31—15:8), her oldest son, succeeded Rehoboam as king of Judah. A strong-willed woman, Maacah maintained her position as queen mother until her grandson Asa (1 Kin. 15:8; 2 Chr. 14:1) removed her from that position. Maacah fell from favor "because she had made an obscene image of Asherah (a Canaanite goddess)" (1 Kin. 15:13; 2 Chr. 15:16).
4. The grandmother of Asa, king of Judah (2 Chr. 15:16; Maachah, 1 Kin. 15:10, 13).
5. A wife of Jeiel, the father of Gibeon (1 Chr. 8:29; 9:35). Maacah is mentioned in the genealogy of King Saul.

MAACHAH [MAY ah kah]—the name of four men, two women, and one place in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Nahor by Reumah (Gen. 22:24) and a brother of Abraham. Maachah's descendants probably inhabited Maachah No. 2.
2. A small Aramean kingdom that joined Geshur on the western border of Bashan. Maachah probably was southwest of Mount Hermon and east of the Jordan River (1 Chr. 19:7; Maacah, 2 Sam. 10:8). It was once called Syrian Maachah (1 Chr. 19:6). Together with the Syrian mercenaries from Beth Rehob, Zoba, and Ishtob, 1,000 men from Maachah joined a military alliance with the Ammonites against the army of King David.
3. The father of Achish (1 Kin. 2:39). Achish was king of Gath during the reign of Solomon. Also see MAOCH.

4. A concubine of Caleb, son of Hezron (1 Chr. 2:48).
5. The sister of Huppim and Shuppim and the wife of Machir of the tribe of Manasseh (1 Chr. 7:15–16).
6. The father of Hanan (1 Chr. 11:43).
7. The father of Shephatiah (1 Chr. 27:16).

MAACHATHITES, MAACATHITES [may AK uh thights]—descendants of MAACAH, also called Maachah, or a native or inhabitant of the Aramean kingdom of Maacah. The Maacathites are often mentioned together with the Geshurites (Josh. 12:5). A number of Maacathites were among the mighty men of Israel (2 Sam. 23:34).

MAADAI [may uh DIE]—a son of Bani who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:34).

MAADIAH [may uh DYE uh]—a priest who returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Neh. 12:5). Maadiah may be the same person as Moadiah (Neh. 12:17) or Maaziah No. 2 (Neh. 10:8).

MAAI [may AY eye]—a priest who participated in the celebration after the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt (Neh. 12:36).

MAALEH-ACRABBIM [MAY uh leh ah KRAB im] (ascent of scorpions)—a hill in Judah near the Dead Sea (Josh. 15:3).

MAARATH [MAY uh rath]—a city in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 15:59), between the cities of Gedor and Beth Anoth.

MAASAI [MAY uh sye] (work of the Lord)—an Aaronite priest whose family lived in Jerusalem after the captivity (1 Chr. 9:12; Maasiai, KJV). He may be the same person as Amashai (Neh. 11:13).

MAASEIAH [may uh SYE uh]—the name of several men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite who was a member of the second division of priests during David's reign (1 Chr. 15:18, 20).
2. A commander who helped Jehoiada overthrow Queen Athaliah and bring JOASH to the throne of Judah (2 Chr. 23:1).
3. An officer under King UZZIAH of Judah (2 Chr. 26:11).

4. A son of Judah’s royal line (2 Chr. 28:7). Maaseiah was probably the son of Jotham.
5. The governor of Jerusalem during the reign of King Josiah of Judah (2 Chr. 34:8).
6. A priest who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:18).
7. Another priest of the family of Harim, who divorced his pagan wife (Ezra 10:21).
8. A priest of the family of Pashhur who divorced his wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:22).
9. A son of Pahath-Moab (Ezra 10:30).
10. The father of Azariah (Neh. 3:23).
11. A priest who helped Ezra read the Law to the people (Neh. 8:4).
12. A priest who explained the Law to the people after Ezra’s reading (Neh. 8:7). He may be the same person as Maaseiah No. 11.
13. A leader of the Israelites who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:25).
14. A man of Judah descended through Perez (Neh. 11:5).
15. A man from the tribe of Benjamin whose descendants lived in Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 11:7).
16. A priest who assisted at the dedication of Jerusalem’s rebuilt wall (Neh. 12:41).
17. Another priest who took part in the dedication of the Jerusalem walls (Neh. 12:42).
18. The father of Zephaniah (Jer. 21:1).
19. The father of Zedekiah (Jer. 29:21).
20. The grandfather of Baruch (Jer. 32:12, KJV; Mahseiah, NKJV, NIV), Jeremiah’s scribe.
21. A gatekeeper during the reign of King Jehoiakim of Judah (Jer. 35:4).

MAASIAI [may uh SYE eye]—a form of MAASAI.

MAATH [MAY ath]—an ancestor of Jesus, listed in Luke’s genealogy (Luke 3:26).

MAAZ [MAY az]—the oldest son of Ram, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:27).

MAAZIAH [may uh ZYE uh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. Head of the twenty-fourth division of priests in David's time (1 Chr. 24:18).
2. A priest who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:8), perhaps the same person as Maadiah (Neh. 12:5).

MACBANNAI [MAK buh nye]—a form of MACHBANAI.

MACCABEES [MACK uh bees]—the predecessors of the Hasmonean family of Jewish leaders and rulers, made up of the sons of Mattathias and their descendants, which reigned in Judea from 167 to 37 B.C. This term is especially applied to Judas Maccabeus and his brothers, who defeated the Syrians under Antiochus IV Epiphanes (the Seleucid ruler of Syria, 175–164 B.C.) in 164 B.C. and who rededicated the temple in Jerusalem.

In the spirit of an oriental tyrant, ANTIOCHUS IV Epiphanes fanatically determined to impose HELLENISM—the adoption of ancient Greek language, philosophy, customs, art—on all the subjects of his empire. The story of Antiochus' edict is told in the Old Testament apocryphal book of 1 Maccabees: "The king then issued a decree throughout his empire: his subjects were all to become one people and abandon their own laws and religion. The nations everywhere complied with the royal command, and many in Israel accepted the foreign worship, sacrificing to idols and profaning the Sabbath" (1 Macc. 1:41–43, NEB).

In seeking to unify his empire, Antiochus attacked Israel's religious practices. He prohibited the observance of the Sabbath and the traditional Jewish festivals and feast days. He also outlawed the reading of the law of Moses and gave orders that all copies should be burned. temple sacrifices were forbidden, circumcision was outlawed, and other characteristic Jewish practices were declared illegal. The penalty for disobedience was death.

Antiochus' ultimate affront to the Jews occurred on the twenty-fifth day of the month of Kislev, in 167 B.C. He rededicated the temple to the pagan Greek god Zeus, set up a statue of Zeus in the Holy of Holies, and sacrificed pigs upon the altar. These outrages brought on the revolt of the Maccabees.

The home of Mattathias, a priest at Modein (or Modin), a town situated about 27 kilometers (17 miles) northwest of Jerusalem, quickly became the center of resistance against the Hellenizing policies of Antiochus. With Mattathias were his five sons: "John called Gaddis, Simon called Thassis, Judas called Maccabaeus, Eleazar called Avaran, and Jonathan called Apphus" (1 Macc. 2:3–5, NEB).

The title Maccabeus was first given to Judas, the third son of Mattathias, but it was soon transferred to the entire family. Some scholars believe the term is derived from a Hebrew or Aramaic word meaning "hammer," probably in allusion to the crushing blows inflicted by Judas and his successors upon their enemies. Thus, Judas may have been called "the Hammer" or "the Hammerer," or, as some scholars prefer, "Extinguisher" or "Quencher" (of the enemy).

Antiochus had sent commissioners throughout the entire country of Judea to enforce his decree. Appalled by the sacrilegious acts committed in Judea and Jerusalem and moved by his fervent zeal for the law of Moses, Mattathias killed one of the officers of the king sent to enforce pagan sacrifice. He and his five sons then fled from Modein, taking refuge in the rugged hills nearby. Joined by a growing number of sympathizers who detested the "abomination of desolation" (Dan. 11:31; 12:11; see Dan. 9:27) set up on the altar by Antiochus, the Maccabees carried on guerilla warfare against the Syrians and the Jewish collaborators.

In December 164 B.C. Judas Maccabeus recaptured most of Jerusalem. Then he forced the loyal priests, those who had not collaborated with Antiochus, to cleanse the Holy Place and erect a new altar. On the twenty-fifth of Kislev, 164 B.C., precisely three years after Antiochus had defiled it, Judas rededicated the temple.

According to Jewish tradition, only one undefiled jar of oil could be found. This jar contained oil for only one day. Miraculously, however, the oil kept burning for eight days. The Hebrew word Hanukkah, which means "dedication," is the name still used today for the Jewish Festival of Lights that commemorates this event. Celebrated for eight days from the twenty-fifth day of the month of Kislev to the second day of Adar, Hanukkah occurs near or at the same time as the Christian celebration of Christmas. The Feast of Dedication is mentioned in the New Testament (John 10:22).

After a short time of peace, warfare broke out again between the Jews and the Syrians. Leadership of the Maccabees passed from Judas to Jonathan and then to Simon. (The two other brothers had been killed without assuming leadership.) After the death of Simon, the last remaining son of Mattathias, the succession of the Maccabees was maintained by Simon's son John, known later as John Hyrcanus or Hyrcanus I.

Although Judea was nominally still a province of Syria, practical independence was maintained until 63 B.C., when Pompey invaded the country and brought it under Roman domination. Mariamne, the wife of Herod the Great, was a descendant of the Maccabees.

MACEDONIA [mass uh DOH neh uh]—a mountainous country north of Greece (Achaia) in the Balkan Peninsula (see Map 7, B–1). This area was visited twice, and perhaps three times, by the apostle Paul.

Macedonia was of little international significance until Philip II of Macedon (ruled 359–336 B.C.) established his capital at PHILIPPI. He defeated the Greek city-states and united them into one kingdom. His son Alexander III of Macedon (ruled 336–323 B.C.), later known as ALEXANDER the Great, built an empire from Greece to the Nile River in Egypt and southeast to the Indus River.

After Alexander's death the generals divided the empire, and Macedonia declined in importance. But Macedonia regained its leading position and was made a colony after the Battle of Philippi (42 B.C.), at which Octavian (Augustus) and Antony defeated Brutus and Cassius on the plains near the city.

The first mention of Macedonia in the Bible is in Acts 16: the description of Paul's "Macedonian call." In a vision, a man appeared to Paul "and pleaded with him, saying, 'Come over to Macedonia and help us' " (Acts 16:9). Paul immediately set sail at Troas for NEAPOLIS (Acts 16:11), a seaport of Philippi in the extreme eastern part of Macedonia.

Luke gives a detailed account of Paul's journey through Macedonia (Acts 16:11—17:14). At Neapolis Paul picked up the Egnatian Way—the major road of Macedonia—and came to PHILIPPI, "the foremost city of that part of Macedonia, a colony" (Acts 16:12). At Philippi Paul made his first convert in Europe, "a certain woman named Lydia . . . [who] was a seller of purple" (Acts 16:14).

After Lydia's baptism and the healing of "a certain slave girl possessed with a spirit of divination" (Acts 16:16), and his imprisonment (Acts 16:23–24), Paul set out again on the Egnatian Way through AMPHIPOLIS and APOLLONIA to THESSALONICA (Acts 17:1)—the capital where the proconsul (governor) resided.

The final city Paul visited before leaving Macedonia for Athens was BEREA (Acts 17:10–14), where he left Silas and Timothy for a short time to assist in the work (Acts 17:15; 18:5).

At the close of this, his second missionary journey, Paul went on to Athens and Corinth and then back to Antioch of Syria (Acts 17:15—18:23). He revisited Macedonia at least once again (Acts 20:1–6) and perhaps twice (2 Cor. 2:13; 7:5; Phil. 2:24; 1 Tim. 1:3).

Several of Paul's travel companions and fellow workers were Macedonians: GAIUS (Acts 19:29), ARISTARCHUS (Acts 19:29; 27:2), SECUNDUS (Acts 20:4), and SOPATER (Acts 20:4). The Macedonian Christians' support of the needs of Paul and others is mentioned several times in Paul's letters (Rom. 15:26; 2 Cor. 8:1–5; Phil. 4:15–18).

MACEDONIANS [mass ih DOE nee unz]—natives or residents of MACEDONIA, a region of northern Greece (Acts 19:29; 2 Cor. 9:2).

MACHAERUS [ma KAY rus]—the place where JOHN THE BAPTIST was apparently imprisoned and put to death, according to the Jewish historian, Josephus.

MACHBANAI [MAK buh nye]—a warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:13; Machbannai, NRSV, NASB; Macbannai, NIV).

MACHBENAH [mak BEE nuh]—a son of Sheva mentioned in the genealogy of Judah. Machbenah was of the family of Caleb (1 Chr. 2:49).

MACHI [MAY kye]—one of twelve men sent by Moses to spy out the land of Canaan (Num. 13:15).

MACHIR [MAY kir] (sold)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The firstborn son of Manasseh (Gen. 50:23). The Machirites descended from Machir and were the only family of the tribe of Manasseh. They defeated the city of Gilead, which Moses gave to the Machirites as an inheritance (Josh. 17:1). In Judges 5:14 "Machir" is used poetically to refer to the whole tribe of Manasseh.
2. A son of Ammiel who lived in Lo Debar, east of the Jordan River (2 Sam. 9:4–5; 17:27). Machir provided for Saul's only surviving son, MEPHIBOSHETH, after David became king. He also brought provisions and supplies to David during Absalom's rebellion.

MACHIRITES [MAY kir ites]—the descendants of MACHIR No. 1 (Num. 26:29).

MACHNADEBAI [mak NAD eh bye]—a son of Bani who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:34, 40).

MACHPELAH [mahk PEE luh]—a field, a cave, and the surrounding land purchased by Abraham as a burial place for his wife Sarah. The cave was to the east of Mamre, or Hebron (Gen. 23:19). At an earlier time, Abraham pitched his tent "and went and dwelt by the terebinth trees of Mamre, which are in Hebron, and built an altar there to the LORD" (Gen. 13:18). He also received three visitors who spoke of a child of promise to be born to Sarah (Gen. 18:1–15).

Abraham purchased the field of Machpelah from Ephron the Hittite. Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Rebekah, Jacob, and Leah were all buried here (Gen. 49:31; 50:13).

Today the modern city of el-Khalil (Hebron) is built up around the site of Machpelah. The site of the cave was once protected by a Christian church but is now marked by a Moslem mosque. The Moslems held this site so sacred that for centuries Christians were forbidden to enter the ancient shrine. It is open to the public today.

MADABA [MAHD ah bah]—a form of MEDEBA.

MADAI [MAY dye]—the third son of Japheth and a grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:2). He was probably the ancestor of the Medes.

MADMANNAH [mad MAN nuh]—the name of a man and a town in the Old Testament:

1. A town in the southern wilderness of Judah near Ziklag (Josh. 15:20, 31), perhaps the same place as BETH MARCABOTH (1 Chr. 4:31).
2. A son of Shaaph, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:49).

MADMEN [MAD men]—a city of Moab whose destruction was foretold by the prophet Jeremiah "You also shall be cut down, O Madmen! The sword shall pursue you" (Jer. 48:2).

MADMENAH [mad MEE nuh]—a village north of Jerusalem in the territory of Benjamin (Is. 10:31).

MADNESS (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

MADON [MAY dahn]—a Canaanite town in Galilee. The king of Madon, Jobab, was killed by Joshua in a battle at the waters of Merom (Josh. 11:1, 5, 7).

MAGADAN [MAG uh dan]—a form of MAGDALA.

MAGBISH [MAG bish]—an unidentified town in the territory of Judah. The descendants of former residents of Magdish returned here after the captivity (Ezra 2:30).

MAGDALA [MAG duh luh] (tower)—a place on the Sea of Galilee, perhaps on the west shore (see Map 6, C–2), about 5 kilometers (3 miles) northwest of Tiberias. Jesus and His disciples withdrew to this place after the feeding of the 4,000 (Matt. 15:39; Magadan, NIV, NASB, REB, NRSV). The parallel passage (Mark 8:10) has DALMANUTHA. Magdala was either the birthplace or the home of Mary Magdalene.

Also see MAGDALENE.

MAGDALENE [mag de LEE nih] (from Magdala)—the designation given to a woman named Mary, one of Jesus' most prominent Galilean female disciples, to distinguish her from the other Marys. The first appearance of Mary Magdalene in the gospels is in Luke 8:2, which mentions her among those who were ministering to Jesus. Mary Magdalene has sometimes mistakenly been described as a woman of bad character and loose morals, simply because Mark 16:9 states that Jesus had cast seven demons out of her. Nor is there any reason to conclude that she was the same person as the sinful woman whom Simon the Pharisee treated with such disdain and contempt (Luke 7:36–50).

Mary Magdalene was among the "many women who followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering to Him" (Matt. 27:55). She was one of the women at Calvary who were "looking on from afar" (Mark 15:40) when Jesus died on the cross (also John 19:25). She was at Joseph's tomb when the body of Jesus was wrapped in a fine linen cloth and a large stone was rolled against the door of the tomb (Matt. 27:61; Mark 15:47). And she was a witness of the risen Christ (Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:1; Luke 24:10; John 20:1). In fact, she was the first of any of Jesus' followers to see Him after His resurrection (Mark 16:9; John 20:11–18).

Apparently Mary is called “Magdalene” because she was a native or inhabitant of MAGDALA.

MAGDIEL [MAG deh el]—an Edomite clan chief, descended from Esau (1 Chr. 1:54).

MAGGOT (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MAGI [MAY jie] (see WISE MEN).

MAGIC, SORCERY, AND DIVINATION—occult practices, such as fortune-telling and witchcraft, which were common among the pagan nations of the ancient world. But such attempts to control evil spirits were expressly forbidden to the Hebrew people. Deuteronomy 18:10–11 mentions the following specific occult practices that were forbidden by the law of Moses.

This phrase refers to the practice of child sacrifice. This seems incredible to us today, but the very fact that it was outlawed by God indicates it must have been done in Bible times. Second Kings 16:3 records that King Ahaz sacrificed his son in this way: “indeed he made his son pass through the fire.” No doubt he thought that such a sacrifice would appease some pagan god. His grandson, King Manasseh, sacrificed his sons two generations later (2 Kin. 21:6; 2 Chr. 33:6). Second Kings 23:10 reveals that it was mainly the pagan god Molech who required this awful sacrifice. But other false gods apparently also demanded it (2 Kin. 17:31; Jer. 19:5).

The practice of witchcraft, or divination, was a means for extracting information or guidance from a pagan god. The word describes the activity of Balaam the soothsayer, or professional prophet, who was hired to curse Israel (Num. 22:7; 23:23; Josh. 13:22). It also describes the woman at En Dor who brought up the spirit of Samuel. All the major prophets condemned divination (Is. 44:25; Jer. 27:9; 29:8; Ezek. 13:9).

The only places where information is given on the actual means people used in divination is in Genesis 44:5 and Ezekiel 21:21–23. In the case of Joseph’s divining cup, the diviner apparently interpreted the shape of a puddle of oil floating on the water in the cup (Gen. 44:5). Ezekiel 21 describes the king of Babylon as he tried to decide which way to approach Jerusalem. It portrays him as throwing down a handful of arrows, hoping that a certain one will point to a route that he believes is the will of his god. It also records that "he consults the images, he looks at the liver" (Ezek. 21:21). Reading and interpreting the livers of sacrificial animals was another form of determining the will of the gods.

Soothsaying is a relatively rare word in the Bible that describes some form of divination, the practitioner of which is also described by the KJV as "observer of times" (Deut. 18:10). Because it sounds like a Hebrew word for "cloud," some scholars believe it refers to cloud reading. This may have been similar to tea-leaf reading or astrology, which is a reading of the stars. God forbids the practice (Deut. 18:10, 14; Lev. 19:26). Wicked King Manasseh was also guilty of this sin (2 Kin. 21:6; 2 Chr. 33:6). The prophets of the Old Testament also condemned this occult practice (Is. 2:6; 57:3; Jer. 27:9; Mic. 5:12).

Behind this phrase, also rendered as "enchantments" (KJV), lie four different Hebrew words. The most common of the four occurs in Genesis 30:27, in reference to Laban's "experience"; in Genesis 44:5 and 15, referring to Joseph's cup; and in Numbers 23:23 and 24:1, describing Balaam's activity. Leviticus 19:26 and Deuteronomy 18:10 specifically outlawed this practice as well. Another of the words used for the practice seems to mean "whisper," and it may indicate the way the enchanter lowered his voice. In Ecclesiastes 10:11 interpreting omens is connected with snake charming.

Sorcery is forbidden in the Law of Moses (Ex. 22:18; Deut. 18:10). Sorcery was apparently practiced by the worst of the kings of Israel and Judah (2 Kin. 9:22; 2 Chr. 33:6), but it was denounced by the prophets (Nah. 3:4).

This phrase, also translated as "charm," appears in Deuteronomy 18:11, once in the Psalms "Which will not heed the voice of charmers," (58:5), and twice in Isaiah (47:9, 12). Sometimes it is rendered as "enchantments." A different Hebrew word lies behind this translation in Isaiah 19:3. Because it is related to a word for "bind," it may mean "casting a spell" ("spell-binding").

This phrase may refer to the same thing as practicing wizardry. The word describes the witch at En Dor whom Saul engaged to conduct a seance and bring up the spirit of Samuel (1 Sam. 28:3, 9; familiar spirits, KJV). The woman succeeded either by the power of God or the power of the Devil. As with other practices in this list, it was forbidden by the law of God, practiced by bad kings, and condemned by the prophets. In two places the prophet Isaiah hinted that consulting mediums may be a kind of ventriloquism (8:19; 29:4).

The word for “spiritist” always appears with “witch.” The root of the word in Hebrew is the verb “to know.” In modern English “wizard” means someone very wise or inventive, a very clever or skillful person. But in the Bible it is always a forbidden thing, a kind of black magic. This is why most modern versions translate the word as “spiritist,” “fortune-teller,” or “sorcerer.”

Necromancy is another word used for this practice. The phrase occurs only in Deuteronomy 18:11 “or one who conjures spells, or a medium, or a spiritist, or one who calls up the dead,” although this is exactly what an Old Testament witch did. The Bible gives us no indication that we can expect to talk with people who have died.

The Hebrew word translated as “magic” appears only in connection with Egyptian and Babylonian magicians. The first cluster of verses relates to Joseph in Egypt (Gen. 41:8, 24); the second appears in connection with the plagues (Ex. 7:11—9:11); and the third deals with Daniel and the various governmentsupported magicians of Babylon (Dan. 1:20; 2:2, 10, 27; 4:7, 9; 5:11). This term is never used in connection with the nation of Israel, so apparently it was not a threat or a temptation. In all the Old Testament contexts the ineffectiveness of magicians is underscored.

“Magic” actually comes from a Greek word that appears several times in the New Testament. Simon the sorcerer is one example (Acts 8:9–25). And Elymas the sorcerer is another (Acts 13:6–8). They may have been something like the “itinerant Jewish exorcists” (Acts 19:13) who attempted to drive evil spirits out of people in the name of Jesus.

Still another New Testament word translated “sorcery” comes from the same Greek word as our English word “pharmacy.” Quite obviously this has to do with drugs; a more relevant and contemporary application could hardly be found. The denunciations contained in Revelation 9:21; 18:23; 21:8; and 22:15 apply to those who use drugs to bring on trances during which they claim to have supernatural knowledge or power.

MAGNIFICAT [mag NIFF ih caht] (it magnifies)—Mary's song of praise when she was greeted by her cousin Elizabeth before the birth of Christ (Luke 1:46–55). In Latin the song begins with the word magnificat. Mary's song is modeled on the Song of Hannah (1 Sam. 2:1–10). Like Mary, HANNAH was a godly woman who miraculously bore a son through the intervention of God. Hannah's son, Samuel, anointed David as king in Israel (1 Samuel 16); Mary's Son would be the final and permanent Davidic King (Luke 1:32–33).

The Magnificat has two main sections. Verses 46–49 are very personal. They celebrate God's graciousness in choosing this humble maiden to be the mother of the Messiah. Verses 50–55 connect God's activity in the coming of Jesus with God's age-long pattern of putting down the proud, the mighty, and the rich, and of raising up the lowly and the hungry.

MAGOG [MAY gog] (land of Gog)—the name of a man and a people in the Bible:

1. The second son of Japheth and a grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:2).
2. The descendants of Magog (Ezek. 38:2), possibly a people who lived in northern Asia and Europe. The Jewish historian Josephus identified these people as the Scythians, known for their destructive warfare. Magog may be a comprehensive term meaning "northern barbarians." The people of Magog are described as skilled horsemen (Ezek. 38:15) and experts in the use of the bow and arrow (Ezek. 39:3, 9). The Book of Revelation uses Ezekiel's prophetic imagery to portray the final, apocalyptic encounter between good and evil at the end of this age. "Gog and Magog" (Rev. 20:8–9) symbolize the anti-Christian forces of the world.

MAGOR-MISSABIB [MAY gore meh SAY bib] (fear on every side)—a symbolic name given by the prophet Jeremiah to PASHHUR, the chief governor of the temple (Jer. 20:3). Jeremiah prophesied that Pashhur and his family would be taken captive to Babylon (Jer. 20:1–6).

MAGPIASH [MAG peh ash]—an Israelite chief who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:20).

MAHALAB [muh HAY lub]—a town in the territory of Asher (Josh. 19:29, NRSV). The NKJV translates it “at the sea.”

MAHALAH [muh HAY luh]—a form of MAHLAH.

MAHALALEEL [muh HAY luh lee el] (God shines forth)—the name of two men in the Bible:

1. A son of Cainan (1 Chr. 1:2), also spelled Maleleel.
2. An Israelite of the tribe of Judah (Neh. 11:4).

MAHALATH [MAY huh lath]—the name of two women and a musical term in the Old Testament:

1. A daughter of Ishmael and one of Esau’s wives (Gen. 28:9), perhaps the same person as BASEMATH (Gen. 36:3–4).
2. A daughter of Jerimoth (2 Chr. 11:18).
3. A musical term used in the titles of Psalm 53 and Psalm 88.

Also see MUSIC.

MAHALATH LEANNOTH [MAY huh lath leh AN ahth] (see MUSIC).

MAHALI [MAY huh lye]—a form of MAHLI.

MAHANAIM [may huh NAY im] (two armies)—an ancient town in Gilead, east of the Jordan River in the vicinity of the River Jabbok. Located on the border between the tribes of Manasseh and Gad (Josh. 13:26, 30), Mahanaim was later assigned to the Merarite Levites (Josh. 21:38).

On his way home after an absence of twenty years, Jacob was met by angels of God at this site: “When Jacob saw them, he said, ‘This is God’s camp.’ ” He named the place Mahanaim, meaning “two armies.” This was a significant moment for Jacob, who was about to meet his estranged brother Esau. The knowledge that he was being accompanied by an angelic band undoubtedly brought him the confidence and assurance he needed.

Following the slaying of King Saul by the Philistines, his son Ishbosheth reigned for two years at Mahanaim (2 Sam. 2:8, 12, 29). Later, Mahanaim became the headquarters for David during the rebellion of his son, Absalom (2 Sam. 17:24). Solomon also made Mahanaim the capital of one of his twelve districts (1 Kin. 4:14).

MAHANEH DAN (see DAN, CAMP OF).

MAHARAI [muh HAR ay eye]—one of David's mighty men. Maharai was captain over 24,000 men (2 Sam. 23:28; 1 Chr. 11:30; 27:13).

MAHATH [MAY hath]—the name of two temple servants in the Old Testament:

1. A priest who helped purify the sanctuary (1 Chr. 6:35).
2. A Levite overseer of temple offerings in Hezekiah's time (2 Chr. 31:13). He may be identical with Mahath No. 1.

MAHAVITE [MAY huh vight]—the family name of Eliel, one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:46).

MAHAZIOTH [muh HAY zeh ahth] (visions)—chief of the twenty-third division of musicians in the temple during David's reign (1 Chr. 25:4, 30).

MAHER-SHALAL-HASH-BAZ [MAY her SHAL al HASH baz] (hasten the booty, speed the plunder)—the symbolic name of the second son of the prophet Isaiah (Is. 8:1, 3), signifying the doom of Damascus and Samaria and the destruction of Syria and Israel, who had formed a military alliance against Jerusalem (Is. 7:1).

MAHLAH [MAH luh] (weak one)—the name of two people in the Old Testament:

1. The oldest of the five daughters of Zelophehad (Num. 26:33). Because Zelophehad had no sons, his daughters were allowed to inherit their father's estate (Num. 36:1–13).
2. The third child of Hammoleketh (1 Chr. 7:18; Mahalah, KJV).

MAHLI [MAH leh] (weak)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The oldest son of Merari and founder of the Mahlites (Num. 3:33), also called Mahali (Ex. 6:19).

2. A son of Mushi (1 Chr. 23:23).

MAHLITES [MAH lights]—a tribal family of Levites descended from MAHLI, No. 1 (Num. 3:33; 26:58).

MAHLON [MAH lahn] (sickly)—the husband of Ruth the Moabitess who died childless in the land of Moab (Ruth 1:1–5).

MAHOL [MAY hall] (dance)—an ancestor of Ethan, Heman, Chalcol, and Darda (1 Kin. 4:31), men known for their wisdom during the reign of King Solomon.

MAHSEIAH [muh SIGH yuh] (the Lord is a refuge)—the father of Neriah (Jer. 32:12; 51:59; Maaseiah, KJV).

MAID (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MAIL, COAT OF (See ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE).

MAIMED (see DISABILITIES AND DEFORMITIES).

MAINSAIL—the principal sail of a ship (Acts 27:40; foresail, NRSV, NIV, REB, NASB).

MAKAZ [MAY kaz]—a city that supplied food for Solomon and his royal household (1 Kin. 4:9).

MAKHELOTH [mak HEE lahth] (assemblies)—a campsite of the Israelites on their journey to Canaan (Num. 33:25–26).

MAKKEDAH [ma KEE duh] (place of shepherds)—a royal city of the Canaanites (see Map 3, A–4). Near this city Joshua killed the five kings of the Amorites, who had formed a military alliance against the Israelites.

MAKTESH [MAK tesh] (mortar)—a place near Jerusalem where silversmiths and silver traders conducted their business during the reign of King Josiah of Judah (Zeph. 1:11; the Mortar, NASB, NRSV; the market district, NIV).

MALACHI [MAL ah kie] (my messenger)—Old Testament prophet and author of the prophetic book that bears his name. Nothing is known about Malachi's life except the few facts that may be inferred from his prophecies. He apparently prophesied after the CAPTIVITY, during the time when NEHEMIAH was leading the people to rebuild Jerusalem's wall and recommit themselves to following God's Law. The people's negligence in paying tithes to God was condemned by both Nehemiah and Malachi (Neh. 13:10–14; Mal. 3:8–10). Also see MALACHI, BOOK OF.

MALACHI, BOOK OF—a short prophetic book of the Old Testament written to rebuke the people of Israel for their shallow worship practices. The name comes from the Hebrew word malachi (1:1), meaning "my messenger" or "messenger of the LORD."

Portions of Malachi are written in the format of a debate, unlike any other book of the Bible. God first makes a statement of truth that is then denied by the people. God then refutes their argument in great detail, restating and proving the truth of His original statement (1:2–7; 2:10–17; 3:7–10). Malachi also uses questions and answers freely to focus his accusations toward the priesthood as well as the people. These features make Malachi one of the most argumentative books of the Bible.

Some scholars believe the word "Malachi" should be interpreted as a description ("my messenger") rather than as the name of a specific person. This line of reasoning concludes that the book was written by an unknown author. But no other book of prophecy in the Old Testament was written anonymously. Although nothing else is known about this person, the weight of tradition has assumed the book was written by a prophet named Malachi. The prophecy can be specifically dated at about 450 B.C.

Malachi was addressed to the nation of Judah almost 100 years after its return from captivity in Babylon. At first the people had been enthusiastic about rebuilding Jerusalem and the temple and restoring their system of worship. But their zeal soon began to wane. They wondered about God's love for them as His Chosen People. They began to offer defective animals as sacrifices and to withhold their tithes and offerings. Malachi was written to call the people back to authentic worship of their Redeemer God.

The prophecy of Malachi is noted for its vivid portrayal of the love of God as well as His might and power. Israel needed to be reminded of these truths at a time when widespread doubt had dashed its expectations of the Messiah.

Malachi leaves us with the feeling that the story is not yet finished, that God still has promises to fulfill on behalf of His people. After Malachi came 400 long years of silence. But when the time was right, heaven would burst forth in song at the arrival of the Messiah.

MALACHITE (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

MALCAM [MAL kam] (their king)—a Benjamite, the fourth of the seven sons of Shaharaim by his wife Hodesh (1 Chr. 8:9; Malcham, KJV, REB).

MALCHAM [MAL kam]—a form of MALCAM. Also used (Zeph. 1:5, KJV) as a form of Milcom.

MALCHIAH [mal KYE ah] (the Lord is my king)—the name of two or three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Parosh (Ezra 10:25). He divorced his pagan wife after the captivity.
2. The father of Pashhur (Jer. 38:1; Malkijah, NIV). King Zedekiah of Judah sent Pashhur to inquire of the Lord concerning the military situation with Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. Malchiah is also called Melchiah (Jer. 21:1).
3. A royal prince—“the king’s son” (Jer. 38:6)—in the time of Zedekiah, king of Judah. Jeremiah was cast into the dungeon of Malchiah. This is probably the same person as Malchiah No. 2.

MALCHIEL [MAL keh el] (God is my king)—younger son of Beriah (Gen. 46:17) and founder of a tribal family, the MALCHIELITES (Num. 26:45).

MALCHIELITES [MAL keh el ites]—the descendants of MALCHIEL (Num. 26:45).

MALCHIJAH [mal KIE jah] (the Lord is my king)—the name of nine men in the Old Testament:

1. A Gershonite Levite and descendant of Asaph (1 Chr. 6:40).
2. A Levite descended from Aaron. Malchijah’s descendants formed the fifth division of priests during David’s time (1 Chr. 24:9).
3. A son of Parosh (Ezra 10:25). After the captivity Malchijah divorced his pagan wife.
4. A son of Harim who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:31).
5. A son of Rechab (Neh. 3:14).
6. A member of the guild of goldsmiths who helped repair the Jerusalem wall after the captivity (Neh. 3:31).
7. One who helped Ezra explain the Law to the people (Neh. 8:4).
8. One of those who sealed the covenant in Nehemiah’s time (Neh. 10:3).

9. A priest who officiated at the dedication of Jerusalem's wall (Neh. 12:42).

MALCHIRAM [mal KYE ram] (my king is exalted)—a son of King Jeconiah (Jehoiachin) of Judah and grandson of King Jehoiakim (1 Chr. 3:18).

MALCHISHUA [mal kye SHOO uh] (my king is salvation)—one of the four sons of King Saul killed by the Philistines at Mount Gilboa (1 Sam. 14:49; 31:2; Melchishua, KJV).

MALCHUS [MAL kus] (ruler)—a servant of the high priest who was present at the arrest of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane. Simon Peter struck Malchus with a sword and cut off his ear (John 18:10).

MALEFACTOR—KJV translation of two Greek words meaning "evildoer" (John 18:30) and "evil worker" (Luke 23:32–33, 39). The two thieves crucified with Jesus were malefactors. (Luke 23:32–33, 39; criminals, NKJV, NIV).

MALELEEL [muh LEE leh el]—a form of MAHALALEEL No. 1.

MALICE—a vicious intention, or a desire of one person to hurt another (Titus 3:3). Malice is often irrational, usually based on the false belief that the person against whom it is directed has the same intention. It is contrary to love (1 Cor. 13:4–7). Christians are instructed to rid their lives of malice (Eph. 4:31–32).

MALKIJAH [mal KIE juh]—a form of MALCHIAH No. 2.

MALLOTHI [MAL oh thigh]—a son of Heman who served in the temple sanctuary during David's reign (1 Chr. 25:4, 26).

MALLOW (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MALLUCH [MAL uhk]—the name of six men in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite of the family of Merari (1 Chr. 6:44).
2, 3. A son of Babi (Ezra 10:29) and a son of Harim (Ezra 10:32), each of whom divorced his pagan wife after the captivity.

4, 5. A priest (Neh. 10:4) and a chief of the people (Neh. 10:27), both of whom sealed the covenant with Nehemiah after the captivity.

6. A priest who returned to Jerusalem after the captivity (Neh. 12:1–2). In Nehemiah 12:14, Malluch is also spelled Malluchi, NASB, NRSV; Melichu, NKJV and Melicu, KJV.

MALLUCHI [mal LOU kih]—a form of MALLUCH No. 6.

MALTA [MAWL tuh]—a small island in the Mediterranean Sea between Sicily and Africa, about 145 kilometers (90 miles) southwest of Syracuse (see Map 8, A–2). The apostle Paul was shipwrecked on Malta (Acts 28:1).

With its fine natural harbors, Malta was a convenient haven for ships. Colonized by the Phoenicians, it was captured by the Greeks (736 B.C.), the Carthaginians (528 B.C.), and the Romans (242 B.C.).

After the shipwreck, Paul stayed on Malta for three months (Acts 28:11; Melita, KJV) before he was able to board another ship to Rome. During this time he shared the gospel with the inhabitants of the island and started a church on Malta. Thus an incidental event in the life of Paul led to the expansion of the kingdom of God.

MAMMON [MAM mun] (riches)—a word that speaks of wealth (Matt. 6:24; Luke 16:9, 11, 13), especially wealth that is used in opposition to God. Mammon is a transliteration of an Aramaic word that means "wealth, riches," or "earthly goods." Modern versions translate it as "money," "gold," and "material possessions." Jesus said that no one can serve two masters—God and money—at the same time. Nor can mammon (money) purchase security (see Jesus' parable of the rich fool in Luke 12:13–21). "For what is a man profited if he gains the whole world, and loses his own soul?" (Matt. 16:26; Mark 8:36; Luke 9:25).

MAMRE [MAM reh]—the name of a man and a place in the Old Testament:

1. An Amorite chief who formed an alliance with Abraham against CHEDORLAOMER (Gen. 14:13, 24).
2. A place in the district of Hebron, west of Machpelah, where Abraham lived. It was noted for its "terebinth trees" (Gen. 13:18; 18:1), or "oaks" (NRSV). Near Mamre was the cave of MACHPELAH, in which Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—and their wives, Sarah, Rebekah, and Leah—were buried (Gen. 49:13). The site of ancient Mamre has been identified as Ramet el-Khalil, about 3 kilometers (2 miles) north of Hebron.

MAN, MANKIND—God's highest creation, made in God's own image.

The Bible states that man was created by God. This truth is found especially in Genesis 1:26–31 and 2:7–25. These passages teach that God did not use any previously existing living creature in bringing man into being.

In the second account, God is described as using "dust of the earth" (Gen. 2:7) to form man. Some have understood this to represent some high form of life that was still sub-human. This view, sometimes called "theistic evolution," maintains that man's physical nature developed from other forms of life through evolution, but that God modified or adapted this previously existing creature by giving it a soul. This approach interprets the passage somewhat more symbolically. Others, however, have taken this passage literally and understand the reference to dust as meaning that God actually created man from dust.

Early students believed that by tracing the genealogies in the Bible and adding up the ages of the persons involved in the several generations, it was possible to establish a date for the creation of man. Perhaps the most extensive effort of this type was that done by Bishop James Ussher, who calculated the origin of man at 4004 B.C.

Closer study of the genealogies has revealed, however, that they cannot be used in quite this fashion. Thus, the apparent difference between the facts of Scripture and the great age that anthropologists assign to man is found not to be quite so serious. Attempts to relate Adam to any of the ancient specimens of man discovered by anthropologists will depend upon how we define humanity, because we know little about Adam’s appearance, size, brain capacity, and so forth. Various Christian anthropologists assign dates for man’s origin anywhere from a few million to a few thousand years ago.

Some believe that man is composed of two or more components. They see man as made up of body and soul. Others, basing their argument upon 1 Thessalonians 5:23, assign three parts—body, soul, and spirit—to man. It appears, however, from passages such as John 12:27 and 13:21 that “soul” and “spirit” may be used interchangeably in the Bible as terms meaning essentially the same thing.

More recently, biblical scholarship has declared man to be more of a unity. Actions of man are not pictured as issuing from his body, soul, or spirit, but from the whole person.

Man was created for fellowship or communion with God. Unlike any of the other creatures, he has a fundamental likeness to God: he is created in the “image of God” (Gen. 1:26–27). Man meets and talks with God in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2:15–17). This was the original intention of God for man. It also becomes God’s continuing intention, as He repeatedly intervenes to draw people, despite their sinful depravity, back to Himself. Ultimately, the Redeemer—Jesus—was sent for this reason as well. Man is not only to have fellowship with God; he is to glorify Him, by what he is and what he does (1 Cor. 10:31; Eph. 1:12).

Man is also created to do God’s will and work. Man was created in God’s image so he might “have dominion” over the rest of creation (Gen. 1:26, 28), or perform God’s work of ruling the creation in His place. This assignment of work to be done came before the FALL. As a result of the Fall, work took on its unpleasant or cursed character (Gen. 3:17–19).

God has acted to restore man to his original state of innocence and fellowship with God. He has done this by sending His Son to die for man so man might be reconciled to God and be renewed or “born again” (John 3:3, 7). The aim of this is to restore man to a dynamic, vital relationship with God (Rom. 6:4; 2 Cor. 5:20).

Man is most fully human when fulfilling the intention of God for him: worshiping, serving, and loving God. Of all creatures, only man has been given this blessed privilege.

MAN OF SIN (see ANTICHRIST).

MANAEN [MAN uh en] (comforter)—a man listed as one of the “prophets and teachers” (Acts 13:1) in the church of Antioch of Syria. Luke records that Manaen “had been brought up with” Herod the tetrarch. Some scholars believe Manaen may have been a playmate of the young Herod, or may have been educated with him at Rome. In any case, his past association with Herod marked Manaen as a man of distinction.

MANAHATH [MAN uh hath] (resting place)—the name of a man and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Shobal and a grandson of Seir the Horite (Gen. 36:23).
2. A city to which certain Benjamite descendants of Geba were forced to move (1 Chr. 8:6).

MANAHATHITES [man uh HATH eyts]—a form of MANAHETHITES.

MANAHETHITES [muh NAY heth eyts]—the descendants of a man or the inhabitants of a place named Manahath, presumably belonging to the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:54). The NRSV, NIV, and NASB translate as Manahathites. Other forms are MANUHOTH (NKJV) and Manahathites (NRSV).

MANASSEH [muh NASS uh] (causing to forget)—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. Joseph's firstborn son who was born in Egypt to Asenath the daughter of Poti-Pherah, priest of On (Gen. 41:50–51). Like his younger brother EPHRAIM, Manasseh was half Hebrew and half Egyptian. Manasseh's birth caused Joseph to forget the bitterness of his past experiences. Manasseh and Ephraim were both adopted by Jacob and given status as sons just like Jacob's own sons Reuben and Simeon (Gen. 48:5).
2. The grandfather of the Jonathan who was one of the priests of the graven image erected by the tribe of Dan (Judg. 18:30).
3. The fourteenth king of Judah, the son of HEZEKIAH born to Hephzibah (2 Kin. 21:1–18). Manasseh reigned longer (fifty-five years) than any other Israelite king and had the dubious distinction of being Judah's most wicked king. He came to the throne at the age of twelve, although he probably co-reigned with Hezekiah for ten years. His father's godly influence appears to have affected Manasseh only negatively, and he reverted to the ways of his evil grandfather, Ahaz.

   Committed to idolatry, Manasseh restored everything Hezekiah had abolished. Manasseh erected altars to Baal; he erected an image of Asherah in the temple; he worshiped the sun, moon, and stars; he recognized the Ammonite god Molech and sacrificed his son to him (2 Kin. 21:6); he approved DIVINATION; and he killed all who protested his evil actions. It is possible that he killed the prophet Isaiah; rabbinical tradition states that Manasseh gave the command that Isaiah be sawn in two (see also Heb. 11:37). Scripture summarizes Manasseh's reign by saying he "seduced them [Judah] to do more evil than the nations whom the Lord had destroyed before the children of Israel" (2 Kin. 21:9).

   Manasseh was temporarily deported to Babylon where he humbled himself before God in repentance (2 Chr. 33:11–13). Upon Manasseh's return to Jerusalem, he tried to reverse the trends he had set; but his reforms were quickly reversed after his death by his wicked son Amon.
4. A descendant, or resident, of Pahath-Moab (Ezra 10:30). After the captivity he divorced his pagan wife.
5. An Israelite of the family of Hashum. Manasseh divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:33).

MANASSEH, TRIBE OF [muh NASS uh]—the tribe that traced its origin to MANASSEH No. 1. The tribe of Manasseh descended through Manasseh's son, Machir; Machir's son, Gilead; and Gilead's 6 sons (Num. 26:28–34). During their first 430 years in Egypt, the tribe of Manasseh increased to 32,200 men of war (Num. 1:34–35). By the second census, 39 years later, it numbered 52,700 (Num. 26:34).

In the settlement of Canaan, land was provided for Manasseh on both sides of the Jordan River. Eastern Manasseh was able to occupy its land only after it had aided the other tribes in conquering their territories (Num. 32:1–33).

Because of the Canaanite fortresses and strong cities in the land (for example, Megiddo, Taanach, Dor, Ibleam, and Beth Shean), western Manasseh had difficulty settling its territory. When it became strong, however, it did not expel the Canaanites but subjected them to tribute (Josh. 17:11–13).

The tribe of Manasseh was known for its valor, and it claimed two famous judges: Gideon (Judg. 6:11—8:35) and Jephthah (Judg. 11:1—12:7). During Saul's reign men from Manasseh joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:19–20). Later many people from both western and eastern Manasseh rallied to make David king at Hebron (1 Chr. 12:31, 37).

MANASSITES [muh NASS ites]—the descendants of MANASSEH, the older son of Joseph and Asenath (Deut. 4:43; Judg. 12:4).

MANDRAKE (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MANEH [MAN eh] (see MONEY; WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

MANEIT (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

MANGER—a feedingtrough, crib, or open box in a stable designed to hold fodder for livestock (Luke 2:7, 12; 13:15). In Bible times, mangers were made of clay mixed with straw or from stones cemented with mud. In structures built by King Ahab at Megiddo, a manger cut from a limestone block was discovered. Mangers were also carved in natural outcroppings of rock, such as livestock being stabled in a cave; some were constructed of masonry.

After Jesus' birth as the Son of God who would rule the kingdom from David's throne forever (Luke 1:32–35), he was placed in the humble obscurity of a manger (Luke 2:7). The baby Jesus lying in a manger was a sign to the shepherds (Luke 2:12, 16). Compare Jesus' statement in Luke 9:58: "Foxes have holes and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay His head." Also see CRIB.

MANNA—the food that God provided miraculously for the Israelites in the wilderness during their Exodus (Ex. 16:15, 31, 33; Num. 11:6–9).

As long as the Hebrew people wandered in the Sinai Peninsula, they were able to gather manna from the ground each morning (Ex. 16:35). They ate the manna for forty years, "until they came to the border of the land of Canaan" (Ex. 16:35). According to Joshua 5:12, the manna did not stop until the Israelites had crossed the Jordan River, had camped at Gilgal, had kept the Passover, and "had eaten the produce of the land."

"What is it?" (Ex. 16:15). This question, asked by the astonished Israelites, led to the name "manna" being applied to the "small round substance as fine as frost" (Ex. 16:14). Manna looked "like white coriander seed." It tasted like "wafers made with honey" (Ex. 16:31) or "pastry prepared with oil" (Num. 11:8).

The manna appeared with the morning dew. The Hebrews were instructed to gather only what was needed for one day, because any surplus would breed tiny worms and be spoiled. On the sixth day, however, the Israelites were permitted to gather enough for two days; they were forbidden to gather any manna on the Sabbath. Miraculously, the two days' supply of food gathered on the sixth day did not spoil.

Manna could apparently be baked, boiled, ground, beaten, cooked in pans, and made into cakes (Ex. 16:23; Num. 11:8). Moses even commanded Aaron to put a pot of manna in the ARK OF THE COVENANT (Ex. 16:32–34), so future generations might see the "bread of heaven" on which their ancestors had fed. The New Testament records that inside the holy of holies in the temple, the ark of the covenant contained, among other things, "the golden pot that had the manna" (Heb. 9:4).

Numerous attempts have been made to identify manna with substances found in the Sinai Peninsula. Insects living on the tamarisk bush produce a small, sweet substance during the early summer that has been identified as manna by some scholars. But this substance does not fulfill all the biblical requirements for manna. Other suggestions have included resinous gums that drip from some wilderness shrubs. But such substances do not resemble the manna that the Hebrews gathered and ate. Manna certainly was nourishing, but it cannot be identified with any known food.

Manna was a visible reminder to the Hebrews of God's providential care for His people.

MANOAH [muh NOH uh] (quiet)—father of Samson the judge (Judg. 13:2–23). A Danite of the city of Zorah, Manoah and his wife tried to persuade Samson not to marry a Philistine woman, but he was determined to do so. They accompanied Samson to Timnah, where the ceremonies took place. Samson was buried "between Zorah and Eshtaol in the tomb of his father Manoah" (Judg. 16:31).

MANSERVANT (see SLAVERY).

MANSIONS—the translation of a Greek word in John 14:2 that means “rooms.” Jesus did not describe HEAVEN as a neighborhood of beautiful country estates, where each person will have his own mansion. He promised many individual rooms, or dwelling-places, within the one house. In heaven the believer will experience the intimacy of dwelling with the Father and all other believers “under one roof.”

MANSLAYER, MANSTEALER (see LAW).

MANTLE (see DRESS OF THE BIBLE).

MANUHOTH [man YOU hoth] (resting places)—the families of Shobal and Salma, two sons of Caleb, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:52; Menuhoth, NRSV; Manahathites, NIV, NASB; Manahethites, KJV, REB).

MANURE (see DUNG HILL).

MANUSCRIPTS (see BIBLE).

MAOCH [MAY ahk]—the father of Achish, king of Gath (1 Sam. 27:2). Maoch may be the same person as Maachah (1 Kin. 2:39).

MAON [MAY ahn] (dwelling)—the name of a city, a place, and a man in the Old Testament:

1. A city in the mountain country of Judah, near Carmel (Josh. 15:55).
2. A wilderness east of Maon and west of the Dead Sea (1 Sam. 23:24–25) where David and his men hid from King Saul.
3. A son of Shammai (1 Chr. 2:45).

MAONITES [MAY ahn ites]—a people who oppressed Israel (Judg. 10:12). The exact identification of this tribe is uncertain. They may have been the MEUNITES (2 Chr. 26:7), an Arab tribe south of the Dead Sea.

MARA [MAY ruh] (bitter)—the name that Naomi chose for herself after the death of her husband and sons to express her sadness and bereavement (Ruth 1:20).

MARAH [MAH rah] (bitter)—a pool, or well, of bitter water in the Wilderness of Shur (Num. 33:8–9). Marah was the first place where the Israelites stopped after crossing the Red Sea (see Map 2, B–2). The water from the well at Marah was so bitter it was undrinkable (Ex. 15:23–25).

MARALAH [marr ih LAH]—a place on the western border of Zebulun (Josh. 19:11). Tell Ghalta, north of Megiddo in the Valley of Jezreel, may be the site.

MARANATHA [mar a NATH a] (Our Lord, come!)—an Aramaic expression written by the apostle Paul as he concluded his first letter to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 16:22, KJV). The meaning seems to be, "Our Lord is coming soon, and he will judge all those who do not love him." The fact that Paul used an Aramaic expression in addressing the Gentile Christians of Corinth indicates that "maranatha" had become a familiar expression of Christian hope—a watchword of the imminent SECOND COMING of the Lord.

MARBLE (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

MARCUS [MAR kus]—Greek form of MARK (1 Pet. 5:13, KJV).

MARE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MAREAL [MAHR ih al]—a form of MARALAH.

MARESHAH [muh REE shuh] (summit)—the name of a city (see Map 3, A–4) and two men in the Old Testament:

1. A fortified city in the lowland of Judah (Josh. 15:44). King Rehoboam of Judah strengthened the fortifications of Mareshah (2 Chr. 11:8). King Asa of Judah defeated Zerah the Ethiopian and his huge army at Mareshah, in the Valley of Zephathah (2 Chr. 14:9–10).
2. The founder of Hebron (1 Chr. 2:42).
3. A son of Laadah, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:21).

MARHESHVAN [mar HESH van]—the eighth month of the sacred Hebrew year, also called BUL (1 Kin. 6:38). Also see CALENDAR.

MARI [MAHR ee]—an ancient city of Mesopotamia on the west bank of the Euphrates River. It was the center of the Amorite kingdom that flourished about 1800–1700 B.C. Although the city is not mentioned in the Bible, Mari is of great archaeological importance. The most important finds at Mari were a ZIGGURAT; various temples dedicated to pagan gods and goddesses; and 25,000 clay tablets, which yielded much information about legal, economic, and diplomatic matters that shed light on the patriarchal period.

MARINER—one who directs or assists in the navigation of a ship; a seaman or sailor. The city of Tyre was depicted poetically by the prophet Ezekiel as a splendid ship made of materials from widespread lands and navigated by mariners from many places. When the great city falls, like a ship sinking in the midst of the sea, those on the shore lament its fate (Ezekiel 27).

MARJORAM (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MARK, GOSPEL OF—the second book of the New Testament and the earliest of the four gospels, according to most New Testament scholars. The Gospel of Mark portrays the person of Jesus more by what He does than by what He says. It is characterized by a vivid, direct style that leaves the impression of familiarity with the original events.

Although Mark is the shortest of the four gospels, it pays close attention to matters of human interest. Mark is fond of linking the episodes of Jesus’ ministry together with catchwords (for example, “immediately,” “then”), rather than editorial comment; and frequently he interrupts a longer story by inserting a smaller one within it (Mark 5:21–43; 6:6–30; 11:12–25; 14:1–11).

The Gospel of Mark can be divided roughly into two parts: Jesus’ ministry in Galilee (chaps. 1–9) and Jesus’ ministry in Judea and Jerusalem (chaps. 10–16). Mark begins his gospel with the appearance of John the Baptist (1:2–8), followed by the baptism of Jesus (1:9–11). He comments on the temptation of Jesus only briefly (1:12–13) and concludes his introduction by a capsule of Jesus’ message, “The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand. Repent, and believe in the gospel” (1:15). Then follows a series of fourteen brief stories depicting Jesus as a teacher, healer, and exorcist in and around His hometown of Capernaum. In these stories Jesus often is in conflict with the Jewish authorities of His day.

In chapter four Mark assembles a number of Jesus' parables. In each parable Jesus uses common experiences to tell who God is and what human beings can become. Mark then resumes the activities of Jesus as an open-air preacher and healer with a series of seventeen more episodes (4:35—8:26).

The first half of the gospel reaches a climax when Jesus is en route to Caesarea Philippi and asks His disciples, "Who do men say that I am?" (8:27). Peter responds, "You are the Christ" (8:29); and Jesus then shocks the disciples by explaining that the Christ must suffer and die, and whoever desires to be His disciple must be prepared for the same (8:31—9:1). A glorious TRANSFIGURATION of Jesus immediately follows this pronouncement; it shows that the Father in heaven confirms Jesus' role as a suffering Messiah (9:2–13). Then follows another series of twenty-three stories as Jesus journeys to Jerusalem for the Passover.

In the various encounters included in the Gospel of Mark, Jesus tries to drive home the truth He taught at Peter's confession—that messiahship and discipleship involve suffering: "Whoever desires to become great among you shall be your servant. . . . For even the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many" (10:43, 45).

Chapter 13 contains a discourse of Jesus on the end of the age. Chapters 14–15 conclude the Passion story, with accounts of Jesus' betrayal (14:1–11), His last supper with His disciples (14:12–31), His arrest (14:32–52), trial (14:53—15:20), and crucifixion (15:21–41). At the end, Jesus suffers passively "as a sheep before its shearers is silent" (Is. 53:7). In the oldest manuscripts the gospel ends with an angel announcing the resurrection of Jesus (16:1–8).

The Gospel of Mark nowhere mentions the name of its author. The earliest witness to identify the author was Papias (A.D. 60–130), a bishop of Hierapolis in Asia Minor (Turkey). Papias called him Mark, an interpreter of Peter. Papias then added that Mark had not followed Jesus during His lifetime, but later had written down Peter's recollections accurately, although not always in their proper order.

Subsequent tradition unanimously agrees with Papias in ascribing this gospel to Mark.

The Mark believed to have written this gospel is JOHN MARK. He was a native of Jerusalem (Acts 12:12), and later became an associate of both Peter (1 Pet. 5:13) and Paul (2 Tim. 4:11). Eusebius tells us that Mark composed his gospel in Rome while in the services of Peter. There are good reasons to accept this report. The gospel has many characteristics of an eyewitness account, for which Peter would have been responsible (1:29–31). Moreover, it is unlikely that the early church would have assigned a gospel to a minor figure like John Mark unless he in fact were its author, since the books of the New Testament normally required authorship by an apostle to qualify for acceptance in the CANON.

It may be that as a youth Mark was present at the arrest of Jesus and that he has left an anonymous signature in the story of the young man who fled naked (14:51–52). If Mark composed his gospel while in the services of Peter, and Peter died in Rome between A.D. 64 and A.D. 68, then the gospel would have been written in Italy in the early 60's.

The Gospel of Mark is evidently written for Gentiles, and for Romans in particular. Mark translates Aramaic and Hebrew phrases (3:17; 5:41; 7:34; 14:36); he transliterates familiar Latin expressions into Greek, for example, legio (5:9), quadrans (12:42), praetorium (15:16), centurio (15:39). Moreover, Mark presents Romans in a neutral (12:17; 15:1–10), and sometimes favorable (15:39), light. The emphasis on suffering in the gospel may indicate that Mark composed his gospel in order to strengthen Christians in Rome who were undergoing persecutions under Nero.

Mark begins his gospel with the statement, "The beginning of the gospel [good news] of Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (1:1); and the last human to speak in the gospel is the centurion who confesses at the cross, "Truly this Man was the Son of God!" (15:39). One of Mark's key objectives is to portray Jesus as God's Son. At decisive points in his story, he reveals the mystery of Jesus' person. At the baptism (1:11) and transfiguration (9:7) the Father in heaven calls Jesus "My beloved Son," thus indicating that Jesus shares a unique relationship with the Father. Demons recognize Jesus as God's Son, too (1:24; 3:11; 5:7), testifying that Jesus is equipped with God's authority and power.

Mark, however, is careful to avoid portraying Jesus as an unrealistic superstar whose feet do not touch the ground. The Son of God is not immune from the problems of life, but enters fully into them. He must be obedient to the will of the Father, even to death on a cross. Mark portrays Jesus according to the model of the Suffering Servant of Isaiah. Thus, Jesus tells a parable, which ultimately reflects His own fate: the only son of the owner of a vineyard suffers rejection and death at the hands of rebellious tenant farmers (12:1–12).

Furthermore, Mark does not emphasize Jesus' deity at the expense of His humanity. Jesus appears sorrowful (14:34), disappointed (8:12), displeased (10:14), angry (11:15–17), amazed (6:6), and fatigued (4:38). In no other gospel is Jesus' humanity presented as strongly as in the Gospel of Mark.

For Mark, faith and discipleship have no meaning apart from following the suffering Son of God. Faith is not a magic that works independently of the believer's participation (6:1–6); rather, it draws the believer into intimate union with Jesus as Lord (9:14–29). Jesus' disciples are to be with Him as He is with the Father, and they are given the same tasks of proclamation and power over the forces of evil as He had (3:13–15; 6:7).

As the Son of Man serves in self-abasement, so too must His disciples serve (10:42–45). Discipleship with Christ leads to self-denial and suffering: "Whoever desires to come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me" (8:34). This, however, is not a matter of a religious desire to suffer; rather, when we lose our lives, we find them in Christ (8:35). Thus, we can only know and confess Jesus as God's Son from the vantage point of the cross (15:39). It is only through the Son of God who suffers and dies that we may see into the heart of God (symbolized by the tearing of the temple curtain, thus exposing the Holy of Holies) and enter into fellowship with the Father.

The ending of the Gospel of Mark poses a problem. The two oldest and most important manuscripts of the Greek New Testament (Sinaiticus and Vaticanus) end with the words, "For they were afraid" (16:8). Other manuscripts add, in whole or in part, the material making up verses 9–20. This longer ending, however, is unlike Mark 1:1—16:8 in style and content; it contains material presented exactly as it is in Matthew and Luke. It has long been debated whether Mark intended to end his gospel at 16:8, or whether the original ending was lost and a secondary ending (vv. 9–20) was later added.

The following observations suggest that Mark originally did not end at 16:8, and that the original ending was either lost (for example, the final section of a scroll or codex misplaced or destroyed) or left unfinished (for example, due to Mark's death).

First, it seems unlikely that, having begun the gospel with a bold introduction (1:10) Mark would end it on a note of fear (16:8). Considering the centrality of Jesus throughout the gospel, one would expect an appearance of the resurrected Christ rather than just an announcement of His resurrection.

Second, Mark's Gospel conforms in broad outline to the preaching pattern of the early church (see KERYGMA)—except for the shorter ending at 16:8. It would seem logical that one who drafted a gospel along the lines of the early Christian preaching would not have omitted a central feature like the resurrection (1 Cor. 15:3–26).

Third, the longer, later ending (vv. 9–20) testifies that the early tradition was dissatisfied with the shorter ending of Mark.

Finally, why would Matthew and Luke, both of whom normally follow Mark's report (see GOSPELS), depart from him at the resurrection appearances unless the ending of Mark was somehow defective? These reasons suggest that the shorter ending of Mark (at 16:8) is not the original (or intended) ending—for whatever reason—and that verses 9–20 are a later addition supplied to compensate for the omission.

Another feature of Mark's Gospel concerns the "messianic secret." Often following a miracle, Jesus commands persons healed, onlookers, disciples, and even demons to silence (1:34; 1:44; 3:12; 5:43; 7:36; 8:26; 8:30; 9:9). It has long puzzled readers why Jesus, who came into the world to make Himself known, would work at cross-purposes with His mission by trying to remain hidden.

The puzzle can be explained in part by realizing that Jesus' command to silence was intended to protect Himself from false expectations of the Messiah that were current at that time. For most of Jesus' contemporaries, "messiah" brought up pictures of a military hero overthrowing the Roman rule of Palestine. Jesus had no intention to take up the warrior's sword; rather, He took up the servant's towel.

Another reason why Jesus tried to conceal His miraculous power was because He realized that faith could not be forced upon people by a spectacle (Matt. 4:5–7). Not sight but insight into Jesus' life and purpose could evoke true faith.

Finally, Jesus demanded silence because no title or label could convey Him adequately. Saving knowledge of Jesus needed to come through personal experience with Him. Indeed, until Jesus died on the cross He could not rightly be known as God incognito who reveals Himself to those who are willing to deny self and follow Him in costly discipleship.

MARK, JOHN—an occasional associate of Peter and Paul, and the probable author of the second gospel. Mark's lasting impact on the Christian church comes from his writing rather than his life. He was the first to develop the literary form known as the "gospel" (see GOSPEL) and is rightly regarded as a creative literary artist.

John Mark appears in the New Testament only in association with more prominent personalities and events. His mother, Mary, was an influential woman of Jerusalem who possessed a large house with servants. The early church gathered in this house during Peter's imprisonment under Herod Agrippa I (Acts 12:12). Barnabas and Saul (Paul) took John Mark with them when they returned from Jerusalem to Antioch after their famine-relief visit (Acts 12:25). Shortly thereafter, Mark accompanied Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey as far as Perga. He served in the capacity of "assistant" (Acts 13:5), which probably involved making arrangements for travel, food, and lodging; he may have done some teaching, too.

At Perga John Mark gave up the journey for an undisclosed reason (Acts 13:13); this departure later caused a rift between Paul and Barnabas when they chose their companions for the second missionary journey (Acts 15:37–41). Paul was unwilling to take Mark again and chose Silas; they returned to Asia Minor and Greece. Barnabas persisted in his choice of Mark, who was his cousin (Col. 4:10), and returned with him to his homeland of Cyprus (Acts 15:39; also Acts 4:36).

This break occurred about A.D. 49–50, and John Mark is not heard from again until a decade later. He is first mentioned again, interestingly enough, by Paul—and in favorable terms. Paul asks the Colossians to receive Mark with a welcome (Col. 4:10), no longer as an assistant but as one of his "fellow laborers" (Philem. 24). And during his imprisonment in Rome, Paul tells Timothy to bring Mark with him to Rome, "for he is useful to me for ministry" (2 Tim. 4:11). One final reference to Mark comes also from Peter in Rome; Peter affectionately refers to him as "my son" (1 Pet. 5:13). Thus, in the later references to Mark in the New Testament, he appears to be reconciled to Paul and laboring with the two great apostles in Rome.

Information about Mark's later life is dependent on early church tradition. Writing at an early date, Papias (A.D. 60–130), whose report is followed by Clement of Alexandria (A.D. 150–215), tells us that Mark served as Peter's interpreter in Rome and wrote his gospel from Peter's remembrances. Of his physical appearance we are only told, rather oddly, that Mark was "stumpy fingered." Writing at a later date (about A.D. 325), the church historian Eusebius says that Mark was the first evangelist to Egypt, the founder of the churches of Alexandria, and the first bishop of that city. So great were his converts, both in number and sincerity of commitment, says Eusebius, that the great Jewish philosopher, Philo, was amazed.

MARKET, MARKETPLACE—an open space within cities that was used for business and other public transactions and assemblies. Archaeological investigations have shown that Israelite markets were primarily used as centers of business. Like the bazaars of present-day Oriental towns, they were places for buying and selling goods.

Greek marketplaces, such as those at Philippi (Acts 16:19) and Athens (Acts 17:17), contained more open spaces and were designed to be centers of public life. They were characteristically surrounded by temples, colonnades, public buildings, and numerous statues. Often these Greek marketplaces were carefully paved with stones and shaded by trees.

MAROTH [MAY roth] (bitternesses)—a town in the lowlands of Judah mentioned in connection with the invasion of the Assyrian army "For the inhabitant of Maroth pined for good." (Mic. 1:12).

MARRIAGE—the union of a man and a woman as husband and wife, which becomes the foundation for a home and family.

Marriage was instituted by God when He declared, "It is not good that man should be alone; I will make him a helper comparable to him" (Gen. 2:18). So God fashioned a woman and brought her to the man. On seeing the woman, Adam exclaimed, "This is now bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man" (Gen. 2:23). This passage also emphasizes the truth that "a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and they shall become one flesh" (Gen. 2:24). This suggests that God's ideal is for a man to be the husband of one wife and for the marriage to be permanent.

God's desire for His people was that they marry within the body of believers. The Mosaic Law clearly stated that an Israelite was never to marry a foreigner. The Israelite would be constantly tempted to embrace the spouse's god as well (Ex. 34:10–17; Deut. 7:3–4). Likewise, the apostle Paul commanded the members of the church at Corinth, "Do not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2 Cor. 6:14).

Marriages between Israelites were directed by law, and all incestuous relationships were outlawed (Lev. 18:6–8; 20:19–21). In addition, priests were forbidden to marry prostitutes and divorced women (Lev. 21:7, 13–14). Daughters who inherited their father's possessions had to marry within their tribe or lose their inheritance (Num. 27:8; 36:2–4).

In Old Testament times, the parents chose the mate for their son. The primary reason for this was that the bride became part of the clan. Although they were married and became "one flesh," the couple remained under the authority of the bridegroom's father. The parents chose someone who would best fit into their clan and work harmoniously with her mother-in-law and sisters-in-law.

Sometimes the parents consulted with their children to see if they approved of the choice of mates being made for them. For example, Rebekah was asked if she wanted to marry Isaac (Gen. 24:58). Samson demanded that a certain girl be acquired for him. Although his parents protested, they completed the marriage contract for Samson (Judg. 14:1–4).

Frequently people married at a young age, a fact that made the parents' choice a practical matter. By New Testament times, the Jewish leaders had decided to establish minimum ages for which a marriage contract could be drawn up. The age was set at thirteen for boys and twelve for girls.

Even if the young wife lost her husband in war or accident, she remained within the clan and was wed to her brother-in-law or next of kin (Deut. 25:5–10). This arrangement is known as LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. It is the basis for the story of Ruth and Boaz (Ruth 3:13; 4:1–12).

Although romance before marriage was not unknown in Old Testament times, it played a minor role in the life of teenagers of that era. They did not marry the person they loved; they loved the mate they married. Love began at marriage. When Isaac married Rebekah, the Bible records that “she became his wife, and he loved her” (Gen. 24:67).

A number of customs and steps were involved in finalizing a marriage in Old Testament times. The first was agreeing on a price to be given to the father of the girl. The payment was compensation for the loss of a worker. The sum was mutually agreed upon (Gen. 34:12; Ex. 22:16–17). It could consist of services instead of money. For example, Jacob agreed to work for seven years for Rachel (Gen. 29:18–20). The giving and receiving of money was probably accompanied by a written agreement. After this agreement was made, the couple was considered engaged.

In biblical times, a betrothal for marriage was a binding agreement that set the young woman apart for the young man. The agreement was voided only by death or divorce; one could not get out of the betrothal in any other way. When Joseph discovered that Mary was pregnant, he did not want to make a “public example” of her; instead, he decided to divorce her secretly. However, he did not carry out the divorce, because an angel of the Lord convinced him that the baby to be born to Mary would be the Son of God (Matt. 1:18–25).

During the engagement period, the bridegroom had certain privileges. If war was declared, he was exempt from military duty (Deut. 20:7). He also knew that his bride-to-be was protected by Mosaic Law. If another man raped her, the act was treated as adultery; and the offender was punished accordingly (Deut. 22:23–27). This was considered a more serious crime than the rape of a girl not yet betrothed (Deut. 22:28–29).

The length of engagement varied. Sometimes the couple was married the same day they were engaged. Usually, however, a period of time elapsed between the betrothal and the marriage ceremony. During this time the young man prepared a place in his father’s house for his bride, while the bride prepared herself for married life.

On the day of the wedding, the groom and his friends dressed in their finest clothes and went to the home of the bride. Together the couple went back to the groom’s house. Their friends sang and danced their way back to his house.

Once at the groom’s house, the couple was ushered into a bridal chamber. The marriage was consummated through sexual union as the guests waited outside. Once that fact was announced, the wedding festivities continued, with guests dropping by for the wedding feast. Usually the wedding party lasted for a week (Gen. 29:27).

The New Testament does not contradict the teachings about marriage in the Old Testament. Most marriage teaching in the New Testament comes from Jesus and the apostle Paul.

Jesus’ first miracle occurred in Cana in Galilee when He and His disciples were attending a wedding (John 2:1–11). Our Lord gave His blessing and sanction to the institution of marriage.

On another occasion, when Jesus was asked about marriage and divorce, He quoted two passages from Genesis. “Have you not read that He who made them at the beginning ‘made them male and female,’ and said, ‘For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one flesh’? So then, they are no longer two but one flesh. Therefore what God has joined together, let not man separate” (Gen. 1:27; 2:24; Matt. 19:4–6). He taught that marriage was the joining together of two people so they become “one flesh.” Not only did God acknowledge the marriage; He also joined the couple.

The church at Corinth struggled over a number of issues, including the proper view of marriage. In response to their questions, Paul gave an answer about marriage. From His answer, it seems that three faulty ideas about marriage were prominent among some believers in the church. The first was that marriage was absolutely necessary in order to be a Christian; another was that celibacy was superior to marriage; the third was that when a person became a Christian, all existing relationships such as marriage were dissolved. When chapter 7 of 1 Corinthians is read with that as background, the following teaching emerges.

First, Paul stated that celibacy is an acceptable lifestyle for a Christian; not all people need to marry. Paul declared that he himself preferred not to marry. However, the single life can be lived for God’s glory only if God has given the gift of singlehood. If one does not have that gift, he should marry. And Paul expected most people would marry.

Next, Paul spoke to the problem faced by a Christian believer whose spouse does not believe. He reasoned that if the unbelieving partner is willing to live with the Christian, then the Christian should not dissolve the marriage. Remaining with the unbelieving partner could result in his or her salvation (1 Cor. 7:14).

In his letter to the Ephesians, Paul showed how a marriage relationship can best function. First, he said, “Wives, submit to your husbands, as to the Lord” (Eph. 5:22). The model for the wife’s submission is the church, which is subject to Christ (Eph. 5:24). Second, husbands are to love their wives. The role that the husband plays is outlined by Jesus Christ, who loved His bride, the church, so much that He died for her (Eph. 5:25).

MARROW—the soft tissue inside the hollow cavities of bones. The Bible uses the word marrow figuratively. “Moist marrow” means good health and physical comfort (Job 21:24). To eat marrow refers to eating the choicest of foods (Is. 25:6). To fear the Lord and depart from evil is marrow (refreshment, medicine, strength) to one’s bones (Prov. 3:8). The word of God divides the “joints and marrow” (Heb. 4:12), symbolizing the power of the Bible to penetrate to the inner depths of a person’s thoughts and motives.

MARS’ HILL (see AREOPAGUS).

MARSENA [mar SEE nuh]—a high Persian official at Shushan, or Susa. Marsena was one of seven princes “who had access to the king’s presence” (Esth. 1:14).

MARSH—the swamplands near the mouths of some rivers such as Kishon and at various places along the Jordan River and the Dead Sea (Ezek. 47:11).

MARSHAL—a military title given to a person in a position of honor and authority (Jer. 51:27; captain, KJV; commander, NIV).

MARTHA [MAR thuh] (lady, mistress)—the sister of Mary and Lazarus of Bethany (Luke 10:38–41; John 11:1–44; 12:1–3). All three were sincere followers of Jesus, but Mary and Martha expressed their love for Him in different ways. The account of the two women given by Luke reveals a clash of temperaments between Mary and Martha. Martha “was distracted with much serving” (Luke 10:40); she was an activist busy with household chores. Her sister Mary “sat at Jesus’ feet and heard His word” (Luke 10:39); her instinct was to sit still, meditate, and receive spiritual instruction.

While Martha busied herself making Jesus comfortable and cooking for Him in her home, Mary listened intently to His teaching. When Martha complained that Mary was not helping her, Jesus rebuked Martha. “You are worried and troubled about many things,” He declared. “But one thing is needed, and Mary has chosen that good part, which will not be taken away from her” (Luke 10:41–42). He told her, in effect, that Mary was feeding her spiritual needs. This was more important than Martha’s attempt to feed His body.

Jesus recognized that Martha was working for Him, but He reminded her that she was permitting her outward activities to hinder her spiritually. Because of her emphasis on work and her daily chores, her inner communion with her Lord was being hindered.

MARTYR—a witness. Because the early Christians frequently suffered for their faith, the word “martyr” soon came to refer to people who suffered or died because of their witness to Christ. Thus the apostle Paul calls Stephen a martyr (Acts 22:20), and the Book of Revelation mentions “the martyrs of Jesus” (17:6). Also see WITNESS.

MARY [MAIR ee]—the name of six women in the New Testament:

1. Mary, the mother of Jesus (Luke 1–2). We know nothing of Mary’s background other than that she was a peasant and a resident of Nazareth, a city of Galilee. She must have been of the tribe of Judah and thus in the line of David (Luke 1:32), although the genealogies in Matthew 1 and Luke 3 do not say so, because they trace Joseph’s genealogy rather than Mary’s. We do know that Mary’s cousin, Elizabeth, was the mother of John the Baptist.

   When Mary was pledged to be married to Joseph the carpenter, the angel Gabriel appeared to her. Calling her “highly favored one” and “blessed . . . among women” (Luke 1:28), the angel announced the birth of the Messiah. After Gabriel explained how such a thing could be possible, Mary said, “Let it be to me according to your word” (Luke 1:38). That Mary “found favor with God” and was allowed to give birth to His child indicates she must have been of high character and faith.

When Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, Mary “wrapped him in swaddling cloths, and laid Him in a manger” (Luke 2:7). She witnessed the visits of the shepherds and the Wise Men and “pondered them in her heart” (Luke 2:19) and heard Simeon’s prophecy of a sword that would pierce through her own soul (Luke 2:35). Joseph and Mary fled to Egypt to escape Herod’s murder of all males under two years old (Matt. 2:13–18). Neither Mary nor Joseph appear again until Jesus is twelve years old, at which time He stayed behind in the temple with the teachers (Luke 2:41–52). Both Mary and Joseph accepted Jesus’ explanation, realizing He was Israel’s Promised One.

Mary was present at Jesus’ first miracle—the turning of water into wine at the wedding feast in Cana of Galilee (John 2:1–12). Mary seemed to be asking her Son to use His power to meet the crisis. Jesus warned her that His time had not yet come; nevertheless, He turned the water into wine. At another time Mary and Jesus’ brothers wished to see Jesus while He was teaching the multitudes—perhaps to warn Him of impending danger. But again Jesus mildly rebuked her, declaring that the bond between Him and His disciples was stronger than any family ties (Luke 8:19–21).

The Scriptures do not mention Mary again until she stands at the foot of the cross (John 19:25–27). No mention is made of Joseph; he had likely been dead for some time. Jesus’ brothers were not among His followers. Of His family, only His mother held fast to her belief in His messiahship—even though it appeared to be ending in tragedy. From the cross Jesus gave Mary over to the care of the beloved disciple, John. The last mention of Mary is in the upper room in Jerusalem, awaiting the coming of the Holy Spirit (Acts 1:14). We do not know how or when Mary died. The Tomb of the Virgin is in the Valley of Kidron in Jerusalem, southeast of the temple area; but there is no historical basis for this site.

According to Scripture, Jesus had four brothers—James, Joses, Judas, and Simon—and unnamed sisters (Matt. 13:55–56; Mark 6:3). The Roman Catholic Church, however, claims that Mary remained a virgin and that these “brothers” and “sisters” were either Joseph’s children by an earlier marriage or were cousins of Jesus. Legends concerning Mary began circulating in written form as early as the fifth century, but there is no valid historical evidence for them.

In reaction to the Roman Catholic teachings about Mary, many Protestants almost totally neglect her and her contribution. What can be said of her that is consistent with Holy Scripture?

God was in her womb. In conceiving and bearing the Lord Jesus Christ, she gave earthly birth not to mere man but to the Son of God Himself.

She conceived as a virgin through the mysterious power of the Holy Spirit.

We are to bless and honor her, for as she herself said under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, “Henceforth all generations will call me blessed” (Luke 1:48).

As the first member of the human race to accept Christ, she stands as the first of the redeemed and as the flagship of humanity itself. She is our enduring example for faith, service to God, and a life of righteousness.

2. Mary Magdalene, the woman from whom Jesus cast out seven demons. The name Magdalene indicates that she came from Magdala, a city on the southwest coast of the Sea of Galilee. After Jesus cast seven demons from her, she became one of His followers.

   The Scriptures do not describe her illness. Mary Magdalene has been associated with the “woman in the city who was a sinner” (Luke 7:37) who washed Jesus’ feet, but there is no scriptural basis for this. According to the TALMUD (the collection of Rabbinic writings that make up the basis of religious authority for traditional Judaism), the city of Magdala had a reputation for prostitution. This information, coupled with the fact that Luke first mentions Mary Magdalene immediately following his account of the sinful woman (Luke 7:36–50), has led some to equate the two women.

Mary Magdalene is also often associated with the woman whom Jesus saved from stoning after she had been taken in adultery (John 8:1–11)—again an association with no evidence. We do know that Mary Magdalene was one of those women who, having "been healed of evil spirits and infirmities," provided for Jesus and His disciples "from their substance" (Luke 8:2–3).

Mary Magdalene witnessed most of the events surrounding the crucifixion. She was present at the mock trial of Jesus; she heard Pontius Pilate pronounce the death sentence; and she saw Jesus beaten and humiliated by the crowd. She was one of the women who stood near Jesus during the crucifixion to try to comfort Him. The earliest witness to the resurrection of Jesus, she was sent by Jesus to tell the others (John 20:11–18). Although this is the last mention of her in the Bible, she was probably among the women who gathered with the apostles to await the promised coming of the Holy Spirit (Acts 1:14).

3. Mary of Bethany, sister of Martha and Lazarus (Luke 10:38–42). As with Martha, we know nothing of Mary's family background. Martha was probably older than Mary since the house is referred to as Martha's; but she could have inherited it from an unmentioned husband. All we really know is that Mary, Martha, and Lazarus loved each other deeply. When Jesus visited their house in Bethany, Mary sat at Jesus' feet and listened to His teachings while Martha worked in the kitchen. When Martha complained that Mary was no help, Jesus gently rebuked Martha. When Lazarus died, Mary's grief was deep. John tells us that when Jesus came following Lazarus' death Mary stayed in the house. After she was summoned by Martha, she went to Jesus, fell at His feet weeping, and, like Martha, said, "Lord, if You had been here, my brother would not have died" (John 11:21, 32).

   Following Lazarus' resurrection, Mary showed her gratitude by anointing Jesus' feet with "a pound of very costly oil of spikenard" (John 12:3) and wiping His feet with her hair. Judas called this anointing extravagant, but Jesus answered, "Let her alone; she has kept this for the day of My burial" (John 12:7). Jesus called Mary's unselfish act "a memorial to her" (Mark 14:9).

4. Mary, the mother of the disciple James and Joses (Matt. 27:55–61). In light of her presence at Jesus' death and resurrection, it is likely that Mary was one of the women who followed Jesus and His disciples and provided food for them (Luke 8:2–3). Since Mark 15:40 tells us that this Mary, along with Mary Magdalene, observed Jesus' burial, the "other Mary" (Matt. 27:61) must refer to this mother of James and Joses. Mary was one of the women who went to the tomb on the third day to anoint Jesus' body with spices and discovered that Jesus was no longer among the dead (Mark 16:1–8).
5. Mary, the mother of John Mark (Acts 12:12). The mother of the author of the Gospel of Mark opened her home to the disciples to pray for the release of Peter, who had been imprisoned by Herod Antipas. When Peter was miraculously released, the angel immediately delivered him to Mary's house. Tradition has it that Mary's house was a primary meeting place for the early Christians of Jerusalem. We know that Barnabas and Mark were related (Col. 4:10), but whether through Mark's mother or through his father (who is never mentioned), we do not know.
6. Mary of Rome (Rom. 16:6). All we know about this Christian woman of Rome is found in Paul's salutation: "Greet Mary, who labored much for us."

MASCHIL [MAHS keel] (contemplation)—KJV word for a Hebrew term used in the titles of thirteen psalms (Psalm 32, 42, 44, 45, 52, 53, 54, 55, 74, 78, 88, 89, 142; Maskil, NIV, NRSV). Maschil may have been a term referring to a psalm sung at an annual festival, and accompanied by a special kind of music.

MASH [mash]—one of the four sons of Aram, and the name of an Aramean tribe descended from him (Gen. 10:23). Mash was the grandson of Shem and great-grandson of Noah.

Also see MESHECH.

MASHAL [MAY shal]—a city on the border of Asher assigned to the Levites (1 Chr. 6:74), also spelled Mishal (Josh. 19:26; Misheal, KJV).

MASKIL [MAHS keel]—a form of MASCHIL.

MASON (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MASREKAH [MASS reh kuh]—an ancient city in Edom near Petra where Samlah, king of Edom, lived (1 Chr. 1:47).

MASSA [MASS uh] (oracle)—a son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:14) and founder of an Arabian tribe that is generally identified with the Masani—a people who lived near the Persian Gulf.

MASSAH [MASS uh] (testing)—a place in the Wilderness of Sin, near Mount Horeb. The Israelites murmured against Moses at Massah because of no water, indicating their lack of faith. At the command of God, Moses struck the rock with his rod to produce water. The place is also called MERIBAH, which means "rebellion, strife, contention" (Ex. 17:7).

MAST—a long pole that supports the sail and rigging on a ship (Prov. 23:34; rigging, NIV, REB). Also see SHIPS.

MASTER—a person having authority, power, and control over the actions of other people. In the NKJV the word master is used to translate several Hebrew and Greek words. All these express the idea of human authority and control. Jesus was often called master by His disciples (Luke 5:5; 17:13). This title recognizes Jesus' right to command and implies an attitude of obedience. Literally the word means "superintendent," "overseer," or "one who stands over."

MASTICH [MAHS tick] (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MATHUSALA [muh THU suh luh]—a form of METHUSELAH.

MATRED [MAY tred]—the mother-in-law of Hadar (Gen. 36:39), or Hadad (1 Chr. 1:50), king of Edom.

MATRI [MAY try]—a family of Benjamin to which Saul, the first king of Israel, belonged (1 Sam. 10:21).

MATRIX—something within which something else originates, grows, develops, or is nurtured; the womb (Is. 49:1; bowels, KJV; womb, NRSV, NASB).

MATTAN [MAT un] (gift [of God])—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A priest of Baal in Jerusalem during the days of Queen Athaliah (2 Kin. 11:18).
2. The father of Shephatiah (Jer. 38:1).

MATTANAH [MAT uh nuh] (gift)—an encampment of the Israelites, between Beer and Nahaliel, during their years of wandering in the wilderness (Num. 21:18–19).

MATTANIAH [mat uh NYE uh] (gift of the Lord)—the name of nine men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of King Josiah of Judah (2 Kin. 24:17). After Mattaniah was made king of Judah, his name was changed to Zedekiah.
2. Founder of a tribal family and leader of the temple choir in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:17).
3. A sanctuary singer during David's reign (1 Chr. 25:4, 16).
4. A descendant of Asaph who helped King Hezekiah of Jerusalem in the cleansing of the temple (2 Chr. 29:13).
5. A descendant of Elam (Ezra 10:26). After the captivity, Mattaniah divorced his pagan wife.
6. A son of Zattu who divorced his pagan wife (Ezra 10:27).
7. A son of Pahath-Moab who divorced his pagan wife (Ezra 10:30).
8. A son of Bani who divorced his pagan wife (Ezra 10:37).
9. A Levite whose descendant, Hanan, served under Nehemiah as a treasurer over the storehouse (Neh. 13:13).

MATTATHAH [MAT uh thah] (gift)—a descendant of King David listed in the genealogy of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:31; Mattatha, KJV, NRSV, REB, NIV). Also see MATTATTAH.

MATTATHIAH [MAT thigh uh] (gift of the Lord)—the name of two men in the New Testament:

1. A son of Amos, listed by Luke as an ancestor of Joseph in the genealogy of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:25; Mattathias, KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV).

2. A son of Semei, an ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:26; Mattathias, KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV).

MATTATHIAS [mat uh THIGH us]—a form of MATTATHIAH. Also see MACCABEES.

MATTATTAH [MAT ah tah] (gift)—a son of Hashum (Ezra 10:33; Mattathah, KJV). Mattattah divorced his pagan wife after the captivity.

MATTENAI [mat tuh NIGH] (gift of the Lord)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. One of the sons of Hashum who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:33).
2. One of the sons of Bani who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:37).
3. A priest in the days of Joiakim the high priest (Neh. 12:19).

MATTHAN [MAT than] (gift [of God])—the grandfather of Joseph listed in Matthew's genealogy of Jesus Christ (Matt. 1:15).

MATTHAT [MAT that] (gift [of God])—the name of two men in the New Testament:

1. An ancestor of Jesus listed in Luke's genealogy (Luke 3:24).
2. Another ancestor of Jesus listed in Luke's genealogy (Luke 3:29).

MATTHEW [MA thue] (gift of the Lord)—a tax collector who became one of the twelve apostles of Jesus (Matt. 9:9). Matthew's name appears seventh in two lists of apostles (Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15), and eighth in two others (Matt. 10:3; Acts 1:13).

In Hebrew, Matthew's name means "gift of the Lord," but we know from his trade that he delighted in the gifts of others as well. He was a tax collector (Matt. 9:9–11) who worked in or around Capernaum under the authority of Herod Antipas. In Jesus' day, land and poll taxes were collected directly by Roman officials, but taxes on transported goods were contracted out to local collectors. Matthew was such a person, or else he was in the service of one. These middlemen paid an agreed-upon sum in advance to the Roman officials for the right to collect taxes in an area. Their profit came from the excess they could squeeze from the people.

The Jewish people hated these tax collectors not only for their corruption, but also because they worked for and with the despised Romans. Tax collectors were ranked with murderers and robbers, and a Jew was permitted to lie to them if necessary. The attitude found in the gospels is similar. Tax collectors are lumped together with harlots (Matt. 21:31), Gentiles (Matt. 18:17), and, most often, sinners (Matt. 9:10). They were as offensive to Jews for their economic and social practices as lepers were for their uncleanness; both were excluded from the people of God.

It is probable that the Matthew mentioned in Matthew 9:9–13 is identical with the Levi of Mark 2:13–17 and Luke 5:27–32; the stories obviously refer to the same person and event. The only problem in the identification is that Mark mentions Matthew rather than Levi in his list of apostles (Mark 3:18), thus leading one to assume two different persons. It is possible, however, that the same person was known by two names (compare "Simon" and "Peter"), or, less likely, that Levi and James the son of Alphaeus are the same person, since Mark calls Alphaeus the father of both (Mark 2:14; 3:18). Following his call by Jesus, Matthew is not mentioned again in the New Testament.

MATTHEW, GOSPEL OF—the opening book of the New Testament. Matthew has had perhaps a greater influence on Christian worship and literature than any other New Testament writing. For seventeen centuries the church took its readings for Sundays and Holy Days from Matthew, drawing from the other gospels only where it felt Matthew was insufficient.

Matthew offers the most systematic arrangement of Jesus' teaching in the New Testament, and the early church used it heavily for its instruction of converts. Because of its emphasis on the fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy, Matthew is well-suited as the opening book of the New Testament. In it the promises of God are recalled and their fulfillment in Jesus Christ is announced.

The Gospel of Matthew contains five main sections. Each section consists of stories of Jesus' life, samples of His preaching and teaching, and a concluding refrain, "When Jesus had ended" (7:28; 11:1; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1). The story of Jesus' birth (chaps. 1–2) and the account of his betrayal, trial, and crucifixion (chaps. 26–28) stand outside this framework; they introduce and conclude the story of Jesus.

Section one begins with Jesus' baptism by John, His temptation, and the beginnings of His Galilean ministry (chaps. 3–4). The Sermon on the Mount (chaps. 5–7) follows; in it Jesus sets forth a new system of ethics, both individual and social, for the kingdom. Throughout the Sermon, Jesus contrasts the law, which was given by Moses, with the kingdom, which is present in Himself—showing the superiority of the kingdom. He highlights the contrast with two recurring phrases, "You have heard that it was said to those of old . . . but I say to you."

Section two begins with a series of miracles by Jesus (chaps. 8–9), continues with Jesus' teaching to His disciples concerning mission and suffering (chap. 10), and ends with the refrain (11:1). Section three contains stories that emphasize the difference between the ways of the kingdom and the ways of the world (chaps. 11–12) and parables on the nature of the kingdom (chap. 13). The refrain is repeated in 13:53, thus concluding the section.

Section four features further miracles, debates, and conflicts from Jesus' ministry (chaps. 14–17). It concludes with words of counsel directed by Jesus to His disciples about the Christian life (chap. 18). The section ends at 19:1. Section five is set in Jerusalem, and it recounts clashes between Jesus and the religious leaders (chaps. 19–22). In the discourses which follow, Jesus denounces the scribes and Pharisees (chap. 23), teaches of the end times (chap. 24), and tells three parables on judgment (chap. 25). The final refrain occurs in 26:1, and leads into the account of the betrayal, arrest, crucifixion, and resurrection of Jesus (chaps. 26–28).

The Gospel of Matthew concludes with Jesus' command to go into all the world and make disciples, baptizing and teaching them in His name. He leaves His disciples with this assurance: "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the age" (28:20).

Matthew is an anonymous gospel. Like other gospel titles, the title was added in the second century A.D. and reflects the tradition of a later time. How, then, did the gospel acquire its name? Writing about A.D. 130, Papias, bishop of Hierapolis in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), records, "Matthew collected the oracles in the Hebrew (that is, Aramaic) language, and each interpreted them as best he could." Until comparative studies of the gospels in modern times, the church understood "oracles" to refer to the first gospel and considered Matthew, the apostle and former tax collector (9:9; 10:3), to be the author.

This conclusion, however, is full of problems. Our Gospel of Matthew is written in Greek, not Aramaic (as Papias records); and no copy of an Aramaic original of the gospel has ever been found. The Greek of the gospel cannot readily be translated back into Aramaic; and this strongly indicates that the gospel is not a Greek translation of an Aramaic original. It is now generally agreed that Mark is the earliest of the four gospels and that the author of Matthew substantially used the Gospel of Mark in writing this gospel (also see GOSPELS).

If the apostle Matthew wrote the gospel, one would wonder why he quoted so extensively from Mark (601 of Mark's 678 verses appear in Matthew), who was not a disciple of Jesus. Such observations virtually eliminate the possibility of the apostle Matthew being the author of the gospel.

The most promising way out of this dead-end street is to understand the "oracles" mentioned by Papias, not as the Gospel of Matthew, but as a collection of Jesus' sayings collected by the apostle Matthew. Later these sayings were used by an unknown author as a source for the present Gospel. The actual author probably was a Palestinian Jew who used the Gospel of Mark, plus a Greek translation of Matthew's Aramaic "oracles," and composed the gospel in Greek. The name of the gospel, therefore, stems from the apostle Matthew on whom the author draws, in part, to compose his work. This interpretation has the benefit of paying Papias' testimony the respect it deserves, as well as honoring the problems mentioned above.

The Gospel of Matthew is full of clues that it was written to convince Jewish readers that Jesus is the Messiah. First, the author makes no attempt to translate or explain Jewish words and practices. Also, the gospel quotes more frequently from the Old Testament than does any other gospel. Most important, however, Jesus is portrayed as a physical and/or spiritual descendant of the three greatest personalities of the Old Testament, although he surpasses them. Matthew traces Jesus' genealogy back to Abraham (1:2), the father of the faith.

In the Sermon on the Mount (chaps. 5–7), Jesus appears as a royal teacher whose authority exceeds that of Moses, the founder of the faith. And Jesus fulfills the hopes of David, the greatest king of Israel. He is born in Bethlehem (mentioned five times in chap. 2), and like David he appears as a king (19:28). He is frequently recognized as "the son of David" (9:27; 12:23; 15:22; 21:9; 21:15), although in truth He is David's "Lord" (22:41–46).

Matthew appealed to a Jewish audience, but not exclusively. The visit of the wise men from the (Gentile) East (2:1–12) hints of the gospel's rejection by the Jews and its acceptance by the Gentiles (21:43; also 4:15–16; 8:5–13; 12:18–21; 13:38). Furthermore the Great Commission—the command to "make disciples of all the nations" (28:19)—indicates an interest beyond the confines of Judaism. We can conclude that Matthew was written to Jews and Jewish Christians to show that Jesus is the promised Messiah of the Old Testament. It also shows that the gospel does not lead to narrow Jewish concerns (chap. 23), but out into the Gentile world.

Matthew's main subject is the "kingdom of heaven" or "kingdom of God." This kingdom is mentioned fifty-one times in the Gospel of Matthew, twice as often as in any other gospel. The kingdom is already here in Jesus (12:28), but it is not yet fulfilled (13:43; 25:34). The kingdom cannot be earned (19:23); it can be received only by those who recognize that they do not deserve it (5:3; 21:31). The kingdom extends like a fishing net, gathering people from every part of society (13:47), offering new life in the life-changing presence of God (8:11). The kingdom is more valuable than a precious gem (13:45–46), and it excludes any and all competitors for its allegiance (6:33).

The kingdom of God means the rule or reign of God—in the entire universe, in the world, and in our hearts. The primary indication of the presence of the kingdom in the world is the transformation of life, both individually and socially. A person enters the kingdom not by saying the right words, but by doing "the will of My father in heaven" (7:21).

The Gospel of Matthew has at least five special considerations that will be mentioned briefly here:

1. Matthew sought to prove to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ, the fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy. A recurring statement that occurs in this gospel is, “All this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Lord through the prophet” (1:22; also 2:15, 17, 23).

2. Matthew has a special interest in the church, which by the time this gospel was written had become the dominant factor in the lives of Christians. Indeed, Matthew is the only gospel to mention the word “church” (16:18; 18:17).
3. Matthew has a strong interest in eschatology (the doctrine of last things)—that is, in the second coming of Jesus, the end of the age, and the final judgment (chaps. 24–25).
4. Matthew has a great interest in the teachings of Jesus, especially concerning the kingdom of God (chaps. 5–7; 10; 13; 18; 24–25).
5. Matthew writes to show that Jesus is the King to whom God has given power and authority to redeem and to judge mankind (1:1–17; 2:2; 21:1–11; 27:11, 37; 28:18).

- A model of Jerusalem as it might have appeared in Jesus' time. Jesus was distraught about the city because of its unbelief (Matt. 23:37).

MATTHIAS [muh THIGH us] (gift of the Lord)—a disciple chosen to succeed Judas Iscariot as an apostle (Acts 1:23, 26). Matthias had been a follower of Jesus from the beginning of His ministry until the day of His ascension and had been a witness of His resurrection. In this way he fulfilled the requirements of apostleship (Acts 1:21–22). Probably he was one of the "seventy" (Luke 10:1, 17). The New Testament makes no further mention of him after his election. One tradition says that Matthias preached in Judea and was stoned to death by the Jews. Another tradition holds that he worked in Ethiopia and was martyred by crucifixion.

MATTITHIAH [mat uh THIGH uh] (gift of the Lord)—the name of four or five men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Shallum the Korahite (1 Chr. 9:31).
2. A Levite musician and gatekeeper during the reign of David (1 Chr. 15:18).
3. A son of Jeduthun. Mattithiah was appointed to the service of song during the reign of David (1 Chr. 25:3, 21). He was probably the same person as No. 2.
4. A son of Nebo who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:43).
5. An Israelite who helped Ezra read the Book of the Law to the people (Neh. 8:4).

MATTOCK (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

MAUL (see ARMS, ARMOR OF THE BIBLE; TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

MAW—the KJV translation of a Hebrew word that refers to the fourth stomach of animals who chew the cud (Deut. 18:3). Considered a great delicacy by the ancients, the maw was one of the parts of a sacrificial animal given to the priests.

MAZZAROTH [MAZ uh roth]—a feature either of the starry heavens or the changing seasons (Job 38:32; constellations, NIV).

MEADOW—a tract of grassland. Meadows were rare in Israel but not in the river flats of Egypt. The pasture in which the seven fat cows of Pharaoh's dreams grazed is described as a meadow: "there came up out of the river seven cows, fine looking and fat; and they fed in the meadow" (Gen. 41:2, 18). The Psalmist says, "The enemies of the Lord, like the splendor of the meadows, shall vanish" (Ps. 37:20). In the hot, dry climate of Palestine, the image of a meadow's beauty vanishing quickly was a particularly effective way of picturing the dangerous situation in which the unrighteous live.

MEAH, TOWER OF (see HUNDRED, TOWER OF THE).

MEAL OFFERING (see SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS).

MEALS—occasions of eating. At "mealtime" Ruth was invited to eat with the harvesters in Boaz's field (Ruth 2:14). Her lunch consisted of bread dipped in vinegar and parched grain. Other occasions of eating are frequently mentioned in the Bible (Gen. 19:3; 27:17; 43:32). Eating customs varied during the long period covered by the Bible.

Palestinian people ordinarily ate in the morning and in the evening (Ex. 16:12; 1 Kin. 17:6). The evening meal was called “sitting at the table” (Matt. 9:10). It was scheduled when the day’s work was over (Ruth 3:2–7; Luke 17:7–8). Early morning eating, however, was frowned on (Eccl. 10:16); and Peter could argue that the third hour (9 A.M.) was too early for drunkenness (Acts 2:15).

Knives, forks, and spoons were not used in Bible times. Food was served in a common bowl and eaten with the hands (Prov. 26:15; Matt. 26:23; Mark 14:20), or with bread dipped in the dish (John 13:26). Cups or goblets were used for wine. In earlier times people sat on the ground, later on chairs and stools (1 Sam. 20:5, 25); however, the prophet Amos refers to those who recline (Amos 6:4). At least by the Persian period reclining was common (Esth. 1:6; 7:8), and it continued through the New Testament period (John 21:20).

At mealtime the traveler might have only bread and water (Gen. 21:14) or bread, meat, and water (1 Kin. 17:6). A soldier’s ration consisted of parched grain, bread, and cheese (1 Sam. 17:17–18; 25:18).

Special meals were held at times of rejoicing, such as sheepshearing (2 Sam. 13:23), the return of the prodigal (Luke 15:22–32), weddings (John 2:1–11), birthdays (Mark 6:21–23), or entertaining guests (Matt. 9:10–13). At a supper the host greeted the guest with a kiss (Luke 7:45), provided for his dusty feet to be washed (John 13:4–5), and anointed his head with oil (Luke 7:46). Guests were seated by age or importance (Gen. 43:33). The FOOD and the entertainment varied with the occasion and the host’s wealth. There was music (Is. 5:12), singing (Amos 6:4–5), and dancing (Matt. 14:6). The guests could also be entertained with riddles (Judg. 14:12–18). Jesus stressed the need to include the poor, maimed, and blind (Luke 14:13) among those invited to meals.

Israel often committed idolatry by participating in sacrifice and eating to false gods (Num. 25:1–5). On the other hand, many of the sacrifices of the Old Testament, after the priests received their portion (Lev. 2:10; 7:6), were consumed by the worshiper, his family, and his slaves (Lev. 7:11–21; 1 Sam. 1:3–4). The worshiper often invited the widow, Levite, stranger, and fatherless to share (Deut. 12:12). Samuel blessed the sacrifice before the people ate (1 Sam. 9:11–14). David’s passing of the kingdom to Solomon was a sacrificial occasion (1 Chr. 29:21–22). The annual PASSOVER meal was shared by every Israelite and by those purchased with his money (Ex. 12:43–49; 13:5–10).

Covenant meals were sacred only as far as the Lord was witness to the agreement made. When making a covenant, Abimelech and Isaac (Gen. 26:28–30), Jacob and Laban (Gen. 31:45–54), Israel and Gibeon (Josh. 9:12–15), and David and Abner (2 Sam. 3:20) ate together. The making of the covenant at Sinai included a meal (Ex. 24:11). The violation of such an agreement, as Ishmael did when he murdered Gedaliah after eating with him (Jer. 41:1–2), was considered alowly and disgraceful act (Ps. 41:9; John 13:18).

In New Testament times, the Pharisees did not eat with unwashed hands (Mark 7:2–5). They objected to Jesus' eating with tax collectors and sinners (Matt. 9:11). Jews criticized Peter for eating with Gentiles at the house of Cornelius (Acts 11:3).

Early Christians, though meeting in the temple courts, took their meals at home (Acts 2:46). Abuses of the Lord's Supper led Paul to instruct that the hungry eat at home (1 Cor. 11:34).

The Lord's Supper was a communion, or sharing in the body and blood of Christ (1 Cor. 10:16–17). A person cannot eat at both the table of the Lord and the table of demons: "You cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons" (1 Cor. 10:20–21).

MEARAH [meh AY ruh] (cave)—a place, possibly a cavern, in northern Canaan near Sidon (Josh. 13:4).

MEASURE, CHOINIX (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

MEASURING LINE (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

MEASURING REED (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE; WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

MEAT—the edible flesh of animals, often referring to the flesh of mammals, as distinguished from fish and poultry (Num. 11:4; Deut. 12:15, 20).

Meat was often sacrificed on pagan altars and dedicated to pagan gods in Paul's day. Later this meat was offered for sale in the public meat markets. Some Christians wondered if it were morally right for Christians to eat such meat that had previously been sacrificed to pagan gods. Paul explained that they should not eat such meat if it would cause weaker Christians to sin (1 Cor. 8:13). Also see FOOD.

MEAT OFFERING (see SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS).

MEATS, UNCLEAN—animals that were unfit for eating, according to the law of Moses. Leviticus 11 gives an extended list of foods that were forbidden to the Hebrew people, including the camel, the rock hyrax, the hare, the swine, anything in the seas or rivers that does not have fins and scales, twenty different species of birds, and most flying insects. The flesh of the swine was especially abominable to the Hebrews.

MEBUNNAI [meh BUN eh]—a Hushathite, one of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:27). The name is probably a textual corruption of Sibbechai (2 Sam. 21:18). Also see SIBBECHAI.

MECHERATHITE [meh KEE rah thite] (dweller in Mecherah)—a name applied to Hepher, one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:36).

MECONAH [meh KOH nuh] (foundation)—a city in southern Judah, between Ziklag and En Rimmon (Neh. 11:28; Mekonah, KJV). Meconah was inhabited by Israelites after the captivity.

MEDAD [ME dad]—an Israelite who prophesied in the wilderness camp (Num. 11:26–27). When seventy elders assembled in the "tabernacle of meeting," the Spirit rested on them and they prophesied. Medad and Eldad had not gone to the tabernacle, but had remained in the camp. Nevertheless, the Spirit rested upon them also and they, too, prophesied. A young man ran and told Moses. Joshua asked Moses to forbid them; but Moses replied, "Oh, that all the LORD's people were prophets and that the LORD would put His Spirit upon them!" (Num. 11:29).

This story emphasizes the truth that God's Spirit can fill any person at any place at any time.

MEDAN [MEE dan]—a son of Abraham and Keturah, Abraham's concubine (1 Chr. 1:32).

MEDEBA [MED eh buh]—an ancient Moabite city in TRANSJORDAN, about 24 kilometers (15 miles) southeast of the place where the Jordan River runs into the Dead Sea (see Map 3, C–4). It is mentioned with Heshbon and Dibon (Num. 21:30).

Medeba was a source of conflict between Moab and Israel. Apparently the Ammonites controlled the city in the time of David; for the Syrian mercenaries, allies of the Ammonites, "encamped before Medeba" (1 Chr. 19:7) before their defeat by Joab, the captain of David's army. The MOABITE STONE states that Omri, king of Israel, captured Medeba, probably from Moab, and the Israelites controlled the city for forty years. Mesha, king of Moab, recaptured and rebuilt it.

Jeroboam II of Israel probably recaptured Medeba again, for "he restored the territory of Israel from the entrance of Hamath [in the north] to the Sea of the Arabah [in the south]" (2 Kin. 14:25). Jeroboam probably pushed the Moabites south of the River Arnon and regained control of the plain by Medeba. If so, it was a short-lived victory; for Isaiah's oracle against Moab (Is. 15:2) indicated that in Isaiah's time Medeba was once again under Moabite control.

Medeba, now known as Madaba or Madiyabah, is on the KING'S HIGHWAY, the main north–south highway through Transjordan. An ancient mosaic map, set in the floor of a church at Medeba, pictures Jerusalem and its environs as they looked in the Byzantine period.

MEDIA [MEE dih uh]—an ancient country of Asia situated west of Parthia, north of the Persian Gulf, east of Assyria and Armenia, and south of the Caspian Sea. The country is now included in parts of Iran, Iraq, and Turkey.

A mountainous country, Media contained some fertile sections; but much of it was cold, barren, and swampy. In the southern area lush plains were used as pastureland for the large herds of horses used in the Median cavalry.

The history of the Medes is complex, because it involves many entangling alliances and the rise and fall of several nations. The Medes were an Indo-European people who invaded the rough mountain terrain south of the Caspian Sea. In the ninth and eighth centuries B.C., Assyrian kings conducted campaigns against these people, forcing them to pay tribute. The mighty Tiglath–pileser (745–727 B.C.) invaded Media and added part of it to the Assyrian Empire. By 700 B.C., the era of the prophet Isaiah, a prosperous realm had been established.

Media is first mentioned in the Old Testament as the destination to which Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, deported the Israelites from Samaria around 721 B.C. (2 Kin. 17:6; 18:11). Medes are mentioned in Ezra in connection with Darius' search for the scroll containing the famous decree of Cyrus that allowed the Jews to return to Jerusalem (Ezra 6:2). Laws of the Medes are mentioned in the Book of Esther (1:19) and in Daniel (6:8, 15).

The prophet Daniel prophesied that King Belshazzar's Babylonian kingdom would fall to "the Medes and Persians" (Dan. 5:28). Medes were also among the people from many different nations in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:9).

About 710 B.C. Sargon II of Assyria defeated the Medes and forced them to pay a tribute consisting of the thoroughbred horses for which Media was famous. The Medes, however, increased in strength and joined forces with Babylon. The Medes under Cyaxares and the Babylonians under Nabopolassar captured Asshur, the ancient capital of Assyria, in 614 B.C. In 612 B.C. this alliance overthrew Nineveh, the proud capital of Assyria, causing the crash of the Assyrian Empire. The seventh-century Hebrew prophet Nahum expressed the great relief felt by neighboring nations at Nineveh's fall (Nah. 2:3; 3:19). Nabopolassar's son, Nebuchadnezzar, married Cyaxares' daughter, strengthening the bond between the two countries. During the era of Nebuchadnezzar and the time of Jeremiah (about 605–552 B.C.), the Median kingdom reached the height of its power.

Persia was dominated by Media until the time of Cyrus II who was founder of the Persian Empire. In 549 B.C. Cyrus defeated Media. Yet under the Persians, Media remained the most important province of Persia. As a consequence, the dual name, "Medes and Persians," remained for a long time (Esth. 1:19; Dan. 5:28). The expression, "The laws of the Medes and the Persians," depicted the unchangeable nature of Median law, which even the king was powerless to change (Esth. 1:19).

The Medes and Persians were Indo-European peoples known as Aryans. Their religion was Zoroastrianism. Its adherents believed that spiritual reality was divided between Ahura Mazda, the god of light and goodness, and Angra Mainja, the god of darkness and evil.

Influenced by the moral teachings of his religion, Cyrus II of Persia was known for his humane attitude toward conquered peoples. He treated the vanquished Medes with respect. Medo–Persia, a dual nation, became a great empire that ruled Asia until it was conquered by Alexander the Great (330 B.C.). After Alexander’s death, Medo–Persia became part of Syria and later a part of the Persian Empire.

MEDIATOR—one who goes between two groups or persons to help them work out their differences and come to agreement. A mediator usually is a neutral party, a go-between, intermediary, or arbitrator (Job 9:33; daysman, KJV) who brings about reconciliation in a hostile situation when divided persons are not able to work out their differences themselves.

A mediator can also be the negotiator of an agreement. After the agreement is made, the mediator can then witness to its content and serve as the administrator or guarantor to make sure its provisions are followed. A mediator needs legal authority and recognized power to function effectively.

The Hebrew verb meaning “to decide” is used in the sense of mediation in Genesis 31:37, “Set it here before my brethren and your brethren, that they may judge between us both.”

Later in Jewish history the idea of mediation became associated with the office of the priest, who stands between God and human beings in spiritual matters. This term was also applied to the prophet, who serves as intermediary in giving God’s word to people, and the king, who serves as mediatorial administrator between God and human beings in government. These officers discharged their duties against the background of God’s COVENANT with his people expressed in the Law.

The central role of the covenant made Moses the supreme mediator in the Old Testament. Moses was the sole human mediator of the Sinai covenant (Ex. 20:19–22; Gal. 3:19; Heb. 3:2–5). He offered sacrifice, consecrated the priestly house of Aaron, and interceded for the nation. He spoke the word of God as prophet and administered government for the nation. Moses is the figure whom the New Testament compares with Jesus as Mediator of the New Covenant (Heb. 3:2–5).

From the New Testament perspective, there is ultimately only “one Mediator between God and man” (1 Tim. 2:5)—Jesus the Messiah. He alone, being fully God, can represent God to man, and at the same time, being fully man, can represent man to God. He alone can bring complete reconciliation, because He alone can bring about complete payment for our sin and satisfaction of God's wrath. He alone can bring everlasting peace (Acts 15:11; 2 Cor. 5:18; Eph. 1:7).

A major theme of the Book of Hebrews is that Jesus mediated a new and better covenant, an eternal covenant (7:27–28; 9:15; 10:1; 12:24). Speaking the words of God (John 14:24), Jesus fulfills the prophetic office. As High Priest over the house of God (Heb. 3:1–6), He sacrificed Himself to secure our redemption and continues to intercede on our behalf (Rom. 8:34; Heb. 7:25; 9:24; 1 John 2:1). Even our prayers are presented to God "through" His mediation (Rom. 1:8; Heb. 13:15). And He is also "King of kings," having "all authority in heaven and on earth" (Matt. 28:18; Phil. 2:9–11; Rev. 19:11–16).

The Christian never need worry about the certainty of His salvation. The Mediator "is able to save to the uttermost those who come to God through Him" (Heb. 7:25).

MEDICINE (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

MEDITATION—the practice of reflection or contemplation. The word "meditation" or its verb form, "to meditate," is found mainly in the Old Testament. The Hebrew words behind this concept mean "to murmur," "a murmuring," "sighing," or "moaning." This concept is reflected in Psalm 1:2, where the "blessed man" meditates on God's law day and night. The psalmist also prayed that the meditation of his heart would be acceptable in God's sight (Ps. 19:14). Joshua was instructed to meditate on the Book of the Law for the purpose of obeying all that was written in it (Josh. 1:8).

The Greek word translated as "meditate" occurs only twice in the New Testament. In Luke 21:14 Jesus instructed His disciples not "to meditate beforehand" in answering their adversaries when the end of the age comes. The word may be understood in this passage as the idea of preparing a defense for a court appearance. Paul, in 1 Timothy 4:15, urged Timothy to meditate, or take pains with, the instructions he gives. The idea of meditation is also found in Philippians 4:8 and Colossians 3:2.

Meditation is a lost art for many Christians, but the practice needs to be cultivated again.

MEDITERRANEAN SEA [med ih ter RAIN ih un]—a large sea bordered by many important nations of the ancient world, including Palestine (see Map 9, B–3). The Hebrews referred to it by several different names. It was called “the Great Sea” (Num. 34:6), “the Western Sea” (Deut. 34:2), “the Sea of the Philistines” (Ex. 23:31), and simply “the sea” (Josh. 16:8; Jon. 1:4).

The Mediterranean Sea extends about 3,550 kilometers (2,200 miles) westward from the coast of Palestine to the Straits of Gibraltar. At its narrowest point, between Sicily and the coast of Africa, the sea is about 130 kilometers (80 miles) wide. Archaeologists believe that an open channel once existed, connecting the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, and that this channel was closed off by drifting desert sand and silt from the Nile River, providing a land connection between Asia and Africa.

Many ancient civilizations grew up around this sea and used it for trade and commerce. The Hebrews were afraid of the Mediterranean and usually hired others, often Phoenicians (1 Kin. 9:27), to conduct their seafaring business for them. Palestine itself had few good harbors.

The apostle Paul crossed the Mediterranean Sea during his missionary journeys. He tried to avoid sailing during the winter months, but was shipwrecked on his way to Rome while sailing in late autumn (Acts 27).

MEDIUM—a person thought to have the power to communicate with the spirits of the dead (Is. 8:19; 19:3; 29:4). According to the Law of Moses, anyone who professed to be a medium or a channel of communication to the spirit world was to be put to death by stoning (Lev. 20:27). Also see MAGIC AND SORCERY.

MEEKNESS—an attitude of humility toward God and gentleness toward people, springing from a recognition that God is in control. Although weakness and meekness may look similar, they are not the same. Weakness is due to negative circumstances, such as lack of strength or lack of courage. But meekness is due to a person's conscious choice. It is strength and courage under control, coupled with kindness.

The apostle Paul once pointed out that the spiritual leaders of the church have great power, even leverage, in confronting a sinner. But he cautioned them to retrain themselves in meekness (Gal. 6:1; 5:22–23).

Meekness is a virtue practiced and commended by our Lord Jesus (Matt. 5:5; 11:29). As such it is part of the equipment that every follower of Jesus should wear (2 Cor. 10:1; Gal. 5:23; 6:1; Eph. 4:1–2).

MEGIDDO [muh GID doe]—a walled city east of the Carmel Mountain range where many important battles were fought in Old Testament times (see Map 3, B–2). Megiddo was situated on the main road that linked Egypt and Syria. Overlooking the Valley of Jezreel (Plain of Esdraelon), Megiddo was one of the most strategic cities in Palestine. All major traffic through northern Palestine traveled past Megiddo, making it a strategic military stronghold.

Megiddo is first mentioned in the Old Testament in the account of the thirty-one kings conquered by Joshua (Josh. 12:21). In the division of the land of Canaan among the tribes of the Hebrew people, Megiddo was awarded to Manasseh. But the tribe was unable to drive out the native inhabitants of the city (Josh. 17:11; Judg. 1:27; 1 Chr. 7:29).

During the period of the judges, the forces of Deborah and Barak wiped out the army of Sisera “by the waters of Megiddo” (Judg. 5:19). During the period of the United Kingdom under Solomon, the Israelites established their supremacy at Megiddo. The city was included in the fifth administrative district of Solomon (1 Kin. 4:12). Along with Hazor, Gezer, Lower Beth Horon, Baalath, and Tadmor, Megiddo was fortified and established as a chariot city for the armies of King Solomon (1 Kin. 9:15–19).

The prophet Zechariah mentioned the great mourning that would one day take place “in the plain of Megiddo” (Zech. 12:11; Megiddon, KJV). The fulfillment of Zechariah’s prophecy is the battle at the end of time known as the Battle of ARMAGEDDON. Armageddon is a compound word that means “mountain of Megiddo.”

In the end times, God will destroy the armies of the Beast and the False Prophet in “the battle of that great day of God Almighty” (Rev. 16:14) when He shall gather them “together to the place called in Hebrew, Armageddon” (Rev. 16:16). Jesus Christ will ride out of heaven on a white horse (Rev. 19:11) as the “King of kings and Lord of lords” (Rev. 19:16).

MEGIDDON [meh GID ahn]—a form of MEGIDDO.

MEHETABEEL [meh HET uh beel]—father of Delaiah and grandfather of Shemaiah (Neh. 6:10; Mehetabel, NRSV, NASB, REB, NIV).

MEHETABEL [meh HET uh bel]—the wife of Hadar (Gen. 36:39), or Hadad (1 Chr. 1:50), king of Edom. Mehetabel was a daughter of Matred.

Also see MEHETABEEL.

MEHIDA [meh HIGH duh] (renowned)—founder of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants) whose descendants returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:52).

MEHIR [MEE hur] (price)—a son of Chelub, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:11).

MEHOLATHITE [meh HO luh thite]—a native or inhabitant of Meholah, probably ABEL MEHOLAH, a city in the Jordan River Valley near Beth Shean (1 Sam. 18:19).

MEHUJAEL [meh HUE jay el]—a son of Irad, of the family of Cain (Gen. 4:18).

MEHUMAN [meh HUE man]—a eunuch or chamberlain who had charge of the harem of King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) of Persia (Esth. 1:10).

MEHUNIM [me HYOO nem]—a form of MEUNIM.

ME JARKON [mee JAHR kuhn] (waters of Jarkon)—a city or a stream near Joppa (Josh. 19:46), probably the Wadi Nahr el-’Auja, which flows into the Mediterranean Sea.

MEKONAH [meh KOH nuh]—a form of MECONAH.

MELATIAH [mel uh TYE uh] (the Lord sets free)—a GIBEONITE who helped repair the wall of Jerusalem in Nehemiah’s time (Neh. 3:7).

MELCHI [mel KYE] (my king)—the name of two men in Luke’s genealogy of Jesus Christ:

1. A son of Janna and the father of Levi (Luke 3:24).
2. A son of Addi and the father of Neri (Luke 3:28).

MELCHIAH [mell KIE ah]—a form of MALCHIAH No. 2.

MELCHISEDEC [mel KIZ uh dek]—a form of MELCHIZEDEK.

MELCHI-SHUA [mel kye SHU uh]—a form of MALCHISHUA.

MELCHIZEDEK [mel KIZ eh deck] (king of righteousness)—a king of Salem (Jerusalem) and priest of the Most High God (Gen. 14:18–20; Ps. 110:4; Heb. 5:6–11; 6:20—7:28). Melchizedek's appearance and disappearance in the Book of Genesis are somewhat mysterious. Melchizedek and Abraham first met after Abraham's defeat of Chedorlaomer and his three allies. Melchizedek presented bread and wine to Abraham and his weary men, demonstrating friendship and religious kinship. He bestowed a blessing on Abraham in the name of El Elyon ("God Most High"), and praised God for giving Abraham a victory in battle (Gen. 14:18–20).

Abraham presented Melchizedek with a tithe (a tenth) of all the booty he had gathered. By this act Abraham indicated that he recognized Melchizedek as a fellow-worshiper of the one true God as well as a priest who ranked higher spiritually than himself. Melchizedek's existence shows that there were people other than Abraham and his family who served the true God.

In Psalm 110, a messianic psalm written by David (Matt. 22:43), Melchizedek is seen as a type of Christ. This theme is repeated in the Book of Hebrews, where both Melchizedek and Christ are considered kings of righteousness and peace. By citing Melchizedek and his unique priesthood as a type, the writer shows that Christ's new priesthood is superior to the old Levitical order and the priesthood of Aaron (Heb. 7:1–10; Melchisedec, KJV).

Attempts have been made to identify Melchizedek as an imaginary character named Shem, an angel, the Holy Spirit, Christ, and others. All are products of speculation, not historical fact; and it is impossible to reconcile them with the theological argument of Hebrews. Melchizedek was a real, historical king-priest who served as a type for the greater King-Priest who was to come, Jesus Christ.

MELEA [MEE lee uh]—an ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:31).

MELECH [MEE lek] (king)—a Benjamite, the son of Micah and a descendant of King Saul (1 Chr. 8:35; 9:41).

MELICHU, MELICU [MEL eh kue]—forms of MALLUCH No. 6.

MELITA [MEL eh tuh]—a form of MALTA.

MELON (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MELZAR [MEL zahr] (overseer)—KJV word for the title of an officer at the Babylonian court of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 1:11, 16). The NKJV translates as “the steward.”

MEM [maim]—the thirteenth letter of the Hebrew alphabet, used as a heading over Psalm 119:97–104. In the original Hebrew language, every one of these eight verses began with the letter mem. Also see ACROSTIC.

MEMBER—a word with at least two different meanings in the Bible:

1. An organ of the human body, such as an arm or leg (Job 17:7; Matt. 5:29–30).
2. A Christian. In the New Testament the “members” of the “body” of Christ are described in a symbolic way as the individual Christians who together compose the church (Rom. 12:5; Eph. 4:25).

MEMORIAL—a monument, statue, holiday, or ritual that serves as a remembrance or reminder of a person or an event. The Feast of the Passover was a memorial of God’s sparing the firstborn of the Israelites in Egypt and of Israel’s deliverance from Egyptian bondage (Ex. 12:14).

When Israel crossed the Jordan River and occupied the Promised Land, Joshua commanded that twelve stones, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, be set up in the midst of the Jordan (Josh. 4:9). “These stones,” he said, “shall be for a memorial to the children of Israel forever” (Josh. 4:7).

When Jesus was in the house of Simon the leper, a woman anointed His head with oil. “Wherever this gospel is preached in the whole world,” said Jesus, “what this woman has done will also be told as a memorial to her” (Matt. 26:13; Mark 14:9).

On the eve of His crucifixion Jesus instituted the Lord’s Supper (Luke 22:19). The observance of the Lord’s Supper is an ongoing Christian memorial that helps believers remember the sacrifice of Christ on their behalf (1 Cor. 5:7; 11:25–26).

MEMPHIS [MEM fis]—an ancient royal city (see Map 2, A–2) during the Old Kingdom period of Egypt’s history (about 3000 B.C. to 2200

B.C.). It was situated on the west bank of the NILE River about 21 kilometers (13 miles) south of Cairo. Today there is little left to mark the glorious past of the city.

In 670 B.C. Memphis was captured by the Assyrians, followed by a period of Persian dominance. After the Moslem conquest of the city, its ruins were used in the Middle Ages to build Cairo, Egypt's modern capital. The importance of Memphis is demonstrated by the multitude of pyramids and the celebrated Sphinx that are located near the site of the ancient city.

Memphis is found only once in the Bible—a translation of the Hebrew word noph (Hos. 9:6). In this passage the prophet Hosea condemned the Israelites for their sinfulness and predicted that some of them would be buried by Egyptians from Memphis. In seven other locations the word noph refers to Memphis (Is. 19:13; Jer. 2:16; 44:1; 46:14, 19; Ezek. 30:13, 16). In each passage the NIV has Memphis.

"The princes of Noph [Memphis] are deceived," wrote the prophet Isaiah (Is. 19:13). He prophesied that God would bring judgment on these deluded rulers. The prophet Jeremiah also warned the Jews to trust God and not flee to Memphis, because God was going to send destruction upon the land of Egypt (Jer. 2:16; 44:1; 46:14, 19).

MEMUCAN [meh MUE kan]—a high Persian official in Shushan (Susa), one of seven princes "who had access to the king's presence" (Esth. 1:14). The "king" was Ahasuerus, generally identified as Xerxes I (485–464 B.C.).

MENAHEM [MEN ah him] (comforter)—a son of Gadi and seventeenth king of Israel (2 Kin. 15:14–23). Some scholars believe Menahem probably was the military commander of King Zechariah. When Shallum took the throne from Zechariah by killing him in front of the people, Menahem determined that Shallum himself must be killed. After Shallum had reigned as king of Israel for a month in Samaria, Menahem "went up from Tirzah, came to Samaria, and struck Shallum . . . and killed him; and he reigned in his place" (2 Kin. 15:14).

When the city of Tiphsah refused to recognize Menahem as the lawful ruler of Israel, Menahem attacked it and inflicted terrible cruelties upon its people (2 Kin. 15:16). This act apparently secured his position, because Menahem remained king for ten years (752–742 B.C.). His reign was evil, marked by cruelty, oppression, and idolatrous worship.

During his reign Menahem faced a threat from the advancing army of Pul (Tiglath-pileser III), king of Assyria. To strengthen his own position as king and to forestall a war with Assyria, he paid tribute to the Assyrian king by exacting “from each man fifty shekels of silver” (2 Kin. 15:20). After Menahem’s death, his son Pekahiah became king of Israel (2 Kin. 15:22).

MENAN [MEE nan]—an ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:31; Menna, NIV, NRSV).

MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN [MEE neh, MEE neh, TEK uhl, ue FAR sin] (numbered, numbered, weighed, and divided)—a puzzling inscription that appeared on the wall of the palace of Belshazzar, king of Babylon, during a drunken feast (Dan. 5:1–29). The king had just ordered that the gold and silver vessels Nebuchadnezzar had stolen from the temple in Jerusalem be used in the revelry. When the fingers of a man’s hand had written the words, Belshazzar called his wise men, but they could neither read the inscription nor interpret its meaning. Daniel was then summoned. He deciphered the message and told the king what it meant.

The words of the inscription refer to three Babylonian weights of decreasing size and their equivalent monetary values. In his interpretation of this inscription, Daniel used a play on words to give the message God had for Belshazzar and Babylon.

“Mene: God has numbered your kingdom, and finished it.” God had counted the days allotted to Belshazzar’s rule and his time had run out. “Tekel: You have been weighed in the balances and found wanting.” Belshazzar’s character, his moral values and spiritual worth, had been evaluated and he was found to be deficient. “Peres: Your kingdom has been divided, and given to the Medes and Persians.” Belshazzar’s empire had been broken into bits and pieces, dissolved and destroyed.

Some scholars have suggested that in referring to three weights listed in declining order, Daniel may have been referring to the declining worth of various Babylonian kings. Thus, the great king Nebuchadnezzar perhaps was symbolized by the mina, Evil-Merodach by the shekel (in other words, only one-fiftieth as great as Nebuchadnezzar), and Nabonidus and Belshazzar (father and son respectively, who reigned as co-regents) were half-shekels—implying that it took two “half-regents” to equal one Evil-Merodach.

The overall impact of Daniel’s double meaning in these words was to point out that the degeneration of the rulers of Babylon cried out for God’s judgment. That very night Belshazzar was killed and Babylon was conquered by the Persians.

MENI [MEN eye] (see GODS, PAGAN).

MENNA [MEN uh]—a form of MENAN.

MEN-PLEASERS—those who cultivate the favor of their superiors through an outward show of service (Eph. 6:6; Col. 3:22). The Greek word means “one who renders service to human beings.”

Also see EYESERVICE.

MENUHOTH [men YUE hawth]—a form of MANUHOTH.

MEONENIM, PLAIN OF [meh AHN eh nim]—KJV word (Judg. 9:37) for DIVINER’S TEREBINTH TREE.

MEONOTHAI [meh AHN oh thigh] (habitations of the Lord)—the father of Ophrah and a descendant of Judah (1 Chr. 4:14).

MEPHAATH [mef AY ath]—a city allotted to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:18) and assigned to the Levites (Josh. 21:37). In Jeremiah’s time Mephaath belonged to the Moabites (Jer. 48:21). It was in TRANSJORDAN, east of the Dead Sea.

MEPHIBOSHETH [meh FIB oh shehth] (from the mouth of [the] shame [ful god Baal])—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Jonathan and grandson of Saul. Mephibosheth was also called Merib-Baal (1 Chr. 8:34; 9:40), probably his original name, meaning “a striver against Baal.” His name was changed because the word “Baal” was associated with idol worship.

   Mephibosheth was only five years old when his father, Jonathan, and his grandfather, Saul, died on Mount Gilboa in the Battle of Jezreel (2 Sam. 4:4). When the child’s nurse heard the outcome of the battle, she feared for Mephibosheth’s life. As she fled for his protection, “he fell and became lame” (2 Sam. 4:4). For the rest of his life he was crippled.

After David consolidated his kingdom, he remembered his covenant with Jonathan to treat his family with kindness (1 Samuel 20). Through Ziba, a servant of the house of Saul, David found out about Mephibosheth. The lame prince had been staying “in the house of Machir the son of Ammiel, in Lo Debar” (2 Sam. 9:4). David then summoned Mephibosheth to his palace, restored to him the estates of Saul, appointed servants for him, and gave him a place at the royal table (2 Sam. 9:7–13).

When David’s son Absalom rebelled, the servant Ziba falsely accused Mephibosheth of disloyalty to David (2 Samuel 16:1–4). David believed Ziba’s story and took Saul’s property from Mephibosheth. Upon David’s return to Jerusalem, Mephibosheth cleared himself. David in turn offered Mephibosheth half of Saul’s estates (2 Sam. 19:24–30), but he refused. David’s return to Jerusalem as king was the only reward Mephibosheth desired.

Although Mephibosheth was often wronged and his life was filled with tragedy, he never grew angry or embittered. Even material possessions had little appeal to him—an important lesson for all followers of the Lord.

2. A son of King Saul and Rizpah (2 Sam. 21:8).

MERAB [MEE rab] (increase)—the older daughter of King Saul (1 Sam. 14:49). When GOLIATH defied and taunted the Israelites, Saul promised that the man who killed him would be given great riches as well as Merab in marriage (1 Sam. 17:25). When David killed the giant, however, Saul changed his mind. David then married MICHAL, the younger daughter of Saul.

MERAIAH [meh RYE uh]—head of the priestly family of Seraiah after the return from the captivity (Neh. 12:12).

MERAIOTH [meh RAY yawth]—the name of two men and a priestly house in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Zerahiah and the father of Amariah (1 Chr. 6:6–7).
2. A son of Ahitub and a priest of Jerusalem (Neh. 11:11).

3. A priestly house in the days of Joiakim the high priest (Neh. 12:15).

MERARI [meh RAY eye] (bitter)—the third and youngest son of Levi and the founder of the MERARITES, one of the three Levitical families. Merari was the father of MAHLI and MUSHI (Ex. 6:16–19), who, in turn, were the founders of the MAHLITES and the MUSHITES (Num. 3:33; 26:58).

MERARITES [meh RAY ites]—the descendants of MERARI (Num. 26:57). During the wilderness journey, the Merarites were stationed on the north side of the tabernacle. The Merarites (who included the MAHLITES and the MUSHITES) had the responsibility of transporting many of the materials that made up the tabernacle (Num. 3:35–37). To enable them to transport these materials they were assigned "four carts and eight oxen" (Num. 7:8). They were under the direction of ITHAMAR, Aaron's youngest son.

The Merarites were the smallest of the three Levitical families (also see GERSHONITES and KOHATHITES); at the first census they numbered 6,200 from a month old and above (Num. 3:34), or 3,200 males between the age of 30 and 50 (Num. 4:42–43).

Twelve cities were assigned to the Merarites: four from the tribe of Zebulun (Jokneam, Kartah, Dimnah, and Nahalal), four from the tribe of Reuben (Bezer, Jahaz, Kedemoth, and Mephaath), and four from the tribe of Gad (Ramoth in Gilead, Mahanaim, Heshbon, and Jazer). One of these cities, Ramoth in Gilead, also was a city of refuge (Josh. 21:34–40).

The Merarites made up six of the twenty-four divisions of temple musicians in David's time (1 Chr. 25:3). They aided in Hezekiah's cleansing of the temple (2 Chr. 29:12). After the captivity a small number of them returned to Jerusalem (Ezra 8:18–19).

MERATHAIM [mer uh THAY em] (double rebellion)—a symbolic name for Babylon (Jer. 50:21). Merathaim is a play in the Hebrew language on the Babylonian words mat marrati ("Land of the Bitter River"), a region in southern Babylonia.

MERCHANDISER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MERCHANT (see COMMERCE; OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MERCURIUS [mur KUE reh uhs]—a form of HERMES.

MERCURY (see GODS, PAGAN; MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

MERCY—the aspect of God's love that causes Him to help the miserable, just as grace is the aspect of His love that moves Him to forgive the guilty. Those who are miserable may be so either because of breaking God's law or because of circumstances beyond their control.

God shows compassion toward those who have broken His law (Dan. 9:9; 1 Tim. 1:13, 16), although such mercy is selective, demonstrating that it is not deserved (Rom. 9:14–18). God's mercy on the miserable extends beyond punishment that is withheld (Eph. 2:4–6). Withheld punishment keeps us from hell, but it does not get us into heaven. God's mercy is greater than this.

God also shows mercy by actively helping those who are miserable due to circumstances beyond their control. We see this aspect of mercy especially in the life of our Lord Jesus. He healed blind men (Matt. 9:27–31; 20:29–34) and lepers (Luke 17:11–19). These acts of healing grew out of his attitude of compassion and mercy.

Finally, because God is merciful, He expects His children to be merciful (Matt. 5:7; James 1:27).

MERCY SEAT—the golden lid or covering on the ARK OF THE COVENANT, regarded as the resting place of God (Ex. 25:17–22; 1 Chr. 28:11; Heb. 9:5; atonement cover, NIV). Also see TABERNACLE.

MERED [MEE red]—a son of Ezrah, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:17).

MEREMOTH [MER eh moth] (heights)—the name of three or four men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Uriah the priest who was assigned the task of weighing the gold and silver articles that Ezra brought back from Babylon (Ezra 8:33).
2. One of the "sons of Bani" (Ezra 10:34, 36) who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity.

3. A priest who, with Nehemiah, sealed the covenant (Neh. 10:5). He may be the same person as Meremoth No. 1.
4. A priest who returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Neh. 12:3).

MERES [MEE ress]—a high Persian official at Shushan (Susa), one of seven princes “who had access to the king’s presence” (Esth. 1:14).

MERIBAH [MEHR ih bah] (contention)—the name of two different places where Moses struck a rock with his rod, and water gushed forth to satisfy the thirsty Israelites:

1. A place “in Rephidim” at the foot of Mount Horeb. The Israelites camped here near the beginning of their forty years in the wilderness (Ex. 17:1–7).
2. A second place where Moses struck a rock. This camp was in Kadesh, in the Wilderness of Zin. The Israelites camped here near the end of their period of wilderness wandering (Num. 20:2–13). In Deuteronomy 32:51, this place is referred to as Meribath-Kadesh (Meribah Kadesh, NIV).

MERIBATH-KADESH [MER eh bath KAY desh]—a form of MERIBAH No. 2.

MERIB-BAAL [MER ib BAY uhl] (contender against Baal)—a son of Jonathan (1 Chr. 8:34) and grandson of King Saul. Merib-baal is the same person as MEPHIBOSHETH No. 1 (2 Sam. 9:6).

MERODACH [MEHR oh dack] (see GODS, PAGAN).

MERODACH-BALADAN [MEHR oh dack BAL ah dahn] (the god Marduk has given an heir)—the king of Babylon (721–710 and 704 B.C.) who sent emissaries to King Hezekiah of Judah (Is. 39:1; Berodach-Baladan, 2 Kin. 20:12).

To the Assyrians, Merodach-Baladan was a persistent rebel king. He appeared on the political scene during the days of TIGLATH-PILESER III of Assyria. He rallied the support of the ARAMEAN tribes in Babylonia and arranged an alliance with Elam. In 721 B.C., when SARGON II came to power in Assyria, Merodach-Baladan entered Babylon and claimed kingship to the country.

In 710 B.C., Sargon made a determined effort to expel Merodach-Baladan and make himself king. After submitting to Sargon, Merodach-Baladan was reinstated as king of the tribe of Bit-Yakin, a district near the mouth of the Euphrates River. Merodach-Baladan remained faithful to Sargon; but when Sennacherib came to power in 705 B.C., he grew restless. In 703 B.C., Merodach-Baladan returned to Babylon, killed the ruler there, and prepared to fight Assyria. Sennacherib reacted energetically and drove Merodach-Baladan into exile once again.

Merodach-Baladan sent ambassadors to Jerusalem to visit King Hezekiah of Judah, who had just recovered miraculously from a serious illness. He sent letters and presents (2 Kin. 20:12; Is. 39:1) and inquired of the "wonder that was done in the land" (2 Chr. 32:31). This probably was a reference to the sun's shadow moving backward ten degrees on the SUNDIAL OF AHAZ (2 Kin. 20:8–11). The real reason for his visit may have been to gain an ally in Hezekiah and to involve him in revolt against Assyria.

There is no indication that Hezekiah formed an alliance, but he showed the Babylonian ambassadors his wealth and arsenal—an act that brought stiff rebuke from the prophet Isaiah (2 Kin. 20:13–18). Hezekiah later revolted from Assyria, a move that resulted in Sennacherib's invasion of Judah in 701 B.C.

Merodach-Baladan was never successful in his bid for Babylonian independence. The task was left for NABOPOLASSAR (626–605 B.C.), who was able to succeed where Merodach-Baladan had failed.

MEROM, WATERS OF [MEE rahm] (high place)—a place where Joshua defeated a coalition of Canaanites led by Jabin, king of Hazor (Josh. 11:5–7).

MERONOTHITE [meh RAHN uh thight]—an inhabitant of Meronoth. Two Meronothites are mentioned in the Old Testament: JEHDEIAH, who was over the royal stables of King David (1 Chr. 27:30), and JADON, who helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:7).

MEROZ [MEE rahz]—a place in northern Palestine near the Kishon River, in or near the Valley of Jezreel. In her song of victory (Judg. 5:23), Deborah pronounced a curse upon Meroz for its refusal to help the Israelites in their battle against Sisera.

MESECH [MEE sek]—a form of MESHECH.

MESHA [MEE shuh]—the name of a boundary and three men in the Old Testament:

1. A boundary of the territory in Arabia occupied by the descendants of Joktan (Gen. 10:30).
2. A king of Moab who "regularly paid the king of Israel [Ahab] one hundred thousand lambs and the wool of one hundred thousand rams" (2 Kin. 3:4). After Ahab's death at Ramoth Gilead, Mesha refused to pay the tribute to Ahab's successor, Ahaziah (2 Kings 1:1).

   Mesha led the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites in an invasion of Judah after Jehoshaphat, Judah's king, began his religious reform. Mesha and his allies were defeated when the Lord caused them to turn on one another; Judah and Jehoshaphat won without a battle (2 Chr. 20).

   When King Ahaziah died, Jehoram became king of Israel. Jehoram wanted Mesha to resume the tribute, and he asked Jehoshaphat to help him force Mesha to pay it (2 Kin. 3). The two kings, along with a king of Edom, moved around the southern end of the Dead Sea to attack Mesha. The armies nearly died of thirst, but the prophet Elisha instructed them to dig trenches to reach water.

   In the glare of the early-morning sun, Mesha mistook the water for blood. He carelessly moved to attack the armies of Israel and Judah. His army was beaten, and the cities of Moab were destroyed. In a last-ditch effort to avert total defeat, Mesha offered his oldest son as a burnt offering upon the wall of KIR HARASETH as a sacrifice to the god Chemosh. The human sacrifice apparently frightened or shocked the armies of Israel and Judah, so they pulled back from the city, lifting the siege and failing to capture Kir Haraseth.

   Mesha is the king of whom the famous MOABITE STONE declares: "I am Mesha, son of Chemosh [Yat] . . . king of Moab, the Dibonite."

Thus, he is the one who caused the Moabite Stone to be written and had it erected.
3. A man of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:42).
4. An ancestor of King Saul (1 Chr. 8:8–9).

MESHACH [MEE shak]—the Chaldean name given to Mishael, one of Daniel's companions (Dan. 1:7). Along with SHADRACH and ABEDNEGO, Meshach would not bow down and worship the pagan image of gold set up by Nebuchadnezzar. They were cast into "the burning fiery furnace," but were preserved from harm by the power of God.

MESHECH [MEE shek]—the name of two men and two tribes in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Japheth (1 Chr. 1:5).
2. A son of Shem (1 Chr. 1:17), or possibly an unknown Aramean tribe, also spelled Mash (Gen. 10:23).
3. A tribe mentioned in association with Kedar (Ps. 120:5; Mesech, KJV).
4. The descendants of the son of Japheth known as the Moschi or Moschoi (Ezek. 27:13).

MESHELEMIAH [meh SHEL uh mye uh] (the Lord repays)—a Levite gatekeeper of the tabernacle during David's reign (1 Chr. 9:21). He is also called Shelemiah (1 Chr. 26:14).

MESHEZABEEL [meh SHEZ uh beel]—the name of three men in the Book of Nehemiah:

1. An ancestor of Meshullam (Neh. 3:4).
2. One of the leaders of the people who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:21).
3. A descendant of Judah through Zerah (Neh. 11:24).

Any two or perhaps all three of these men may be identical. The NIV, NASB, REB, and NRSV spell the name Meshezabel.

MESHEZABEL [meh SHEZ uh bell]—a form of MESHEZABEEL.

MESHILLEMITH [meh SHILL uh meth]—a form of MESHILLEMOTH No. 2.

MESHILLEMOTH [meh SHILL uh moth] (acts of repayment)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A man of the tribe of Ephraim (2 Chr. 28:12).
2. A priest of the family of Immer (Neh. 11:13), also called Meshillemith (1 Chr. 9:12).

MESHOBAB [meh SHOH bab] (restored)—a leader of the tribe of Simeon in the days of Hezekiah, king of Judah (1 Chr. 4:34).

MESHULLAM [meh SHUHL um] (friendship)—the name of twenty-one men in the Old Testament:

1. An ancestor of Shaphan (2 Kin. 22:3).
2. A son of Zerubbabel and descendant of King Jehoiakim's son, Jeconiah (1 Chr. 3:19).
3. A leader of the tribe of Gad during the reign of Jotham of Judah (1 Chr. 5:13).
4. A man of the tribe of Benjamin listed in the family tree of King Saul (1 Chr. 8:17).
5. The father of Sallu of the tribe of Benjamin (Neh. 11:7).
6. A son of Shephatiah, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 9:8).
7. A priest and member of an important priestly family (Neh. 11:11).
8. A priest of the house of Immer (1 Chr. 9:12).
9. A Levite of the Kohathite family who helped oversee temple repairs under King Josiah of Judah (2 Chr. 34:12).
10. A man whom Ezra sent to find Levites willing to go to Jerusalem after the captivity (Ezra 8:16).
11. A man who opposed Ezra in the matter of divorcing pagan wives married during the captivity (Ezra 10:15).
12. A descendant of Bani who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:29).
13. A son of Berechiah who helped repair two sections of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:4, 30).
14. A son of Besodeiah who helped repair the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 3:6).

15. A leader of the people who helped Ezra read the Law of Moses (Neh. 8:4).
16. A priest who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:7).
17. A leader of the people who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:20).
18. A priest of the family of Ezra in the time of the high priest Joiakim (Neh. 12:13).
19. A priest in the time of Joiakim (Neh. 12:16).
20. A gatekeeper during the time of Joiakim (Neh. 12:25).
21. A prince of Judah who participated in the dedication of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:33).

MESHULLEMETH [meh SHUHL uh meth] (restitution)—the wife of Manasseh, king of Judah (2 Kin. 21:19). Meshullemeth was the mother of Amon, Manasseh's son who succeeded him to the throne of Judah.

MESOBAITE [meh SOH buh eyt]—a form of MEZOBAITE.

MESOPOTAMIA [mess oh poh TAME ih uh] (land between the rivers)—a region situated between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers; the general area inhabited by the ancient Assyrians and Babylonians. In the New Testament the word Mesopotamia refers to the areas between and around the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers, including ancient Syria, Accad, Babylonia, and Sumer. But in the Old Testament, Mesopotamia usually translates a phrase that means "Aram of the two rivers" and is restricted to northwest Mesopotamia.

Abraham sent his servant to Nahor in Mesopotamia to find a bride for Isaac (Gen. 24:10). If Nahor refers to a city, it may be the same city, Nahur, that is mentioned in the MARI texts. The Mari texts are over 20,000 clay tablets dating from about 1750 B.C. from the city of Mari (modern Tell Hariri) on the Euphrates River near the border between modern Syria and Iraq. Many scholars believe Nahur was situated near ancient Haran.

The pagan prophet Balaam came from Pethor of Mesopotamia (Deut. 23:4). In the days of the judges, God sent "Cushan–Rishathaim king of Mesopotamia" to afflict the rebellious Hebrew people (Judg. 3:8, 10). This king's ethnic background has been much debated. He has been identified by various scholars with the Hittites, Mitanni, Horites (Hurrians), and the Habiru.

Later, when the Ammonites waged war against King David, they hired chariot and cavalry troops from Mesopotamia (1 Chr. 19:6). These troops may have been members of the warrior class that lived throughout Mesopotamia at that time.

Acts 2:9 refers to the Jews present at the Feast of Pentecost as “those dwelling in Mesopotamia.” These people were probably from Jewish settlements in Babylonia such as Pumbeditha, Neherdea, Babylon, Ctesiphon, and Nippur.

Stephen spoke of Abraham’s original home, Ur of the Chaldeans, as being situated in Mesopotamia (Acts 7:2). Ur lay far to the south near the Persian Gulf. Today most of Mesopotamia is in Iraq with small parts in Turkey and Syria.

MESSENGER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MESSIAH [meh SIGH uh] (anointed one)—the one anointed by God and empowered by God's spirit to deliver His people and establish His kingdom. In Jewish thought, the Messiah would be the king of the Jews, a political leader who would defeat their enemies and bring in a golden era of peace and prosperity. In Christian thought, the term Messiah refers to Jesus' role as a spiritual deliverer, setting His people free from sin and death.

The word Messiah comes from a Hebrew term that means "anointed one." Its Greek counterpart is Christos, from which the word Christ comes. Messiah was one of the titles used by early Christians to describe who Jesus was.

In Old Testament times, part of the ritual of commissioning a person for a special task was to anoint him with oil. The phrase "anointed" one was applied to a person in such cases. In the Old Testament, Messiah is used more than thirty times to describe kings (2 Sam. 1:14, 16), priests (Lev. 4:3, 5, 16), the patriarchs (Ps. 105:15), and even the Persian King

Cyrus (Is. 45:1). The word is also used in connection with King David, who became the model of the messianic king who would come at the end of the age (2 Sam. 22:51; Ps. 2:2). But it was not until the time of Daniel (sixth century B.C.) that Messiah was used as an actual title of a king who would come in the future (Dan. 9:25–26). Still later, as the Jewish people struggled against their political enemies, the Messiah came to be thought of as a political, military ruler.

From the New Testament we learn more about the people's expectations. They thought the Messiah would come soon to perform signs (John 7:31) and to deliver His people, after which He would live and rule forever (John 12:34). Some even thought that John the Baptist was the Messiah (John 1:20). Others said that the Messiah was to come from Bethlehem (John 7:42). Most expected the Messiah to be a political leader, a king who would defeat the Romans and provide for the physical needs of the Israelites.

According to the Gospel of John, a woman of Samaria said to Jesus, "I know that Messiah is coming." Jesus replied, "I who speak to you am He" (John 4:25–26). In the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, however, Jesus never directly referred to Himself as the Messiah, except privately to His disciples, until the crucifixion (Matt. 26:63–64; Mark 14:61–62; Luke 22:67–70). He did accept the title and function of messiahship privately (Matt. 16:16–17). Yet Jesus constantly avoided being called "Messiah" in public (Mark 8:29–30). This is known as Jesus' "messianic secret." He was the Messiah, but He did not want it known publicly.

The reason for this is that Jesus' kingdom was not political but spiritual (John 18:36). If Jesus had used the title "Messiah," people would have thought he was a political king. But Jesus understood that the Messiah, God's Anointed One, was to be the Suffering Servant (Is. 52:13—53:12). The fact that Jesus was a suffering Messiah—a crucified deliverer—was a "stumbling block" to many of the Jews (1 Cor. 1:23). They saw the cross as a sign of Jesus' weakness, powerlessness, and failure. They rejected the concept of a crucified Messiah.

But the message of the early church centered around the fact that the crucified and risen Jesus is the Christ (Acts 5:42; 17:3; 18:5). They proclaimed the "scandalous" gospel of a crucified Messiah as the power and wisdom of God (1 Cor. 1:23–24). John wrote, “Who is a liar but he who denies that Jesus is the Christ [the Messiah]?” (1 John 2:22).

By the time of the apostle Paul, “Christ” was in the process of changing from a title to a proper name. The name is found mostly in close association with the name “Jesus,” as in “Christ Jesus” (Rom. 3:24) or “Jesus Christ” (Rom. 1:1). When the church moved onto Gentile soil, the converts lacked the Jewish background for understanding the title, and it lost much of its significance. Luke wrote, “The disciples were first called Christians [those who belong to and follow the Messiah in Antioch” (Acts 11:26).

As the Messiah, Jesus is the divinely appointed king who brought God’s kingdom to earth (Matt. 12:28; Luke 11:20). His way to victory was not by physical force and violence, but through love, humility, and service.

MESSIAS [muh SYE uhs]—Greek form of MESSIAH.

METALSMITH (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

METAL WORKER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

METALS OF THE BIBLE. The metals used in Bible times were gold (Gen. 2:11–12), silver (Gen. 13:2), bronze (Gen. 4:22; Ex. 25:3), copper (Deut. 8:9; Job 28:2), iron (Gen. 4:22; Lev. 26:19), tin (Num. 31:22), and lead (Ezek. 22:18, 20; 27:12).

Gold was almost certainly the first metal known and used by human beings. But it was too soft to be used for tools or weapons. It was used mainly for jewelry and decorative purposes. The same was true of silver.

Copper was especially famous and widely used in ancient times. Until the dawn of the Iron Age (about 1200 B.C.), copper was the most practical metal in the Old Testament era. Like gold, native copper is also soft. But the metalworkers of the ancient world discovered it hardened appreciably when hammered, and especially when alloyed with tin to produce bronze. Various copper alloys were used for making weapons such as daggers, tools such as sickles, and all kinds of utensils (Ex. 38:3; Num. 16:39; Jer. 52:18).

When the Israelites stood on the threshold of the Promised Land, Moses addressed them with these words: “The Lord your God is bringing you into a good land . . . a land whose stones are iron and out of whose hills you can dig copper” (Deut. 8:7, 9). In the nation’s later history, King Solomon established a copper-smelting industry at EZION GEBER, a city on the Red Sea at the northern end of the Gulf of Aqaba (1 Kin. 9:26; 22:48; 2 Chr. 8:17; 20:36).

Solomon’s copper-smelting refineries at Ezion Geber were built strategically between the hills of Edom (to the east) and the hills of Palestine (to the west). They were ideally situated to take advantage of the draft caused by the strong winds sweeping down from the north.

Not until the time of King David, who broke the Philistine stranglehold over the land of Israel, was iron available to any great degree among the Israelites. During the reign of King Saul, the Philistines still held a monopoly in iron-smelting.

The story is told in 1 Samuel 13:19–22: “Now there was no blacksmith to be found throughout all the land of Israel, for the Philistines said, ‘Lest the Hebrews make swords or spears.’ But the Israelites would go down to the Philistines to sharpen each man’s plowshare, his mattock, his ax, and his sickle. . . . So it came about, on the day of battle, that there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people who were with Saul and Jonathan.”

According to archaeological findings, the first substantial smelting of iron occurred about 1400 B.C., probably among the Hittites of Asia Minor. Before the Philistines, the Hittites held the iron monopoly; apparently the Phoenicians (including the Philistines) learned the secret of iron smelting from them.

Archaeological excavations have established that iron ores were occasionally smelted in Mesopotamia, near the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers, perhaps as early as 2700 B.C. For some unknown reason, however, the use of iron was not pursued. This metal did not come into general use, at least on a wide scale, until about 1200 B.C., at the beginning of the Early Iron Age.

The primitive method of smelting iron ore involved the use of charcoal and forced air in pits or furnaces. By this method, iron ore was reduced to metallic iron. Then the glowing ball of iron was pulled out of the furnace and hammered vigorously to expel the impurities and give the metal its intended shape (Deut. 4:20; 1 Kin. 8:51; Jer. 6:29; 11:4).

METEYARD (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

METHEG AMMAH [METH eg AM uh]—a place mentioned in 2 Samuel 8:1.

METHUSELAH [meh THUE zuh luh]—a son of Enoch and the grandfather of Noah. At the age of 187, Methuselah became the father of Lamech. After the birth of Lamech, Methuselah lived 782 years and died at the age of 969. He lived longer than any other human. He was an ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:37; Mathusala, KJV).

METHUSHAEL [meh THUE sheh el] (man of God)—a son of Mehujael and the father of Lamech (Gen. 4:18).

MEUNIM, MEUNITES [meh YU nem, meh YU nights]—an Arabian tribe that lived in and around their capital at Maon (Josh. 15:55), about 19 kilometers (12 miles) southeast of Petra. In the days of Hezekiah, the Meunites lived as strangers in the eastern end of the Valley of Gedor. One group of the Meunites was attacked and destroyed by the Simeonites (1 Chr. 4:39–41). Uzziah also fought against the Meunites (2 Chr. 26:7). After the captivity, some of the descendants of the Meunim were employed as temple servants in the Jerusalem temple (Neh. 7:52; 2 Chr. 26:7; Mehunim).

MEZAHAB [MEZ uh hab] (waters of gold)—the father of Matred and grandfather of Mehetabel. Mehetabel was the wife of Hadar (Gen. 36:39), or Hadad (1 Chr. 1:50), king of Edom.

MEZOBÏAITE [meh ZOH bay ite]—a title or description of Jaasiel, one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:47; Mesobaite, KJV).

MEZUZAH [meh ZU zah] (doorpost)—a small parchment scroll inscribed with Deuteronomy 6:4–9 and 11:13–21, placed in a container, and attached to the doorpost, as commanded in these passages from Deuteronomy, "You shall write them on the doorpost of your house and on your gates" (6:9).

MIAMIN [MYE uh min]—a form of MIJAMIN Nos. 2 and 4.

MIBHAR [MIB har] (elite)—a "son of Hagri," probably meaning a Hagrite—one of the nomadic peoples of Gilead. Mibhar was one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:38).

MIBSAM [MIB sam] (fragrance)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:13).
2. A descendant of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:25).

MIBZAR [MIB zar] (fortress)—an Edomite clan chief descended from Esau (Gen. 36:42).

MICAH [MIE kuh] (Who is like the Lord)—the name of six men in the Old Testament:

1. A man from the mountains of Ephraim during the period of the judges in Israel’s history. Micah’s worship of false gods led the Danites into idolatry (Judges 17–18).
2. A descendant of Reuben (1 Chr. 5:5).
3. A son of Merib-Baal listed in the family tree of King Saul of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:34–35; 9:40–41). Micah was the father of Pithon, Melech, Tarea (or Tahrea), and Ahaz. His father Merib-Baal (also called Mephibosheth, 2 Sam. 4:4) was a son of Jonathan and a grandson of Saul.
4. A son of Zichri and grandson of Asaph (1 Chr. 9:15). Micah is also called “Micha, the son of Zabdi” (Neh. 11:17; also Neh. 11:22) and “Michaiah, the son of Zaccur” (Neh. 12:35).
5. The father of Abdon (2 Chr. 34:20) or Achbor (2 Kin. 22:12). Abdon was one of five men whom King Josiah of Judah sent to inquire of Huldah the prophetess when Hilkiah the priest found the Book of the Law. Micah is also called Michaiah (2 Kin. 22:12).
6. An Old Testament prophet and author of the Book of Micah. A younger contemporary of the great prophet Isaiah, Micah was from Moresheth Gath (Mic. 1:1, 14), a town in southern Judah. His prophecy reveals his country origins; he uses many images from country life (Mic. 7:1).

   Micah spoke out strongly against those who claimed to be prophets of the Lord but who used this position to lead the people of Judah into false hopes and further errors: “The sun shall go down on the prophets, and the day shall be dark for them” (Mic. 3:6). Micah’s love for God would not allow him to offer false hopes to those who were under His sentence of judgment.

   Little else is known about this courageous spokesman for the Lord. He tells us in his book that he prophesied during the reigns of three kings in Judah: Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah (Mic. 1:1). This would place the time of his ministry from about 750 to 687 B.C.

MICAH, BOOK OF—a brief prophetic book of the Old Testament, known for its condemnation of the rich because of their exploitation of the poor. Micah also contains a clear prediction of the Messiah’s birth in Bethlehem, centuries before Jesus was actually born in this humble little village. The book takes its title from its author, the prophet Micah, whose name means, “Who is like the Lord?”

Structure of the Book. Micah is a short book of only seven chapters, but it stands as a classic example of the work to which the Old Testament prophets were called. Over and over again, Micah sounds the theme of God’s judgment against his homeland, Judah, as well as her sister nation, Israel, because of their moral decline. Micah watched as the Assyrians grew in strength and marched their armies throughout the ancient world. It was clear to him that this pagan nation would serve as the instrument of God’s judgment unless Judah and Israel turned back to God.

Micah also is known as the champion of the oppressed. He condemns wealthy landowners for taking the land of the poor (2:2). He also attacks dishonest merchants for using false weights, bribing judges, and charging excessive interest rates. Even the priests and prophets seemed to be caught up in this tidal wave of greed and dishonesty that swept his country. To a people more concerned about observing rituals than living a life of righteousness, Micah thundered, “He has shown you, O man, what is good; and what does the LORD require of you but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God?” (6:8). This is one of the greatest passages in the Old Testament. It expresses the timeless truth that authentic worship consists of following God’s will and dealing justly with other people.

In addition to the theme of judgment, Micah also emphasizes the reality of God’s love. Practically every passage about God’s wrath is balanced with a promise of God’s blessing. The greatest promise in the book is a prophecy of the birth of the Messiah: “But you, Bethlehem Ephrathah, though you are little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of you shall come forth to Me the One to be ruler in Israel” (5:2). This messianic verse is stunning in its accuracy because it names the specific town where the Messiah was born—the village of Bethlehem in the territory of the tribe of Judah. This prophecy was fulfilled about 700 years after Micah’s time with the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem.

The final two chapters of Micah’s book are presented in the form of a debate between God and His people. God invites the nations of Israel and Judah to reason with Him on the subject of their conduct. He convinces them that their sin is deep and grievous, but He assures them of His presence in spite of their unworthiness.

Authorship and Date. This book was written by the prophet Micah, a native of the village of Moresheth (1:1) in southern Judah near the Philistine city of Gath. Since Micah championed the rights of the poor, he was probably a humble farmer or herdsman himself, although he shows a remarkable knowledge of Jerusalem and Samaria, the capital cities of the nations of Judah and Israel. Micah also tells us that he prophesied “in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah” (1:1). The reigns of these three kings stretched from about 750 B.C. to 687 B.C.; so his book was probably written sometime during this period.

Historical Setting. The Book of Micah belongs to that turbulent period during which the Assyrians launched their drive for supremacy throughout the ancient world. Micah probably saw his prophecy of judgment against Israel fulfilled, since the Assyrians defeated this nation in 722 B.C. The fall of Israel to the north must have stunned the citizens of Judah. Would they be the next to fall before the conquering armies of this pagan nation? Still, the religious leaders retreated into a false confidence that no evil would befall them because the temple was situated in their capital city of Jerusalem (3:11). Micah warned there was no magical saving power in their temple or their rituals (3:12). They needed to turn back to God as their source of strength and power.

Theological Contribution. The mixture of judgment and promise in the Book of Micah is a striking characteristic of the Old Testament prophets. These contrasting passages give real insight into the character of God. In His wrath He remembers mercy; He cannot maintain His anger forever. Judgment with love is the ironic, but essential, work of the Lord. In the darkest days of impending judgment on Israel and Judah, there always was the possibility that a remnant would be spared. God was determined to maintain His holiness, and so He acted in judgment on those who had broken His covenant. But He was just as determined to fulfill the promises He had made to Abraham centuries earlier. This compelled Him to point to the fulfillment of the covenant in the kingdom to come.

Perhaps the greatest contribution of the Book of Micah is its clear prediction of a coming Savior. The future Messiah is referred to indirectly in some of the prophetic books of the Old Testament. But He is mentioned directly in the Book of Micah.

This prophecy of the Messiah's birth is remarkable when we think of the circumstances that were necessary to bring it to fulfillment. Although they were residents of Nazareth, Mary and Joseph happened to be in Bethlehem at the right time when the Messiah was born about 700 years after Micah's prediction. This is a valuable lesson on the providence of God. He always manages to work His will through a unique combination of forces and events.

Special Considerations. Micah begins his words of judgment with calls for the people to come to court. God is portrayed as the prosecuting attorney, the witness for the prosecution, and the sentencing judge. God is a witness against His people (1:2); He demands justice (3:1); He even calls upon the elements of creation to be His witnesses, since He has a legal dispute against His people (6:1–2). This type of language is also found in the Book of Isaiah (Is. 1:2). It is likely that Isaiah and Micah drew this terminology from the Book of Deuteronomy (Deut. 31:28). The clear implication is that God has the right to hold His people accountable for their behavior.

God insists that His people keep their part of the covenant agreement. But even while making His demands, He holds out the possibility of grace and forgiveness. This leads his Covenant People to declare: "You will cast all our sins into the depths of the sea. You will give truth to Jacob and mercy to Abraham, which You have sworn to our fathers from days of old" (7:19–20).

MICAIAH [mie KAY yah] (who is like the Lord?)—the prophet who predicted the death of King Ahab of Israel in the battle against the Syrians at Ramoth Gilead (1 Kin. 22:8–28; 2 Chr. 18:7–27). Ahab gathered about 400 prophets, apparently all in his employment. They gave their unanimous approval to Ahab's proposed attack against the Syrian king, Ben-Hadad.

King Jehoshaphat of Judah was unconvinced by this display. He asked, "Is there not still a prophet of the LORD here, that we may inquire of Him?" (1 Kin. 22:7; 2 Chr. 18:6). Ahab replied, "There is still one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may inquire of the LORD but I hate him, because he does not prophesy good concerning me, but evil" (1 Kin. 22:8; 2 Chr. 18:7). The prophet Micaiah was then summoned.

When Ahab asked this prophet's advice, Micaiah answered, "Go and prosper, for the LORD will deliver it into the hand of the king!" (1 Kin. 22:15; 2 Chr. 18:14).

Micaiah's answer was heavy with sarcasm, irony, and contempt. Ahab realized he was being mocked; so he commanded him to speak nothing but the truth. Micaiah then said, “I saw all Israel scattered on the mountains as sheep that have no shepherd” (1 Kin. 22:17; 2 Chr. 18:16). Ahab turned to Jehoshaphat and said, “Did I not tell you that he would not prophesy good concerning me, but evil?” (1 Kin. 22:18; 2 Chr. 18:17).

Zedekiah then struck Micaiah on the cheek and accused him of being a liar. Ahab commanded that Micaiah be put in prison until the king’s victorious return from Ramoth Gilead. Then Micaiah said, “If you ever return . . . the LORD has not spoken by me” (1 Kin. 22:28; 2 Chr. 18:27).

Ahab did not return; he died at Ramoth Gilead, just as Micaiah had predicted.

MICE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MICHA [MY kuh] (who is like the Lord?)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Mephibosheth (2 Sam. 9:12).
2. A Levite who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:11).
3. A Levite descended from Asaph (Neh. 11:17, 22), also called Micah (1 Chr. 9:15).

MICHAEL [MIE kay el] (who is like God?)—the name of ten men and an archangel in the Bible:

1. The father of Sethur (Num. 13:13). Sethur was a representative of the tribe of Asher among the twelve spies sent by Moses to spy out the land of Canaan.
2. A descendant of Gad who settled in Bashan (1 Chr. 5:11–13).
3. Another descendant of Gad (1 Chr. 5:14).
4. A Levite of the family of Gershon (1 Chr. 6:40). He was an ancestor of Asaph the singer.
5. A chief man of the tribe of Issachar, family of Tola, house of Uzzi (1 Chr. 7:3).
6. One of the sons of Beriah (1 Chr. 8:16). Michael is mentioned in the family tree of King Saul of Benjamin.
7. A warrior from the tribe of Manasseh. He joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:20).

8. The father of Omri (1 Chr. 27:18).
9. A son of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah (2 Chr. 21:2). Michael was a brother of Jehoram, king of Judah.
10. The father of Zebadiah, of the family of Shephatiah (Ezra 8:8).
11. An archangel, or an angel of high rank, who served as prince or guardian over the destinies of the nation of Israel (Dan. 10:21; 12:1). According to the Epistle of Jude, Michael disputed with Satan over the body of Moses (Jude 9). This reference is a puzzle to scholars, because the incident to which Jude refers does not appear anywhere in the Old Testament. The Book of Revelation speaks of “Michael and his angels” (Rev. 12:7), who struggled with Satan when the devil rebelled against God at the beginning of time.

MICHAH [MY kuh] (who is like the Lord?)—a Levite during David’s reign (1 Chr. 23:20).

MICHAIAH [my KYE uh] (who is like the Lord?)—the name of four men and one woman in the Old Testament:

1. An officer of King Josiah of Judah (2 Kin. 22:12), also called Micah (2 Chr. 34:20).
2. The wife of King Rehoboam and mother of King Abijah (2 Chr. 13:1–2).
3. A leader sent by Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, to teach the Law in the cities of Judah (2 Chr. 17:7).
4. A priest who blew a trumpet during the celebration after Jerusalem’s walls were rebuilt (Neh. 12:35, 41), also called Micah (1 Chr. 9:15).
5. A son of Gemariah (Jer. 36:11, 13).

MICHAL [MY kul] (who is like God?)—the younger daughter of King Saul who became David’s wife. After David had become a hero by slaying GOLIATH, Saul offered to give Michal to David as his wife. But instead of a dowry, Saul requested of David “one hundred foreskins of the Philistines” (1 Sam. 18:25), hoping that David would be killed by the Philistines.

Instead, David won an impressive victory. He and his warriors killed 200 Philistines and brought their foreskins to the king. Then Saul presented Michal to David to become his wife (1 Sam. 18:27–28).

After their marriage, the ARK OF THE COVENANT was brought from the house of Obed-Edom to the City of David. Caught up in an inspired frenzy of religious fervor, David was filled with joy at being able to bring the ark back to Jerusalem. “Then David danced before the LORD with all his might; and David was wearing [only] a linen ephod [loincloth, kilt, or apron]” (2 Sam. 6:14). Whatever garment David was wearing, it apparently scandalized Michal, who accused him of lewd, base behavior—of “uncovering himself in the eyes of the maids” (2 Sam. 6:20).

Michal’s withering sarcasm was met by David’s devastating response. In effect he said, “My dance was a dance of joy, faith, and happiness in the Lord. Where is your joy in the Lord? Why do you not dance also?” By judging and condemning David, Michal had revealed a lack of love in her soul—quite a contrast to her earlier attitude (1 Sam. 18:20). Michal died barren (2 Sam. 6:21–23), one of the most terrible fates that could befall a Hebrew woman.

MICHMASH [MICK mash]—a city of Benjamin about 11 kilometers (7 miles) northeast of Jerusalem that figured prominently in the early history of Saul’s reign.

According to 1 Samuel 13:2, Saul gathered an army of three thousand men in an attempt to meet the Philistine threat. Two thousand of the men were under Saul’s personal command at Michmash, and one thousand men were under the command of Jonathan at nearby Gibeah of Benjamin.

When the Philistines moved toward Michmash, Saul fled to Gilgal where many of his soldiers deserted him. In a display of impatience and irreverence, “Saul said, ‘Bring a burnt offering and peace offerings here to me.’ And he offered the burnt offering.” After Saul offered the sacrifice to the Lord he was severely rebuked by Samuel (1 Sam. 13:5–15). Saul then returned to Gibeah. While “Saul was sitting in the outskirts of Gibeah under a pomegranate tree” (1 Sam. 14:2), Jonathan and his armorbearer scaled the northern cliff of the gorge of Michmash. By this daring tactical maneuver, they were able to kill the enemy sentries and throw the entire Philistine camp into panic.

Several centuries later, Ezra recorded that 122 men of Michmash returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:27; Michmas, NKJV; Micmash, NIV).

MICHMETHATH [MICK meh thath]—a place on the border of Ephraim and Manasseh.

MICHRI [MICK rye] (purchase price)—a descendant of Benjamin and an ancestor of Elah (1 Chr. 9:8).

MICHTAM [MICK tam]—a word occurring in the heading of six psalms (Psalm 16; 56–60; Miktam, NRSV, NIV; Mikhtam, NASB). The word may be a musical term indicating how the psalm should be sung.

MIDDAY—the middle part of the day; noon or the time around noon (Neh. 8:3; Acts 26:13). Also see TIME.

MIDDIN [MID in]—a town or village in the Wilderness of Judah, near the Dead Sea (Josh. 15:61).

MIDDLE GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

MIDDLE WALL—a barrier or partition that divided the inner court of the TEMPLE, open only to Jews, from the COURT OF THE GENTILES. The Jewish historian Josephus described this partition as a stone wall, inscribed with warnings to Gentiles not to enter the holy place of the temple, under threat of death.

The "middle wall of partition" between Jews and Gentiles existed spiritually as well as physically. The Law of Moses, especially the practice of circumcision and the food laws, erected a barrier of hostility and contempt between the two peoples. The Jewish people scorned the Gentiles who were "without the law" and rejoiced in their superior religious traditions. Christ, however, "is our peace, who has made both one, and has broken down the middle wall of division between us" (Eph. 2:14).

MIDIAN [MID ee un]—the name of a man and a territory in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Abraham by his concubine Keturah (Gen. 25:1–6). Midian had four sons (1 Chr. 1:33).
2. The land inhabited by the descendants of Midian. Situated east of the Jordan River and the Dead Sea, the land stretched southward through the Arabian desert as far as the southern and eastern parts of the peninsula of Sinai.

MIDIANITES [MID ee un ites]—a nomadic people who were enemies of the Israelites in Old Testament times. The Midianites were distantly related to the Israelites, since they sprang from MIDIAN, one of the sons of Abraham. But they usually were foes rather than friends of the Hebrew people. Abraham sent the children of Midian "to the country of the east" (Gen. 25:6) which probably included the desert fringes of Moab, Edom, and perhaps parts of the Sinai Peninsula. They are known thereafter in the Old Testament as one of the "people of the East" (Judg. 6:3, 33), or inhabitants of the desert regions of southern Syria and western Arabia.

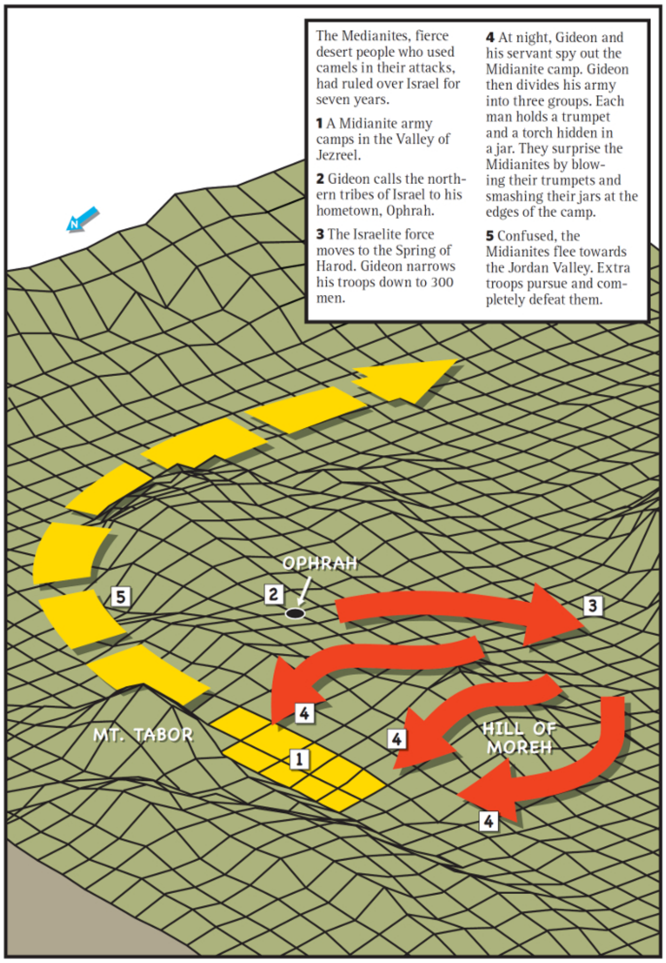
The Midianites were at least loosely associated with others of this group, including the Ishmaelites (Gen. 37:28; Judg. 8:24). Midianite travelers bought Joseph from his brothers and resold him in Egypt (Gen. 37:25–36). Moses married into a Midianite family (specifically an associated group known as the Kenites) in "the land of Midian" (Ex. 2:15). His wife Zipporah and his father-in-law Jethro were Midianites: "Then Moses was content to live with the man, and he gave Zipporah his daughter to Moses" (Ex. 2:21; 3:1). But this was the last friendly connection the Israelites had with the Midianites.

After the time of Moses, the Midianites consistently opposed the Israelites. They joined with the Moabites, in whose territory they had partly settled, in hiring the prophet-magician Balaam to curse Israel (Num. 22:4, 7). At Moab, just before the conquest of Canaan, the Midianites were among those who practiced sexual immorality as part of the ritual of their idolatrous religion. They involved some of the Israelites in this idolatry, causing God's judgment to come upon His people (Num. 25:1–9). Because of this the Midianites were singled out for destruction (Num. 25:16–18).

Perhaps the most serious Midianite threat to Israel came during the days of the judges when Midianite warriors invaded Palestine. They came on camels, an innovation in combat. The Israelites were driven into the hill country as the Midianites and other easterners raided their territory, plundering crops and cattle for seven years (Judg. 6:1–6).

Then God raised up Gideon to deliver Israel from the Midianites. He and the Ephraimites drove off the Midianites, capturing Oreb and Zeeb, two of their princes (Judg. 7:24–25), and pursuing escapees across the Jordan River to the desert fringes where their kings Zebah and Zalmunna were captured (Judg. 8:10–12). Gideon's great victory was mentioned in several later Old Testament passages as an example of God's deliverance of his people from oppression (Ps. 83:9, 11; Is. 9:4; 10:26).

GIDEON’S NIGHT RAID



The Medianites, fierce desert people who used camels in their attacks, had ruled over Israel for seven years.

1 A Midianite army camps in the Valley of Jezreel.

2 Gideon calls the northern tribes of Israel to his hometown, Ophrah.

3 The Israelite force moves to the Spring of Harod. Gideon narrows his troops down to 300 men.

4 At night, Gideon and his servant spy out the Midianite camp. Gideon then divides his army into three groups. Each man holds a trumpet and a torch hidden in a jar. They surprise the Midianites by blowing their trumpets and smashing their jars at the edges of the camp.

5 Confused, the Midianites flee towards the Jordan Valley. Extra troops pursue and completely defeat them.

MIDNIGHT—the middle of the night; specifically twelve o’clock at night (Judg. 16:3; Ps. 119:62; Acts 16:25). The word midnight is often used symbolically of a period resembling midnight, a time of intense darkness or extended gloom. It was at midnight that the Lord struck down all the firstborn in the land of Egypt (Ex. 11:4; 12:29).

MIDRASH [MID rash] (inquiry)—any of a group of Jewish commentaries on the Hebrew Scriptures written between A.D. 400 and A.D. 1200. The word Midrash is based on a Hebrew word that means “to search out." The implication is that of discovering a thought or truth not seen on the surface—therefore a study, commentary, or homiletical exposition.

Midrashim (plural of Midrash) are a collection of public sermons, stories, legal discussions, and meditations on the books of the Bible used during the festivals for public worship in the synagogues. Midrashim were written in Israel and Babylon by the rabbis. Some Midrashim are contained in the Babylonian TALMUD; others are part of independent collections of commentaries.

There are two types of Midrash: Halakah ("law" or "tradition"), an interpretation of the laws of the Scriptures, and Haggadah ("narration"), the nonlegal, or homiletical, part of the Talmud.

MIDWIFE (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MIGDAL EL [MIG dal el] (tower of God)—a fortified city in the territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:38), listed between Iron (Yiron, NASB) and Horem.

MIGDAL GAD [MIG dal gad] (tower of fortune)—a town in or near the SHEPHELAH, or lowland plain, of Judah, perhaps near Lachish (Josh. 15:37).

MIGDOL [MIG dahl] (watchtower)—the name of two Egyptian sites in the Old Testament:

1. An encampment of the Israelites while they were leaving Egypt in the Exodus led by Moses: "Speak to the children of Israel, that they turn and camp before Pi Hahiroth, between Migdol and the sea, opposite Baal Zephon" (Ex. 14:2). Migdol lay west of the Red Sea in the eastern region of the Nile Delta.
2. A site in northeastern Egypt (Jer. 44:1; 46:14). After the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar, some Israelites fled to Egypt and lived in Migdol.

MIGHTY MEN—the brave warriors who risked their lives for David both before and after he became king of Israel. The names of David's mighty men are given in 2 Samuel 23:8–39 and 1 Chronicles 11:10–47.

The term “mighty men of valor” is also used of the courageous warriors who served under Joshua (Josh. 1:14; 6:2).

MIGRON [MIG rahn]—the name of two towns in the Old Testament:

1. A town in Benjamin on the outskirts of Gibeah south of Michmash (1 Sam. 14:2).
2. A town of Benjamin (Is. 10:28). The prophet Isaiah mentioned this site in his account of the march of the Assyrian army upon Jerusalem.

MIJAMIN [MIJ uh min] (on the right hand)—the name of several men in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of Aaron and leader of a course of priests in David’s time (1 Chr. 24:9).
2. A son of Parosh (Ezra 10:25; Miamin, KJV) who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity.
3. A priest who sealed the covenant (Neh. 10:7). Perhaps he was the Minjamin (Neh. 12:41) who was one of the trumpeters at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem.
4. A chief of the priests who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylon (Neh. 12:5; Miamin, KJV), also called Minjamin (Neh. 12:17).

MIKHTAM [MICK tam]—a form of MICHTAM.

MIKLOTH [MICK lawth]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of Jeiel, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:32).
2. An officer who served under Dodai in David’s army (1 Chr. 27:4).

MIKNEIAH [mick NYE uh] (possession of the Lord)—a Levite harpist during the reign of David (1 Chr. 15:18, 21).

MIKTAM [MICK tam]—a form of MICHTAM.

MILALAI [MILL uh lye] (eloquent)—a musician who participated in the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem in Nehemiah’s time (Neh. 12:36).

MILCAH [MILL kuh] (queen)—the name of two women in the Old Testament:

1. A daughter of Haran and the wife of Nahor (Gen. 22:20–22).
2. One of the five daughters of Zelophehad, of the tribe of Manasseh. Zelophehad had no sons. When he died, his daughters asked Moses for permission to share their father's inheritance. Their request was granted, providing they married within their own tribe in order to keep the inheritance within Manasseh (Num. 36:11–12).

MILCOM [MILL kahm] (see GODS, PAGAN).

MILDEW—a fungus that attacked the crops of Palestine in damp weather. This blight was interpreted as God's judgment upon the people's disobedience (Deut. 28:22). In King Solomon's prayer of dedication at the completion of the temple, he prayed for deliverance from mildew and other calamities (2 Chr. 6:28).

MILE (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

MILETUS [my LEE tuhs]—an ancient seaport in Asia Minor visited by the apostle Paul (Acts 20:15, 17; 2 Tim. 4:20; Miletum, KJV). Situated on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea, Miletus was about 60 kilometers (37 miles) south of Ephesus and on the south side of the Bay of Latmus (see Map 8, C–2). Because of silting, the site is now more than 8 kilometers (5 miles) from the coast.

Colonized by Cretans and others, Miletus became a leading harbor during the Persian and Greek periods. It prospered economically and boasted a celebrated temple of Apollo. Although Miletus was still an important trade center in Roman times, the river was already silting in the harbor.

The apostle Paul visited Miletus on his journey from Greece to Jerusalem. In Miletus Paul delivered a farewell message to the elders of the church of Ephesus (Acts 10:18–35).

MILK—a nutritious foodstuff in liquid form that comes from goats, cows, sheep, and camels. Next to bread, dairy products were a staple item in the diet of the Hebrew people. Drunk fresh as a beverage, milk was also used in a variety of forms as a major food source.

Two different Hebrew words are translated as “milk” in English versions of the Bible. The first describes liquid milk, drunk by the Hebrews fresh, shortly after milking. Because of the high temperatures of Palestine, this kind of milk would not keep long without some kind of treatment.

Cultured milk, similar to yogurt, has a longer life in this climate. This is the kind of milk intended when English translations render the second Hebrew word as “butter” (Gen. 18:8), or “curds” (Is. 7:22). Milk is also used symbolically in the Bible to depict plenty and abundance (Ex. 3:17; Deut. 26:15).

MILL (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

MILLENNIUM, THE—the thousand-year period mentioned in connection with the description of Christ’s coming to reign with His saints over the earth (Rev. 20:1–9). Many Old Testament passages are reputed to refer to the Millennium (Is. 11:4; Jer. 3:17; Zech. 14:9).

These and many other Old Testament passages are often taken to refer only to the thousand-year period itself. However, it is often difficult in these passages to see a clear dividing line between the earthly period of the Millennium and the eternal state of new heavens and earth. Therefore, it is best to let one’s teaching about the Millennium be drawn specifically from the words in Revelation 20. The other great promises to Israel, while they may have a temporary fulfillment in the thousand years, still await the fulness of the new heavens and new earth and the unhindered presence of Israel’s king and the church’s husband—Jesus Christ our Lord.

During that thousand-year period, Satan will be bound in the bottomless pit so he will not deceive the nations until his short period of release (Rev. 20:3, 7–8). The faithful martyrs who have died for the cause of Christ will be resurrected before the Millennium. They will rule with Christ and will be priests of God and Christ (Rev. 20:4). The unbelieving dead will wait for the second resurrection (Rev. 20:5). After the thousand years, Satan will be released and will again resume his work of deceit (Rev. 20:7–8).

The most important aspect of the Millennium is the reign of Christ. Peter taught that Christ now rules from the right hand of God (Acts 2:33–36). That rule will last until His enemies are made His footstool “The LORD said to my Lord, ‘Sit at My right hand, till I make Your enemies Your footstool’ ” (Ps. 110:1). The apostle Paul also understood Christ to be presently reigning in a period designed to bring all of God’s enemies underfoot (1 Cor. 15:25–27). Thus the impact of Christ’s present rule over the earth from God’s right hand must not be seen as unrelated to His future reign during the Millennium.

The Millennium is viewed by interpreters in several different ways. One position holds that the Millennium only refers to Christ’s spiritual rule today from heaven. This symbolic view is known as the amillennial interpretation. Another position views Christ’s spiritual rule as working through preaching and teaching to bring gradual world improvement leading up to Christ's return. This is the postmillennial view.

The position that holds to an actual thousand-year period in the future is known as the premillennial view. This interpretation does not diminish the power of Christ's present rule from heaven or limit that rule to the church only. That position sees the need for a thousand-year place in history for an earthly fulfillment of Israel's promises of land and blessing. It stresses that the one thousand years in Revelation 20 are actual years and are not symbolic.

MILLET (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MILLO [MILL oh] (fill)—a fortification or citadel near Jerusalem. The Millo of Jerusalem was probably part of the fortification of the Jebusite city that David captured. It may have been either a solid tower full of earth or a bastion strengthening a weak point in the wall. It was already in existence when David's army captured the Jebusite city (2 Sam. 5:9).

The Millo was one of the building projects included in King Solomon's expansion program in Jerusalem in later years. He strengthened the Millo by using conscripted labor (1 Kin. 9:15). Centuries later, King Hezekiah had the Millo repaired in preparation for an invasion and siege by the Assyrians (2 Chr. 32:5). King Joash was killed "in the house of the Millo" (2 Kin. 12:20)—the victim of a conspiracy.

MINA (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

MIND—the part of a person that thinks and reasons. Although the Hebrew language had no word for mind, several Hebrew words are sometimes translated as "mind." The word for HEART frequently means "mind" (Deut. 30:1; Jer. 19:5). The word for SOUL is sometimes used similarly (1 Chr. 28:9), as is the word for SPIRIT (Ezek. 11:5).

Four separate Greek words account for nearly all instances of "mind" in the New Testament. They all mean much the same thing: understanding, thought, mind, reason. While today we think of a person's mind in a morally neutral way, in the New Testament the mind was clearly thought of as either good or evil. Negatively, the mind may be “hardened” (2 Cor. 3:14), “blinded” (2 Cor. 4:4), “corrupt” (2 Tim. 3:8), and “debased” (Rom. 1:28). On the positive side, humans may have minds that are renewed (Rom. 12:2) and pure (2 Pet. 3:1). They may love God with all their minds (Matt. 22:37; Mark 12:30; Luke 10:27) and have God’s laws implanted in their minds (Heb. 8:10). Since Christians have “the mind of Christ” (1 Cor. 2:16), they are instructed to be united in mind (Rom. 12:16; 1 Pet. 3:8).

MINER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MINERALS OF THE BIBLE. Minerals are inorganic substances found in the earth’s crust. The Bible mentions many of these minerals, which include metallic and nonmetallic rock, sand, clay, soils, salt, and most gemstones. Minerals existed in a variety of colors and degrees of hardness. They were often valued for these characteristics by the people of Bible lands. No one knows exactly how many minerals exist in the earth today, but estimates range between 1,500 and 3,000. Only a small percentage of these were known in the ancient world, and only a few are mentioned in the Bible.

The land of Palestine and surrounding areas were rich in minerals. These minerals provided the people of the Bible with the material for houses, farming implements, household utensils, weapons, art, personal ornaments, medical supplies, and objects for religious purposes. The discovery and use of these minerals helped shape the cultural life of the ancient world.

The Bible mentions six metals known and used by the ancient Hebrews: gold, silver, bronze, iron, tin, and lead (Num. 31:22). Job’s reference to metals “taken from the earth” (Job 28:2) seems to indicate a firsthand knowledge of mine operations. The smelting of ores was known apparently in very ancient times. Copper was the first metal smelted by the Egyptians.

Palestine acquired much of its mineral resources through spoils of war (Josh. 22:8) and through trade with foreign countries. This trade reached its greatest height during Solomon’s time (1 Kin. 10:10–11, 22, 27). These minerals proved to be a valuable asset to the physical, material, and spiritual welfare of the people of Bible lands.

The following minerals are mentioned in the Bible. This list is keyed to the New King James translation, with cross-references from five additional popular versions: KJV, NASB, REB, NIV, and NRSV.

Alabaster. The most common form of alabaster is a fine textured variety of massive gypsum (sulfate of lime). It is very soft and therefore excellent for carving. The color is usually white; but it may be gray, yellow, or red.

Large quantities of gypsum were quarried in the Jordan Valley in the days before the Hebrew people occupied this territory. Many articles were fashioned from this stone, including vases, jars, saucers, bowls, lamps, and statues. Mary of Bethany anointed Jesus with costly oil from an alabaster flask (Matt. 26:7; Mark 14:3; Luke 7:37). Her willingness to express her love unselfishly won Christ's approval, just as He honors sacrificial expressions of love today.

The ancient variety of alabaster is known as "oriental alabaster" (carbonate of lime), a form of marble. It is much harder than the gypsum variety but is used for the same purpose. Ancient alabaster was found only in Egypt.

Antimony. A hard mineral, metallic gray in color, usually classed as a metal. In Bible times antimony was ground into a fine black powder, moistened with oil or water, and used as eyepaint to accent the eyelashes and make them appear larger (Jer. 4:30). This was an accepted custom in Egypt and Mesopotamia, but it was rejected by the Hebrew people, although Jezebel and other women of ill repute used it (2 Kin. 9:30).

The prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel compared Israel to unfaithful women who adorned themselves with paint for their lovers (Jer. 4:30; Ezek. 23:40). The material that David furnished for the temple included antimony. This was mixed with resin and used as a setting for gems (1 Chr. 29:2, NRSV).

Ash (see Lime).

Asphalt. A black mineral substance, a form of bitumen, derived from crude petroleum (Gen. 11:3; Ex. 2:3). It was found in Mesopotamia and Palestine, especially in the Dead Sea region. Because of the abundance of asphalt around the Dead Sea, the Greeks and Romans referred to it as Lake Asphaltitis (Gen. 14:10). Other versions translate the word for asphalt as bitumen, slime, tar, or clay. Also see Bitumen; Clay.

Bitumen. A mineral substance consisting chiefly of hydrogen and carbon. Mineral pitch and asphalt are forms of bitumen. Highly flammable, its consistency varies from solids to semi-liquids (Is. 34:9). Large deposits of bitumen have been known to exist around the Dead Sea, and in Egypt and Mesopotamia since ancient times.

Bitumen was used as caulking to waterproof Noah’s ark (Gen. 6:14) and the basket in which Moses was hidden (Ex. 2:3). It was also used as mortar (Gen. 11:3). The pits into which the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah fell were bitumen pits (Gen. 14:10, NRSV). Various English versions of the Bible translate the word for bitumen as asphalt, slime, tar, or pitch. Also see Asphalt.

Brass. True brass is an alloy of copper and zinc. However, when “brass” is mentioned in the Bible, it refers to either copper or bronze (1 Cor. 13:1; Rev. 1:15; 2:18; 9:20). The three words, brass, bronze, and copper, are often used interchangeably in various English translations of the Bible.

Copper was in general use relatively early in human history. Numerous refineries have been discovered in Sinai, Armenia, Syria, and many other places in the ancient world.

Many articles in the ancient world were fashioned from bronze, or brass. These included cooking utensils, shovels, spoons, musical instruments, weapons, and tools. Solomon used copper and bronze in many of the items in the temple (1 Kin. 7:14).

Also see Copper.

Brimstone. A bright yellow mineral usually found near active volcanoes. Large deposits of this substance are found in the Dead Sea region. Highly combustible, it burns with a very disagreeable odor.

The Hebrew and Greek words for “brimstone” denote divine fire (Gen. 19:24; Ezek. 38:22; Luke 17:29). Brimstone (burning stone) is often associated with fire (Rev. 9:17–18; 20:10; 21:8), and with barrenness and devastation (Deut. 29:23; Job 18:15). Brimstone was considered an agent of God’s judgment (Gen. 19:24). In the New Testament it is used symbolically to represent God’s wrath and the future punishment of the wicked (Rev. 9:17–18; 14:10; 20:10). Another word for brimstone used in various translations of the Bible is sulphur, or sulfur.

Bronze (see Brass; Tin).

Chalkstone. A variety of fine-grained limestone rock, chalkstone (or chalk) is a soft porous material consisting largely of calcite. It is usually white, but it can be yellow or gray. Limestone is the dominant stone in Palestine and other Bible lands. The Hebrews burned limestone in kilns to make lime (Is. 33:12). Also see Lime.

The prophet Isaiah spoke of chalkstone in a figurative sense to illustrate God’s readiness to remove Israel’s guilt if they would make their altars “like chalkstone beaten to dust” (Is. 27:9).

Chrysolite Marble (see Marble).

Clay. Soil that consists of extremely fine particles of sand, flint, or quartz. Some clays were formed of soft limestone with much grit and flint, while others included quartz, which formed a much harder clay.

Clay was used widely in the ancient world. Among its many uses, clay was an important building material. The Tower of Babel was constructed of clay bricks (Gen. 11:3). The poorest quality clay was used in making bricks. Both sun-baked and kiln-fired bricks were known (2 Sam. 12:31). Mortar was also usually made of clay. The Hebrew word for “clay” is translated by some English versions as asphalt.

Impressions were made into wet clay with signet rings or cylinder seals to prove ownership (Job 38:14; Dan. 6:17). Clay seals were placed on houses, vessels of various kinds, and perhaps on Christ’s tomb (Matt. 27:66).

Clay tablets were used in Mesopotamia for cuneiform writing. Letters were inscribed in soft clay with a stylus. The tablet was then sun-baked or kiln-fired to increase its strength. Various kinds of pottery were made of clay. These included lamps, cooking utensils, pots, vases, jars, dishes, and idols. Also see Asphalt.

Coal. A black, porous form of carbon (Lam. 4:8) or live embers of any kind (2 Sam. 22:9, 13). The Hebrew people learned to form charcoal by burning wood that had been covered with earth and leaves. The lack of air caused the wood to char. According to the prophet Isaiah, cedars, cypress, and oak were some of the trees used for fuel (Is. 44:14–16). Broom or juniper bushes were also used for charcoal (Ps. 120:4).

The intense heat of charcoal made it a valuable form of fuel in smelting furnaces (Song 8:6). The wealthy used charcoal to heat their homes (Jer. 36:22). It was also used for cooking (1 Kin. 19:6), by blacksmiths (Is. 44:12), and for heating (John 18:18).

Copper. A reddish-brown metal derived from many kinds of ores. One of the oldest metals known to humankind, copper was the first to be used for making tools. Gold and meteoric iron were probably used before copper. Pure copper was used until it was alloyed with tin to form bronze sometime between 4500–3000 B.C.

Ancient copper refineries were located in Sinai, Egypt, Syria, Persia, the Phoenician coast, and Palestine. During Solomon’s reign (about 970–931 B.C.), enormous amounts of bronze were used in the temple furnishings (1 Kin. 7:13–47).

Many useful articles were made from copper and its alloys, including tools of all kinds, utensils (Lev. 6:28), weapons (2 Sam. 21:16; 22:35; 2 Chr. 12:10), idols and musical instruments.

Also see Brass; Tin.

Crystal (see Quartz).

Flint. A very hard variety of quartz. Dark gray or brown in color, it is usually found in chalk or limestone rock. A form of silica, it sparks when struck by steel or another flint (2 Macc. 10:3). Because flint has a sharp edge when broken, tools such as knives, weapons, saws, sickles, and many other implements were made from flint by prehistoric people throughout the Stone Age.

Archaeologists have found many flint objects, especially knives, in Palestine. These were dated from the Neolithic or Late Stone Age (about 7000–4500 B.C.). Zipporah used a “sharp stone” to circumcise her children (Ex. 4:25). The Bible refers to “rocks of flint” (Deut. 8:15) or “flinty rock” (Deut. 32:13).

Flint is also spoken of in a figurative manner in the Bible, denoting strength and determination (Is. 5:28; 50:7; Ezek. 3:9). This mineral is still abundant in the limestone rock of Syria, Palestine, and Egypt.

Glass (see Quartz).

Gold. A soft, bright yellow metal, gold was one of the first metals known to humankind. It could be used in its pure state without smelting. It never tarnishes—a property that makes it ideal for jewelry. This metal was extremely malleable; it could be hammered into thin strips and delicate objects: “And they beat the gold into thin sheets and cut it into threads, to work it in with the blue and purple and scarlet and fine linen thread, into artistic designs” (Ex. 39:3).

Gold is mentioned over 500 times in the Bible, more than any other metal. Rich deposits of gold were in Havilah (Gen. 2:11), Ophir (1 Kin. 22:48; 2 Chr. 8:18), Sheba (1 Kin. 10:1–2), Egypt, Armenia, Asia Minor, and Persia.

Gold was at first hammered into desired shapes and sizes. In later periods it was refined and cast. Some scholars believe gold was not refined in Palestine until about 1000 B.C.

Many objects were made of gold, including the high priest’s vest (Ex. 28:5), crowns (Ps. 21:3), chains (Gen. 41:42), rods (Song 5:14; rings, KJV), and coins (1 Chr. 21:25; Acts 3:6). Hiram brought gold to Israel for Solomon’s palace (1 Kin. 10:16–21) and for furnishings for the temple (1 Kin. 6:20; 10:2, 10). Gold was also taken as plunder in war (2 Kin. 24:13).

Hyacinth (see Jacinth).

Iron. This mineral is actually a metal obtained from certain rocks or ores. Iron occurs in a great variety of minerals. Much of the color of other minerals is due to the presence of iron, which has a steel-gray color with a metallic luster.

Meteoric iron is one of the oldest metals known. It existed in Egypt before 3100 B.C. The presence of nickel in meteoric iron distinguishes it from common iron ore. The ancient Egyptian word for this material meant “metal from heaven.” Before the knowledge of smelting ores was known, people fashioned small objects from this ore (Gen. 4:22; Deut. 8:9).

The Hittites in Asia Minor were the first to develop skills in the smelting of iron (about 1400 B.C.). Charcoal-fired furnaces were used for this purpose. Since much higher temperatures were required to cast iron, only wrought iron could be made at this time.

When the Philistines learned the secret of smelting iron (about 1200 B.C.), iron became widely used throughout the ancient world. Iron had definitely been in use during the Israelite conquest of the land of Canaan (Josh. 6:24; Judg. 1:19; 4:3). The Philistines became skilled ironsmiths, eventually controlling most of Canaan and later conquering Israel, prohibiting their use of iron (1 Sam. 13:19, 22). After the Israelites’ victory over the Philistines, iron became widespread in Palestine.

Iron ore was plentiful in Palestine, Syria, Cyprus, and Asia Minor. Iron gradually replaced copper and bronze for farming implements, weapons, armor, and tools.

The reference to steel in Psalm 18 (KJV) means copper or bronze, because steel was not known at that time. “He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms” (v. 34).

Jacinth. An orange or reddish gemstone. A variety of zircon, this mineral is widely distributed in crystal form in volcanic rocks and in fine granules in sand. Jacinth was the first stone in the third row of Aaron’s breastplate (Ex. 28:19; ligure, KJV; turquoise, REB). Jacinth was used to describe one of the colors in the breastplates of the riders in John’s vision (Rev. 9:17; sapphire, NRSV; sulfur, NIV; hyacinth, NKJV). Jacinth is also the eleventh foundation stone in the heavenly Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20).

Jasper (see Quartz).

Lead. A soft, bluish-gray metal. Next to gold, lead is the heaviest of the common metals. Lead is easily worked, but it tarnishes very quickly. The ancient Roman name for lead was plumbum. The English word “plumber” (worker in lead) comes from this Latin word.

Lead is found in limestone and dolomite rock, usually deposited with other metals. Thus, it is sometimes mentioned in the Bible along with other metals (Num. 31:22; Ezek. 22:18, 20). Lead was never used extensively in Palestine, but it was mined in Egypt and the Sinai Peninsula. This metal was also imported from Tarshish (Ezek. 27:12).

Lead was used to purify silver (Jer. 6:29–30; Ezek. 22:18–20), as sinkers for fishing nets (Ex. 15:10), and as weights (Zech. 5:7–8). Job refers to his words being preserved permanently in lead (Job 19:24). Plumblines may also have been made of lead (Amos 7:7–8).

Ligure (see Jacinth).

Lime. A calcium oxide derived from limestone rock or chalk. Limestone was burned in limekilns and reduced to powder. Then it was used mainly for plastering floors and walls. The earliest mention of lime in the Bible is when God instructed Moses to whitewash stones with lime for a memorial of His covenant with Israel (Deut. 27:2, 4; plaster, KJV, REB, NIV, NRSV).

The Hebrew word for lime is also translated by various English versions as plaster, whitewash, or ash (Deut. 27:2, 4; Is. 27:9; 33:12; Dan 5:5; Amos 2:1). Lime was used by the Israelites for mortar and as plaster for floors (Dan. 5:5). The walls of cisterns were also waterproofed with plaster.

Lime may have been used in dyeing to give colors a permanent set in the fabric. Archaeologists have found stone jars containing lime and potash next to dyeing vats. Also see Chalkstone.

Lye. An alkaline material used as a cleansing agent. Both Egypt and Palestine produced some form of soap for washing the body as well as clothes. This may have been natron (niter), a sodium carbonate (soda) available in its natural state in southern Egypt. This substance could have been imported into Palestine.

Palestine produced potassium carbonate, an alkaline material made from the ashes of many scrubby plants and mixed with oil to form a soft soap. These plants grew in the Dead Sea region.

The prophet Jeremiah's first sermon declared that the people of Judah were so full of iniquity that it could not be removed.“ ‘For though you wash yourself with lye, and use much soap, yet your iniquity is marked before Me,’ says the Lord God” (Jer. 2:22; nitre, KJV; soda, NIV).

Malachite (see Marble).

Marble. A crystallized form of limestone, marble is extremely hard and capable of a high polish. It is usually white, but is sometimes red or yellow.

The Hebrew and Greek words translated “marble” mean “brightness” or “glistening.” Marble was obtained from most Bible lands in some form, but the choicest variety came from Arabia.

David supplied an abundance of marble for the temple (1 Chr. 29:2). Solomon alluded poetically to the strength and beauty of marble (Song 5:15; alabaster, NASB, NRSV). It was used in the palace of Shushan, or Susa (Esth. 1:6).

In the Greek and Roman periods many public buildings and homes of the wealthy contained marble. Archaeologists have found many marble beads and statues in Palestine. Marble is included in the merchandise of symbolic Babylon which will be destroyed (Rev. 18:12). Egyptian alabaster was also a form of marble. Also see Alabaster.

One distinct type of marble mentioned by several English translations is porphyry (Esth. 1:6; NASB, NRSV; malachite, REB). This was a purple rock with imbedded crystals of various sizes, used in the pavement of King Ahasuerus' palace at Susa.

Mercury. A silvery-white liquid metal, popularly called quicksilver. It is obtained from the ores of cinnabar. The Greek word for mercury means "water silver." It is used to extract gold and silver from their ores. This process, called amalgamation, was probably used in the ancient world. Pliny (A.D. 23–79) refers to mercury in this manner.

Mercury is not mentioned in the Bible by name, but it may be implied (Prov. 26:23; Is. 1:22; Ezek. 22:18–20) by the phrase, "silver dross." Also see Vermilion.

Mortar. A mixture of clay, sand, lime, and water used for building material. Mortar was sometimes made of clay alone or with chopped straw, sand, or crushed stone added for strength. The Hebrews in Egypt tempered their bricks and mortar with straw (Ex. 1:14; 5:7).

Lime mixed with sand or small stones was used in Palestine for mortar. This was used especially for more expensive houses. Mortar was spread on the walls, floors, and roofs of houses for more durability. The prophet Nahum suggested that the usual method of mixing mortar was treading it (Nah. 3:14).

Nitre (see Lye).

Oil. In the Bible, the word oil usually refers to olive oil, although oil from myrrh, spikenard, and other varieties of trees was often used. Olive oil was one of the most important products in the economy of Palestine and in the daily life of the people. It became a symbol of peace and prosperity (Jer. 31:12), and was looked upon as a blessing from God.

Olives were harvested in the fall of the year, from September through the middle of November. Olives were gathered by shaking the trees (Is. 17:6) or by beating the trees with long sticks (Deut. 24:20). The oil harvested from them was stored in vats for later use. In homes it was stored in jars or flasks for domestic purposes (1 Kin. 17:12).

Every household was dependent upon a good supply of oil for their lamps (Ex. 25:6; Matt. 25:3–4, 8) and as an ingredient for bread (1 Kin. 17:12). Olive oil was also used as a medicine to treat wounds (Is. 1:6; Luke 10:34).

Ceremonial anointing was a common practice, especially for consecrating the high priest (Ex. 29:2) and anointing the king (1 Sam. 10:1). It was also used for personal cleanliness (Ruth 3:3; 2 Sam. 12:20). The early church practiced anointing with oil for healing (Mark 6:13; James 5:14). Oil was an article of trade especially during Solomon's time. Hiram, king of Tyre, received oil each year (1 Kin. 5:11), and it was also traded to Egypt.

Probably the most significant use of oil was in religious ceremonies. The best grade of oil was used for cereal offerings (Ex. 29:2; Deut. 12:17), sacrificial offerings (Ex. 29:40), and for the sanctuary lamp (Lev. 24:2).

Pearl (see Quartz).

Pitch (see Asphalt; Bitumen).

Plaster. A mixture of clay, lime, and water used to coat various surfaces. The Hebrew word for plaster means "to coat or overlay." At first plaster was probably made from clay and was used to coat floors, walls, and roofs of houses (Lev. 14:42, 45; Dan. 5:5). In later periods lime was mixed with clay or sand to waterproof cisterns and basins.

Porphyry (see Marble).

Quartz. A hard, glasslike mineral composed of oxygen and silicon. A common mineral, quartz is found in pure crystalline form in such other minerals as agate, flint, sand, and sandstone. Job indicated that wisdom was superior to all the precious gems and minerals of the earth, including quartz (Job 28:18; pearls, KJV; glass, NASB; alabaster, REB; jasper, NIV; crystal, NRSV).

Salt. This mineral is sodium chloride, a white crystalline substance used mainly for seasoning and as a preservative (Job 6:6). Salt is not only one of the most important substances mentioned in the Bible, but it is a necessity of life. The Hebrew people were well aware of the importance of salt to health (Job 6:6).

High concentrations of salt exist in the Dead Sea, a body of water that is nine times saltier than the ocean and is sometimes called the Salt Sea (Gen. 14:3). The ancient cities of Sodom and Gomorrah may have been located near the south end of the Dead Sea. Here Lot's wife was turned into a pillar of salt (Gen. 19:26).

An ancient method of extracting salt from sea water was to collect salt water in saltpits—holes dug in the sand; the water evaporated, leaving the salt behind (Zeph. 2:9). Saltpans were later used for this purpose.

Salt had a significant place in Hebrew worship. It was included in the grain offering (Lev. 2:13), the burnt offering (Ezek. 43:24), and the incense (Ex. 30:35). Part of the temple offering included salt (Ezra 6:9). It was also used to ratify covenants (Num. 18:19; 2 Chr. 13:5). Newborn babies were rubbed with salt in the belief that this promoted good health (Ezek. 16:4).

During times of war, the enemies' lands were sown with salt to render them barren (Judg. 9:45). In Roman times salt was an important item of trade and was even used for money. Roman soldiers received part of their salary in salt.

Jesus described His disciples as the salt of the earth, urging them to imitate the usefulness of salt (Matt. 5:13; Col. 4:6).

Sand. Sand is made up of fine grains of rock that are worn away by wind and rain. Numerous minerals such as quartz, calcite, and mica are found in sand.

Sand was plentiful on the Mediterranean shores, along riverbanks, and in desert regions. It is usually mentioned in the Bible in a figurative manner, to symbolize a multitude (Gen. 22:17; Is. 10:22; Rev. 20:8), weight (Job 6:3), and weakness (Matt. 7:26). Sand was also used in mortar and in the manufacture of glass, which began in ancient Egypt or Phoenicia (Deut. 33:19).

Sapphire (see Jacinth).

Silver. This mineral is actually a silvery-white metal capable of a high polish. In ancient times it was valued next to gold. Silver was harder than gold, but not as hard as copper. It was usually extracted from lead ore, although it was also found in its native state. Silver never tarnishes when exposed to air, unless sulphur is present.

The main sources of silver were Asia Minor, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Armenia, and Persia. Palestine imported most of its silver from these countries, especially during Solomon's time (about 970–931 B.C.), when "the king made silver as common in Jerusalem as stones" (1 Kin. 10:27; 2 Chr. 9:27). Silver was refined and then cast into molds (Judg. 17:4; Ps. 12:6) by silversmiths (Jer. 10:9; Acts 19:24).

Abraham's wealth included silver (Gen. 13:2), which he used as a medium of exchange (Gen. 23:15). Other uses for silver were cups

(Gen. 44:2), idols (Ps. 115:4; Is. 40:19; Acts 19:24), various kinds of jewelry (Gen. 24:53; Ex. 3:22), and containers (Num. 7:13; 1 Chr. 28:17; Ezra 1:9–10). Many articles for the tabernacle were made of silver, including trumpets (Num. 10:2), lampstands (1 Chr. 28:15), and sockets (Ex. 26:19).

Slime (see Asphalt; Bitumen).

Soda (see Lye).

Steel. Steel was not known during Bible times until the first century A.D. The Hebrew word for copper and bronze is incorrectly translated "steel" in the KJV (2 Sam. 22:35; Job 20:24; Ps. 18:34; Jer. 15:12).

Sulfur, Sulphur (see Brimstone).

Tar (see Asphalt; Bitumen).

Tin. A soft, bluish-white metal smelted from cassiterite, its principal ore. Tin was used chiefly as an alloy with copper to produce bronze, a much harder material than either copper or tin. The Hebrew word for tin means "a substitute or alloy."

Phoenicia supplied the ancient Mediterranean world with tin obtained from Spain, its chief colony. Some scholars believe the Phoenicians sailed the Atlantic to Cornwall, England, the principal supplier of tin. Tyre received tin from Tarshish (Ezek. 27:12). Some think Persia and Armenia exported tin also.

Tin was among the spoils the Israelites took from the Midianites (Num. 31:22). The prophet Ezekiel pictured Jerusalem as being smelted as tin cast in a furnace (Ezek. 22:18–20; copper, REB; bronze, NASB, NRSV).

Turquoise (see Jacinth).

Vermilion. A red pigment obtained from cinnabar, the same mineral ore from which mercury or quicksilver is derived. Pure vermilion is a brilliant red, but it is brownish red when impurities such as clay, iron oxides, and bitumen are mixed with it. This ore is usually distributed in areas of volcanic rocks.

The prophet Jeremiah pronounced judgment on Shallum (Jehoahaz) for beautifying his own house with vermilion—decorating it in red (Jer. 22:14, NASB, NIV) while neglecting the poor and needy. Ezekiel saw the images of the Chaldeans painted in vermilion on the walls (Ezek. 23:14).

Also see Mercury.

Whitewash (see Lime).

MINGLED PEOPLE—a reference to various foreign people (Ezek. 30:5). Elsewhere, the NKJV translates the same Hebrew expression as "MIXED MULTITUDE" (Jer. 25:20, 24) and "mixed peoples" (Jer. 50:37). The reference in Ezekiel may be to foreign mercenaries in the service of Egypt.

MINIAMIN [meh NYE uh min] (on the right hand)—a form of MINJAMIN.

MINING—the extraction of minerals or other valuable substances from the earth. Mining operations have been conducted in the biblical world since ancient times. It is not known exactly when people first began to dig into the earth to extract materials; but mining took place in Syria, Palestine, the Arabah, Sinai, Egypt, and in other Mediterranean lands. Mining was not limited to metallic ores such as gold, copper, silver, iron, lead, and tin. Mining also included other resources such as gems, salt, sand, clays, and many kinds of building stones. A vivid description of mining appears in Job 28. "He overturns the mountains at the roots. He cuts out channels in the rocks, and his eye sees every precious thing" (28:9–10).

The first mines were probably "placer mines" which involved panning or sifting by hand. Gold, the first metal mentioned in the Bible, was probably mined by this method. Open-pit or surface mining was also used in Bible times.

The ancient Egyptians mined copper and turquoise in the Sinai Peninsula. Tunnels with shafts for ventilation were driven into the earth more than 30 meters (100 feet) with stone or beams of acacia wood used to support the roof. The ores were carried in baskets to the surface where it was smelted. Archaeologists have found crucibles, slag heaps, baskets, and other objects at many mining locations. Slaves, criminals, and prisoners of war worked these mines. Walled enclosures to house the prisoners have been found at some mines. The ancient trade route between Egypt and the Sinai Peninsula was traveled by these labor gangs. Moses was probably familiar with this route. He may have traveled it with the Israelites during the Exodus on their way to Mount Sinai.

The Hebrews learned mining and metallurgical skills early in their history (Gen. 4:22; Deut. 8:9). The KENITES, who were native to the Arabah, probably introduced the Israelites and the Edomites to the art of mining and metallurgy.

QUARRIES, which are actually mines, were operated in Palestine and Egypt. Masons usually quarried and shaped their own stone (1 Kin. 6:7; Is. 51:1). Deep channels were cut and wedges were driven into the openings and soaked with water. Sometimes these channels were cut along natural breaks by using iron axes.

Salt was also mined from the Dead Sea in “salt-pits” (Zeph. 2:9). These were holes or pits dug along the flat coastal area. When the sun evaporated the water, the salt remained.

MINISTER, MINISTRY—a distinctive biblical idea that means “to serve” or “service.” In the Old Testament the word “servant” was used primarily for court servants (1 Kin. 10:5; Esth. 1:10). During the period between the Old and New Testaments, it came to be used in connection with ministering to the poor. This use of the word is close to the work of the seven in waiting on tables in the New Testament (Acts 6:1–7).

In reality, all believers are “ministers.” The apostle Paul urged the true pastor-teacher to “equip the saints” so they can minister to one another (Eph. 4:11–12). The model, of course, is Jesus, who “did not come to be served, but to serve” (Mark 10:45). His service is revealed in the fact that He gave “His life a ransom for many” (Matt. 20:28).

Jesus’ servanthood radically revised the ethics of Jew and Greek alike, because He equated service to God with service to others. When we minister to the needs of the hungry or the lonely, we actually minister to Christ (Matt. 25:31–46). And when we fail to do so, we sin against God (James 2:14–17; 4:17). In this light, all who took part in the fellowship of service were ministers.

The concept is strengthened when the use of the Greek word doulos is noted. This was the term for a bondslave, one who was offered his freedom but who voluntarily surrendered that freedom in order to remain a servant. This idea typified Jesus’ purpose, as described by Paul in Philippians 2:7. This passage alludes to the “servant of God” teaching of Isaiah 42–53. Truly Christ fulfilled this exalted calling, because His life was dedicated to the needs of others.

Following our Savior’s example, all believers are bondslaves of God (Rom. 1:1; Gal. 1:10; Col. 4:12). We are to perform “good deeds” to all people, with a responsibility especially to fellow Christians (Gal. 6:10; Heb. 10:24).

Our unselfish service should especially be rendered through our spiritual gifts, which are given by God to the saints in order that they might minister to one another (1 Pet. 4:10). These gifts consist of both spiritual and practical gifts (1 Cor. 12:28). They are distributed to various members of the church so that the union of believers can be expressed in loving service. In Ephesians 4:7–11 the offices of apostles, prophets, evangelists, etc., are described as divine “gifts” to the church. This is the one place where the officers of the church might be linked with the term “minister.” In a special way these officers do “minister” to the church—the apostles through their inspired leadership; the prophets through their inspired preaching and even foretelling; the evangelists through their traveling missionary work; and the pastor-teachers through their service in local congregations. Yet their primary service was to equip all saints for ministry.

The concepts of minister and ministry must be broadened today to include all the members of a church. The common concept of the pastor as the professional minister must be discarded, because the biblical pattern is for him to be the one who trains the congregation for ministry. All the saints are responsible for loving and ministering in various ways to one another, using the spiritual gifts distributed to each by the Holy Spirit.

MINJAMIN [MIN juh men] (on the right hand side)—the name of two or three men in the Old Testament:

1. One who helped Kore the Levite distribute the freewill offerings collected in the reign of Hezekiah (2 Chr. 31:15; Miniamin, NKJV, KJV, NRSV, NIV, NASB).
2. A priest who returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Neh. 12:17; Miniamin, KJV, NRSV, NASB, REB, NIV). He is also called Mijamin (Neh. 12:5).
3. A priest who played the trumpet at the dedication of the rebuilt wall in Jerusalem (Neh. 12:41; Miniamin, KJV, NRSV, NASB, REB). He may be the same person as No. 2. Also see MIJAMIN.

MINNI [MIN eye]—a people and a state of ARMENIA in the area south of Lake Urmia and east of the Zagros Mountains, in what is present-day Iran. The Minni are mentioned only once in the Bible. The prophet Jeremiah called on them to make war against Babylonia (Jer. 51:27).

MINNITH [MIN ith]—a city of the Ammonites that apparently marked the easternmost limit of Jephthah's military expansion and conquest (Judg. 11:33). Minnith was famous for its high-quality wheat, which it exported to Tyre (Ezek. 27:17). The city was in TRANSJORDAN, about 6 kilometers (4 miles) northeast of Heshbon.

MIRACLES—historical events or natural phenomena that appear to violate natural laws but that reveal God to the eye of faith at the same time. A valuable way of understanding the meaning of miracles is to examine the various terms for miracles used in the Bible.

Both the Old Testament and the New Testament use the word "sign" (Is. 7:11, 14; John 2:11) to denote a miracle that points to a deeper revelation. "Wonder" (Joel 2:30; Mark 13:22) emphasizes the effect of the miracle, causing awe and even terror. A "work" (Matt. 11:2) points to the presence of God in history, acting for mankind. The New Testament uses the word "power" (Mark 6:7) to emphasize God's acting in strength. These terms often overlap in meaning (Acts 2:43). They are more specific than the more general term "miracle."

Miracles in the Old Testament. The readers of the Old Testament recognized that God is the Creator and sustainer of all life (Ex. 34:10; Ps. 33:6–7; Is. 40:26). This assumption permitted the Israelites to comprehend the possibility of miracles. They thought of the world as God's theater for displaying glory and love (Ps. 33:5; 65:6–13). Thus, the miracle was not so much a proof for God's existence as a revelation to the faithful of God's covenant love.

When God parted the water for the Israelites, or when He saved Israel in Egypt through the Passover, God revealed His character; and the Israelites were convinced that God was working for their salvation (Exodus 12:13–14). Miracles were expressions of God’s saving love as well as His holy justice.

Miracles in the Old Testament are connected especially with the great events in Israel’s history—the call of Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3), the birth of Moses (Ex. 1:1—2:22), the Exodus from Egypt (Ex. 12:1—14:31), the giving of the Law (Ex. 19:1—20:26), the entry into the Promised Land (Josh. 3:1—4:7), etc. These miracles are for salvation, but God also acts in history for judgment (Gen. 11:1–9).

The plagues of the Exodus showed God’s sovereign power in judgment and salvation (Ex. 7:3–5). In parting the water, God showed His love and protection for Israel as well as His judgment on Egypt for its failure to recognize God (Ex. 15:2, 4–10). During the wilderness journey, God demonstrated His love and protection in supplying the daily MANNA (Ex. 16:1–36). Another critical period in Israel’s history was the time of Elijah, the champion of Israel. Elijah controlled the rain and successfully challenged the pagan priests of Baal (1 Kin. 17:1; 18:1–40). God revealed Himself as Lord, as Savior of Israel, and as punisher of the nation’s enemies.

Miraculous wonders like these were not as frequent during the days of the writing prophets. But one unusual miracle was the recovery of Hezekiah (2 Kin. 20:1–21; Is. 38:1–21) as well as the miracles in Jonah and Daniel. Prophecy itself can even be interpreted as a miracle. God revealed Himself during this time through the spoken and written Word.

Miracles in the New Testament. As with the Old Testament, the New Testament miracles are essentially expressions of God’s salvation and glory.

Why did Jesus perform miracles? Jesus answered this question Himself. When in prison, John the Baptist sent some of his disciples to Jesus to see if He was the “one to come” (Matt. 11:3). Jesus told them to inform John of what He had done: “The blind receive sight, the lame walk, those who have leprosy are cured, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and the good news is preached to the poor” (11:5). With these words, Jesus declared that His miracles were the fulfillment of the promises of the Messiah’s kingdom as foretold by Isaiah (24:18–19; 35:5–6; 61:1). Jesus’ miracles were signs of the presence of the kingdom of God (Matt. 12:39).

This theme of the miracles pointing to the kingdom of God was developed and deepened especially in the Gospel of John. John presented the miracles of Jesus as “signs” on seven occasions: John 2:1–11; 4:46–54; 5:1–18; 6:1–15; 6:16–21; 9:1–41; 11:1–57. He thought of these miracles as pointing to deep spiritual truth, demanding obedient faith (John 2:11, 23–25). Thus, Jesus’ feeding miracle (6:1–15) was Jesus’ presentation of Himself as the True Manna, the one who gives life and sustenance.

Jesus also understood His miracles as evidences of the presence of the kingdom in His ministry (Matt. 11:2–5; 12:28). Every miracle story was a sign that God’s salvation was present. But not only did the kingdom come; it came in great power, because the dead were raised (Is. 26:19; Luke 7:11–15) and Satan was bound (Mark 3:27).

Jesus’ miracles were also performed upon the most unlikely people. Jesus consciously brought the salvation of God to those who were rejected. He healed the lame (Matt. 9:1–8), the mute (Matt. 9:32–33), and lepers (Luke 17:11–19). Jesus brought the kingdom to all, regardless of their condition.

But Jesus’ miracles were not theatrical sensations. He demanded faith of others (Matt. 9:2). The hemorrhaging woman was healed because of her faith (Matt. 9:18–26). Furthermore, Jesus expected the disciples to do miracles and rebuked them for their “little faith” and unbelief (Matt. 17:20).

Jesus’ demand of trust in Himself led regularly to opposition by Jewish leaders. John drew this out when he recorded Jesus’ healing of a man born blind. Jesus’ salvation comes even on the Sabbath, overturning Pharisaic legalism (John 9:16), and resulting in their blindness (John 9:39–41). Similarly, the Pharisees broke into a charge of blasphemy when Jesus healed the paralytic and pronounced him forgiven of sins (Mark 2:1–12). The miracles of Jesus, being God’s offer of salvation, demanded a decision. As a result, a division of the Pharisees occurred (Matt. 9:32–34).

Finally, we gain a deeper understanding of Jesus in His miracles. He is Lord over nature (Mark 4:35–41) and death (Luke 8:41–56; John 11:1–44). He is the Suffering Servant who bears the infirmities of others (Matt. 8:16–17). He is the Messiah who was to come (Matt.

11:2–6). He fights the battle against evil (Mark 3:23–30; Luke 11:18–23).

Jesus did not work miracles to prove His deity or His messiahship. In fact, He clearly refused to work miracles as proofs (Matt. 12:38–42; Luke 11:29–32). His death was the proof to Israel. However, Jesus' miracles do give evidence that He was divine and that He was the Son of God, the Messiah.

The Acts of the Apostles is a book of miracles. Again, these miracles are a continuation of the miracles of Jesus, made possible through the Holy Spirit. The miracles of the apostles were done in the name of Jesus and were manifestations of God's salvation (Acts 3:11). This thread of continuity is seen in Peter's miracles, which paralleled those of Jesus (Luke 7:22; 5:18–26; 8:49–56; Acts 3:1–16; 9:32–35; 9:36–42).

God began His church with a powerful display of miracles. At Pentecost, the Holy Spirit came on the people with great power (Acts 2:1–13), leading to conversions (Acts 2:41). When Philip went to Samaria, the Spirit of God anointed him with power (Acts 8:4–40), and the same happened with Peter and Cornelius (Acts 10:1–48). These powerful wonders were designed to convince the apostles and the Palestinian church that other cultures were to be part of the church.

To these were added the stunning act of God through Peter when Ananias and Sapphira acted in hypocrisy (Acts 4:32—5:11), the church's power in prayer (Acts 4:23–31), and Paul's transforming vision (Acts 16:6–10).

Miraculous powers were also present in the apostles. Peter healed a lame man (Acts 3:1–6), a paralytic (Acts 9:32–35), and raised the dead (Acts 9:36–42). The apostles performed mighty miracles (Acts 5:12–16), and Peter was miraculously released from prison (Acts 12:1–11). Paul's conversion was a startling incident (Acts 9:1–19). Ability to work miracles was taken as a sign for apostleship by Paul (Romans 15:18–19; 2 Cor. 12:12). Thus, this ability to work miracles is not only an expression of God's salvation but also God's way of authenticating His apostles.

The lists of the gifts of the Spirit in the New Testament show that miracles were one of the means by which believers ministered to others (Rom. 12:6–8; 1 Cor. 12:8–10, 28–30; Eph. 4:11–12).

MIRACLES, GIFT OF (see SPIRITUAL GIFTS).

MIRIAM [MER eh um]—the name of two women in the Old Testament:

1. A sister of Aaron and Moses (Num. 26:59; 1 Chr. 6:3). Called “Miriam the prophetess” (Ex. 15:20), she is described as one of the leaders sent by the Lord to guide Israel (Mic. 6:4). Although the Bible does not specifically say so, Miriam was probably the sister who watched over the infant Moses in the ark of bulrushes (Ex. 2:4–8). Miriam’s song of victory after the Israelites’ successful crossing of the Red Sea (Ex. 15:20–21) is one of the earliest poems.

   Miriam was involved in a rebellion against Moses when he married an Ethiopian woman (Num. 12:1–2). Both she and Aaron claimed to be prophets, but God heard their claims and rebuked them. Because of her part in the rebellion against Moses’ leadership, Miriam was struck with leprosy. However, Moses interceded for her, and she was quickly healed (Num. 12:1–16). She is not mentioned again until her death and burial at Kadesh in the Wilderness of Zin (Num. 20:1).
2. A daughter of Ezrah of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:17).

MIRMAH [MUR muh] (height)—a son of Shaharaim and Hodesh (1 Chr. 8:10; Mirma, KJV).

MIRROR—a polished metal surface intended to reflect objects. Mirrors of polished bronze, gold, and silver were used in ancient Egypt. Some of them may have been taken from Egypt by the Israelites at the time of the Exodus. Glass was not used in making mirrors until several centuries after Bible times.

In the tabernacle the bronze laver or basin where the priests washed their hands was made from bronze mirrors (Ex. 38:8). These highly polished metal mirrors gave surprisingly good images. But they did give a distorted reflection because of their imperfect surfaces. Perhaps this is why the apostle Paul declared, “We see in a mirror, dimly” (1 Cor. 13:12).

MISGAB [MISS gab] (the height)—KJV word for an unknown site in Moab (Jer. 48:1). The word may not be a proper noun. It means "fortress" (NRSV), "high stronghold" (NKJV), "stronghold" (NIV), or "lofty stronghold" (NASB).

MISHAEL [MISH eh uhl] (who is what God is?)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Uzziel and grandson of Kohath, of the tribe of Levi (Lev. 10:4).
2. An Israelite who helped Ezra read the Book of the Law to the people (Neh. 8:4).
3. One of the three friends of Daniel who were cast into the fiery furnace. "Now from among those of the sons of Judah were Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah." The Babylonians changed his name to MESHACH (Dan. 1:6–7).

MISHAL [MY shal]—a form of MASHAL.

MISHAM [MY sham]—a son of Elpaal, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:12).

MISHEAL [MY sheh uhl]—a form of MISHAL.

MISHMA [MISH muh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Ishmael (Gen. 25:14). Mishma's name probably became the name of an Arabian tribe.
2. A descendant of Simeon (1 Chr. 4:25–26).

MISHMANNAH [mish MAN uh]—a warrior who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:10).

MISHNA [MISH nah] (repetition)—the first, and basic, part of the TALMUD and the written basis of religious authority for traditional Judaism. The Mishna contains a written collection of traditional laws (halakoth) handed down orally from teacher to student. It was compiled across a period of about 335 years, from 200 B.C. to A.D. 135.

The Mishna is grouped into sixty-three treaties, or tractates, that deal with all areas of Jewish life—legal, theological, social, and religious—as taught in the schools of Palestine. Soon after the Mishna was compiled, it became known as the "iron pillar of the Torah," since it preserves the way a Jew can follow the TORAH.

For many Jews, the Mishna ranks second only to the canon of the Hebrew Scriptures. Indeed, many Jews consider it part of the Torah. Because it is the core for both the Jerusalem and Babylonian Talmuds, the Mishna serves as a link between Jews in the land of Israel and Jews scattered around the world.

MISHRAITES [MISH ray ites]—one of the four families of Kirjath Jearim, from whom the Zorathites and Eshtaolites descended (1 Chr. 2:53).

MISPAR [MISS par]—an Israelite who returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Ezra 2:2; Mizpar, KJV). The feminine form of the name, Mispereth, is used in Nehemiah 7:7.

MISPERETH [MISS puh reth]—the feminine form of MISPAR.

MISREPHOTH, THE BROOK [MIZ reh fahth]—a place near the Mediterranean Sea to which Joshua chased the Canaanites after defeating them at the waters of Merom (Josh. 11:8; Misrephoth-maim; Misrephoth on the west, REB).

MIST—water in the form of particles floating or falling in the atmosphere near the surface of the earth. Genesis 2:6 speaks of a mist going up from the earth and watering the ground.

Some commentators believe the Hebrew word translated "mist" in this verse refers to some subterranean water source, such as an underground spring or stream.

MITE (see MONEY OF THE BIBLE).

MITHCAH [MITH kuh]—a form of MITHKAH.

MITHKAH [MITH kuh]—a stopping place of the Israelites in the wilderness (Num. 33:28–29; Mithcah, KJV).

MITHNITE [MITH night]—a term used to describe Joshaphat, one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:43).

MITHRAISM [MYTH rah iz em]—a Persian religious cult that flourished in the late Roman Empire. In the second century A.D. it was stronger than Christianity in the Roman Empire. But it declined rapidly in the third century. Mithras was considered the god of light and wisdom and the guardian against evil by the Persians. Also see GODS, PAGAN.

MITHREDATH [MITH reh dath]—the name of two men in the Book of Ezra:

1. The treasurer of King Cyrus of Persia. Mithredath delivered the temple vessels that were to be returned to Jerusalem (Ezra 1:8).
2. A man who protested the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem by the Israelites (Ezra 4:7).

MITRE—KJV word for TURBAN. Also see DRESS OF THE BIBLE.

MITYLENE [mit uh LEE neh]—the wealthy chief city of Lesbos, an island in the Aegean Sea off the western coast of Asia Minor (see Map 8, C–2). On his third missionary journey, the apostle Paul stopped briefly at Mitylene while on his way from Troas to Miletus (Acts 20:14).

MIXED MULTITUDE—a collection of people of different races and nationalities (Ex. 12:38; Num. 11:4; Neh. 13:3; Jer. 25:20, 24). Each of the uses of this phrase, however, has a slightly different interpretation. In Exodus 12:38, the Hebrew expression means a group of people of different races. In Numbers 11:4, it refers to "rabble" or "riffraff." These people may not be the same as those in Exodus 12:38. In Nehemiah 13:3, which refers to the situation after the return from captivity, the term refers to the foreigners with whom Israel had made marriages and the children of those marriages (Ezra 9:1–2; Neh. 13:23–24). In Jeremiah 25:20, 24, the reference is to foreign nations, which, like Judah, were to be conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon.

MIZAR [MY zar] (little)—a hill apparently east of the Jordan River, probably within sight of Mount Hermon, mentioned only in Psalm 42:6.

MIZPAH [MIZ pah] (watchtower)—the name of six sites in the Old Testament:

1. One of three names given to a mound of stones erected as a memorial. Jacob set up this memorial in Gilead as a witness of the covenant between him and his father-in-law, Laban (Gen. 31:49). Both Jacob and Laban called this monument "heap of witness." The mound was also called Mizpah, meaning "watch[tower]." The stones were erected as a boundary marker between the two. God was the One who was to watch between them.
2. A district at the foot of Mount Hermon called "the land of Mizpah" and "the Valley of Mizpah" (Josh. 11:3, 8).
3. A city of Judah (Josh. 15:38) in the Shephelah, or lowland plain.
4. A city of Benjamin in the region of Geba and Ramah (1 Kin. 15:22). At Mizpah Samuel assembled the Israelites for prayer after the ARK OF THE COVENANT was returned to Kirjath Jearim (1 Sam. 7:5–6). Saul was first presented to Israel as king at this city (1 Sam.

10:17). Mizpah was also one of the places that Samuel visited on his annual circuit to judge Israel (1 Sam. 7:16–17). Mizpah was one of the sites fortified against the kings of the northern tribes of Israel by King Asa (1 Kin. 15:22). After the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., Gedaliah was appointed governor of the remaining people of Judah; his residence was at Mizpah (2 Kin. 25:23, 25). After the fall of Jerusalem Mizpah became the capital of the Babylonian province of Judah. Mizpah also was reinhabited by Israelites after the Babylonian captivity (Neh. 3:7, 15, 19). The site is modern Tell en-Nasbch.

5. A town or site in Gilead known as Mizpah of Gilead and the home of Jephthah the judge (Judg. 11:29, 34). This site was probably known as Ramath Mizpah (Josh. 13:26)—the Ramoth in Gilead listed as one of the six cities of refuge (Josh. 20:8).
6. A city in Moab to which David took his parents for safety when King Saul sought to kill him (1 Sam. 22:3). Some scholars believe Mizpah of Moab was another name for Kir of Moab (present-day Kerak), the capital of Moab.

MIZPAR [MIZ pahr]—a form of MISPAR.

MIZRAIM [MIZ ray im] (two Egypts)—the second son of Ham as well as the name of his descendants and the country where they lived. Mizraim apparently was the ancestor of the Egyptians. In the Old Testament the nation of Egypt is sometimes called Mizraim, perhaps referring to the fact that Egypt was divided into two parts (Upper and Lower Egypt). (Gen. 10:6, 13; 1 Chr. 1:8, 11).

• Ancient Egypt, called Mizraim in the Hebrew Bible, is famous for its mammoth pyramids, like this one at Giza.

MIZZAH [MIZ uh]—a son of Reuel and chief of a clan in the land of Edom (1 Chr. 1:37).

MNASON [NAY sohn]—a Christian with whom the apostle Paul stayed on his final visit to Jerusalem (Acts 21:16). A native of Cyprus, Mnason was “an early disciple”—perhaps meaning that he was converted to Christianity on the Day of Pentecost or shortly thereafter. He may have been an acquaintance of Barnabas, who also was from Cyprus (Acts 4:36).

MOAB [MOE abb] (of my father)—the name of a man and a nation (see Map 2, C–1) in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Lot by an incestuous union with his older daughter (Gen. 19:37). Moab became an ancestor of the MOABITES.

2. A neighboring nation whose history was closely linked to the fortunes of the Hebrew people. Moab was situated along the eastern border of the southern half of the Dead Sea, on the plateau between the Dead Sea and the Arabian desert. It was about 57 kilometers (35 miles) long and 40 kilometers (25 miles) wide. Throughout much of its history, the northern border of Moab was the Arnon River and the southern border was the Zered. Although it was primarily a high plateau, Moab also had mountainous areas and deep gorges. It was a fertile area for crops and herds. To the south and west of Moab was the nation of Edom; to the north was Ammon. After the Israelites invaded the land, the tribe of Reuben displaced the Moabites from the northern part of their territory and the tribe of Gad pushed the Ammonites eastward into the desert.

General History. Moab was inhabited from prehistoric times. The KING'S HIGHWAY, a major trade route from Syria to the Gulf of Aqaba, brought wealth and culture to Moab as early as 2500 B.C. Sometime during the fifteenth century B.C., as the nomadic population settled down, the kingdom of Moab arose, along with Edom and Ammon. The Moabites built fortifications throughout their territory. Not long before the conquest of the region by the Hebrew people, Sihon, king of the Amorites, invaded Moab from the north and added much of Moab to his kingdom (Num. 21:27–30).

The Israelite tribes of Reuben and Gad settled the northern part of the territory of Moab. During most of Israel's history, the Moabites were Israel's enemies. In the late eighth century B.C. Moab became subject to Assyria, like many other nations in the region. When the Assyrian Empire fell in 609 B.C., Arab invasions intensified, and the kingdom of Moab was taken. Thereafter Moab was occupied increasingly by nomadic Arabs, until the NABATEANS established a settled culture from the first century B.C. to A.D. 106. After that, the entire region was made into a Roman province.

Connections with Israel. Moab, founder of the Moabites, was a son of Lot by incest (Gen. 19:30–38). Although the Moabites were of mixed ethnic stock, the influence of Moab's descendants among them was great enough to give the country its ancient name. The story in Genesis 14 of the raid of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and his fellow kings records the conquest of most of Moab about 2000–1900 B.C.

Sihon’s Amorite kingdom annexed much of Moab shortly before the Israelite conquest of Canaan (Num. 21:17–29). After the Israelites defeated Sihon, Balak, the king of the relatively weak Moabites, joined with the Midianites in hiring the prophet-magician Balaam to curse Israel so the Israelites could be defeated (Num. 22:1–20). Balaam’s mission failed, but when the Israelites camped in Moab, the women of Moab enticed the Israelites into a form of idolatry that involved ritual sexual immorality. This resulted in God’s judgment against Israel (Num. 25:1–9).

Moses saw the Promised Land from Moab’s Mount Nebo (Num. 27:12–23). Here he was buried after his death (Deut. 34:6). From the region of Acacia Grove in northwest Moab, the Israelites crossed the Jordan River into the Promised Land (Josh. 3:1). The tribes of Reuben and Gad actually settled in northern Moab (Num. 32:1–37).

The nation of Israel was relatively weak during the period of the judges, after the conquest. Eglon, a king of Moab, began to oppress Israel, capturing territory east of the Jordan River as far as Jericho. Ehud the judge delivered Israel from Eglon (Judg. 3:12–30). The events of the Book of Ruth occurred during this same general period. Ruth, a Moabite woman, became an ancestor of King David and, therefore, of Jesus himself (Ruth 2:6; 4:13–22; Matt. 1:5–16).

The Moabites also threatened Israel in the days of Israel’s first king, Saul, who was apparently successful against them (1 Sam. 14:47). Although David had some early friendships among the Moabites (1 Sam. 22:3–4), he eventually conquered Moab (2 Sam. 8:2). The Moabites remained subject to Israel until after Solomon’s death.

Omri, king of Israel (885–874 B.C.), kept Moab under his control, as did his son Ahab (874–853 B.C.), until Ahab was so occupied with wars against Syria and Assyria that Moab broke free. This was described by King Mesha of Moab in his monument, the MOABITE STONE. King Jehoram of Israel, King Jehoshaphat of Judah, and the king of Edom joined forces to attack Moab about 849 B.C. But they failed to conquer the Moabites because of a superstitious lack of faith when the king of Moab sacrificed his own son to show how deeply he believed in his cause (2 Kin. 3:1–27).

On another occasion, a coalition of Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites invaded Judah, but they were destroyed by God (2 Chr. 20:1–30). The Moabites apparently raided Israelite territory during the eighth century B.C. (2 Kin. 13:20).

The Assyrians conquered Moab about 735 B.C., and invading Arabs conquered it about 650 B.C. The prophet Isaiah lamented over Moab's defeat (Isaiah 15–16), and Jeremiah predicted Moab's destruction at the end of the seventh century B.C. (Jeremiah 48). When Jerusalem was destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 B.C., some of the Jews fled to Moab to escape being taken into captivity (Jer. 40:11–12).

MOABITES [MOH uh bites]—natives or inhabitants of the land of MOAB (Num. 22:4).

MOABITESS [moe ab IGHT ess]—a description of several women from MOAB in the Old Testament:

1. RUTH, the wife of Boaz (Ruth 1:22; 2:2, 21; 4:5, 10).
2. Some of Solomon's wives (1 Kin. 11:1).
3. Shimrith, the mother of Jehozabad, who conspired to kill King Joash (2 Chr. 24:26).

MOABITE STONE—a black basalt memorial stone discovered in Moab by a German missionary in 1868. Nearly four feet high, it contained about thirty-four lines in an alphabet similar to Hebrew. The stone was probably erected about 850 B.C. by the Moabite King Mesha.

King Mesha's story written on the stone celebrated his overthrow of the nation of Israel. This event apparently is recorded in 2 Kings 3:4–27, although the biblical account makes it clear that Israel was victorious in the battle. The passage shows that Mesha honors his god Chemosh in terms similar to the Old Testament reverence for the Lord. The inhabitants of entire cities were apparently slaughtered to appease this deity, recalling the similar practices of the Israelites, especially as described in the Book of Joshua. Besides telling of his violent conquests, Mesha boasted on the stone of the building of cities (with Israelite forced labor) and the construction of cisterns, walls, gates, towers, a king's palace, and even a highway.

The Moabite stone has profound biblical relevance. Historically, it confirms Old Testament accounts. It has a theological parallel to Israel's worship of one god. It is also valuable geographically because it mentions no fewer than fifteen sites listed in the Old Testament. The writing on the stone also resembles Hebrew, the language in which most of the Old Testament was originally written.

Some pieces of the stone are now housed in the Louvre Museum in Paris.

MOADIAH [moh uh DYE uh]—a priest and the head of a father's house in the time of the high priest Joiakim (Neh. 12:17). Moadiah may be the same person as Maadiah (Neh. 12:5).

MODERATION—self-control, not given to sudden impulses or excesses (1 Tim. 2:9). Although the term rarely occurs in the Bible, the concept of moderation is common. The Pharisees were not moderate. Jesus described them as those "who strain out a gnat to swallow a camel" (Matt. 23:24). They emphasized the minor aspects of the Law, neglecting the weightier matters. By contrast, Christian believers ought to be moderate in all things (1 Cor. 9:25; temperate, NKJV).

MODIOS (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

MOLADAH [moh LAY duh] (origin)—a city in southern Judah, about 23 kilometers (14 miles) southwest of Beersheba. Moladah was assigned to the tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:1–2) and was occupied by Israelites after the captivity (Neh. 11:26).

MOLE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MOLECH (see GODS, PAGAN).

MOLID [MOH lid] (begetter)—a son of Abishur and a descendant of Judah through Perez (1 Chr. 2:3, 29).

MOLOCH [MOH lahk] (see GODS, PAGAN).

MOLTEN SEA (see LAVER).

MOMENT—a minute portion of time; an instant. The Hebrew word translated as "moment" means "a wink" or "a blink" (Ex. 33:5; Job 7:18). The Greek word translated as "moment" literally means "a pricking" or "a point." When Christ returns, "We shall all be changed in a moment [in a flash; NIV, REB], in the twinkling of an eye" (1 Cor. 15:52).

Also see TIME.

MONEY OF THE BIBLE. As soon as ancient people stopped living the lives of wandering hunters and began an agricultural system, a medium of exchange became necessary. A system of barter, or trading of property, preceded the creation of any formal currency that can be called money.

In Old Testament times, land itself became an immediate asset. It was a possession that could be traded. But produce, and especially livestock, was more convenient, because it was so movable. The pharaoh of Egypt supplied Abraham with oxen, sheep, camels, and female donkeys (Gen. 12:16). King Mesha of Moab exacted a tribute of 100,000 sheep and 100,000 rams (2 Kin. 3:4). The ritual sacrifice of animals underscored their value as a standard of barter—and thus encouraged commerce near the temple area.

Grain, oil, and wine were also used in bartering, as when King Solomon traded wheat and olive oil for the cypress trees needed to build the temple (1 Kin. 5:11), or when the Israelites were taxed in the amount of one-tenth of their grain or wine (1 Sam. 8:15), or when the tribe of Levi (Levites) was directed by God to serve as priests in exchange for grain and wine (Num. 18:25–32). Spices were also an item of barter. These were offered by the queen of Sheba to Solomon (1 Kin. 10:2).

Gradually, as communities became more organized, tradesmen traveled between these settlements. Products circulated from one region to another. Soon metals began to replace goods and services as items of exchange. Copper or bronze was in demand for weapons (2 Sam. 21:16), for farming tools, and for offerings (Ex. 35:5). The early Egyptians, Semites, and Hittites shaped gold and silver into rings, bars, or rounded nodules for easier trading. The children of Jacob used “bundles of money” (Gen. 42:35), which may have been metal rings tied together with strings.

Silver generally was used in real estate transactions. Omri purchased the village and hill of Samaria for two talents of silver (1 Kin. 16:24). Gold was sometimes used, along with silver, in the payment of tribute, such as Hezekiah’s payment to Sennacherib of Assyria (2 Kin. 18:14). Abraham bought the Cave of Machpelah for 400 shekels of silver (Gen. 23:15–16). David bought the threshing floor of Araunah for fifty shekels of silver (2 Sam. 24:24). Solomon purchased chariots and horses with silver (1 Kin. 10:28–29). Judas was paid for his betrayal of Jesus with thirty pieces of silver (Matt. 26:15). Silver was so commonly used as money that the Hebrew word for “silver” came to mean “money” (Gen. 17:13).

Gold, the most valuable of metals, was also used for major transactions. King Hiram of Tyre paid 120 talents of gold to Solomon for several cities near his land (1 Kin. 9:13–14). Later Hezekiah paid Sennacherib 300 talents of silver and 30 talents of gold to obtain peace (2 Kin. 18:14). Copper was also used for barter but was considered less valuable (Ex. 35:5; 2 Sam. 21:16; Is. 60:17). Later these same three metals were used to mint the nation's first coins.

In their early use as money, metals were probably in their raw form or in varying stages of refinement. However, in that form it was difficult to transport them and to determine their true value. Thus the metals were soon refined into the form of a wedge or a bar (Josh. 7:21) or various forms of jewelry.

Abraham's servant gave Rebekah a golden nose ring weighing half a shekel and two gold bracelets weighing ten shekels (Gen. 24:22). The spoil of the Midianites included many articles of jewelry (Num. 31:50). Gold and silver were also kept as ingots, vessels, dust, or small fragments that could be melted and used immediately. These small pieces of metal were often carried in leather pouches that could be easily hidden (Gen. 42:35).

The Bible frequently refers to "pieces" of silver or gold. The confusing term "shekel" did not denote any one value or weight at first, although it later became the name of a Jewish coin. For instance, there were heavy and light silver shekels (Phoenician), and heavy and light gold shekels (Babylonian). Fifteen heavy Phoenician shekels of silver equaled one heavy Babylonian gold shekel. Abraham paid pieces of silver, or shekels, for the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 23:16). David paid gold shekels to Ornan the Jebusite (1 Chr. 21:22–25).

Fractions of the shekel are mentioned in the Old Testament as well: the half-shekel, or bekah (Ex. 38:26); the third part of a shekel as a covenant obligation (Neh. 10:32); the fourth part of a shekel, or rebah, proposed to Saul by the servant as a gift to the prophet Samuel (1 Sam. 9:8); and the twentieth part of a shekel, or a gerah (Lev. 27:25). The pin was two-thirds of a shekel (1 Sam. 13:21). These pieces were probably fragments of gold or silver bars.

The talent was the largest unit of silver, shaped in slabs, pellets, or rings, with approximately the value of one ox.

Before coins with stamped values were introduced, the pieces of precious metal for transactions had to be weighed on a scale. Abraham measured the shekels given to Ephron (Gen. 23:16). Such a system was certainly haphazard. Dishonest practices of weighing were banned (Deut. 25:13) in favor of a “perfect and just weight” (v. 15), because “a false balance is an abomination to the LORD” (Prov. 11:1).

Eventually pieces of metal were standardized, then stamped to designate their weight and value. Coins still had to be weighed, however, since their edges might have been trimmed or filed. Ancient coins often show other marks, indicating they may have been probed to assure their silver content.

Among the earliest coins were those struck in Lydia by King Croesus (561–546 B.C.), whose legendary Anatolian mines and stream beds supplied gold and silver. He was conquered by Cyrus the Great, who may have carried the idea of coined money back to Persia.

The Persian Darius the Great (522–486 B.C.) minted coins of gold. The coin known as a daric, which bore his name, was common with the Israelites during the captivity. It was similar to a U.S. five-dollar gold piece. Ten thousand darics were paid to craftsmen for their work on the temple built by Solomon (1 Chr. 29:7).

The Greeks soon adapted the Persian and Babylonian coinage, portraying animals, natural objects and Greek gods on the coins—which were called drachmas (Greek for “handful”). The tetradrachma or shekel of Tyre was about the size of an American half-dollar. It probably circulated among the Israelites. Archaeologists have uncovered coins of Greek design marked “YHD” (Judah), probably minted by the Persians for use by the Jews. However, these particular coins are not mentioned in the Bible.

Alexander the Great of Greece conquered the Persian Empire. In the period between the Old and New Testaments, Greek coins (especially the tetradrachma) began pouring into Palestine. After Alexander’s death, his successors known as the Ptolemies added mints at Gaza, Jaffa, and Tyre for making coins.

The Seleucids seized Palestine (about 200 B.C.), forcing Greek culture upon the Jews until they rebelled against ANTIOCHUS IV around 167 B.C. The right to mint coins was an issue, but the Jewish revolt led by Simon Maccabeus was thwarted. Later Antiochus VII established a mint that struck coins bearing his name. But the Seleucids' domination lapsed as the Hasmonaeans gained their freedom and began minting their own small bronze coins (one-half, one-third, and one-fourth shekel in weight). These were inscribed to a certain high priest of that time and "the community of Jews." Still the Seleucids issued official gold and silver coins. This brief phase of freedom for the Jews ended when the Romans annexed Palestine in 63 B.C.

Roman coins common in New Testament times showed a profound Greek influence, including those issued by Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) and his sons. But because of the Second Commandment, which prohibited graven images, the coins displayed only traditional, stylized pictures. However, they did include the date of issue.

The basic unit of Roman coinage was the silver denarius, probably equal to a laborer's daily wage, as in the parable of the vineyard workers (Matt. 20:9–10, 13). It was also used for paying tribute, or taxes, to the Roman emperor, whose image it carried. Jesus was shown a denarius, in a ploy by the Pharisees to trick him into opposing the Roman taxation authority. But he replied, "Render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22:15–22).

The golden aureus was worth about twenty-five denarii. The "copper coin" (assarion, equal to one-sixteenth of a silver denarius) was mentioned by Jesus as being worth no more than two sparrows, in his counsel about God's concern for the smallest creatures as well as the most powerful (Matt. 10:29; Luke 12:6). The "penny" (quadrans or kodrantes) was equal to one-fourth of the copper assarion. It was also mentioned by Jesus (Matt. 5:26).

Greek coins generally bore religious symbols. They may have been minted at pagan temples, which served as business centers for granting loans and receiving estates. The cult of Astarte may have had a strong influence on the production of coins. Silver for Greek coins was supplied by the rich mines of Laurium. Gold coins were less popular among the Greeks.

The basic Greek coin was the drachma, roughly equivalent to a Roman denarius, or one day's wages. Probably the drachma is the "lost coin" of Jesus' parable (Luke 15:8–10). The apostle Paul, when he practiced tentmaking at Corinth, probably exchanged his work for the Corinthian coins that pictured the winged horse Pegasus. (Corinth had minted coins as early as 650 B.C.) Paul later preached in Athens, Greece, where one archaeologist has excavated 80,000 coins.

The Greek didrachma (two-drachma piece) was used by the Jews for their half-shekel temple tax (Matt. 17:24). The silver stater, or tetradrachma, was a four-drachma piece, used to pay the temple tax (Matt. 17:27). The mina, equaling 100 drachmas, illustrated Jesus' parable about the wise use of resources (Luke 19:11–27).

The only Jewish coin mentioned in the New Testament is the "widow's mite" or lepton, called a mite by the NKJV. These were very small copper coins worth only a fraction of a penny by today's standards. Yet, Jesus commended the poor widow who gave two mites to the temple treasury, because "she out of her poverty put in all that she had, her whole livelihood" (Mark 12:44).

• This silver shekel was issued by the Jewish people during their first revolt against Roman rule (A.D. 66–70). It portrayed the blossom of an almond tree on one side and a silver chalice on the other.

MONEYBELTS—girdles, belts, or waistbands that bound together loose garments and also held money. When Jesus sent out the Twelve, He told them to take neither gold nor silver nor copper in their moneybelts (Matt. 10:9; Mark 6:8; belts, NRSV, NIV, REB; purses, KJV). They were to depend on the generosity of the people in the villages and towns through which they passed.

MONEYCHANGERS—bankers who exchanged one nation's currency, or one size of coin, for another. These people provided a convenience, charging a fee (often exorbitant) for their services. Some moneychangers operated in the temple area (the Court of the Gentiles), because all money given to the temple had to be in the Tyrian silver coin. According to Exodus 30:11–16, every Israelite twenty years old or older was required to pay an annual tax of a half-shekel into the treasury of the sanctuary.

Jesus cleansed the temple of moneychangers (John 2:13–16; Matt. 21:12–13).

Jesus made a whip of cords and drove out of the temple those who sold oxen, sheep, and doves. He overturned the tables of the moneychangers and poured out the changers' money (John 2:13–14). It is not clear why Jesus was so angry with the moneychangers. His anger was not directed at the temple tax, for He Himself paid it willingly "Lest we offend them, go to the sea, cast in a hook, and take the fish that comes up first. And when you have opened its mouth, you will find a piece of money; take that and give it to them for Me and you" (Matt. 17:24–27).

Jesus' anger may have been directed at the commercialism within the temple area that took advantage of the poor: "Do not make My Father's house a house of merchandise!" (John 2:16).

MONEYLENDER—one whose business is lending money at interest (Ex. 22:25; creditor, NRSV, NASB; usurer, KJV). The Hebrew word translated as "moneylender" has the root meaning of "one who exacts" (Lev. 25:35–38; Prov. 28:8; Jer. 15:10).

MONITOR LIZARD, MONKEY (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MONOTHEISM—worship of one supreme God, an important characteristic of the worship system of the Hebrew people. One of the central teachings in the Old Testament is Deuteronomy 6:4: “Hear, O Israel: The LORD our God, the LORD is one!” Against the idolatry of surrounding nations with their many gods (polytheism), God revealed this essential aspect of His nature to Israel in the Old Testament period. The Lord is one God.

In the New Testament God further revealed that He is One in Three and that His essential being is triune. God is the triune family of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, united in will, purpose, holiness, and love. Accordingly, Christianity is both monotheistic and trinitarian.

Jesus’ oneness with the Father is explicitly claimed in the fourth Gospel: “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God” (John 1:1). Jesus Himself consciously laid claim to His oneness with the Father (John 5:17–24). This angered His opponents so much that they sought to kill Him (John 5:18). The absolute unity of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit is expressed throughout the New Testament (Matt. 28:19; John 14:16; 16:13–15; 2 Cor. 13:14).

MONTH—one of the twelve divisions of a year, measured by the completed cycle in the changing of the MOON. Solomon had twelve governors over all Israel, who provided food for the king and his household; each made provision for one month of the year (1 Kin. 4:7). The military divisions of Israel were also twelve in number, one for each month of the year, each division consisting of 14,000 men (1 Chr. 27:1–15). Also see CALENDAR; TIME.

MOON—the “lesser light” of the heavens (Gen. 1:16) created by God to rule over the night. The moon had a special significance for the ancient Israelites. Their festival CALENDAR, which began each month with the rising of the new moon, was a lunar calendar. The day of the appearing of the new moon was signaled by the blowing of the ram’s horn. This event was also observed with special sacrifices (Num. 10:10; 28:11–15). Since the lunar year is about eleven days shorter than the solar year, a thirteenth month was added to the Hebrew calendar every third year to keep the festival calendar on schedule with the changing seasons.

The accurate recording of the new moon as it arrived each month was important, because the moon governed the dates for other religious festivals. Clouds or fog could obscure the new moon on the night of its rising. When this happened, the Hebrew people would extend the festival days to be sure the correct day was observed. This may be why the festival of the New Moon used by David to cover his absence from Saul's court seems to have lasted for two days (1 Sam. 20:5).

Amos condemned Israel's merchants for their impatience with the interruption to business caused by the festival of the New Moon (Amos 8:4–6). Speaking through Isaiah (1:13–15), God condemned the formal observance of the New Moon festival.

Along with the sun and the planet Venus, the moon was worshiped as a cosmic god by many pagan nations of the ancient world. Ur and Haran (Gen. 11:31) were both centers of moon worship. The moon was known as Sin in Babylon and Assyria, Nanna in Sumer, and Yarih at Ugarit. This last name is related to the Hebrew word for "moon." While the worship of the moon or any other natural phenomenon was strictly forbidden among the Hebrews (Deut. 4:19, 17:3), King Manasseh established the cults of "all the host of heaven," presumably including the moon, in the court of Solomon's temple (2 Kin. 21:3–5).

MOON, NEW (see FEASTS AND FESTIVALS).

MORASTHITE [moh RAS thite]—a native of MORESHETH GATH.

MORDECAI [MAWR deh kie] (related to Marduk)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. One of the Jewish captives who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylon (Ezra 2:2; Neh. 7:7).
2. The hero of the Book of Esther. Mordecai was probably born in Babylonia during the years of the CAPTIVITY of the Jewish people by this pagan nation. He was a resident of Susa (Shushan), the Persian capital during the reign of Ahasuerus (Xerxes I), the king of Persia (ruled 486–465 B.C.).

   When Mordecai's uncle, Abihail, died (Esth. 2:5), Mordecai took his orphaned cousin, Hadassah (Esther), into his home as her adoptive father (Esth. 2:7). When two of the king's eunuchs, Bigthan and Teresh, conspired to assassinate King Ahasuerus, Mordecai discovered the plot and exposed it, saving the king's life (Esth. 2:21–22). Mordecai's good deed was recorded in the royal chronicles of Persia (Esth. 2:23).

Mordecai showed his loyalty to God by refusing to bow to Haman, the official second to the king (Esth. 3:2, 5). According to the Greek historian Herodotus, when the Persians bowed before their king, they paid homage as to a god. Mordecai, a Jew, would not condone such idolatry.

Haman's hatred for Mordecai sparked his plan to kill all the Jews in the Persian Empire (Esth. 3:6). Mordecai reminded his cousin, who had become Queen Esther, of her God-given opportunity to expose Haman to the king and to save her people (Esth. 3:1—4:17). The plot turned against Haman, who ironically was impaled on the same stake that he had prepared for Mordecai (Esth. 7:10).

Haman was succeeded by Mordecai, who now was second in command to the most powerful man in the kingdom. He used his new position to encourage his people to defend themselves against the scheduled massacre planned by Haman. Persian officials also assisted in protecting the Jews, an event celebrated by the annual Feast of PURIM (Esth. 9:26–32).

MOREH [MOH reh] (diviner)—the name of two places in the Old Testament:

1. The site of a terebinth, or oak, tree near Shechem where Abraham built an altar (Gen. 12:6–7). The place probably was an old Canaanite sanctuary. The "terebinth tree of Moreh" was likely a sacred tree long before Abraham entered Canaan. This may have been the same tree under which Joshua set up a large memorial stone to commemorate Israel's renewed covenant with God (Josh. 24:26). The tree probably took its name from a "diviner" (a teacher or soothsayer who practiced DIVINATION) who lived here.
2. A hill in the territory of Issachar (see Map 3, B–2). In the time of the judges, the troops of the Midianites camped by the hill of Moreh. This hill apparently became the point of attack for the 300 Israelite warriors led by Gideon (Judg. 7:8). The site has been identified as present-day Jebel Dahi.

MORESHETH GATH [MOH reh sheth gath] (possession of Gath)—the birthplace, hometown, or residence of the prophet MICAH (Mic. 1:14). Micah is also called the Morasthite (Jer. 26:18, KJV; Mic. 1:1, KJV)—that is, a native or resident of Moresheth. The site of Moresheth Gath is identified with present-day Tell ej-Judeideh, in the lowland plain of Judah.

MORIAH [moh RYE uh]—the name of two sites in the Old Testament:

1. A land to which God commanded Abraham to take his only son Isaac and to offer him as a burnt offering on one of the mountains. The mountains of this land were a three-day journey from Beersheba and were visible from a great distance (Gen. 22:2, 4).
2. The hill at Jerusalem where Solomon built "the house of the Lord," the temple. Originally this was the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite (2 Chr. 3:1), also called Araunah the Jebusite (2 Sam. 24:16–24), where God appeared to David. David purchased the threshing floor from Ornan (1 Chr. 21:15—22:1) and built an altar on the site. It was left to David's son (Solomon) to build the temple.

   Some Jews believe the altar of burnt offering in the temple at Jerusalem was situated on the exact site of the altar on which Abraham intended to sacrifice Isaac. To them the two Mount Moriahs mentioned in the Bible are identical. The Muslim structure, the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem, reputedly is situated on this site.

MORNING—the first part of the day, extending from sunrise to noon (Gen. 1:5; Ps. 30:5; Matt. 16:3). Christ is called "the Bright and Morning Star" (Rev. 22:16) who brought a new day of hope and promise for the world. Also see TIME.

MORNING STAR (see LUCIFER).

MORROW—KJV word for the next day or tomorrow (Gen. 19:34; Luke 10:35; Acts 25:17). Also see TIME.

MORTAL—a biblical term that describes the weak, fleeting nature of human life, emphasizing human weakness and limitation (Job 4:17;

10:5; Is. 13:12). The word carries the meaning of “one certain to die.” In contrast, according to the apostle Paul, “Our Savior Jesus Christ has abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel” (2 Tim. 1:10).

MORTAR—a term that describes a cement used in building and a utensil for crushing grain:

1. A substance used to bond bricks or stones together (Ex. 1:14). The most common mortar of Bible times was a wet clay mixture, which was mixed by treading it by foot (Nah. 3:14).
   The second method was to use a natural tarlike substance, usually called pitch or bitumen (Gen. 11:3). In Mesopotamia and in Palestine around the Dead Sea, archaeologists have found buildings in which bitumen (a mineral pitch) was used for mortar.
2. A hollowed-out vessel—made of wood, stone, or metal—used to pulverize grain, spices, herbs, and other substances (Num. 11:8). Archaeologists have found many hollowed-out stones and pestles used for pounding.

Also see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE.

MORTAR, THE (see MAKTESH).

MORTAR AND PESTLE (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

MORTIFY—KJV word for the practice of disciplining one’s body and physical appetites through self-denial (Rom. 8:13; Col. 3:5; put to death, NKJV). The New Testament calls believers to be “crucified with Christ” by mortifying, or putting to death, such sinful deeds and thoughts as fornication, uncleanness, passion, evil desire, and covetousness.

MOSERAH [moh SEE ruh]—a place in the wilderness where the Israelites camped on their journey from Egypt to Canaan. Situated between “the wells of Bene Jaakan” and Gudgodah, Moserah was the place where Aaron died and was buried (Deut. 10:6; plural, Moseroth, Num. 33:30–31).

MOSEROTH [moh ZEE rawth]—a form of MOSERAH.

MOSES [MOE zez]—the Hebrew prophet who delivered the Israelites from Egyptian slavery and who was their leader and lawgiver during their years of wandering in the wilderness. He was from the family line of Amram and Jochebed (Ex. 6:18, 20; Num. 26:58–59), Kohath and Levi. He was also the brother of Aaron and Miriam.

Moses was a leader so inspired by God that he was able to build a united nation from a race of oppressed and weary slaves. In the covenant ceremony at Mount Sinai, where the TEN COMMANDMENTS were given, he founded the religious community known as Israel. As the interpreter of these covenant laws, he was the organizer of the community's religious and civil traditions. His story is told in the Old Testament—in the books of Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.

Moses' life is divided into three major periods:

The Forty Years in Egypt. The Hebrew people had been in slavery in Egypt for some 400 years. This was in accord with God's words to Abraham that his seed, or descendants, would be in a foreign land in affliction for 400 years (Gen. 15:13). At the end of this time, God began to set His people free from their bondage by bringing Moses to birth. He was a child of the captive Hebrews, but one whom the Lord would use to deliver Israel from her oppressors.

Moses was born at a time when the pharaoh, the ruler of Egypt, had given orders that no more male Hebrew children should be allowed to live. The Hebrew slaves had been reproducing so fast that the king felt threatened by a potential revolt against his authority. To save the infant Moses, his mother made a little vessel of papyrus waterproofed with asphalt and pitch. She placed Moses in the vessel, floating among the reeds on the bank of the Nile River.

By God's providence, Moses—the child of a Hebrew slave—was found and adopted by an Egyptian princess, the daughter of the pharaoh himself. He was reared in the royal court as a prince of the Egyptians: "And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and deeds" (Acts 7:22). At the same time, the Lord determined that Moses should be taught in his earliest years by his own mother. This meant that he was founded in the faith of his fathers, although he was reared as an Egyptian (Ex. 2:1–10).

One day Moses became angry at an Egyptian taskmaster who was beating a Hebrew slave; he killed the Egyptian and buried him in the sand (Ex. 2:12). When this became known, however, he feared for his own life and fled from Egypt to the land of Midian. Moses was forty years old when this occurred (Acts 7:23–29).

The Forty Years in the Land of Midian. Moses' exile of about forty years was spent in the land of Midian (mostly in northwest Arabia), in the desert between Egypt and Canaan. In Midian Moses became a shepherd and eventually the son-in-law of Jethro, a Midianite priest. Jethro gave his daughter Zipporah to Moses in marriage (Ex. 2:21); and she bore him two sons, Gershom and Eliezer (Ex. 18:3–4; Acts 7:29). During his years as a shepherd, Moses became familiar with the wilderness of the Sinai Peninsula, learning much about survival in the desert. He also learned patience and much about leading sheep. All of these skills prepared him to be the shepherd of the Israelites in later years when he led them out of Egypt and through the Wilderness of Sinai.

Near the end of his forty-year sojourn in the land of Midian, Moses experienced a dramatic call to ministry. This call was given at the BURNING BUSH in the wilderness near Mount Sinai. The Lord revealed to Moses His intention to deliver Israel from Egyptian captivity into a "land flowing with milk and honey" that He had promised centuries before to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The Lord assured Moses that He would be with him, and that by God's presence, he would be able to lead the people out.

God spoke to Moses from the midst of a burning bush, but Moses doubted that it was God who spoke. He asked for a sign. Instantly his rod, which he cast on the ground, became a serpent (Ex. 4:3).

In spite of the assurance of this miraculous sign, Moses was still hesitant to take on this task. He pleaded that he was "slow of speech and slow of tongue" (Ex. 4:10), perhaps implying that he was a stutterer or a stammerer. God countered Moses' hesitation by appointing his brother Aaron to be his spokesman. Moses would be God's direct representative, and Aaron would be his mouthpiece and interpreter to the people of Israel. Finally Moses accepted this commission from God and returned to Egypt for a confrontation with Pharaoh.

Soon after his return, Moses stirred the Hebrews to revolt and demanded of Pharaoh, “Let My people go, that they may hold a feast to Me in the wilderness” (Ex. 5:1). But Pharaoh rejected the demand of this unknown God of whom Moses and Aaron spoke: “Who is the LORD, that I should obey His voice to let Israel go? I do not know the LORD, nor will I let Israel go” (Ex. 5:2). He showed his contempt of this God of the Hebrews by increasing the oppression of the slaves (Ex. 5:5–14). As a result, the people grumbled against Moses (Ex. 5:20–21).

But Moses did not waver in his mission. He warned Pharaoh of the consequences that would fall on his kingdom if he should refuse to let the people of Israel go. Then followed a stubborn battle of wills with Pharaoh hardening his heart and stiffening his neck against God’s commands. Ten terrible plagues were visited upon the land of Egypt (Ex. 7:14—12:30), the tenth plague being the climax of horrors.

The ultimate test of God’s power to set the people free was the slaying of the firstborn of all Egypt, on the night of the PASSOVER feast of Israel (Ex. 11:1—12:30). That night Moses began to lead the slaves to freedom, as God killed the firstborn of Egypt and spared the firstborn of Israel through the sprinkling of the blood of the Passover lamb. This pointed to the day when God’s own Lamb would come into the world to deliver, by His own blood, all of those who put their trust in Him, setting them free from sin and death “but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot” (1 Pet. 1:19).

After the Hebrews left, Pharaoh’s forces pursued them to the Red Sea (or Sea of Reeds), threatening to destroy them before they could cross. A PILLAR OF FIRE AND CLOUD, however, stood between the Israelites and the Egyptians, protecting the Israelites until they could escape. When Moses stretched his hand over the sea, the waters were divided and the Israelites passed to the other side. When the Egyptians attempted to follow, Moses again stretched his hand over the sea, and the waters closed over the Egyptian army (Ex. 14:19–31).

The Forty Years in the Wilderness. Moses led the people toward Mount Sinai, in obedience to the word of God spoken to him at the burning bush (Ex. 3:1–12). During the long journey through the desert, the people began to murmur because of the trials of freedom, forgetting the terrible trials of Egyptian bondage. Through it all, Moses was patient, understanding both the harshness of the desert and the blessings of God’s provision for them.

In the Wilderness of Shur the people murmured against Moses because the waters of Marah were bitter. The Lord showed Moses a tree. When Moses cast the tree into the waters, the waters were made sweet (Ex. 15:22–25). In answer to Moses’ prayers, God sent bread from heaven—MANNA and quail to eat (Exodus 16). In the Wilderness of Sin, when they again had no water, Moses performed a miracle by striking a rock, at a place called Massah (Testing) and Meribah (Contention), and water came out of the rock (Ex. 17:1–7). When they reached the land of Midian, Moses’ father-in-law Jethro came to meet them. He gave Moses sound advice on how to exercise his leadership and authority more efficiently by delegating responsibility to subordinate rulers who would judge the people in small cases (Exodus 18).

When the Israelites arrived at Mount Sinai, Moses went up onto the mountain for forty days (Ex. 24:18). The Lord appeared in a terrific storm—“thunderings and lightnings, and a thick cloud” (Ex. 19:16). Out of this momentous encounter came the covenant between the Lord and Israel, including the Ten Commandments (Ex. 20:1–17).

In giving the Law to the Hebrew people, Moses taught the Israelites what the Lord expected of them—that they were to be a holy people separated from the pagan immorality and idolatry of their surroundings. Besides being the lawgiver, Moses was also the one through whom God presented the TABERNACLE and instructions for the holy office of the priesthood. Under God’s instructions, Moses issued ordinances to cover specific situations, instituted a system of judges and hearings in civil cases, and regulated the religious and ceremonial services of worship.

When Moses delayed in coming down from Mount Sinai, the faithless people became restless. They persuaded Aaron to take their golden earrings and other articles of jewelry and to fashion a golden calf for worship. When he came down from the mountain, Moses was horrified at the idolatry and rebellion of his people. The sons of Levi were loyal to Moses, however, and he ordered them to punish the rebels (Ex. 32:28). Because of his anger at the golden calf, Moses cast down the two tablets of stone with the Ten Commandments and broke them at the foot of the mountain (Ex. 32:19). After the rebellion had been put down, Moses went up onto Mount Sinai again and there received the Ten Commandments a second time (Ex. 34:1, 29).

After leaving Mount Sinai, the Israelites continued their journey toward the land of Canaan. They arrived at KADESH BARNEA, on the border of the Promised Land. From this site, Moses sent twelve spies, one from each of the twelve tribes of Israel, into Canaan to explore the land. The spies returned with glowing reports of the fruitfulness of the land. They brought back samples of its figs and pomegranates and a cluster of grapes so large that it had to be carried between two men on a pole (Num. 13:1–25). The majority of the spies, however, voted against the invasion of the land. Ten of them spoke fearfully of the huge inhabitants of Canaan (Num. 13:31–33).

The minority report, delivered by Caleb and Joshua, urged a bold and courageous policy. By trusting the Lord, they said, the Israelites would be able to attack and overcome the land (Num. 13:30). But the people lost heart and rebelled, refusing to enter Canaan and clamoring for a new leader who would take them back to Egypt (Num. 14:1–4). To punish them for their lack of faith, God condemned all of that generation, except Caleb and Joshua, to perish in the wilderness (Num. 14:26–38).

During these years of wandering in the wilderness, Moses’ patience was continually tested by the murmurings, grumblings, and complaints of the people. At one point, Moses’ patience reached its breaking point, and he sinned against the Lord in anger against the people. When the people again grumbled against Moses, saying they had no water, the Lord told Moses to speak to the rock and water would flow forth. Instead, Moses lifted his hand and struck the rock twice with his rod. Apparently because he disobeyed the Lord in this act, Moses was not permitted to enter the Promised Land (Num. 20:1–13). That privilege would belong to his successor, Joshua.

When Moses had led the Israelites to the borders of Canaan, his work was done. In “the Song of Moses” (Deut. 32:1–43), Moses renewed the Sinai Covenant with the survivors of the wanderings, praised God, and blessed the people, tribe by tribe (Deut. 33:1–29). Then he climbed Mount Nebo to the top of Pisgah and viewed the Promised Land from afar and died. The Hebrews never saw him again, and the circumstances of his death and burial remain shrouded in mystery (Num. 34:1–8).

After his death, Moses continued to be viewed by Israel as the servant of the Lord (Josh. 1:1–2) and as the one through whom God spoke to Israel (Josh. 1:3; 9:24; 14:2). For that reason, although it was truly the Law of God, the Law given at Mount Sinai was consistently called the Law of Moses (Josh. 1:7; 4:10). Above all, Joshua's generation remembered Moses as the man of God (Josh. 14:6).

This high regard for Moses continued throughout Israelite history. Moses was held in high esteem by Samuel (1 Sam. 12:6, 8), the writer of 1 Kings (1 Kin. 2:3), and the Jewish people who survived in the times after the captivity (1 Chr. 6:49; 23:14).

The psalmist also remembered Moses as the man of God and as an example of a great man of prayer (Ps. 99:6). He recalled that God worked through Moses (Ps. 77:20; 103:7), realizing that the consequence of his faithfulness to God was to suffer much on behalf of God's people (Ps. 106:16, 32).

The prophets of the Old Testament also remembered Moses as the leader of God's people (Is. 63:12), as the one by whom God brought Israel out of Egypt (Mic. 6:4), and as one of the greatest of the interceders for God's people (Jer. 15:1). Malachi called the people to remember Moses' Law and to continue to be guided by it, until the Lord Himself should come to redeem them (Mal. 4:4).

Jesus showed clearly, by what He taught and by how He lived, that He viewed Moses' Law as authoritative for the people of God (Matt. 5:17–18). To the two disciples on the road to Emmaus, Jesus expounded the things concerning Himself written in the Law of Moses, the Prophets, and the other writings of the Old Testament (Luke 24:27). At the TRANSFIGURATION, Moses and Elijah appeared to Jesus and talked with Him (Matt. 17:1–4; Mark 9:2–5; Luke 9:28–33).

In his message before the Jewish Council, Stephen included a lengthy reference to how God delivered Israel by Moses and how Israel rebelled against God and against Moses' leadership (Acts 7:20–44).

The writer of the Book of Hebrews spoke in glowing terms of the faith of Moses (Heb. 11:24–29). These and other passages demonstrate how highly Moses was esteemed by various writers of the Old and New Testaments.

The New Testament, however, shows that Moses' teaching was intended only to prepare humanity for the greater teaching and work of Jesus Christ (Rom. 1:16—3:31). What Moses promised, Jesus fulfilled: “For the law was given through Moses, but grace and truth came through Jesus Christ” (John 1:17).

MOST HIGH—a name for God that appears frequently in the Old Testament, particularly in the Psalms and the Books of Isaiah and Daniel (Ps. 92:1; Is. 14:14; Dan. 4:17). The name emphasizes the might and power of God. Also see GOD, NAMES OF.

MOTE—KJV word for SPECK.

MOTH (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MOTHER—the female parent of a household. In the Hebrew family, the mother occupied a higher position than that enjoyed by women in many other nations. The mother’s duties were primarily domestic, but she was held in high regard by her family and Hebrew society.

The concept of mother was sometimes used in other, more figurative ways. Nations were sometimes thought of as mothers. The prophet Ezekiel used mother as a metaphor for Israel. After being nurtured and cared for by their "mother," the "princes of Israel" brought shame upon her by their idolatrous practices (Ezek. 19:1–14). Jeremiah used the concept of Israel as mother to personify the nation's sin (Jer. 50:12–13), while Hosea made it a continuing theme of his prophecies.

The word "mother" was sometimes used to describe large and important cities. The city of Abel of Beth Maachah was called "a mother in Israel" (2 Sam. 20:19). A city was also a mother in terms of its influence. Babylon was called "the mother of harlots and of the abominations of the earth" (Rev. 17:5).

The figurative meaning of "mother" also included ancestry. Eve was the "mother of all living" (Gen. 3:20). God blessed Sarah by declaring, "She shall be a mother of nations" (Gen. 17:16). Rebekah was blessed to become "the mother of thousands of ten thousands" (Gen. 24:60).

The love and nurturing of God is sometimes compared to the love and caring a mother gives to a newborn child. Paul referred to new Christians as "babes in Christ" (1 Cor. 3:1), implying a connection to Jesus and God as mother as well as father (1 Thess. 2:7).

MOTHER-IN-LAW—the mother of a person's husband or wife. A classic example of a beloved mother-in-law is Naomi, mother-in-law of Ruth (Ruth 1:1–4). Also see FAMILY.

MOUNT, MOUNTAIN—elevations higher than hills, although the Hebrew words for hill and mountain are often used interchangeably. The mountains of Palestine consist of two main ridges.

The ridge west of the Jordan Rift (the Arabah) is the rugged hill country of Galilee, Samaria, and Judah.

The second ridge, east of the Jordan, includes the loftiest of the area's mountains—Mount Hermon (about 2,800 meters, 9,166 feet)—and runs through Gilead, Ammon, Moab, and Edom.

The elevations of the western range are not great: Ebal (940 meters, 3,084 feet); Gerizim (880 meters, 2,890 feet); Gilboa (517 meters, 1,696 feet).

In the KJV, the word "mount" also refers to a siege mound raised by an attacking army against a fortified city (2 Sam. 20:15).

MOUNT BAAL HERMON [BAY uhl HUR mun]—a mountain from which the Israelites were unable to expel the Hivites (Judg. 3:3). East of the Jordan River, the site marked the northern limit of the half-tribe of Manasseh. Some scholars believe the Hebrew text may originally have read “Baal Gad near Mount Hermon” (Josh. 13:5; 1 Chr. 5:23).

MOUNT OF THE BEATITUDES—a slope on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee where Jesus is believed to have delivered the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:1—7:29). A church has been built on the site traditionally recognized as the Mount of Beatitudes.

MOUNT OF THE CONGREGATION—in Babylonian mythology, a mountain in the far north where the gods congregated (Is. 14:13; mount of assembly, NIV; the mountain where the gods assemble, REB). Apparently Isaiah knew of this Babylonian myth when he wrote his prophecy against the haughty king of Babylon (Is. 14:12).

MOUNT OF CORRUPTION—a hill on the southern ridge of the Mount of Olives. On the Mount of Corruption King Solomon built HIGH PLACES for his wives’ pagan gods. These hill-shrines were destroyed in the religious reformation instituted by King Josiah (2 Kin. 23:13; Hill of Corruption, NIV; mount of destruction, NASB).

MOUNT EPHRAIM—[EE free im] (see EPHRAIM).

MOUNT HERES [HE reez] (mountain of the sun)—a mountain near Aijalon and Shaalbim on the border between Judah and Dan (Judg. 1:35; in Aijalon, and in Shaalbim, NRSV).

MOUNT OF OLIVES—a north-to-south ridge of hills east of Jerusalem where Jesus was betrayed on the night before His crucifixion. This prominent feature of Jerusalem’s landscape is a gently rounded hill, rising to a height of about 830 meters (2,676 feet) and overlooking the TEMPLE.

The closeness of the Mount of Olives to Jerusalem’s walls made this series of hills a grave strategic danger. The Roman commander Titus had his headquarters on the northern extension of the ridge during the siege of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. He named the place Mount Scopus, or “Lookout Hill,” because of the view it offered over the city walls. The whole hill must have provided a platform for the Roman catapults that hurled heavy objects over the Jewish fortifications of the city.

In ancient times the whole mount must have been heavily wooded. As its name implies, it was covered with dense olive groves. It was from this woodland that the people, under Nehemiah's command, gathered their branches of olive, oil trees, myrtle, and palm to make booths when the Feast of Tabernacles was restored after their years of captivity in Babylon (Neh. 8:15).

The trees also grew on this mountain or hill in New Testament times. When Jesus entered the city, the people who acclaimed him king must have gathered the branches with which they greeted His entry from this same wooded area.

Another summit of the Mount of Olives is the one on which the "men of Galilee" stood (Acts 1:11–12) as they watched the resurrected Christ ascend into heaven. Then there is the point to the south above the village of Silwan (or Siloam) on the slope above the spring. Defined by a sharp cleft, it faces west along the converging Valley of HINNOM. It is called the Mount of Offense, or the "Mount of Corruption" (2 Kin. 23:13), because here King Solomon built "high places" for pagan deities that were worshiped by the people during his time (1 Kin. 11:5–7).

Although the Mount of Olives is close to Jerusalem, there are surprisingly few references to this range of hills in the Old Testament. As David fled from Jerusalem during the rebellion by his son Absalom, he apparently crossed the shoulder of the hill: "So David went up by the ascent of the Mount of Olives" (2 Sam. 15:30). Support may be found in this account for the claim that the road from the Jordan Valley did not go around the ridge in Bible times but crossed over the ridge, allowing the city of Jerusalem to break spectacularly on the traveler's sight as he topped the hill.

The Mount of Olives is also mentioned in a reference by the prophet Zechariah to the future Day of the Lord: "In that day His feet will stand on the Mount of Olives, which faces Jerusalem on the east. And the Mount of Olives shall be split in two from east to west, making a very large valley; half of the mountain shall move toward the north and half of it toward the south" (Zech. 14:4). Christian tradition holds that when Christ returns to earth, His feet will touch first upon the Mount of Olives, the exact point from which He ascended into heaven (Acts 1:11–12).

In the New Testament the Mount of Olives played a prominent part in the last week of our Lord's ministry. Jesus approached Jerusalem from the east, by way of Bethphage and Bethany, at the Mount of Olives (Matt. 21:1; Mark 11:1). As He drew near the descent of the Mount of Olives (Luke 19:37), the crowd spread their garments on the road, and others cut branches from the trees and spread them before Him. They began to praise God and shout, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" (Matt. 21:9). When Jesus drew near Jerusalem, perhaps as He arrived at the top of the Mount of Olives, He saw the city and wept over it (Luke 19:41).

Jesus then went into Jerusalem and cleansed the temple of the moneychangers; He delivered parables to the crowd and silenced the scribes and Pharisees with His wisdom. Later, as He sat on the Mount of Olives, the disciples came to Him privately, and He delivered what is known as "the OLIVET DISCOURSE," a long sermon that speaks of the signs of the times and the end of the age, the Great Tribulation, and the coming of the Son of Man (Matt. 24:3—25:46; Mark 13:3–37).

After Jesus had instituted the LORD'S SUPPER on the night of His betrayal, He and His disciples sang a hymn and went out to the Mount of Olives (Matt. 26:30; Mark 14:26), to the Garden of GETHSEMANE (Matt. 26:36; Mark 14:32). In this garden Jesus was betrayed by Judas and delivered into the hands of His enemies.

MOUNTAIN SHEEP (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MOUNTAIN OF THE VALLEY—a mountain east of the Jordan River valley, in the territory of Reuben (Josh. 13:19; hill of the valley, NASB, NRSV; hill in the valley, NIV, REB).

MOUNTAINS OF THE AMALEKITES—a place in the land of Ephraim connected with Pirathon, the town where Abdon died (Judg. 12:15).

MOUNTAINS OF THE AMORITES—the hill country of Judah and Ephraim (Deut. 1:7, 20).

MOURNER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

MOURNING—the experience or expression of grief, as at a time of death or national disaster. In biblical times, the customs of most cultures encouraged a vivid expression of grief. The people of that time would be puzzled by our more sedate forms of mourning.

The Old Testament has many Hebrew words for mourning. These words range in meaning from anger and indignation to the more common idea of grief over a calamity or death. In addition to wailing and weeping, outward forms of mourning included tearing the clothes and wearing SACKCLOTH (Gen. 37:34), fasting (Ps. 35:13), and throwing dust upon the head (Lam. 2:10).

The period for mourning varied. The Egyptians mourned for Jacob for seventy days (Gen. 50:3), most likely out of respect for him. Israel mourned for Aaron thirty days (Num. 20:29), and the same time for Moses (Deut. 34:8). Jacob mourned for Joseph "many days" (Gen. 37:34). According to one Jewish tradition, mourning was to take place after burial on the third, seventh, and fortieth days, and on the anniversary of the burial.

Mourning began at the moment a person died. The family would begin its wailing, and neighbors would rush to the bereaved household and join in the wailing. If the family could afford them, hired mourners were employed to add their chants, lamentations, and shrieks. Such hired mourners were probably among those who scorned Jesus when He said that Jairus' daughter was "not dead, but sleeping" (Matt. 9:24). Dirgesongs were also played on flutes (Matt. 9:23–24). Amid such pandemonium, it is understandable that Jesus put the crowd outside the house before raising Jairus' daughter.

In the New Testament only three Greek words are rendered as "mourn" (Matt. 9:15; 11:17; 24:30). The few references to mourning suggest that Christ's work removed the dread and pain of death (1 Cor. 15:55). Christians are not to "sorrow as others [unbelievers] who have no hope" (1 Thess. 4:13).

MOUSE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MOUTH—the opening by which food is taken into the body. In the Bible the mouth is mentioned primarily as the organ of speech. It means much the same as TONGUE. The mouth ought to be used for good, such as praising God (Ps. 34:1); but it also can be used for evil (Ps. 36:3).

To “open the mouth” means to speak; to “put one’s hand on one’s mouth” means to be quiet (Job 21:5). The word of God is described as coming from His mouth (Deut. 8:3), as symbolized in Revelation 1:16.

MOWING—the reaping or harvesting of mature grain (Amos 7:1). In Palestine the grain was cut by hand with a short sickle made of pieces of sharp flint or metal set in a wooden handle. After the stalks were cut, they were bound into SHEAVES for drying. Later the grain was stripped from the stalks in a threshing operation.

MOZA [MOH zuh]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Ephah, of the family of Hezron and the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:46).
2. A descendant of King Saul (1 Chr. 8:36–37).

MOZAH [MOH zuh]—a city in the territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:26). The site has been identified as the present-day Arab village of Kalunya, 8 kilometers (5 miles) northwest of Jerusalem.

MULBERRY (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MULE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

MUPPIM [MUP em]—a descendant of Benjamin (Gen. 46:21), also called Shupham (Num. 26:39; Shephupham, NRSV) and Shuppim (1 Chr. 7:12, 15; Shuppites, NIV).

MURDER—the unlawful killing of one person by another, especially with premeditated malice. After the Fall in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3:1–24), it was not long before the first murder occurred (Gen. 4:8), as Cain killed Abel his brother.

According to the Book of Genesis, mankind is created in God’s image (Gen. 1:26–27). Murdering a human being, therefore, is a serious crime and must be punished (Gen. 9:6). One of the Ten Commandments states, “You shall not murder” (Ex. 20:13; Deut. 5:17). This commandment is quoted several times in the New Testament, “Jesus said, ‘You shall not murder,’ ” (Matt. 19:18). Also see Luke 18:20 and Rom. 13:9.

Although a compensation—a “ransom” or payment of money—could be made for some crimes, this was not so in the case of murder (Num. 35:31). The “eye for eye, tooth for tooth” law (Ex. 21:24; Deut. 19:21) held that an appropriate punishment must be given for a crime, but that the punishment must not be greater than the crime.

According to the Law of Moses, the person responsible for carrying out the death penalty, in revenge for a murder, was called the go’el or KINSMAN; REDEEMER. He was the able-bodied male most closely related to the person who hadbeen murdered. The normal means of execution apparently was stoning; the body was then impaled on a stake (Deut. 21:21–22). A person who had accidentally killed another might flee to a CITY OF REFUGE for safety and protection.

In the New Testament, Jesus deepened the Old Testament teaching about murder by giving it a spiritual dimension. Whoever harbors anger and hatred against a brother is in danger of God’s judgment (Matt. 5:21). Murder begins in the heart—one’s thoughts and meditations—and proceeds out of the heart (Matt. 15:19; Mark 7:21).

But even murder can be forgiven (Matt. 12:31; Mark 3:28). Before his conversion, Saul of Tarsus launched “threats and murder” (Acts 9:1) against the church. But by the grace of God he was converted and became Paul the apostle, missionary to the Gentiles.

MURRAIN (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

MUSHI [MUE shy]—a son of Merari and founder of the MUSHITES (Num. 3:20, 33).

MUSHITES [MOO shites]—descendants of MUSHI (Num. 3:33; 26:58). Mushi was a son of Merari and grandson of Levi (Ex. 6:19; 1 Chr. 6:19, 47).

MUSIC—vocal or instrumental sounds with rhythm, melody, and harmony. Music was part of everyday life for the ancient Hebrew people. Music was a part of family merrymaking, such as the homecoming party for the prodigal son (Luke 15:25). Music welcomed heroes and celebrated victories. Miriam and other women sang, danced, and played timbrels when the Israelites miraculously escaped the Egyptians (Ex. 15:20), and the Song of Moses in Exodus 15 is the earliest recorded song in the Bible. Jephthah's daughter greeted him with timbrels to celebrate his victory over the Ammonites (Judg. 11:34). David's triumph brought music (1 Sam. 18:6).

Music was used in making war and crowning kings (Judg. 7:18–20; 1 Kin. 1:39–40; 2 Chr. 20:28). Wartime music-making was apparently little more than making noise, as in the fall of Jericho (Joshua 6). There was music for banquets and feasts (Is. 5:12; 24:8–9) and royal courts and harems (Eccl. 2:8). The Bible gives examples of occupational songs (Jer. 31:4–5), dirges and laments (Matt. 9:23), and cultic chants (Ex. 28:34–35; Josh. 6:4–20).

The Israelites were apparently a very musical people. The Assyrian king, Sennacherib, demanded as tribute from King Hezekiah of Judah male and female musicians—a most unusual ransom. Psalm 137 relates that the Babylonians demanded "songs of Zion" from the Jews while they were in captivity (v. 3). During the period between the Testaments, Strabo, a Greek geographer, called the female singers of Palestine the most musical in the world.

Music in the Old Testament. The Bible indicates that Jubal was "the father of all those who play the harp and flute" (Gen. 4:21). But professional musicians do not appear in the Bible before David's time. Even before professional musicians became the norm during David's reign, the concept of court musicians did exist. The young David was called to soothe Saul with music (1 Sam. 16:16–23). In this sense David was a minstrel (2 Kin. 3:15)—a player of stringed instruments.

The New Testament minstrels (Matt. 9:23) were flute players employed as professional mourners. The transition from spontaneous music to professional male musicians chiefly associated with organized religion was a natural one.

Israel's neighbors, Assyria and Egypt, had long had professional musicians. In spite of God's command to avoid other cultures, Israel was nevertheless strongly influenced by them—in music as well as religious practices.

Exactly how music was used in the tabernacle and temple services is not known. But scholars are certain that it accompanied sacrificial rites. Sacrificial music was forbidden after the Romans destroyed the temple in A.D. 70. The Levites, temple assistants responsible for the music, seem to have kept this part of the service a secret.

David introduced music into the sanctuary worship. His son and successor Solomon later retained it after the temple was built (2 Sam. 6:5; 1 Kin. 10:12). Music must have been considered an important part of the service, since Hezekiah and Josiah, the two reform kings, saw to it that music was included in the reformation (2 Chr. 29:25; 35:15).

Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun helped David set up the sanctuary worship. Asaph headed a choir of singers and musicians who were stationed before the ARK OF THE COVENANT in Jerusalem. Heman and Jeduthun had similar choirs at the old tabernacle at Gibeon (1 Chr. 16:4–6, 39–42). These choirs had 4,000 members (1 Chr. 23:5); 288 of these were trained musicians who directed the lesser-skilled musicians (1 Chr. 25:7–8). All the musicians were divided into 24 groups, each containing 12 skilled musicians. An orchestra consisting of stringed instruments (harps and lyres) and cymbals accompanied the singers (1 Chr. 15:19–21).

Our greatest clue to Hebrew music lies in the Book of Psalms, the earliest existing hymnbook. As hymns, these individual psalms were suitable for chanting and singing in the worship of God.

The Bible gives a glimpse of musical terminology in the headings of the Psalms that appear in the Hebrew language. Their meanings, however, are, to a large extent, obscure. These meanings were apparently lost as early as 250 B.C., the approximate date of the Greek translation of the Old Testament.

Categories of psalm headings include:

Titles—These include titles such as “A Psalm [Hebrew mizmor] of” (Psalm 87) and “A Contemplation [Hebrew maschil] of” (Psalm 78). Mizmor seems to mean “to play, sing”; maschil may indicate a meditation.

Directions for performance—alamoth (Psalm 46) may mean “for the flutes” or for soprano voices. Sheminith (Psalms 6; 12) suggests a melodic pattern, perhaps an octave lower than alamoth and, therefore, tenor or even bass. The NKJV translates, “On an eight-stringed harp.” Neginoth (Psalms 4; 6; 54; 55; 61; 67; 76) is translated “stringed instruments” (NKJV), but in reference to most psalms it probably means simply “a song.” Mahalath (Psalm 53) was probably a choreographic direction. In Psalm 88 mahalath is coupled with leannoth, the uncertain meaning of which has been interpreted as "for singing antiphonally."

Shiggaion (plural, shiggionoth), a part of the Hebrew heading of Psalm 7 probably referred to an erratic, enthusiastic ode or to a psalm of lamentation. Higgayon (Ps. 9:16) refers to a solemn sound and may indicate soft music. Muth Labben (Hebrew heading, Psalm 9) means "Death to the son." It may be a hymn tune.

Cue words—The majority of the psalm titles contain cue words. They direct the practice of setting new words to an old tune, an aspect of hymnology still practiced today. Shoshannim, a Hebrew word that means "lilies," occurs in the titles of Psalms 45 and 69 and in Psalm 80 as Shoshannim eduth, "Lilies of testimony" and in Psalm 60 as Shushan eduth, "Lily of the testimony." These expressions may have indicated the melody to which these songs were to be sung. These kinds of cue words appear before Psalms 22; 56–59; and 75, among others.

The heading Shir-hammaloth ("Song of Ascents") above Psalms 120–134 has several interpretations. The most common are: (1) These fifteen psalms were sung by Levites standing on the 15 steps between the court of the women and the court of the Israelites; and (2) These fifteen psalms were sung at three pilgrimage festivals. The second explanation is more probable.

Selah—This word occurs seventy-one times in the Book of Psalms (also Hab. 3:3, 9, 13). Scholars agree that the term is a musical direction of some sort, but they are not agreed on what the direction is. It may mean: (1) an interlude—a pause in the singing while the orchestra continues; (2) the equivalent of today's "Amen"; as such it would separate psalms or sections of psalms which have different liturgical purposes; and (3) an acrostic that means "a change of voices" or "repeat."

Music in the New Testament. The New Testament contains little information about music. But it does give some additional hymns to add to the Old Testament hymns—those of Mary (Luke 1:46–55) and Zacharias (Luke 1:68–79), the Magnificat and the Benedictus. Early Christians sang Hebrew songs accompanied by music (2 Chr. 29:27–28). The apostle Paul refers to "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" (Eph. 5:19; Col. 3:16). Matthew 26:30 records that Christ and His disciples sang a hymn after the Passover supper, probably the second half of the HALLEL, or Psalms 115–118.

The New Testament also contains accounts of the early Christians singing hymns for worship and comfort (Acts 16:25; Eph. 5:19; Col. 3:16). Some fragments of early Christian hymns also appear in the New Testament (Eph. 5:14; 1 Tim. 3:16). Pliny the Younger, at the beginning of the second century A.D., reported that Christians sang songs about Christ and their faith in Him.

Also see MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE—mechanical implements or devices used to produce harmonious sounds. Musical instruments used by the Hebrew people were of three types: (1) stringed instruments, which used vibrating strings to make sounds; (2) percussion instruments, which were struck to produce musical sounds; and (3) wind instruments, which made sounds either by passing air over a vibrating reed or by forcing air through the instrument.

Scholars have only a very general idea of the specific types of musical instruments intended by the Hebrew and Greek words in the original languages of the Bible. This is why there is such a great difference in the rendering of these words in various English translations. What one version calls a lyre may be rendered as harp, lute, or psaltery by other English translations.

Following is a description of all the musical instruments mentioned in the NKJV. Names of instruments from five other English translations (KJV, NASB, REB, NIV, and NRSV) are cross-referenced to these descriptions from the NKJV.

Bagpipe (see Dulcimer).

Bell. Bells were common in Palestine, but are mentioned only twice in the Bible. These two references do not show that bells were used as musical instruments. Tiny bells of pure gold were fastened to the hem of the priest’s robe (Ex. 39:25, 26). The prophet Zechariah (14:20) also indicated that the Hebrew people put such tiny bells on the bridles or breast straps of their horses. Also see Gong.

Bugle (see Trumpet).

Cornet (see Trumpet).

Cymbals. Used in priestly functions, cymbals were played only by men, and perhaps only by priests. These instruments made a loud, distinctive sound when banged together. They were used to accompany trumpets (Ezra 3:10), the lyre when it was used for worship (1 Chr. 25:1; Neh. 12:27), and "the musical instruments of God" (1 Chr. 16:42). David's chief musician, Asaph, played the cymbals (1 Chr. 16:5).

Dulcimer. This instrument is mentioned only in the Book of Daniel. It was one of the Babylonian instruments that signaled the time for Daniel's three friends—Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-Nego—to bow down before a golden image of King Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 3:5, 7, 10, 15, KJV). Other English versions translate the Hebrew word for dulcimer as bagpipes (NASB) or pipes (NIV, NRSV).

The exact nature of the dulcimer is unknown. Some scholars believe it may have been similar to a Greek instrument known as the symphonia, which consisted of two pipes thrust through a leather sack. The pipes gave out a plaintive sound. The Scottish bagpipes of later centuries may have developed from this instrument. However, other scholars believe the dulcimer was similar to the flute in its construction and the sound it produced.

Fife (see Flute).

Flute. A wind instrument that produced a high, shrill sound. Because of its unique sound, the flute was associated with fertility cults and was considered appropriate only in a secular setting to show both ecstatic joy and deep sorrow. The flute is mentioned in connection with the temple only in the Psalms (Ps. 150:4). However, the Hebrew word nehiloth in the title of Psalm 5 means "[with] flutes." Some flutes were made of silver, while others were made of reeds, wood, or bone. Other words for flute used in various translations of the Bible are organ (Gen. 4:21, KJV); fife (1 Sam. 10:5, REB); pipe (Job 21:12, NRSV); and reed-pipe (Jer. 48:36, REB).

Gong. Gong is the word used by some English translations for a type of bell sounded at weddings or other happy occasions (1 Cor. 13:1, NRSV, NASB). The phrase "noisy gong" is rendered as "sounding brass" by the KJV and NKJV. The gong may have been similar to a handbell. Also see Bell.

Harp. The musical instrument mentioned more often than any other in the Bible is the harp (2 Chr. 29:25; Ps. 147:7; Is. 23:16). Another word for this instrument used by various translations is lyre. Scholars believe these two instruments were similar in function and design, but the harp was probably a larger version.

The harp is the instrument that David used to soothe the "distressing spirit" that troubled King Saul (1 Sam. 16:16, 23). This smaller lyre, considered by some enthusiasts to be the most noble of all musical instruments, was used both for sacred (2 Chr. 29:25) and secular (Is. 23:16) purposes. Although David apparently plucked the strings with his fingers, the harp was usually played by stroking the strings with a pick, much as a guitar is played. The harp had from three to twelve strings. Considered an aristocratic instrument, the harp was often made of silver or ivory.

The harp and the lyre are often spoken of interchangeably in the Bible. Other words used for these two instruments by various translations of the Bible are psaltery, lute (1 Kin. 10:12), and viol (Is. 5:12). The lute was an even smaller version of the harp or lyre, consisting of only three strings. In the NKJV the phrase “stringed instruments” is often used to refer to all these instruments in a collective sense: harp, lute, lyre, psaltery, and viol.

Two specific types of harps or lyres are mentioned in some English translations of the Book of Daniel. Daniel’s three friends—Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed–Nego—were commanded to bow down and worship an image of the Babylonian king at the sound of various Babylonian musical instruments. These instruments included a sackbut (Dan. 3:5, KJV; trigon, NASB, NRSV; triangle, REB) and a zither (Dan. 3:5, NIV). Some scholars believe the sackbut was the seven-stringed lyre used in Babylon, while the zither may have been a ten-stringed lyre or harp that gave its own distinctive sound.

Sistrums. Sistrums were small musical instruments with a U-shaped frame and a handle at the bottom. Strung on bars between the two parts of the U were small pieces of metal or other objects which could create a rattling sound. The collection of the Jewish oral law, known as the MISHNA, recognized the sistrum, also called a rattler-sistrum, as the instrument used by women who mourned the death of a relative or friend. This instrument probably originated in Egypt. It was used to express great joy as well as deep sorrow (2 Sam. 6:5; cornets, KJV; castanets, NASB, REB, NRSV).

Tabret (see Timbrel).

Tambourine (see Timbrel).

Timbrel. A percussion instrument that was carried and beaten by hand. Considered inappropriate for the temple, it was probably played primarily by women (Ps. 68:25). The timbrel may have been excluded from the temple instruments because of its great popularity with the Canaanite fertility cults. Among the Hebrew people, it was associated with merrymaking and processions (Gen. 31:27). Remnants of timbrels with pieces of bronze inserted in the rim have been uncovered by archaeologists. Thus, the instrument could be shaken as well as beaten.

The Hebrew word for "timbrel" is rendered by other English translations as "tabret" and "tambourine."

Triangle (see Harp).

Trigon (see Harp).

Trumpet. The trumpet is mentioned several times in the Bible. This instrument was used by the priests during services of sacrifice, especially to signal the DAY OF ATONEMENT "Then you shall cause the trumpet of the Jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month" (Lev. 25:9). The trumpet was also used to rally troops on the battlefield (Josh. 6:4).

Made of metal or bones, the trumpet featured a sounding air column not quite two feet long. This short length gave this instrument a high, shrill sound. The tone of the trumpet apparently could be regulated (2 Chr. 5:12). Some trumpets were probably made from the horn of an animal; the word "horn" is used for this instrument in some English translations (1 Chr. 25:5, KJV). Other words used for trumpet include cornet (Ps. 98:6, KJV), and bugle (1 Cor. 14:8, NASB, NRSV).

One distinctive type of trumpet or horn used by the Hebrew people was the ram's horn, also known by its Hebrew name, the shophar (Hos. 5:8). The shophar was the greatest of the Jewish ritual instruments. Eventually the horn of a mountain goat was used for this instrument, rather than the horn of a ram. The shophar was basically a signaling instrument, used to assemble the army (Judg. 3:27; 1 Sam. 13:3), to sound an attack (Job 39:24–25), and to sound an alarm (Jer. 6:1; Amos 3:6).

The ram's horn signaled war and peace, the new moon, the beginning of the Sabbath, approaching danger, and the death of a dignitary. Some even believed the shophar had power to drive out evil spirits and to heal by magic. The sound of the shophar could be heard from a great distance (Ex. 19:16, 19). It can produce only the first two tones of the musical scale and those not very accurately. The ram’s horn is rarely mentioned with other musical instruments. Its main function apparently was to make noise.

MUTE SPIRIT (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

MUTH LABBEN—[mooth LAH ben] (see MUSIC).

MUZZLE—a leather or wire covering for the mouth of an animal that prevented it from eating or biting. The command in the Book of Deuteronomy, "You shall not muzzle an ox while it treads out the grain" (Deut. 25:4), implies that an animal helping with threshing must be allowed to eat some of the grain. The apostle Paul applied this verse symbolically to Christian workers (1 Cor. 9:9–10).

MYRA [MY ruh]—one of the chief cities of LYCIA, a province in southwestern Asia Minor (present-day Turkey). While a prisoner on his way to Rome, the apostle Paul was transferred at Myra to an Alexandrian ship sailing to Italy (Acts 27:5–6). Myra was situated on the Andracus River, about 4 kilometers (2.5 miles) from the Mediterranean Sea (see Map 8, C–2).

MYRIAD—a large number; innumerable, beyond counting. The elders of the church of Jerusalem commented on "how many myriads of Jews there are who have believed, and they are all zealous for the law" (Acts 21:20).

MYRRH (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MYRTLE (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

MYSIA [MISS ee uh]—a province in northwestern Asia Minor (present-day Turkey). Paul and Silas passed through Mysia on their way to TROAS, one of its main cities, during Paul's first missionary journey (Acts 16:7–8). Three other cities of Mysia are mentioned in the New Testament: ASSOS (Acts 20:13), ADRAMYTTIUM (Acts 27:2), and PERGAMOS (Rev. 1:11).

MYSTERY—the hidden, eternal plan of God that is being revealed to God's people in accordance with His plan.

In the Old Testament, "mystery" occurs only in the Aramaic sections of Daniel (Dan. 2:18, 27–30, 47; 4:9). Some of God's mysteries were revealed to Daniel and King Nebuchadnezzar.

In the New Testament, "mystery" refers to a secret that is revealed by God to His servants through His Spirit. As such, it is an "open secret." "Mystery" occurs three times in the Gospels. Jesus told His disciples, "To you it has been given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God" (Matt. 13:11; Mark 4:11; Luke 8:10). Jesus explained the mystery of God's kingdom to His disciples. But to others He declared, "All things come in parables" (Mark 4:11).

Most of the occurrences of the word mystery are in the Pauline Epistles. "Mystery" refers to the revelation of God's plan of salvation as that plan focuses in Christ. The gospel itself is a "mystery which was kept secret since the world began" (Rom. 16:25). This mystery was revealed by God through the prophetic Scriptures to Paul and the church (1 Cor. 2:7; Eph. 6:19; Col. 4:3).

"Mystery" also refers to the future resurrection of Christians (1 Cor. 15:51), the summing up of all things in Christ (Eph. 1:9), the inclusion of Gentiles in the church (Eph. 3:3–9), the future salvation of Israel (Rom. 11:25), the phenomenon of lawlessness (2 Thess. 2:7), and the godliness of Christ (1 Tim. 3:16).

MYSTERY RELIGIONS—secret religions that flourished in Syria, Persia, Anatolia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, and other nations several centuries before and after the time of Christ. The mystery religions were quite popular in the first century A.D. and thus provided strong religious competition for Christianity. They were called mysteries because their initiation and other rituals were kept secret. These religions included the cults of Eleusis, Dionysus, Isis and Osiris, Mithra, Cybele (the Magna Mater, or Great Mother), the Dead Syria, and many local deities, all of which promised purification and immortality.

By means of the secret rituals of these religions—which might involve ceremonial washings, blood-sprinkling, drunkenness, sacramental meals, passion plays, or even sexual relations with a priest or priestess—their followers became one with their god and believed that they participated in the life of that god.

Because of his contact with the Greek world, the apostle Paul was probably familiar with these mystery religions. But there is no evidence that his theological ideas were influenced by these pagan ideas and practices. Paul preached the gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ.

NAAM [NAY am] (pleasantness)—a descendant of Caleb, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:15).

NAAMAH [NAY a mah] (pleasant)—the name of two women and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A sister of Tubal-Cain (Gen. 4:22), one of only four women who lived before the Flood whose names have been preserved.
2. A city in the lowlands of Judah (Josh. 15:41), probably present-day Khirbet Fered, about 36 kilometers (22 miles) west of Jerusalem.
3. The mother of Rehoboam, king of Judah (2 Chr. 12:13).

NAAMAN [NAY a man] (pleasant)—the name of three or four men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Benjamin (Gen. 46:21).
2. A son of Bela and the founder of a family, the NAAMITES (Num. 26:40). He may be the same person as No. 1.
3. A commander of the Syrian army who was cured of leprosy by the Lord through the prophet Elisha. Naaman was a “great and honorable man in the eyes of his master [Ben-Hadad, king of Syria] . . . but he was a leper” (2 Kin. 5:1–27). Although leprosy was a despised disease in Syria, as in Israel, those who suffered from the disease were not outcasts.

   On one of Syria’s frequent raids of Israel, a young Israelite girl was captured and became a servant to Naaman’s wife. The girl told her mistress about the prophet Elisha, who could heal Naaman of his leprosy. Ben-Hadad sent a letter about Naaman to the king of Israel. Fearing a Syrian trick to start a war, the king of Israel had to be assured by Elisha that Naaman should indeed be sent to the prophet. To demonstrate to Naaman that it was God, not human beings, who healed, Elisha refused to appear to Naaman. Instead, he sent the commander a message, telling him to dip himself in the Jordan River seven times.

   Naaman considered such treatment an affront and angrily asked if the Syrian rivers, the Abana and the Pharpar, would not do just as well. His servants, however, persuaded him to follow Elisha's instructions. Naaman did so and was healed. In gratitude, Naaman became a worshiper of God and carried two mule-loads of Israelite earth back to Syria in order to worship the Lord "on Israelite soil," even though he lived in a heathen land.

Before he departed for Damascus, however, Naaman asked Elisha's understanding and pardon for bowing down in the temple of Rimmon when he went there with Ben-Hadad (2 Kin. 5:18). Elisha said to him, "Go in peace" (v. 19), thus allowing Naaman to serve his master, the king.

4. A son of Ehud, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:7).

NAAMATHITE [NAY am a thite]—a nativeor inhabitant of Naamah, perhaps Djebel-el-Na'ameh, in northwestern Arabia. Zophar, one of Job's three friends, was a Naamathite (Job 2:11).

NAAMITES [NAY a mites]—descendants of NAAMAN, of the tribe of Benjamin (Num. 26:40).

NAARAH [NAY a rah] (girl)—the name of a woman and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A wife of Ashhur, a man of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:5–6).
2. A city in the territory of Ephraim (Josh. 16:7; Naarath, KJV), also called Naaran (1 Chr. 7:28). It was near the borders of Benjamin and Manasseh, about 8 kilometers (5 miles) northeast of Jericho.

NAARAI [NAY a rye] (attendant of the Lord)—a son of Ezbai and one of David's mighty men (1 Chr. 11:37), also called Paarai the Arbite (2 Sam. 23:35).

NAARAN [NAY a ran]—a form of NAARAH No. 2.

NAARATH [NAY a rath]—a form of NAARAH No. 2.

NAASSON [nay AS on]—a form of NAHSHON.

NABAJOTH [nab ah JOHTH]—the firstborn son of Ishmael (1 Chr. 1:29), also called NEBAJOTH.

NABAL [NAY bal]—a wealthy sheepmaster of MAON and a member of the house of Caleb (1 Sam. 25:2–39). Nabal pastured his sheep near the Judahite town of CARMEL on the edge of the wilderness. Nabal was "harsh and evil in his doings" and was "such a scoundrel" that no one could reason with him (1 Sam. 25:3, 17).

While David was hiding from Saul, he sent ten men to Nabal to ask for food for himself and his followers. Nabal refused. David, who had protected people in the area from bands of marauding Bedouin, was so angered by Nabal's refusal that he determined to kill Nabal and every male in his household (1 Sam. 25:4–22).

Nabal's wife Abigail was "a woman of good understanding and beautiful appearance" (v. 3). She realized the danger threatening her family because of her husband's stupidity. "Then Abigail made haste and took two hundred loaves of bread, two skins of wine, five sheep already dressed, five seahs of roasted grain, one hundred clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and loaded them on donkeys" (1

Sam. 25:18). She took these gifts of food to David, fell to the ground, and apologized for her husband's behavior. Her quick action soothed David's anger.

When Abigail returned home, she found a great feast in progress. Oblivious to his narrow brush with death, "Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunk" (1 Sam. 25:36). Abigail waited until the next morning to tell him of the destruction and death that he almost brought upon his household. Immediately, Nabal's "heart died within him, and he became like a stone" (1 Sam. 25:37). He died about ten days later.

When David heard that Nabal was dead, he proposed to Abigail; and she later became one of his wives. She is referred to as "Abigail the Carmelitess, Nabal's widow" (1 Sam. 27:3).

What a contrast they are—Abigail with her beauty and wisdom and Nabal with his beastly behavior and foolishness. Not only did her wisdom save her life and the lives of her family; it caught the heart of David so that he provided her with his love and protection.

NABATEA [nab uh TEE ah]—an Arabic territory situated between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba. Nebajoth, son of Ishmael and brother-in-law of Edom (Gen. 25:13; 28:9), may have been the ancestor of the Nabateans. Some time during the sixth century B.C. these peoples invaded the territory of the Edomites and Moabites. Their name first occurred in 646 B.C. when a people called the Nabaiate revolted against Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria. It took the Assyrians seven years to subdue these people.

In 312 B.C. Antigonus, one of the successors of Alexander the Great, sent an expedition against the Nabatean capital of PETRA. This rose-red city was situated more than 80 kilometers (50 miles) south of the Dead Sea in the wilderness and surrounded by mountains. Petra had only one entrance, a narrow passageway sometimes as little as 8 feet wide, between cliffs rising 60 to 90 meters (200 to 300 feet) above the road. The Greek army was unable to take the city.

At a later time the Nabateans took advantage of the turmoil of the Seleucid kingdom and extended their territory all the way to Damascus. During the first century B.C. they engaged in a war with the Maccabean King Alexander Jannaeus. An officer of the Nabatean King Aretas IV attempted to detain the apostle Paul at Damascus (2 Cor. 11:32). Eventually the Romans, under Trajan, annexed Nabatea, and it became the province of Arabia in A.D. 106.

The Nabateans controlled the desert highways south of the Dead Sea, demanding outrageous fees from caravans before they allowed them to pass. They developed an advanced civilization in the middle of the desert wilderness. Out of the red sandstone cliffs they carved beautiful obelisks, facades, and HIGH PLACES, or altars, at which they worshiped pagan gods. They also developed a beautiful, thin pottery that was decorated with floral designs. With the rise of Palmyra, the trade that formerly passed through Petra was diverted; and the Nabateans were absorbed into the surrounding Arab population.

NABONIDUS [nab oh NIE duss] (the god Nabu is exalted)—the last king of the Neo-Babylonian, or Chaldean, Empire (556–539 B.C.). He is not mentioned in the Bible.

Nabonidus' wife Nitocris was the daughter of Nebuchadnezzar II. Their son, Belshazzar, was the king who saw the handwriting on the wall (Dan. 5:1–31). Belshazzar was co-regent with Nabonidus from the third year of Nabonidus' reign until the empire fell to the Persians in 539 B.C. During a major portion of that time, Nabonidus stayed away from the capital city of Babylon; thus little is known of his activities.

Among the DEAD SEA SCROLLS discovered at Qumran was a fragmentary document containing the "Prayer of Nabonidus." This document tells how Nabonidus was struck by a "dread disease of the most high God" and for seven years was "set apart from men."

Apparently he was struck with a severe skin disease. Some scholars suggest that a nervous disorder, or psychological disturbance, may also have been involved. Nabonidus' mysterious illness has been compared with the madness of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4:23–33).

NABOPOLASSAR [nay boh puh LASS ur] (may the god Nabu protect the son)—a king of Babylon (626–605 B.C.) who founded the Chaldean dynasty. He was the father of NEBUCHADNEZZAR II, the Babylonian king who defeated Jerusalem and carried the Jewish people into captivity (2 Kin. 25:1–7). Nabopolassar brought Babylon to greatness by defeating the Assyrians. Nebuchadnezzar continued his father's policies by capturing other surrounding nations.

NABOTH [NAY bahth]—an Israelite of Jezreel who owned a vineyard next to the summer palace of Ahab, king of Samaria (1 Kin. 21:1). Ahab coveted this property. He wanted to turn it into a vegetable garden to furnish delicacies for his table. He offered Naboth its worth in money or a better vineyard. But Naboth refused to part with his property, explaining that it was a family inheritance to be passed on to his descendants.

Jezebel obtained the property for Ahab by bribing two men to bear false witness against Naboth and testify that he blasphemed God and the king. Because of their lies, Naboth was found guilty; and both he and his sons (2 Kin. 9:26) were stoned to death. Elijah the prophet pronounced doom upon Ahab and his house for this disgusting act of false witness (1 Kin. 21:1–29; 2 Kin. 9:21–26).

NACHON [NAY kon] (firm, prepared)—the name of the threshing floor where Uzzah (or Uzza) was struck dead for touching the ARK OF THE COVENANT (2 Sam. 6:6; Nacon, NIV, NRSV). Whether the name is that of a person or a place is unclear. In a parallel account, the name is given as Chidon (1 Chr. 13:9).

NACHOR [NAY kor]—a form of NAHOR.

NACON [NAY kon]—a form of NACHON.

NADAB [NAY dab] (liberal or willing)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Aaron and Elisheba (Ex. 6:23). Nadab is always mentioned in association with ABIHU, Aaron's second son. Nadab was privileged to accompany Moses, Aaron, Abihu, and 70 elders of Israel as they ascended Mount Sinai to be near the Lord (Ex. 24:1–10). Along with his father and brothers—Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar—he was consecrated a priest to minister at the tabernacle (Ex. 28:1).

   Later, Nadab and Abihu were guilty of offering "profane fire before the Lord" in the Wilderness of Sinai; and both died when "fire went out from the Lord and devoured them" (Lev. 10:1–2).
2. A king of Israel (about 910–909 B.C.). Nadab was the son and successor of Jeroboam I (1 Kin. 14:20; 15:25). About the only noteworthy event that happened during Nadab's reign was the siege of GIBBETHON by the Israelites. During the siege, Nadab was assassinated by his successor, Baasha (1 Kin. 15:27–28).
3. A son of Shammai, of the family of Jerahmeel.
4. A Benjamite, son of Jeiel and Maacah (1 Chr. 8:30).

NAGGAI [NAG eye]—an ancestor of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:25; Nagge, KJV).

NAGGE [NAG eh]—a form of NAGGAI.

NAG HAMMADI [nag ham MAH dih]—a town in Upper Egypt where an astonishing archaeological discovery of Coptic translations of ancient GNOSTIC writings was found in 1945. The find included such works as the Gospel of Thomas, the Gospel of the Egyptians, the Apocryphon ["secret book"] of John, the Secret Book of James, the Apocalypse of Paul, and the Apocalypse of Peter. Also see GNOSTICISM.

NAHALAL [nuh HAL al]—a city allotted to the tribe of Zebulun (Josh. 19:15) and given to the Levites (Josh. 21:35). The city is also called Nahallal and Nahalol. Its site is uncertain.

NAHALIEL [nuh HAY li el] (brook of God)—a stopping place of the Israelites during their wilderness wandering (Num. 21:19). It was near Mount Pisgah, north of the River Arnon.

NAHALLAL [nuh HAL al]—a form of NAHALAL.

NAHALOL [NAY huh lal]—a form of NAHALAL.

NAHAM [NAY ham] (consolation)—a chieftain of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:19).

NAHAMANI [nay huh MAY nigh] (comforter)—a leader of the tribe of Judah who returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Neh. 7:7).

NAHARAI [NAY ha righ]—the armorbearer of Joab, commander-in-chief of David’s army (2 Sam. 23:37; Nahari, KJV).

NAHARI [NAY ha rye]—a form of NAHARAI.

NAHASH [NAY hash] (serpent)—the name of two or three men in the Old Testament:

1. A king of the Ammonites who besieged Jabesh Gilead and was defeated by Saul (1 Sam. 12:12). When Nahash’s men surrounded the city, the inhabitants of Jabesh Gilead sought peace (1 Sam. 11:1). Nahash refused to accept the tribute tax and threatened to put out all their right eyes. He allowed the people of Jabesh Gilead one week to appeal for help from the rest of Israel; after that they were to surrender to him. When Saul, the newly proclaimed king of Israel, heard about this, he was enraged. He quickly assembled an army and defeated the Ammonites (1 Sam. 11:4–11). The Nahash mentioned in 2 Samuel 10:2 and 1 Chronicles 19:1–2 was either this same Nahash or one of his descendants, probably a son.
2. Probably the father of Abigail and Zeruiah, David’s half-sisters (2 Sam. 17:25). Some scholars feel that Nahash was a woman, one of Jesse’s wives. But it is more likely that Nahash was a man whose widow married Jesse and bore him David.
3. A man of Rabbah of the Ammonites (2 Sam. 17:27), perhaps the same person as No. 1.

NAHATH [NAY hath] (quietness)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. An Edomite clan chief (Gen. 36:17).
2. A descendant of Elkanah, of the tribe of Levi (1 Chr. 6:26). Nahath probably is the same person as Toah (1 Chr. 6:34) and Tohu (1 Sam.

1:1).

3. An overseer of temple tithes and offerings during the reign of Hezekiah of Judah (2 Chr. 31:13).

NAHBI [NAH buy]—one of the twelve spies sent by Moses to investigate the land of Canaan (Num. 13:14).

NAHOR [NAY hor]—the name of two men and a city in the Old Testament:

1. Father of Terah, grandfather of Abraham (Gen. 11:22–25), and an ancestor of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:34; Nachor, KJV).
2. A son of Terah and a brother of Abraham and Haran (Gen. 11:26–29). Nahor had twelve children, eight by his wife Milcah and four by his concubine Reumah. One of his children was Bethuel, who became the father of Rebekah and LABAN (Gen. 28:5).
3. A city mentioned in Genesis 24:10. Some confusion exists about the phrase, “city of Nahor.” This may refer either to the city called Nahor or to the city where Nahor lived. When Abraham and Lot migrated to Canaan, Nahor remained in Haran.

NAHSHON [NAH shun]—a son of Amminadab and a leader of the tribe of Judah during the wilderness wanderings (Num. 2:3). Nahshon was an ancestor of Boaz and of King David (Ruth 4:20–22) and, therefore, of Jesus Christ (Matt. 1:4; Luke 3:32–33; Naasson, KJV).

NAHUM [NAY hum] (compassionate)—the name of two men in the Bible:

1. An Old Testament prophet and author of the Book of Nahum whose prophecy pronounced God’s judgment against the mighty nation of Assyria.

   Very little is known about Nahum. His hometown, Elkosh in the nation of Israel (Nah. 1:1), has not been located. But he must have lived some time shortly before 612 B.C., the year when Assyria’s capital city, Nineveh, was destroyed by the Babylonians. Nahum announced that the judgment of God would soon be visited upon this pagan city.

The Book of Nahum is similar to the Book of Obadiah, since both these prophecies were addressed against neighboring nations. Obadiah spoke the word of the Lord against Edom, while Nahum prophesied against Assyria. Both messages contained a word of hope for God's Covenant People, since they announced that Israel's enemies would soon be overthrown.

While little is known about Nahum the man, his prophetic writing is one of the most colorful in the Old Testament. The Book of Nahum is marked by strong imagery, a sense of suspense, and vivid language, with biting puns and deadly satire. Nahum was a man who understood God's goodness, but he could also describe the terror of the Lord against His enemies. Also see NAHUM, BOOK OF.

2. An ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:25).

NAHUM, BOOK OF—a short prophetic book of the Old Testament that foretells the destruction of the nation of Assyria and its capital city, Nineveh.

Structure of the Book. The book opens with a brief identification of the prophet Nahum. Then it launches into a psalm of praise that celebrates the power and goodness of God. This comforting picture is contrasted with the evil deeds of the Assyrians. With graphic language, Nahum presents a prophetic picture of the coming judgment of God. He informs the nation of Assyria that its days as a world power are drawing to a close. In an oracle of woe, the prophet describes Nineveh as a "bloody city, full of lies and robbery" (3:1). But soon the city of Nineveh will be laid waste, and Assyria will crumble before the judgment of God.

Authorship and Date. This book was written by a prophet known as "Nahum the Elkoshite" (1:1). This brief identification tells us all we know about this spokesman for the Lord. Even the location of his home, Elkosh, is uncertain, although some scholars believe he may have lived in northern Judah. The book can be dated with reasonable accuracy. Nineveh fell, as Nahum predicted, about 612 B.C. Therefore, the book was probably written shortly before this time.

Historical Setting. For more than 100 years before Nahum's day, Assyria had been one of the dominant powers of the ancient world. The northern kingdom of Israel fell to Assyrian forces in 722 B.C. Some prophets taught that this pagan nation was used as an instrument of God’s judgment against His wayward people. But now it was Assyria’s turn to feel the force of God’s wrath. The armies of Nabopolassar of Babylon stormed Nineveh in 612 B.C. The entire Assyrian Empire crumbled three years later under the relentless assault of this aggressive Babylonian ruler. Thus, as Nahum prophesied, Assyria’s day of dominance ended with their humiliation by a foreign power.

Theological Contribution. This book teaches the sure judgment of God against those who oppose His will and abuse His people. Acts of inhumanity are acts against God, and He will serve as the ultimate and final judge. God sometimes uses a pagan nation as an instrument of His judgment, just as He used the Assyrians against the nation of Israel. But this does not excuse the pagan nation from God’s laws and requirements. It will be judged by the same standards of righteousness and holiness that God applies to all the other people of the world.

Special Considerations. By a strange irony, the city in Galilee most closely associated with the ministry of Jesus was Capernaum. The name Capernaum in the Hebrew language means “the village of Nahum.”

Some people wonder about the gloomy, pessimistic tone of the Book of Nahum. How can this picture of God’s wrath and judgment be reconciled with the God of grace and love whom we meet in the New Testament? As the sovereign, all-powerful God, He has the right to work His purpose in the world. Judgment against sin is a part of the work He must do in order to remain a just and holy God.

Nahum’s announcement of God’s approaching judgment also carries a call for holy living and faithful proclamation by God’s Covenant People. Our work is to carry the message of His salvation to those who are surely doomed unless they turn to God in repentance and faith.

NAIL (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

NAIN [nane] (delightful)—a town in southwestern Galilee (see Map 6, B–2) where Jesus raised a widow’s son from the dead (Luke 7:11–17). Nain was about 8 kilometers (5 miles) southeast of Nazareth on the northern edge of the Plain of Esdraelon. The present-day Arab village of Nein covers ruins of a much larger town.

NAIOTH [NAY oth] (dwelling places)—a place in RAMAH where Samuel lived and where David fled to escape the wrath of King Saul (1 Sam. 19:18). Apparently, Naioth was not a separate village but a section of Ramah. The Bible speaks four times of "Naioth [dwellings] in Ramah" (1 Sam. 19:19, 22–23; 20:1).

NAKED—without clothing. In the Garden of Eden, Adam and Eve were unashamed of their nakedness (Gen. 2:25). After eating from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, however, they began to feel shame (Gen. 3:7–10). The shame associated with nakedness is dramatically presented in the account of Noah's drunkenness and exposure (Gen. 9:21–27).

The word "naked" is also used in the Bible to express the ideas of poverty (Matt. 25:36–44), desolation (Gen. 42:9), openness (Heb. 4:13), or moral bankruptcy (Rev. 3:17).

NAME—a label or designation that sets one person apart from another. But in the Bible a name is much more than an identifier as it tends to be in our culture. Personal names (and even place names) were formed from words that had their own meanings. Thus, the people of the Bible were very conscious of the meaning of names. They believed there was a vital connection between the name and the person it identified. A name somehow represented the nature of the person.

This means that the naming of a baby was very important in the Bible. In choosing a name, the parents could reflect the circumstances of the child's birth, their own feelings, their gratitude to God, their hopes and prayers for the child, and their commitment of the child to God. The name Isaac reflected the "laughter" of his mother at his birth (Gen. 21:6). Esau was named "hairy" because of his appearance. Jacob was named "supplanter" because he grasped his brother Esau's heel (Gen. 25:25–26). Moses received his name because he was drawn out of the water: "So she called his name Moses, saying, 'Because I drew him out of the water' " (Ex. 2:10).

A popular custom of Bible times was to compose names by using the shortened forms of the divine name El or Ya (Je) as the beginning or ending syllable. Examples of this practice are Elisha, which means "God is salvation"; Daniel, "God is my judge"; Jehoiakim, "the Lord has established"; and Isaiah, "the Lord is salvation."

Sometimes very specialized names, directly related to circumstances of the parents, were given to children. The prophet Isaiah was directed to name one of his children MaherShalal-Hash-Baz, meaning "speed the spoil, hasten the prey." This name was an allusion to the certain Assyrian invasion of the nation of Judah (Is. 8:3–4). Hosea was instructed to name a daughter Lo-Ruhamah, "no mercy," and a son Lo-Ammi, "not my people." Both these names referred to God's displeasure with His people (Hos. 1:6–9).

The change of a name can also be of great importance in the Bible. Abram's name was changed to Abraham in connection with his new calling to be "a father of many nations" (Gen. 17:5). God gave Jacob the new name Israel ("God strives") because he "struggled with God and with men, and prevailed" (Gen. 32:28; 35:10).

In the giving or taking of new names, often a crucial turning point in the person's life has been reached. Simon was given the name Peter because, as the first confessing apostle, he was the "rock" upon which the new community of the church would be built (Matt. 16:18). Saul was renamed Paul, a Greek name that was appropriate for one who was destined to become the great apostle to the Gentiles.

The connection between a name and the reality it signified is nowhere more important than in the names referring to God. The personal name of God revealed to Moses in the burning bush—"I AM WHO I AM"—conveyed something of His character (Ex. 3:14). According to Exodus 34:5–6, when the Lord "proclaimed the name of the Lord," He added words that described His character. The name of the Lord was virtually synonymous with His presence: "For your wondrous works declare that your name is near" (Ps. 75:1). To know the name of God is thus to know God Himself (Ps. 91:14). For this reason, to "take the name of the Lord your God in vain" (Ex. 20:7) is to act in any way that is inconsistent with the profession that He is the Lord God.

The New Testament writers also emphasized the importance of names and the close relationship between names and what they mean. A striking illustration of this is Acts 4:12: "For there is no other name under heaven . . . by which we must be saved." In this instance the name is again practically interchangeable with the reality it represents.

Jesus taught His disciples to pray, "Hallowed be Your name" (Matt. 6:9). Christians were described by the apostle Paul as those who "name the name of the Lord" (2 Tim. 2:19). A true understanding of the exalted Jesus is often connected with a statement about His name. Thus, Jesus "has by inheritance obtained a more excellent name" than the angels (Heb. 1:4). According to Paul, "God also has highly exalted Him and given Him the name which is above every name" (Phil. 2:9).

NAOMI [nay OH mee] (my joy)—the mother-in-law of Ruth. After her husband and two sons died, Naomi returned to her home in Bethlehem, accompanied by Ruth. Naomi advised Ruth to work for a near BOAZ; KINSMAN (Ruth 2:1), and to seek his favor. When Boaz and Ruth eventually married, they had a son, whom they named Obed. This child became the father of Jesse, the grandfather of David, and an ancestor of Jesus Christ (Ruth 4:21–22; Matt. 1:5).

NAPHATH-DOR [NAY fath door]—a form of DOR.

NAPHISH [NAY fish]—a son of Ishmael (1 Chr. 1:31) and the founder of a clan against which the Israelite tribes east of the Jordan River were victorious (1 Chr. 5:19; Nephish, KJV).

NAPHOTH DOR—a form of DOR.

NAPHTALI [NAF tuh lie] (my wrestling)—the sixth son of Jacob (Gen. 35:25). Because Jacob's wife Rachel was barren and her sister Leah had borne four sons to Jacob, Rachel was distraught. She gave her maidservant Bilhah to Jacob. Any offspring of this union were regarded as Rachel's. When Bilhah gave birth to Dan and Naphtali, Rachel was joyous. "With great wrestlings I have wrestled with my sister," she said, "and indeed I have prevailed" (Gen. 30:8). So she called his name Naphtali, which means "my wrestling."

NAPHTALI, MOUNT [NAF tuh lie]—KJV words for the mountains of Naphtali (Josh. 20:7).

NAPHTALI, TRIBE OF [NAF tuh lie]—the tribe that sprang from NAPHTALI and the territory it inhabited (Num. 1:15, 42–43). The tribe's four great families were descendants of Naphtali's four sons: Jahzeel, Guni, Jezer, and Shillem or Shallum (Num. 26:48–49). The first wilderness census numbered the tribe of Naphtali at 53,000 fighting men (Num. 2:29–30); the second census put it at 45,400 (Num. 26:50).

Along with Asher, Naphtali was the northernmost tribe of Israel, occupying a long, narrow piece of land—about 80 kilometers (50 miles) north to south and 16 to 24 kilometers (10 to 15 miles) from east to west. Naphtali was mountainous (Josh. 20:7) and very fertile. Fortified cities within the tribe's boundaries included Ramah, Hazor, Kedesh, Iron, and Beth Anath (Josh. 19:36–38). The three cities given to the Levites in Naphtali were Kedesh (a city of refuge), Hammoth Dor, and Kartan (Josh. 21:32).

The tribe of Naphtali did not drive out all the Canaanites, but it did receive tribute from them. Members of the tribe of Naphtali fought bravely under Deborah and Barak (Judg. 4:6, 10; 5:18) and responded to Gideon's call (Judg. 6:35; 7:23). When Saul's son Ishbosheth challenged David for the throne, 37,000 fighting men of Naphtali, led by 1,000 captains, joined David (1 Chr. 12:34).

A part of the Northern Kingdom after the Israelites divided into two kingdoms, Naphtali was ravaged by the Syrian king Ben-Hadad (1 Kin. 15:20). The Assyrian king Tiglath-Pileser III carried many from Naphtali into captivity (2 Kin. 15:29). Isaiah prophesied that one day the land of Naphtali, "in Galilee of the Gentiles," would see a great light (Is. 9:1–7).

Indeed, Jesus made the cities of Chorazin, Capernaum, and Tiberias—all situated within the former territory of Naphtali—a focal point of His ministry. "And leaving Nazareth, He came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is by the sea, in the regions of Zebulun and Naphtali" (Matt. 4:12–16).

NAPHTUHIM [naf TOO heem]—a son of Mizraim, who was one of the four sons of Ham (Gen. 10:13). Some scholars, however, believe that the name Naphtuhim describes a tribal family that settled in the Egyptian Delta or west of Egypt.

NAPKIN—KJV word for HANDKERCHIEF.

NARCISSUS [narr SIS us]—a man to whose household the apostle Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:11). Paul does not indicate if Narcissus was a Christian. Some scholars suggest he was a prominent freedman who served as secretary to the Emperor Claudius.

NARD (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

NARRATIVE—an orderly account that relates the details of a story (Luke 1:1; declaration, KJV; account, NASB, REB, NIV). This is the word Luke used for the accounts of the life of Jesus that had been written.

NATHAN [NAY thun] (he gave)—the name of several men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of David and Bathsheba and an older brother of Solomon. Nathan was David's third son born in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:14). Six sons had been born to David earlier, while he was at Hebron. Through Nathan the line of descent passed from David to Jesus Christ (Luke 3:31).
2. A prophet during the reign of David and Solomon. Nathan told David that he would not be the one to build the temple (1 Chr. 17:1–15). Using the parable of the "one little ewe lamb," Nathan confronted David ("You are the man!") with his double sin, the murder of Uriah the Hittite and his adultery with Bathsheba, Uriah's wife (2 Sam. 12:1–15). Nathan, as the Lord's official prophet, named Solomon Jedidiah, which means "Beloved of the Lord" (2 Sam. 12:25). Nathan was also involved in David's arrangement of the musical services of the sanctuary (2 Chr. 29:25).

   When David was near death, Nathan advised Bathsheba to tell David of the plans of David's son Adonijah to take the throne. Bathsheba related the news to David, who ordered that Solomon be proclaimed king (1 Kin. 1:8–45). Nathan apparently wrote a history of David's reign (1 Chr. 29:29) and a history of Solomon's reign (2 Chr. 9:29).
3. A man from ZOBAH, an Aramean, or Syrian, kingdom between Damascus and the Euphrates River (2 Sam. 23:36).

4. Father of two of Solomon’s officials (1 Kin. 4:5), perhaps the same person as No. 1 or No. 2.
5. A descendant of Jerahmeel, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:36).
6. A brother of Joel (1 Chr. 11:38) and probably the same man as No. 3.
7. A leader sent by Ezra to find Levites for the temple (Ezra 8:15–16).
8. A son of Bani (Ezra 10:34) who divorced his pagan wife after returning from the captivity in Babylon (Ezra 10:39), probably the same person as No. 7.

NATHAN-MELECH [NAY thun MEH leck] (the king has given)—a Judahite officer before whose chamber King Josiah removed the horses that previous “kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun” (2 Kin. 23:11).

NATHANAEL [nuh THAN ih el] (God has given)—a native of Cana in Galilee (John 21:2) who became a disciple of Jesus (John 1:45–49). Nathanael was introduced to Jesus by his friend Philip, who claimed Jesus was the MESSIAH. This claim troubled Nathanael. He knew that Nazareth, the town where Jesus grew up, was not mentioned in the Old Testament prophecies. He considered Nazareth an insignificant town, hardly the place where one would look to find the Redeemer of Israel. “Can anything good come out of Nazareth?” he asked. Philip did not argue with him, but simply said, “Come and see.” After Nathanael met Jesus, he acknowledged Him to be the Messiah, calling Him “the Son of God” and “the King of Israel” (John 1:46, 49).

Nathanael was one of those privileged to speak face to face with Jesus after His resurrection (John 21:1–14). Some scholars see Nathanael as a type, or symbol, of a true Israelite—“an Israelite indeed” (John 1:47)—who accepts Jesus as Lord and Savior by faith.

Many scholars believe Nathanael is the same person as BARTHOLOMEW (Matt. 10:3), one of the twelve apostles of Christ.

NATIONS—countries other than the nation of Israel. In the Bible the word “nations” means the Gentiles, in contrast to the Jews. God promised that He would make Abraham and his descendants a great nation. Thus, God’s elect people were kept clearly distinct and separate from all other nations. The nations were regarded by the Hebrew people as godless and corrupt. Yet God intended ultimately to bless the nations through His people Israel: “And in you all the families of the earth shall be blessed” (Gen. 12:3). Israel was thus meant to be “a light to the Gentiles” (Is. 42:6; 49:6).

The prophecy that “the Gentiles shall come to your light” (Is. 60:3) was fulfilled in the Gentile response to Christ in the New Testament. The Great Commission refers to “all the nations” (Matt. 28:19); Cornelius, the first Gentile convert, was brought to faith through the preaching of Peter (Acts 10). The apostle Paul repeatedly quoted the Old Testament to justify the preaching of the gospel to the nations (Rom. 15:9–12; Gal. 3:8).

NATIVES—NKJV word for the people who lived on the island of Malta. It means foreigners who spoke an unknown foreign tongue, instead of the Greek or Latin language.

NATIVITY (see JESUS CHRIST).

NATURE—native, inborn, or inherent character; innate disposition.

In the NKJV the word “nature” is found only in the New Testament. In almost every occurrence it is a translation of a Greek word meaning “inherent nature,” which describes the process of growth or normal characteristics. Thus, normal sexuality between men and women is the “natural use” (Rom. 1:26–27); perverse sexuality is “against nature” (Rom. 1:26).

Gentiles, who do not have the law of Moses, by nature may do the things contained in the law (Rom. 2:14). Gentiles were cut out of the olive tree, which is wild by nature, and were grafted, contrary to nature, into a good olive tree [the people of God] (Rom. 11:24).

NAVE—KJV word for RIM.

NAVEL—the scar or depression in the middle of the stomach where an unborn baby was attached to the umbilical cord during the mother’s pregnancy (Song 7:2; Ezek. 16:4). The prophet Ezekiel compared the city of Jerusalem to a newborn baby unloved and abandoned: “On the day you were born your navel cord was not cut . . . [and] you were thrown out into the open field” (Ezek. 16:4–5). Unless the Lord had shown pity on the city, it would have perished.

NAVY—KJV word for “fleet of ships” (1 Kin. 9:26–27). Solomon built a merchant fleet to sail from Ezion Geber, a port on the Red Sea. The Hebrews disliked the sea; so some of the crew members of Solomon’s fleet were Phoenician sailors (1 Kin. 9:27). These ships sailed at times with King Hiram’s Phoenician fleet (1 Kin. 10:22).

NAZARENE [nazz uh REEN]—an inhabitant or native of NAZARETH. The word “Nazarene” is used many times to identify Christ. Both demons (Mark 1:23, 24) and Jesus Himself spoke of Jesus as a Nazarene. When used by his friends, the word spoke of favor; when used by his enemies, it spoke of contempt. Matthew’s Gospel stated that Jesus was raised as a boy in Nazareth, “that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, ‘He shall be called a Nazarene’ ” (Matt. 2:23).

This verse is one of the messianic prophecies in the Book of Isaiah, predicting that a descendant of King David would arise as the Messiah who would deliver His people (Is. 11:1). Christ Jesus is frequently referred to in prophecy as the Branch (Jer. 23:5; 33:15; Zech. 3:8).

A Nazarene was from an obscure, insignificant place. Nathanael asked, “Can anything good come out of Nazareth?” (John 1:46). Thus the word Nazarene was a fitting title for the One who grew up “as a root out of dry ground, despised and rejected by men” (Is. 53:2–3).

NAZARETH [NAZ ah reth] (watchtower)—a town of lower Galilee (see Map 6, B–2) where Jesus spent His boyhood years (Matt. 2:23). For centuries Nazareth has been a beautifully secluded town nestled in the southernmost hills of the Lebanon Mountain range. Situated in the territory belonging to Zebulun, the city must have been of late origin or of minor importance. It is never mentioned in the Old Testament.

Nazareth lay close to the important trade routes of Palestine. It overlooked the Plain of Esdraelon through which caravans passed as they traveled from Gilead to the south and west. North of the city was the main road from Ptolemais to the Decapolis, a road over which the Roman legions frequently traveled. This fact may account for the possible source of the name Nazareth in the Aramaic word meaning “watchtower.”

However, Nazareth itself was situated in something of a basin, a high valley about 366 meters (1,200 feet) above sea level overlooking the Esdraelon valley. To the north and east were steep hills, while on the west the hills rose to an impressive 488 meters (1,600 feet). Nazareth, therefore, was somewhat secluded and isolated from nearby traffic.

This apparent isolation of Nazareth as a frontier town on the southern border of Zebulun contributed to the reputation that Nazareth was not an important part of the national and religious life of Israel. This, coupled with a rather bad reputation in morals and religion and a certain crudeness in the Galilean dialect, prompted Nathanael, when he first learned of Jesus of Nazareth, to ask, “Can anything good come out of Nazareth?” (John 1:46).

Although it was not an important town before the New Testament era, Nazareth became immortal as the home town of Jesus the Messiah. It was here that the angel appeared to Mary and informed her of the forthcoming birth of Christ (Luke 1:26–38). Jesus was born in Bethlehem (Luke 2). But after their sojourn in Egypt (Matt. 2:19–22) to escape the ruthless murders of Herod the Great (Matt. 2:13–18), Joseph and Mary brought the baby Jesus to Nazareth where they had lived (Matt. 2:23). Here Jesus was brought up as a boy (Luke 4:16) and spent the greater part of His life (Mark 1:9; Luke 3:23). Apparently Jesus was well received as a young man in Nazareth (Luke 2:42; 4:16). But this changed after He began His ministry. His own townspeople twice rejected Him (Mark 6:1–6; Luke 4:28–30).

Because of His close association with this city, Christ became known as "Jesus of Nazareth" (Luke 18:37; 24:19; John 1:45). There is prophetic significance as well to His being known as a "Nazarene." Matthew records that Joseph and Mary returned to their city during the reign of Herod Archelaus (ethnarch of Judea, Idumea, and Samaria, 4 B.C.—A.D. 6) "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, 'He shall be called a Nazarene' " (Matt. 2:23).

NAZIRITE [NAZZ uh right] (separated, consecrated)—a person who took a vow to separate from certain worldly things and to consecrate himself to God (Num. 6:1–8). Among the Hebrew people anyone could take this vow; there were no tribal restrictions as in the case of the priest. Rich or poor, man or woman, master or slave—all were free to become Nazirites.

Nazirites did not withdraw from society and live as hermits; however, they did agree to follow certain regulations for a specified period of time. While no number of days for the vow is given in the Old Testament, Jewish tradition prescribed 30 days or a double period of 60 or even triple time of 90 to 100 days.

Samson, Samuel, and John the Baptist were the only "Nazirites for life" recorded in the Bible. Before they were born, their vows were taken for them by their parents.

Once a person decided to make himself "holy to the Lord" (Num. 6:8) for some special service, he then agreed to abstain from wine. This prohibition was so strict that it included grapes, grape juice, and raisins. Perhaps this was to guard the Nazirite from being controlled by any spirit other than God's (Prov. 20:1; Eph. 5:17–18).

While under the Nazirite vow, a person also refused to cut his hair, including shaving (Num. 6:5). The purpose of this long hair was to serve as a visible sign of the Nazirite's consecration to the Lord (Num. 6:7).

A Nazirite also refused to touch or go near a dead body because this would make him ceremonially unclean. The Nazirite could not even help to bury his own relatives.

If a person accidentally broke his Nazirite vow, he had to undergo a ceremony of restoration for cleansing (Num. 6:9–12). He shaved his head, brought two turtledoves or two pigeons to the priest for offerings, and the priest made atonement for him. In addition, a Nazirite had to present a lamb for a trespass offering. It was as if he were starting all over again and the days already served under the vow did not count.

When the specified period of time was completed, the Nazirite could appear before the priest for the ceremony of release (Num. 6:13–21). After offering a male lamb for a burnt offering, he would then offer a ewe lamb for a sin offering. This was followed by a ram to be used as the peace offering. Next came the usual items for peace offerings (Num. 6:15). The prescribed sacrifices were completed with a meal offering and a drink offering. When the person cut off his hair and burned it on the altar, he was fully released from the vow.

The strong man of the Bible, Samson, was a Nazirite (Judg. 13:7; 16:17). His parents were told by an angel before his birth that he would “be a Nazirite to God from the womb to the day of his death” (Judg. 13:7).

While Samuel is not specifically called a Nazirite, 1 Samuel 1:11, 28 hints that he probably was. His mother, Hannah, made a vow before his birth: “No razor shall come upon his head” (1 Sam. 1:11). Samuel was probably a “Nazirite for life” like Samson and John the Baptist. John’s refusal to drink wine (Matt. 11:18–19) is an indication that he was a Nazirite. His manner of living also indicates this probability (Luke 1:15).

The presence of many Nazirites was considered a sign of God’s blessings on Israel. There were many Nazirites during the time of the prophet Amos. Amos strongly condemned the people for tempting the Nazirites to break their vows by offering them wine to drink (Amos 2:11–12).

The Nazirite vow was a part of the old law and is not imposed on modern Christians. But because it was personal and voluntary, we do have much to learn from this Old Testament practice. God wants us to live a separated, holy life and to abstain from things of the world. Christians must be dedicated to God’s service not just for thirty days or one year but for a lifetime.

NEAH [NEE ah]—a border town of Zebulun near Rimmon and the territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:13).

NEAPOLIS [nee AP oh lus] (new city)—a seaport in northeastern Macedonia near the border of Thrace that served as the port city of Philippi (see Map 7, C–1). On his second missionary journey, the apostle Paul landed at Neapolis as he traveled from Troas and Samothrace to Philippi (Acts 16:11). Paul may have visited this city again on his second tour of Macedonia (Acts 20:1–2).

NEARIAH [nee uh RYE uh] (attendant of the Lord)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Shemaiah (1 Chr. 3:22–23).

2. A son of Ishi, of the tribe of Simeon, who lived in the days of King Hezekiah of Judah (1 Chr. 4:42).

NEBAI [NEE buy]—a leader of the people who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:19).

NEBAIOTH [neh BUY yoth]—an Ishmaelite tribe descended from NABAJOTH (Is. 60:7).

NEBAJOTH [neh BAY yoth]—Ishmael's firstborn son (1 Chr. 1:29; Nebaioth, KJV, NRSV, NIV, NASB) and ancestor of an Arabian tribe named after him (Is. 60:7).

NEBALLAT [nih BAL uht]—a settlement inhabited by the Benjamites after the captivity (Neh. 11:34).

NEBAT [NEE bat]—the father of Jeroboam I (1 Kin. 11:26), first king of the northern kingdom of Israel.

NEBO [NEE boe]—the name of two towns, a mountain, a man, and a pagan god in the Old Testament:

1. A town in Moab east of the Jordan River that was captured and rebuilt by the tribe of Reuben (Num. 32:3, 38). Nebo is also mentioned on the MOABITE STONE as having been taken back by Mesha, king of Moab.
2. A mountain of the Abarim range (see Map 2, C–1) in Moab opposite Jericho (Num. 33:47). From Nebo Moses was permitted to view the Promised Land. He was buried in a nearby valley (Deut. 32:49, 50; 34:6).
3. A town mentioned immediately after Bethel and Ai in the lists of Israelites who returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:29). Nehemiah calls it "the other Nebo," apparently to distinguish it from No. 1.
4. The ancestor of seven Israelites who divorced their pagan wives after the captivity (Ezra 10:43).
5. KJV word for a Babylonian god (Is. 46:1; Nabu, NKJV) who was believed to preside over literature, the arts, and the sciences. Borsippa, near Babylon, was the seat of Nebo worship.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR [neb you kad NEZ ur] (O god Nabu, protect my son)—the king of the Neo-Babylonian Empire (ruled 605–562 B.C.) who captured Jerusalem, destroyed the temple, and carried the people of Judah into captivity in Babylonia. He plays a prominent role in the books of Jeremiah (21–52) and Daniel (1:1—5:18) and also appears in 2 Kings (24:1—25:22), Ezra (1:7—6:5), and Ezekiel (26:7—30:10).

Nebuchadnezzar II was the oldest son of NABOPOLASSAR, the founder of the Neo-Babylonian, or Chaldean, dynasty of Babylon. Nabopolassar apparently was a general appointed by the Assyrian king. But in the later years of Assyria he rebelled and established himself as king of Babylon in 626 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar succeeded his father as king in 605 B.C., continuing his policies of conquest of surrounding nations.

In about 602 B.C., after being Nebuchadnezzar's vassal for three years, King Jehoiakim of the nation of Judah rebelled against the Babylonians. Nebuchadnezzar then "came up against him and bound him in bronze fetters to carry him off to Babylon" (2 Chr. 36:6). Apparently, however, Nebuchadnezzar's intention of carrying him to Babylon was abandoned; according to Jeremiah, Jehoiakim was "dragged and cast out beyond the gates of Jerusalem" and "buried with the burial of a donkey" (Jer. 22:19). After reigning for eleven years, Jehoiakim was succeeded by his son Jehoiachin.

Jehoiachin was only eight years old when he became king, and he reigned in Jerusalem about three months (2 Chr. 36:9). At that time Nebuchadnezzar took Jehoiachin captive to Babylon along with the prophet Ezekiel and "costly articles from the house of the Lord" (2 Chr. 36:10). He made Mattaniah, Jehoiachin's uncle (2 Kin. 24:17), king over Judah and Jerusalem, changing his name to Zedekiah.

For about eight years Zedekiah endured the Babylonian yoke and paid tribute to Nebuchadnezzar. In 589 B.C., however, in the ninth year of his reign, Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon, perhaps trusting in the Egyptian promises of military aid. Nebuchadnezzar and his army came against Jerusalem and besieged the city for about two years (2 Kin. 25:2). The siege may have been temporarily lifted with the approach of the Egyptian army (Jer. 37:5).

In 586 B.C. Jerusalem fell to the army of Nebuchadnezzar. Under cover of darkness, Zedekiah and many of his men fled through a break in the city wall. But they were overtaken by the Chaldeans in the plains of Jericho and brought captive to Riblah, a city in the land of Hamath where Nebuchadnezzar was camped. Nebuchadnezzar ordered that the sons of Zedekiah be killed before his eyes. Then Zedekiah was bound and taken captive to Babylon, along with the leading citizens of Jerusalem (2 Kin. 25:1–7).

Nebuchadnezzar's policy of resettling conquered peoples and transporting them to other provinces of his empire provided him with slave labor for conducting his extensive building projects. He rebuilt many sanctuaries, including the temple of Nebo at Borsippa and the great temple of Marduk at Babylon. He accomplished an immense fortification of Babylon, including the building of its great wall.

Although the famous "hanging gardens" cannot be identified among the impressive ruins of Babylon, this fabulous construction project—one of the "seven wonders of the ancient world"—was built by Nebuchadnezzar on the plains of Babylon to cheer his wife, who was homesick for her native Median hills. Nebuchadnezzar also built a huge reservoir near Sippar, providing interconnecting canals in an elaborate irrigation system.

Nebuchadnezzar made an arrogant boast about all that he achieved (Dan. 4:30). But he was stricken at the height of his power and pride by God's judgment. Nebuchadnezzar was temporarily driven out of office, living with the beasts of the field and eating grass like an ox (Dan. 4:32). Later, he was succeeded as king by his son, EVIL-MERODACH.

NEBUCHADREZZAR [neb you kad REZ ur]—a form of NEBUCHADNEZZAR.

NEBUSHASBAN [neb you SHAZ ban] (the god Nabu delivers me)—an officer of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, at the time of the siege of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (Jer. 39:13; Nebushazban, NIV, REB, NASB, NRSV).

NEBUSHAZBAN [neb you SHAZ ban]—a form of NEBUSHASBAN.

NEBUZARADAN [neb you zar AY dan] (the god Nabu has given offspring)—the captain of Nebuchadnezzar's bodyguard who played an important part in the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. An important Babylonian official, Nebuzaradan may have been second in command to Nebuchadnezzar himself. When Jerusalem fell to the Babylonians, Nebuzaradan came to the city (2 Kin. 25:1, 8) and took charge of destroying it. He commanded the troops who burned the temple, the palace, and all the houses of Jerusalem and tore down the walls of the city. He also was in charge of deporting the Israelites to Babylonia (2 Kin. 25:9–11).

After the fall of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar told Nebuzaradan to take good care of the prophet Jeremiah (Jer. 39:11). Nebuzaradan showed kindness to Jeremiah and gave him the choice of remaining in Jerusalem or going to Babylon (Jer. 40:1–4).

NECHO [NEE koe]—a PHARAOH of Egypt who defeated Josiah in the Valley of Megiddo (609 B.C.). Pharaoh Necho II was himself defeated by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, in the battle of CARCHEMISH (605 B.C.; 2 Chr. 35:20, 22). Variant spellings of this name in different passages and translations of the Bible include Neco, Necoh, and Nechoh.

NECHOH, NECO, NECOH [NEE koe]—forms of NECHO.

NECK—the part of the body that connects the head and the trunk. The word is often used figuratively in the Bible. To fall on the neck of someone was to embrace that person in greeting or farewell (Gen. 33:4; Acts 20:37). To put a yoke on someone’s neck suggested the person had been made a subject (Jer. 27:12). To put one’s foot upon a neck expressed triumph over a foe.

The word “neck” is also used to speak of one’s spiritual condition. To stiffen or harden one’s neck means to rebel or resist (Deut. 31:27). A stiffnecked person is a stubborn, self-willed person determined to resist God’s will (Acts 7:51).

NECKLACE—an ornament worn around the neck in Bible times. Necklaces were very popular throughout the ancient world. They frequently appear on monuments and paintings and many have been discovered by archaeologists. Moon-shaped or crescent-shaped pendants were worn around camels’ necks, perhaps as amulets of the goddess ASTARTE. Many necklaces worn by people were probably amulets or charms as well. Necklaces were made of precious metals and strings of jewels (Song 1:10; Ezek. 16:11). Gold chains were worn by people of high rank (Gen. 41:42; Dan. 5:17; 5:29).

NECROMANCY (see MAGIC, SORCERY, AND DIVINATION).

NEDABIAH [ned uh BUY uh]—a descendant of David through Solomon (1 Chr. 3:18).

NEEDLE (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

NEEDLEWORK, EMBROIDERY—decorations on cloth sewn in with needle and thread. Archaeologists have uncovered many ancient sculptures and paintings that depict garments beautifully decorated with lavish patterns. This art was widespread among the cultures of the ancient world.

In Exodus 35:35 the embroiderer appears alongside the weaver as a craftsman working on the tabernacle. Embroidery is mentioned mostly with reference to the tabernacle and priestly garments (Ex. 27:16; 26:36).

Designs may have been sewn onto the high priest's clothes by applique. Embroidered work was valuable; it gave evidence of luxury (Ps. 45:14; Ezek. 27:16), the prized spoils of war (Judg. 5:30), and commercial goods.

NEGEV, THE [NEG ev] (dry, parched)—a term used by some English translations of the Bible for the southern desert or wilderness area of Judah (see Map 9, B–5), including about 4,500 square miles. Abraham journeyed in the Negev (Gen. 12:9; 13:1, 3; the South, NKJV). When the 12 spies explored the land of Canaan, they went up by way of the Negev (Num. 13:17, 22) and saw the Amalekites who lived there (Num. 13:29). The Canaanite king of Arad also lived in the Negev (Num. 21:1).

The prophet Isaiah described the Negev as a land of trouble and anguish, hardship and distress—a badland populated by lions and poisonous snakes (Is. 30:6). Through its arid wastes donkey and camel caravans made their way to and from the land of Egypt. Negev is also spelled Negeb.

The Negev contained important copper deposits, and it connected Israel to trade centers in Arabia and Egypt. King Solomon built fortresses in the Negev to guard the trade routes. He also established at Ezion Geber, on the Gulf of Aqaba, a port from which he shipped goods to foreign lands. King Uzziah made great efforts to develop the region, building fortresses and expanding agriculture (2 Chr. 26:10).

In modern times, the desert is being made to "blossom as the rose" (Is. 35:1); the Israelis have built an impressive irrigation system that channels life-giving water from northern Galilee to the dry, parched region of the Negev.

NEGINOTH [neh GHEE nuth] (see MUSIC).

NEHELAM [neh HELL um] (see NEHELAMITE).

NEHELAMITE [neh HELL uh mite] (dweller of Nehelam)—the designation of SHEMAIAH, a false prophet who went with the captives to Babylon (Jer. 29:24, 31–32).

NEHEMIAH [knee uh MY ah] (the Lord is consolation)—the name of three men:

1. A clan leader who returned with Zerubbabel from the captivity (Ezra 2:2; Neh. 7:7).
2. The governor of Jerusalem who helped rebuild the wall of the city (Neh. 1:1; 8:9; 10:1; 12:26, 47). Nehemiah was a descendant of the Jewish population that had been taken captive to Babylon in 586 B.C. In 539 B.C. Cyrus the Persian gained control over all of Mesopotamia. He permitted the Jewish exiles to return to the city of Jerusalem. Nearly a century later, in Nehemiah's time, the Persian ruler was Artaxerxes I Longimanus (ruled 465–424 B.C.). Nehemiah was his personal cupbearer (Neh. 1:11).

   In 445 B.C. Nehemiah learned of the deplorable condition of the returned exiles in Jerusalem (Neh. 1:2–3). The wall of the city was broken down, the gates were burned, and the people were in distress. Upon hearing this, Nehemiah mourned for many days, fasting and praying to God. His prayer is one of the most moving in the Old Testament (Neh. 1:5–11).

   Nehemiah then received permission from Artaxerxes to go to Judah to restore the fortunes of his people. He was appointed governor of the province with authority to rebuild the city walls.

   Once in Jerusalem, Nehemiah surveyed the walls at night (Neh. 2:12–15). He gave his assessment of the city's condition to the leaders and officials and then organized a labor force to begin the work.

   Nehemiah and his work crew were harassed by three enemies: Sanballat the Horonite (a Samaritan), Tobiah the Ammonite official, and Geshem the Arab (Neh. 2:10, 19; 6:1–14). But neither their ridicule (Neh. 4:3) nor their conspiracy to harm Nehemiah (Neh. 6:2) could stop the project. The builders worked with construction tools in one hand and weapons in the other (Neh. 4:17). To the taunts of his enemies, Nehemiah replied: "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down" (Neh. 6:3). Jerusalem's wall was finished in fifty-two days (Neh. 6:14)—a marvelous accomplishment for such a great task. Nehemiah's success stems from the fact that he kept praying, "O God, strengthen my hands" (Neh. 6:9).

   Nehemiah's activities did not stop with the completion of the wall. He also led many social and political reforms among the people, including a return to pure worship and a renewed emphasis on true religion. Also see NEHEMIAH, BOOK OF.

NEHEMIAH, BOOK OF—a historical book of the Old Testament that describes the rebuilding of the city walls around Jerusalem. The book is named for its major personality, a Jewish servant of a Persian king and effective leader, who organized and guided the building project.

Structure of the Book. Nehemiah was serving as cupbearer to the Persian king Artaxerxes (1:11—2:1) in 445 B.C., when he received distressing news about his native land. Jerusalem’s wall was still in ruins, although the project to rebuild the city and its beautiful temple had been under way for many years. So Nehemiah went to Jerusalem himself on special assignment from the king to oversee the building project. In spite of harassment by their enemies, Nehemiah rallied the people to the challenge and completed the wall in less than two months.

Nehemiah remained as Persian governor of Jerusalem for the next twelve years, leading the people in several important religious reforms. The priest Ezra assisted Nehemiah in interpreting God's Law for His people. He had accompanied a group of captives back to Jerusalem about thirteen years before Nehemiah arrived on the scene.

Authorship and Date. As written originally in the Hebrew language, Nehemiah was connected to the books of First and Second Chronicles and Ezra. The material in these books formed one unbroken book, perhaps written by the priest Ezra. The purpose of this work was to show how God's blessings sustained his COVENANT PEOPLE after they returned to their native land following the years of captivity in Babylonia and Persia. Most conservative scholars, however, believe Nehemiah contributed some of the material that appears in the book that bears his name. This is the only logical explanation for chapters 1–7 and 11–13, which are written by Nehemiah as a first-person report. Ezra could have picked up these passages from Nehemiah's personal diary.

Historical Setting. The Book of Nehemiah is set in that crucial time in Jewish history known as the postexilic period. These were the years after the return of the Covenant People to their homeland in 538 B.C. following seventy years of CAPTIVITY in Babylonia and Persia. At first the exiles were excited about rebuilding their lives and restoring their city; but the work was slow and tiring, and the living conditions were primitive. Their enemies often exploited them in their plight. These were the desperate circumstances that motivated Nehemiah to return to Jerusalem to encourage his countrymen.

Theological Contribution. Nehemiah is an excellent case study in courageous, resourceful leadership. Against overwhelming odds, he encouraged the people to "rise up and build" (2:18). Their rapid completion of the wall has been an inspiration to countless Christians across the centuries who have faced the challenge of completing some major task to the glory of God.

Nehemiah also teaches that prayer is an important part of the faith of every follower of God. At several crucial points in his book, he prayed for God's direction (1:5–11; 2:1–20; 4:1–14; 6:9–14). If this courageous leader needed to claim God's strength and guidance through prayer, how much more fervently should we pray for God's will to be done through us as we face the important decisions of life! Nehemiah is an excellent object lesson on the power of prayer for all believers.

Special Considerations. Scholars have debated who returned to Jerusalem first, Ezra or Nehemiah. But the Bible makes it plain that Ezra arrived about thirteen years before Nehemiah. Ezra went back to Jerusalem in the seventh year of King Artaxerxes' reign (Ezra 7:8), while Nehemiah returned during this Persian king's twentieth year (Neh. 2:1). The debate arises because of the account of the religious revival under Ezra, which is inserted as chapters 8–10 of Nehemiah.

Perhaps there is a simple reason why this "Ezra story" was included in the Book of Nehemiah. It was used to emphasize the truth that rebuilding the Law of God in the hearts of the people was just as important as rebuilding a wall of stone around the nation's capital city. This was a spiritual, lifesustaining wall that no enemy could batter down.

◆

NEHILOTH [neh hih LOWTH] (see MUSIC).

NEHUM [NEE hum] (consoled [by God])—a leader of the Jews who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 7:7), also called Rehum (Ezra 2:2).

NEHUSHTA [nih HUSH tuh] (serpent)—the wife of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, and the mother of Jehoiachin, king of Judah (2 Kin. 24:8).

NEHUSHTAN (see GODS, PAGAN).

NEIEL [nih EYE ul] (dwelling place of God)—a city in the territory of Asher near Zebulun (Josh. 19:27), probably present-day Khirbet Ya'nin, about 14 kilometers (8.5 miles) southeast of Akko.

NEIGHBOR—a friend, close associate, or a person who lives nearby. The Abrahamic Covenant (Gen. 12:1–3) established moral obligations among the Israelites. They were commanded to show concern for their neighbors. The ninth and tenth commandments (Ex. 20:16–17; Deut. 5:20–21) prohibited the defaming or slandering of a neighbor and condemned the envying of a neighbor's wife, servant, livestock, or other possessions.

A person was not to cheat or rob from his neighbor (Lev. 19:13). The maiming or disfigurement of a neighbor was punishable by "eye for eye, tooth for tooth" retribution (Lev. 24:19–20). Despising one's neighbor was sin (Prov. 14:21), as was leading him morally astray (Prov. 16:29–30) or deceiving him, then saying, “I was only joking” (Prov. 26:19). A person was not even permitted to think evil of his neighbor (Zech. 8:17).

Jesus extended the concept of neighbor to include strangers, as in the parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:25–37), and hence all mankind. The apostle Paul declared that “love your neighbor as yourself” was a supreme commandment (Rom. 13:9–10).

NEKODA [nih KOE dah] (speckled)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The founder of a family of NETHINIM, or temple servants (Ezra 2:48), whose descendants returned from the captivity.
2. The founder of a family that could not prove their Israelite descent after the captivity (Neh. 7:62).

NEMUEL [NEM you el]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Eliab, of the tribe of Reuben (Num. 26:9).
2. A son of Simeon, a grandson of Jacob and Leah, and the ancestor of the NEMUELITES (Num. 26:12). Nemuel is also called Jemuel (Gen. 46:10).

NEMUELITES [NEM you uh lights]—the family or clan descended from NEMUEL, son of Simeon and grandson of Jacob and Leah (Num. 26:12).

NEPHEG [NEE feg]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Izhar, of the tribe of Levi (Ex. 6:21).
2. A son born to David in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:15).

NEPHEW—the son of one’s brother or sister. But the term “nephew” when used in the Bible may mean “grandson” (Judg. 12:14), “descendant” (Job 18:19), “offspring” (Is. 14:22), or “grandchild” (1 Tim. 5:4). Also see FAMILY.

NEPHILIM [NEFF ih lem] (fallen ones)—the offspring of marriages between the “sons of God” and the “daughters of men” (Gen. 6:4). The word “Nephilim” is translated as “giants” by the KJV and NKJV (Gen.

6:4; Num. 13:33; Nephilim, NIV, REB, NASB, NRSV). Some scholars believe the Nephilim were descended from famous rulers, outstanding leaders, and mighty warriors who lived before the Flood. These men, so the theory goes, gathered great harems and were guilty of the sin of polygamy. The Nephilim were the product of these marriages. Also see GIANTS.

NEPHISH [NEH fish]—a form of NAPHISH.

NEPHISHESIM [neh FISH eh sim]—a family of NETHINIM, or temple servants, who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 7:52; Nephushesim, NRSV, NASB; Nephussim, NIV). This family may be the same as the NEPHUSIM mentioned in Ezra 2:50.

NEPHISIM [neh FUY sim]—a form of NEPHUSIM.

NEPHTOAH [nef TOE uh]—a fountain or spring on the border of Benjamin and Judah. Some scholars believe that the fountain of "the water(s) of Nephtoah" (Josh. 15:9; 18:15), Hebrew me nephtoah, was named after the Egyptian Pharaoh Merneptah, who invaded Canaan in the 13th century B.C. and whose mention of "Israel" on a monument he erected is the earliest known attestation of the name "Israel" outside the Bible.

NEPHUSHESIM [neh PHOOSH eh sim]—a form of NEPHISHESIM.

NEPHUSIM [neh FYOO sim]—a family of NETHINIM, or temple servants, who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:50; Nephisim, NASB, NRSV; Nephussim, NIV). This family may be the same as the NEPHISHESIM mentioned in Nehemiah 7:52.

NEPHUSSIM [neh FYOO sim]—a form of NEPHISHESIM; NEPHUSIM.

NER [nur] (light)—father of Abner, Saul's commander-in-chief (1 Sam. 14:50–51).

NEREUS [NEE roose]—a Roman Christian to whom the apostle Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:15). An early tradition holds that Nereus was beheaded at Terracina about A.D. 97, probably during the reign of Nerva, emperor of Rome.

NERGAL (see GODS, PAGAN).

NERGAL-SAREZER, NERGAL-SHAREZER [nur GAL shah REE zur] (Nergal, protect the king)—a Babylonian officer who released Jeremiah from prison (Jer. 39:3, 13). Nergal-Sarezer had the title of Rabmag (Jer. 39:3, NRSV, NASB), which means a high official with military authority—a commander or general. Nergal-Sarezer has often been equated with Nergal-shar-usur, who married a daughter of Nebuchadnezzar and reigned as king of Babylon from 560–556 B.C.

NERI [NEE rye]—an ancestor of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:27).

NERIAH [nih RYE uh] (the Lord is my lamp)—the father of Baruch, the prophet Jeremiah's scribe (Jer. 32:12; 51:59).

NERO [NEE row]—the fifth emperor of Rome (ruled A.D. 54–68), known for his persecution of Christians. Nero began his reign with the promise that he would return to the policies of the great emperor Augustus. For several years he succeeded, thanks mainly to the guidance of Burrus and Seneca, two of his advisors. Under his reign Rome extended its borders, solidified certain territories of the Roman Empire, and incorporated some good qualities of Greek culture.

Nero had considerable artistic interests. He wanted to change the image of Rome from a violent society to one that was more humane. The Romans, however, despised his love for the Greek way of life. His extravagance, coupled with poor management, brought on heavy taxation, depreciation of the Roman currency, and the confiscation of large landholdings by the state.

Nero's personal life was filled with tragedy. His mother, Agrippina, and Octavia, his legal wife, were murdered. Many of his advisors and officials were either killed or exiled. Tension became so great that by A.D. 68, after several attempted conspiracies, the Praetorian guard revolted and Nero was forced to flee Rome. In that same year, at the age of thirty, he took his own life.

Many of Nero's cruelties are linked to the time of the great fire in Rome (A.D. 64). Nero was accused of setting fire to the city in order to divert attention from himself, but this has never been proven with certainty. The Christians, however, were made the scapegoats for this arson. Many of them, possibly even Peter and Paul, lost their lives.

Nero became a kind of apocalyptic figure, a person associated with the end times. Rumors persisted that he was alive and would some day return and reign again. Some interpreters of Scripture believe that Nero is the beast from the sea whose “deadly wound was healed” (Rev. 13:3, 12). Some Bible students have found in the mysterious number 666 (Rev. 13:18), when decoded, the name Nero Caesar. Possible references to Nero in the New Testament include Acts 25:11–12; 26:32; and Philippians 4:22.

• Bust of Nero, cruel emperor of the Roman Empire whose administration was marked by persecution of the Christians.

NEST—a shelter made by a bird for its eggs and young. In addition to speaking of literal nests, the Bible also speaks of nests in a figurative way. Job spoke of the day when he would die in his “nest” (Job 29:18). Apparently he was hoping to die in the midst of his children and heirs who would carry on in his absence.

NET—a meshed fabric made of ropes, used for catching fish, birds, insects, or other animals (Job 18:8–9; Ps. 141:10; Ezek. 17:20). The net was used by the Hebrews for fishing, fowling, and hunting.

Fishing Nets. The Hebrew people were acquainted with the common dragnet of the Egyptians (Is. 19:8; Hab. 1:15–17), which was made of cords of flax. This type of net had floats of wood on the upper edge; it was weighted with lead on the lower edge so it would sink to the bottom. Sometimes the dragnet was lowered from a boat, while the men who pulled it often stood on the shore. In lake fishing the dragnet was cast from and drawn into the boat. If a large catch of fish was taken, the net was dragged behind the boat to the shore (John 21:6, 8, 11). A smaller net was sometimes used for fishing in shallow water (Matt. 4:18, 21).

Fowling Nets. The Hebrews, like the ancient Egyptians, used a device called the clapnet for catching birds (Prov. 1:17). Clapnets commonly had two halfframes or hoops covered with netting and attached to a common axis. The fowler spread the trap open flat and placed the bait in the center. When the bird disturbed the bait, the two sides closed suddenly and the bird was captured.

Hunting Nets. Such nets were cast about the game (Job 19:6) or laid to catch the feet (Ps. 9:15; 57:6; Lam 1:13). Long nets were sometimes placed on a path used by animals. The game was then chased into these nets so they could be easily subdued and killed.

The Bible often uses the word “net” in a figurative way, as of a snare or trap. The spreading of the net is an appropriate description of the subtle tricks and devious devices of one’s enemies (Prov. 29:5; Eccl. 7:26).

• A quail trapped in a net. This bird is probably similar to those provided miraculously to sustain the Israelites in the wilderness (Num. 11:31–32).

NETAIM [nih TAY im]—a place in Judah where some royal potters lived (1 Chr. 4:23).

NETHANEAL [neh THAN e al] (God has given)—the name of two men in the Book of Nehemiah:

1. A priest in the days of the high priest Joiakim (Neh. 12:21; Nethaneel, KJV; Nethanel, NIV).
2. A musician who blew a trumpet when the walls of Jerusalem were dedicated after the captivity (Neh. 12:35–36; Nethaneel, KJV; Nethanel, NIV).

NETHANEEL [neh THAN ih el] (God has given)—the name of six men in the Old Testament (Nethanel, NIV):

1. A chief of the tribe of Issachar and one of the ten spies sent to explore the land of Canaan (Num. 2:5).
2. A priest who blew the trumpet when the ARK OF THE COVENANT was brought to Jerusalem from the house of Obed-Edom (1 Chr. 15:24).
3. The father of Shemaiah (1 Chr. 24:6).
4. A prince of Judah sent by Jehoshaphat to teach the people of Judah (2 Chr. 17:7).
5. A chief Levite during the reign of Josiah of Judah (2 Chr. 35:9).
6. A son of Pashhur who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:19, 22). Also see NETHANEAL; NETHANEL.

NETHANEL [neh THAN el] (God has given)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The fourth son of Jesse (1 Chr. 2:14–15; Nethaneel, KJV).
2. A son of Obed-Edom (1 Chr. 26:1, 4; Nethaneel, KJV). David appointed Nethanel a gatekeeper of the tabernacle.

NETHANIAH [neth uh NUY uh] (the Lord has given)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Elishama, of the royal family of David (2 Kin. 25:25).
2. A leader of the fifth division of musicians and singers in the sanctuary during David's reign (1 Chr. 25:2, 12).
3. A Levite sent by King Jehoshaphat to teach the Law in the cities of Judah (2 Chr. 17:8–9).
4. Father of Jehudi (Jer. 36:14).

NETHINIM [NEHTH uh neam]—a group of people of non-Jewish background who served as temple servants in Old Testament times. As assistants to the LEVITES, they performed such menial chores as cleaning the temple, carrying water and wood to the altar, and scrubbing utensils used in the sacrificial ceremonies. Some of the Nethinim returned to Jerusalem with Ezra after the CAPTIVITY (Ezra 7:7).

NETOPHAH [neh TOE fuh]—a city in Judah closely associated with Bethlehem. After the captivity, 188 men of Bethlehem and Netophah returned to Palestine (Neh. 7:26).

NETOPHATHITE [neh TOE fuh thite]—a native or resident of NETOPHAH, a city in Judah near Bethlehem. Two of David's mighty men, Maharai and Heleb, were Netophathites (2 Sam. 23:28–29).

NETTLE (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

NETWORK—a word with two distinct meanings in the Old Testament:

1. The grate of bronze inside the altar of burnt offering before the tabernacle (Ex. 27:4; 38:4).
2. The ornamental network of bronze on the capitals of JACHIN AND BOAZ, the two great bronze pillars in Solomon's temple (1 Kin. 7:18; 2 Chr. 4:12; Jer. 52:22–23). The latticework was built for Solomon by Hiram, a craftsman from Tyre who specialized in producing skillful works of bronze.

NEW AGE—a future time when Jesus Christ will rule over the earth. The term "new age" does not appear in either the NKJV or KJV. However, Jeremiah prophesied of a new covenant (Jer. 31:31). Jesus Himself spoke of the regeneration when He would rule in His future kingdom (Matt. 19:28). The apostle Paul referred to this time as a "new creation" (2 Cor. 5:17). In recent years, the term "new age" has been appropriated by various pagan groups who engage in occult practices such as seances, spiritism and "channeling." They are strongly influenced by oriental monistic religions.

NEW BIRTH—inner spiritual renewal as a result of the power of God in a person's life. The phrase new birth comes from John 3:3, 7, where Jesus told Nicodemus, "Unless one is born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Jesus meant that all people are so sinful in God's eyes that they need to be regenerated—recreated and renewed—by the sovereign activity of God's Spirit (John 3:5–8).

The activity of God's Spirit that regenerates sinful people comes about through faith in Jesus Christ (John 3:10–21). Without faith there is no regeneration, and without regeneration a person does not have eternal life. Regeneration occurs at the moment a person exercises faith in Christ. At that point, his sins are forgiven and he is born again by the power of the Holy Spirit working on behalf of Christ. The new birth is a decisive, unrepeatable, and irrevocable act of God.

Similar words in the Bible describe the same concept. Paul said, “If anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation” (2 Cor. 5:17). Although our “outward man” is perishing, the Christian’s “inward man is being renewed day by day” (2 Cor. 4:16).

NEW COVENANT (see COVENANT, NEW).

NEW GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM).

NEW HEAVENS (see HEAVENS, NEW).

NEW JERUSALEM (see JERUSALEM, NEW).

NEW MOON (see FEASTS AND FESTIVALS).

NEW TESTAMENT—the second major division of the Bible. It tells of the life and ministry of Jesus and the growth of the early church. The word “testament” is best translated as “covenant.” The New Testament embodies the new covenant of which Jesus was MEDIATOR (Jer. 31:31–34; Heb. 9:15). This new covenant was sealed with the atoning death of Jesus Christ.

The twenty-seven books of the New Testament were formally adopted as the New Testament canon by the Synod of Carthage in A.D. 397, thus confirming three centuries of usage by spiritually sensitive members of various Christian communities. Also see BIBLE, THE.

NEW YEAR—a solemn occasion that occurred in the month of TISHRI or Ethanim (1 Kin. 8:2), the first month in the Hebrew year. The law of Moses directed that this holiday should be observed by “blowing the trumpets” (Num. 29:1). Thus, this festival is also known as the feast of trumpets. Today this event is known as Rosh Hashanah (literally, beginning of the year), a Jewish high holy day that marks the beginning of the Jewish new year. Also see CALENDAR.

NEZIAH [nih ZIE uh]—the founder of a family of NETHINIM (temple servants) whose descendants returned to Jerusalem after the captivity (Ezra 2:54).

NEZIB [NEE zib]—a city in the SHEPHELAH, or lowland plain, of Judah (Josh. 15:43). Nezib has been identified as Khirbet Beit Nesib, about 40 kilometers (25 miles) southwest of Jerusalem.

NIBHAZ (see GODS, PAGAN).

NIBSHAN [NIB shan]—a town in the wilderness of Judah, on the shore of the Dead Sea (Josh. 15:62).

NICANOR [nie KAY nor] (victorious)—one of seven men in the church at Jerusalem chosen to serve tables (Acts 6:5). Apparently these seven servants (or DEACONS) were responsible for looking after the needs of the Greekspeaking widows, who had been neglected in the daily distribution of food.

NICODEMUS [nick oh DEE mus] (conqueror of the people)—a PHARISEE and a member of the SANHEDRIN who probably became a disciple of Jesus (John 3:1, 4, 9; 7:50). He was described by Jesus as "the teacher of Israel," implying he was well trained in Old Testament law and tradition.

Nicodemus was a wealthy, educated, and powerful man—well respected by his people and a descendant of the patriarch Abraham. Yet Jesus said to him, "You must be born again" (John 3:7). The Greek adverb translated "again" can also mean "from the beginning" (suggesting a new creation) and "from above" (that is, from God). In other words, Jesus told Nicodemus that physical generation was not enough, nor could his descent from the line of Abraham enable him to be saved. Only as a person has a spiritual generation—a birth from above—will he be able to see the kingdom of God.

The next time Nicodemus appears in the Gospel of John, he shows a cautious, guarded sympathy with Jesus. When the Sanhedrin began to denounce Jesus as a false prophet, Nicodemus counseled the court by saying, "Does our law judge a man before it hears him and knows what he is doing?" (John 7:51).

Nicodemus appears a third and final time in the Gospel of John. Obviously a wealthy man, he purchased about a hundred pounds of spices to be placed between the folds of the cloth in which Jesus was buried (John 19:39). Nothing else is known of Nicodemus from the Bible. But there is reason to believe that he became a follower of Jesus.

Christian tradition has it that Nicodemus was baptized by Peter and John, suffered persecution from hostile Jews, lost his membership in the Sanhedrin, and was forced to leave Jerusalem because of his Christian faith. Further mention is made of him in The Gospel of Nicodemus, an apocryphal narrative of the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ.

NICOLAITANS [nick oh LAY ih tuns]—an early Christian heretical sect made up of followers of Nicolas, who was possibly the deacon of Acts 6:5. The group is mentioned explicitly only in Rev. 2:6, 14–15, where it is equated with a group holding "the doctrine of Balaam," who taught Israel "to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit sexual immorality."

Balaam probably was responsible for the cohabitation of the men of Israel with the women of Moab (Num. 25:1–2; 31:16). Therefore, the error of this group was moral rather than doctrinal. If the "Jezebel" of Revelation 2:20–23 was a teacher of this sect, as many believe, their sexual laxity was indeed strong. Most likely, they were a group of anti-law practitioners who supported a freedom that became self-indulgence. It may have been the same heresy condemned in 2 Peter 2:15 and Jude 11. Some early church leaders believed the Nicolaitans later became a GNOSTIC sect.

NICOLAS [NICK oh lus] (conqueror of the people)—one of the seven men chosen as DEACONS to serve tables in the church at Jerusalem. Nicolas is called "a proselyte from Antioch" (Acts 6:3, 5; Nicolaus, NRSV). This means he was a Gentile who had converted to Judaism before becoming a Christian. The church fathers accused Nicolas of denying the true Christian faith and founding the heretical sect known as the NICOLAITANS (Rev. 2:6, 15).

NICOLAUS [nick uh LAY us]—a form of NICOLAS.

NICOPOLIS [nih COP oh liss] (city of victory)—a city in which the apostle Paul decided to spend the winter (Titus 3:12). Many cities in the first-century world were named Nicopolis. Most scholars believe the city of which Paul spoke was the Nicopolis in Epirus, a province in northwestern Greece. It was on the Adriatic Sea, about 6 kilometers (4 miles) north of Actium.

NIGER [NIE jur] (black)—the Latin surname of Simeon, one of the Christian prophets and teachers in the church of Syrian Antioch when Barnabas and Paul were called to missionary service (Acts 13:1–3). Some scholars believe he is the same person as Simon of Cyrene, who carried the cross of Christ (Matt. 27:32); but there is no evidence for this theory.

NIGHT—the period between sunset and sunrise, especially the hours of darkness. The night is often spoken of in the Bible as a symbol of evil. The apostle Paul contrasts the “sons of the day” with those who live in darkness (1 Thess. 5:5)—the faithful who live a righteous life with the unbelieving who practice deeds of depravity. Also see TIME.

NIGHT CREATURE, NIGHT HAG, NIGHTHAWK, NIGHTJAR, NIGHT MONSTER (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

NIGHT-WATCH (see WATCH).

NILE [nile]—the great river of Egypt that flows more than 5,700 kilometers (3,500 miles) from central Africa north through the desert to a rich delta area on the Mediterranean Sea (see Map 1, B–2). The source of the Nile is derived from two rivers: the Blue Nile from Ethiopia and the White Nile from Lake Victoria in central Africa.

The Blue Nile provides about twice as much water as the White Nile during the rainy season. This flood water, with the soil that it eroded, provided fertile topsoil for the agriculture of northern Egypt. Low flood levels usually meant a famine year, while a high flood level would result in a year of plenty. The Aswan Dam and the High Dam now enable the modern nation of Egypt to control these floods and provide a more constant flow of water.

Because the Nile was so essential to the life and prosperity of Egypt, it was personified as a god called Hapi. Egyptians had religious celebrations at the beginning of the annual flooding of the Nile. One text discovered by archaeologists contains praises in adoration of the Nile for the blessings that it provides.

The river was also one of the chief methods of transportation for the Egyptians. The Nile delta produced papyrus, which the Egyptians wove together to make household mats, baskets, sails for their boats, and paper. The Nile supported a fishing industry as well, and ancient drawings show the pharaohs hunting wild game in the thick undergrowth of the Nile Valley.

The river in Pharaoh's dream (Gen. 41:1–36) was the Nile. The seven fat cows that pastured in the lush grass by the Nile represented seven years when the Nile would flood and there would be plenty of food. The seven thin cows represented years when there would be little grass because of low flood waters.

Later when the Israelites were slaves under persecution by a pharaoh who did not know Joseph, the king ordered that all male children born to the Israelites must be thrown into the Nile (Ex. 1:22). In an attempt to save her child, Moses' mother put him in a waterproofed papyrus basket and placed him among the papyrus reeds near where Pharaoh's daughter came to bathe (Ex. 2:1–5). When she saw the child, she had compassion on him; thus Moses was not killed.

Eighty years later Moses returned to Egypt to deliver the Israelites from slavery. In order that the children of Israel might believe that God had sent Moses, God gave him three signs to perform; the last was to pour water from the Nile on dry ground and have it turn to blood (Ex. 4:9). After hearing God's word and seeing these signs, the people believed God and worshiped Him (Ex. 4:29–31).

Because Pharaoh refused to let the Israelites leave Egypt, God sent ten plagues. Moses met Pharaoh at the Nile (Ex. 7:15) and turned the Nile to blood to prove to him that the Nile was not a god, but that Moses' God was the true God (Ex. 7:17–21; Ps. 78:44). Some believe the water was turned to a reddish-brown color from the eroded red soil in the flood water and that bacteria from the polluted water may have killed the fish. This naturalistic interpretation does not explain the intensity of the plague or the ability of Moses to start and conclude the plague on command. Since Pharaoh's magicians were able to reproduce a somewhat similar phenomenon, Pharaoh's heart was not moved to release the Israelites (Ex. 7:22–25).

The prosperity that the river provided and the annual flooding of the Nile were spoken of symbolically in the prophetic writings (Is. 23:10; Jer. 46:7–8). The judgment on Egypt was often described in terms of the drying up of the Nile (Ezek. 29:10; 30:12; Zech. 10:11), because the Nile will fail, the papyrus will wither, the grain will wilt, and the fishermen will mourn (Is. 19:5–8). Yet in spite of this judgment, the day will come when some from Egypt will turn to God and become His people (Is. 19:18–25).

NIMRAH [NIM ruh]—a fortified city east of the Jordan River built by the tribe of Gad (Num. 32:3). Nimrah is an abbreviated form of BETH NIMRAH (Num. 32:36).

NIMRIM, WATERS OF [NIM rim]—a fertile area in the land of Moab mentioned by the prophets Isaiah (Is. 15:6) and Jeremiah (Jer. 48:34).

NIMROD [NIM rahd]—a son of Cush and grandson of Ham, the youngest son of Noah (Gen. 10:8–12; 1 Chr. 1:10). Nimrod was a "mighty one on the earth"—a skilled hunter-warrior who became a powerful king. He is the first mighty hero mentioned in the Bible.

The principal cities of Nimrod's Mesopotamian kingdom were "Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar" (Gen. 10:10). From the land of Babylon he went to Assyria, where he built Nineveh and other cities (Gen. 10:11). In Micah 5:6 Assyria is called "the land of Nimrod."

The origin and meaning of the name Nimrod is uncertain, but it is doubtful that it is Hebrew. It may be Mesopotamian, originating from the Akkadian (northern Babylonian) god of war and hunting, Ninurta, who was called "the Arrow, the mighty hero."

Some scholars believe Nimrod was Sargon the Great, a powerful ruler over Accad who lived about 2400 B.C. Others think he was the Assyrian king Tukulti-Ninurta I (about 1246–1206 B.C.), who conquered Babylonia. However, if Nimrod was indeed a Cushite, he may have been the Egyptian monarch Amenophis III (1411–1375 B.C.).

Nimrod was more likely Assyrian. His fierce aggressiveness, seen in the combination of warlike prowess and the passion for the chase, makes him a perfect example of the warrior-kings of Assyria.

NIMSHI [NIM shy]—the grandfather of JEHU (2 Kin. 9:2, 14, 20). Jehu killed Joram, son of Ahab, and reigned as king of Israel.

NINEVEH [NIN eh vuh]—ancient capital city of the Assyrian Empire, a place associated with the ministry of the prophet Jonah. The residents of this pagan city repented and turned to God after Jonah's preaching of a clear message of God's judgment (Jon. 3:5–10).

Founded by Nimrod (Gen. 10:8–10), Nineveh was the capital of the great Assyrian Empire for many years. Its fortunes rose and fell as Babylonia and Assyria struggled with each other for the dominant position in the ancient world. During some periods Babylonia was stronger, while the Assyrians gained the upper hand at other times.

In 612 B.C. Nineveh was destroyed, as prophesied by the Hebrew prophets, especially Nahum. Many scholars questioned the existence of Nineveh until its discovery by A.H. Layard and H. Rassam in 1845–1854. The site has now been excavated thoroughly. Occupational levels on the site go back to prehistoric times, before 3100 B.C. Some of the pottery indicates the city may have originated with the SUMERIANS.

One of the exciting discoveries in this excavation was the great palace of the Assyrian King Sargon. Along with this find was a library of CUNEIFORM documents and many striking wall ornamentations. This clear evidence of Sargon's existence verifies the accuracy of the Book of Isaiah in the prophet's mention of this pagan king (Is. 20:1).

The wall around the city indicated that Nineveh was about 2 kilometers (3 miles) long and less than half that distance wide. The Hebrews, however, perhaps like other foreigners, included other cities under the name of Nineveh.

An example from today would be our reference to New York, which is actually made up of a complex of many cities. Cities included in references to Nineveh were Calah, Resen, and Rehoboth-Ir.

At the time of the greatest prosperity of Nineveh as described by Jonah, the city was surrounded by a circuit wall almost 13 kilometers (8 miles) long. This "great city" (Jon. 1:2) would have had an area sufficient to contain a population of 120,000, as indicated by Jonah 4:11 and 3:2. Evidence for this is provided by Calah to the south, where 69,754 persons lived in a city half the size of Nineveh. As a result, it would have required a "three day's journey" to go around the city, and a "day's journey" would have been needed to reach the city center from the outlying suburbs, just as the Book of Jonah reports (Jon. 3:4).

Several centuries before Jonah's preaching mission to the city, Nineveh became one of the royal residences of Assyrian kings. Sennacherib (705–681 B.C.) made it the capital of the Assyrian Empire to offset the rival capital of Dur-Sharrukin (Khorsabad), built by his father Sargon II (722–705 B.C.). He greatly beautified and adorned Nineveh. The splendid temples, palaces, and fortifications made it the chief city of the Empire (2 Kin. 19:36).

In Sennacherib's day the wall around Nineveh was 40 to 50 feet high. It extended for 4 kilometers ($2^1/_2$ miles) along the Tigris River and for 13 kilometers (8 miles) around the inner city. The city wall had fifteen main gates, five of which have been excavated. Each of the gates was guarded by stone bull statues. Both inside and outside the walls, Sennacherib created parks, a botanical garden, and a zoo. He built a watersystem containing the oldest aqueduct in history at Jerwan, across the Gomel River. To bring new water supplies to the city, he cut channels for 20 kilometers (30 miles) from the Gomel River at Bavian and built a dam at Ajeila to control the flooding of the Khosr river.

In the years 1849–1851 archaeologist A. Layard unearthed the seventy-one-room palace of Sennacherib. The mound also yielded the royal palace and library of Ashurbanipal, which housed 22,000 inscribed clay tablets. These tablets included Assyrian creation and flood accounts that furnished Old Testament scholars with valuable information for background studies on the Book of Genesis.

It was to Nineveh that Sennacherib brought the tribute he exacted from King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Kin. 18:15). He also returned here after his campaign against Jerusalem and Judah in 701 B.C. In 681 B.C. he was assassinated in the temple of Nisroch, which must have been situated within the city walls.

Esarhaddon, the younger son and successor to Sennacherib, recaptured Nineveh from rebels in 680 B.C. Here he built a palace for himself, although he spent much time in his other residence in Calah. One of his twin sons, Ashurbanipal, returned to live mainly at Nineveh where he had been crown prince during his school days. It was during his last days and the years of his sons Ahsur-etil-ilani and Sin-shar-ishkun that Assyria's vassals revolted.

At the same time the Medes, with the help of the Babylonians, sacked Ashur and Calah in 614 B.C. Two years later Nineveh fell to these combined forces. Nineveh was left in ruins (Nah. 2:10, 13) and grazed by sheep (Zeph. 2:13–15), just as the Hebrew prophets of the Old Testament had predicted.

Nineveh is such a large site that it will probably never be fully excavated. A modern village covers one of its larger palaces. A nearby mound, named "Mound of the Prophet Jonah," contains the palace of Esarhaddon. The popular tradition is that Jonah is buried beneath the mosque at Nebi Yunas.

NINEVITES [NIN uh vights]—residents of NINEVEH, the capital of Assyria (Luke 11:30; men of Nineveh, NRSV). In speaking to the people of His day, Jesus spoke favorably of the repentance of the people of Nineveh centuries earlier under the preaching of the prophet Jonah (Jon. 3:2–7; 4:11).

NO, NO AMON [noe, NO a mahn]—the royal city of southern Egypt at modern Luxor, about 565 kilometers (350 miles) south of Cairo. Some modern versions translate Thebes (NASB, NIV, NRSV).

Thebes (or No) was of major importance from the time of Abraham about 2000 B.C. until it was sacked by the Assyrians in 663 B.C. Thebes not only was the capital of Egypt; it also served as the center of worship of the great Egyptian god Amon (Jer. 46:25) and as the place where many kings and queens were buried.

On the east bank of the Nile the huge temple complexes at Karnak and Luxor where the Egyptians worshiped their gods can still be seen. On the west bank are temples that contain the tombs of pharaohs, queens, and noblemen. The most magnificent of all discoveries in this Valley of the Kings was the tomb of Tutankhamun (King Tut), a pharaoh who flourished about 1358 B.C.

Nahum prophesied that Nineveh, the capital of Assyria, would be destroyed by God, just as No Amon was pillaged by the Assyrians in 663 B.C. (Nah. 3:8). Later Jeremiah (46:25) and Ezekiel (30:14–16) predicted that Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, would punish the king of Egypt, destroy the gods of Egypt, and bring further desolation to Thebes. This was proof that God had power over all nations and that their gods were powerless.

NOADIAH [no uh DIE uh]—the name of a man and a woman in the Old Testament:

1. A Levite, a son of Binnui (Ezra 8:33). Noadiah was responsible for “the silver and the gold and the articles” brought back to Jerusalem from Babylon after the captivity.
2. A prophetess who tried to hinder Nehemiah’s efforts to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 6:14).

NOAH [NOE uh] (rest, relief)—the name of a man and a woman in the Bible:

1. A son of Lamech and the father of Shem, Ham, and Japheth. He was a hero of faith who obeyed God by building an ark (a giant boat), thus becoming God’s instrument in saving mankind from total destruction by the Flood (Gen. 5:28—9:29). The line of descent from Adam to Noah was as follows: Adam, Seth, Enosh, Cainan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech, and Noah (Gen. 5:1–32). If this GENEALOGY does not allow for any gaps, Noah was only nine generations removed from Adam; and his father, Lamech, was fifty-six years old at the time of Adam’s death.

Noah lived at a time when the whole earth was filled with violence and corruption. Yet Noah did not allow the evil standards of his day to rob him of fellowship with God. He stood out as the only one who “walked with God” (Gen. 6:9), as was true of his great-grandfather Enoch (Gen. 5:22). Noah was a just or righteous man (Gen. 6:9). The Lord singled out Noah from among all his contemporaries and chose him as the man to accomplish a great work.

When God saw the wickedness that prevailed in the world (Gen. 6:5), He disclosed to Noah His intention to destroy the world by a flood. He instructed Noah to build an ark in which he and his family would survive the catastrophe. Noah believed God and obeyed Him and “according to all that God commanded him, so he did” (Gen. 6:22). He is therefore listed among the heroes of faith (Heb. 11:7).

With unswerving confidence in the word of God, Noah started building the ark. For 120 years the construction continued. During this time of grace, Noah continued to preach God’s judgment and mercy, warning the ungodly of their approaching doom (2 Pet. 2:5). He preached for 120 years, however, without any converts (1 Pet. 3:20). People continued in their evil ways and turned deaf ears to his pleadings and warnings until they were overtaken by the Flood.

When the ark was ready, Noah entered in with all kinds of animals “and the Lord shut him in” (Gen. 7:16), cut off completely from the rest of mankind.

Noah was grateful to the Lord who had delivered him from the Flood. After the Flood he built an altar to God (Gen. 8:20) and made a sacrifice, which was accepted graciously (Gen. 8:21). The Lord promised Noah and his descendants that He would never destroy the world again with a flood (Gen. 9:15). The Lord made an everlasting covenant with Noah and his descendants, establishing the rainbow as the sign of His promise (Gen. 9:12–17). The Lord also blessed Noah and restored the creation command, “Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth” (Gen. 9:1). These were the same words He had spoken earlier to Adam (Gen. 1:28).

Noah became the first tiller of the soil and keeper of vineyards after the Flood. His drunkenness is a prelude to the curse that was soon to be invoked on Canaan and his descendants, the Canaanites (Gen. 9:18–27). The Bible is silent about the rest of Noah’s life after the Flood, except to say that he died at the age of 950 years (Gen. 9:28–29).

In the gospels of the New Testament, the account of Noah and the Flood is used as a symbol of the end times. Warning His hearers about the suddenness of His return, Jesus referred to the sudden catastrophe that fell upon unbelievers at the time of the Flood: “As the days of Noah were, so also will the coming of the Son of Man be” (Matt. 24:37).

NOB [knob]—a town allotted to the priests (1 Sam. 22:19) in the territory of Benjamin (Neh. 11:32), about 3 kilometers (2 miles) northeast of Jerusalem, and apparently within sight of the Holy City (Is. 10:32). When David fled from King Saul, he went to Nob and obtained from Ahimelech the priest some showbread, or “holy bread,” as provisions for his men (1 Sam. 21:1–9).

This incident was mentioned by Jesus when the Pharisees criticized His disciples for gathering grain to eat on the Sabbath (Matt. 12:1–8; Mark 2:23–28). It was not wrong, Jesus implied, for David and his men to eat the showbread, for they were hungry and in need.

A likely location of Nob is Mount Scopus, on the northern part of the Mount of Olives. The site is northeast of Jerusalem, overlooking the city. Three centuries after the time of David, the Assyrian army made its camp at Nob in preparation for an assault on Jerusalem. “As yet he will remain at Nob that day; he will shake his fist at the mount of the daughter of Zion” (Is. 10:32).

NOBAH [NOE buh]—the name of a man and two cities in the Old Testament:

1. A chieftain of the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 32:42).
2. A city in Gilead (Num. 32:42).
   Also see NOPHAH.
3. A city in eastern Gilead (Judg. 8:11). Gideon and his men went around Nobah to surprise the Midianite army at Karkor.

NOBLE (see PRINCE).

NOD [nahd] (wandering)—an unidentified land east of the Garden of Eden where CAIN fled after he murdered his brother (Gen. 4:16).

NODAB [NOE dab] (nobility)—an Arabian tribe of the Syrian desert, east of the Jordan River (1 Chr. 5:19).

NOGAH [NO guh] (brilliance)—a son of David born in Jerusalem (1 Chr. 3:7; 14:6).

NOHAH [NO hah] (rest)—the fourth son of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:2). Nohah is not mentioned among those who went with Jacob into Egypt (Gen. 46:21). He may have been born after the migration into Egypt.

NOON—twelve o'clock in the daytime; midday (2 Kin. 4:20; Jer. 6:4). The psalmist said that the person who abides in God "shall not be afraid of . . . the destruction that lays waste at noonday" (Ps. 91:5–6). Also see TIME.

NOOSE—a loop formed in a rope by a slipknot so that it binds tighter as the rope is pulled. Bildad, one of Job's friends, insisted that the wicked are punished for their wrongdoing, as surely as a noose captures and holds its prey. "A noose is hidden for him on the ground, and a trap for him in the road" (Job 18:10; snare, KJV; rope, NRSV).

NOPH [nohf]—the Hebrew name for MEMPHIS, an ancient Egyptian city on the western bank of the Nile and south of modern Cairo (Is. 19:13).

NOPHAH [NO fuh]—a city in Moab occupied by the Amorites, and then by the Israelites (Num. 21:30). Nophah may be another name for Nobah (Num. 32:42), situated northwest of modern Amman.

NORTH (see DIRECTION).

NORTHEASTER (see EUROCLYDON).

NORTH GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

NOSE—the part of the face between the eyes and the mouth and an organ of breathing (Gen. 7:22) and smelling (Gen. 27:27). In Bible times the side of a woman's nose was often pierced to allow a jewel or ring to be displayed (Ezek. 16:12). When someone was captured in war, a metal hook could be put through his nose to enforce obedience (Is. 37:29).

NOSE JEWEL, NOSE RING (see JEWELRY).

NOSTRILS—the external openings of the nose. The nostrils speak of both life and death. At the creation, life entered a man when "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (Gen. 2:7). The Flood drowned “all in whose nostrils was the breath . . . of life” (Gen. 7:22), except Noah and the others on the ark. When the Bible speaks of smoke from God’s nostrils, it refers to God’s holy anger against wickedness and the judgment and destruction that follows (2 Sam. 22:9).

NOVICE—a person newly converted to Christianity (1 Tim. 3:6; a recent convert, NIV, NRSV). In the later history of the church, the term was applied to instruction in preparation for baptism.

NUMBER, NUMBERS—figures, characters, or symbols used for counting and enumerating in the special discipline known as mathematics. The people of the Bible used numbers in a practical way rather than as a mathematical theory. They applied numbers to common problems of everyday life.

Numbers in the Old Testament. In the Old Testament, numbers are always spelled phonetically. But during the period between the Old and New Testaments, an alphabetic system of writing was used. Although this alphabetic system cannot be demonstrated in the Old Testament, it is interesting that the numerical value of the letters of David’s name (14) seems to have determined the pattern of the genealogy in the first part of the Gospel of Matthew.

Archaeological excavations have yielded some evidence about the way the Hebrew people wrote numbers. Stone workers’ marks and simple tallies have been discovered. Inscriptions such as the Gezer calendar, the MOABITE STONE, and the Siloam Inscription contain only numbers one through three; otherwise numbers are spelled out.

Conventional Use of Numbers. Little is known of the arithmetic of the Hebrews, but they seem to have had at least a practical awareness of the science. The Bible itself contains examples of addition (Num. 1:26), subtraction (Lev. 27:18), multiplication (Lev. 27:25), and division (Num. 31:27). A remarkable degree of accuracy in the use of fractions was achieved (Gen. 47:24; Lev. 5:16; Ezek. 4:11; 45:13). Scholars have noted that the proportions of the measurements of Ezekiel’s temple would have required considerable skill in mathematics on the part of the prophet as he interpreted this message from God.

Most of the numbers in the Bible indicate specific quantities. But in some cases writers of Scripture did not include exact, official, detailed enumerations or sums. They gave an estimate of the total, which was rounded off. The most frequent numerical data given in the Old Testament are enumerations of census, age, or other statistics. These figures provide some difficult textual problems for serious Bible students.

Ages of people mentioned in the Bible are close to the life span of people today, except in the case of the people before the Flood and the patriarchs. All of the pre-Flood ages are either a multiple of five or a multiple of five plus seven (or, in the case of Methuselah, a multiple of five plus seven plus seven). Scholars are not sure why this phenomenon exists, and they do not know what it means.

Another difficulty with numbers concerns the high census figures for the Hebrew people given in some books of the Bible. These high numbers have caused some scholars to question whether the translation of the word “thousand” is accurate. They suggest that its primary meaning in these contexts is something other than the literal number itself.

Rhetorical Use of Numbers. Old Testament numbers are often used for poetic or rhetorical impact. This usage is neither literal nor symbolic. Used in this way, these numbers may indicate such concepts as few or many, or they may be used to intensify a point. In Amos 1:9, the phrase, “For three transgressions of Tyre, and for four” provides not a catalogue but an emphatic statement of Tyre’s sins. A similar usage is found in Proverbs 30. These are examples of a climactic formula, which builds stylistic progression and anticipation. The quantity itself, in such cases, is often indefinite.

Some Bible students have devised intricate systems for foretelling the future that revolve around symbolic usages of numbers. Some uses of the number seven in the Bible itself fall into this category. Many times seven is important as a symbol rather than a number. It is used almost 600 times in the Bible. Often it expresses the idea of completeness or perfection. To identify any other number as a symbol leaves the interpreter on very shaky ground. The number 12 may be a primary number on which numbers or decimals were built, and the number 40 may have some significance as a round number representing a generation.

Some interpreters use a system that attempts to find hidden meanings in the Bible by using elaborate codes based on the numerical values of the individual letters. A few interpreters have sought a mystical numerical pattern that establishes the correctness of the text, thus proving to their satisfaction the divine authority of the Bible.

Even considering its shorter length, the New Testament contains substantially less numerical data than the Old Testament. Most New Testament numbers are enumerations of groups of figures taken from the business world used to illustrate a point. With the possible exception of the genealogy in Matthew 1, there are no special signs for numbers in the New Testament. As they are in the Old Testament, numbers are always written out in full.

The only mystical use of a number in the Bible occurs in Revelation 13:18. Attempts to identify the meaning of 666 (some manuscripts have 616) have generally been more clever than convincing. Like every other feature in God's Word, numbers should be studied with considerable care.

NUMBERS, BOOK OF—an Old Testament book that traces the Israelites through their long period of wandering in the wilderness as they prepared to enter the Promised Land. Numbers takes its name from the two censuses or "numberings" of the people recorded in the book (chaps. 1 and 26). But Numbers contains a great deal more than a listing of names and figures.

Structure of the Book. Numbers is actually a sequel to the Book of Exodus. Exodus follows the Hebrew people as they escape from slavery in Egypt and cross the wilderness, arriving finally at Mount Sinai, where they receive the Ten Commandments and other parts of God's Law. The Book of Numbers picks up this story with the people still encamped at Sinai. It follows their wanderings through the Wilderness of Sinai for the next forty years until they finally arrive at Moab on the eastern side of the Jordan River, ready to occupy the land of Canaan. Thus, the books of Exodus and Numbers together show how an enslaved people were prepared to take possession of the land that God himself had promised many centuries earlier to Abraham and his descendants.

Just as Moses is the central figure in Exodus, he also is the dominant personality in Numbers. His leadership ability is pushed to the limit in Numbers as the people grumble about everything from the food they have to eat to the water supply. Time after time God supplied their needs by sending manna, quail, and water; but still they cried out in a stubborn spirit. Finally, in exasperation, Moses struck a rock with his rod to produce drinking water. This was a clear violation of God’s command, since He had instructed Moses to speak to the rock, not strike it. Because of his disobedience, Moses was not allowed to enter the Promised Land. He died shortly after viewing the land at a distance from atop Mount Nebo in Moab (Deuteronomy 34).

Historical Setting. The events in the Book of Numbers cover a span of about thirty-nine or forty years in Israel’s history—from 1445 B.C., when they left their encampment at Mount Sinai, to 1405 B.C., when they entered the land of Canaan by crossing the Jordan River near Jericho. These were years of preparation as well as punishment. Their harsh life in the desert wilderness prepared them for the task of pushing out the Canaanites.

The Book of Numbers clearly shows why the Israelites did not proceed immediately to take the land after leaving Mount Sinai. Moses chose twelve spies or scouts and sent them into Canaan along its southern border to explore the land and check its defenses. Ten of them returned with a pessimistic report about the warlike Canaanites who held the land. But two of the spies, Joshua and Caleb, encouraged the people to take the land; for God had promised to prepare the way. When the Israelites refused, God sentenced them to two generations of aimless wandering in the wilderness before they could enter the Promised Land (Num. 14:1–38).

Authorship and Date. Numbers is one of the first five books of the Old Testament—books that have traditionally been assigned to Moses as author. He is the central personality of the book, and it is reasonable to assume that he wrote about these events in which he played such a prominent role. One passage in Numbers states, “Now Moses wrote down the starting points of their journeys at the command of the Lord” (33:2). Other similar references to Moses’ writings are found throughout Numbers, giving strong support to the conviction that he wrote the book.

Moses must have written Numbers some time just before his death as the Hebrew people prepared to enter the land. This would place the time of writing at about 1404 B.C.

Theological Contribution. The Book of Numbers presents the concept of God's correcting wrath upon His own disobedient people. Through their rebellion, the Hebrews had broken the covenant. Even Moses was not exempt from God's wrath when he disobeyed God.

But even in His wrath, God did not give up on His people. While He might punish them in the present, He was still determined to bless them and bring them ultimately into a land of their own. Even the false prophet Balaam recognized this truth about God's sovereign purpose. Balaam declared: "God is not a man, that He should lie, nor a son of man, that He should repent. Has He said, and will He not do it? Or has He spoken, and will He not make it good?" (23:19).

Special Considerations. The Israelite warriors counted in the two censuses in the Book of Numbers have been a puzzle to Bible scholars (see chaps. 1 and 26). In each case, they add up to an army of more than 600,000. If this is correct, then the total Israelite population must have been more than 2,000,000 people. Such a figure seems out of line for this period of ancient history when most nations were small.

One explanation is that the word translated "thousands" in English meant something like units, tents, or clans in the Hebrew language. If so, a much smaller number was in mind. But other scholars believe there is no reason to question the numbers, since the Israelites did increase dramatically during their years of enslavement (Ex. 1:7–12).

NUN (fish)—the name of a man in the Old Testament and of a letter of the Hebrew alphabet:

1. The father of Joshua (pronounced none) and an Ephraimite (Ex. 33:11; Num. 27:18).
2. The 14th letter of the Hebrew alphabet (pronounced noon), used as a heading over Psalm 119:105–112. In the original Hebrew language, each of these eight verses began with the letter nun. Also see ACROSTIC.

NURSE, NURSING (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

NUTS—the edible seeds of several species of trees. When Jacob sought to win the favor of the ruler of Egypt, he sent some of the best produce of Canaan. The inclusion of “pistachio nuts and almonds” among “the best fruits of the land” (Gen. 43:11) indicates that these nuts were choice delicacies.

The “garden of nuts” mentioned by the Shulammite was probably a walnut orchard (Song 6:11). The walnut is native to the Near East. According to the Jewish historian Josephus, the walnut tree was cultivated extensively in Galilee and along the slopes of Hermon and Lebanon.

The almond tree figured prominently in Jeremiah’s vision (Jer. 1:11), where the promise of God’s faithfulness to His word is given through the vision of the almond branch.

Also see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE.

NUZI [NOO zi]—a city of Mesopotamia that flourished in the second millennium B.C. The site is now 16 kilometers (10 miles) southwest of Kirkuk, east of the Tigris River, in the northern part of Iraq. Nuzi is not mentioned in the Bible, but it is of great archaeological importance. It was excavated in 1925–31 by the American School of Oriental Research. Some 20,000 small clay tablets inscribed with CUNEIFORM writing were discovered.

The Nuzi Tablets contain private contracts and public records, a list of goods that the city and the surrounding land produced, and tablets dealing with a wide range of other topics. These tablets describe an ancient civilization, perhaps partly contemporary with Abraham, in which installment buying was widely practiced. Numerous patriarchal customs such as surrogate wives, slave adoption, birthright sale, and deathbed blessing are illustrated in documents from Nuzi.

NYMPHA [NIM fah]—a form of NYMPHAS.

NYMPHAS [NIM fuhs] (gift of the nymphs)—a Christian at Laodicea or Colossae in whose house the Christians had met and to whom the apostle Paul sent greetings (Col. 4:15; Nympha, NASB, REB, NIV, NRSV).

O

OAK (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

OAR—a long pole with a broad blade at one end, used as a lever for rowing or steering a boat (Is. 33:21; Ezek. 27:6, 29).

OARSMEN—people who row or navigate a SHIP. In Old Testament times the PHOENICIANS were the masters of the sea; hence, the mention of oarsmen in the prophet Ezekiel's lamentation for the Phoenician city of TYRE (Ezek. 27:8–9, 26; marines, KJV; rowers, NASB, NRSV; sailors, NASB, NIV; oarsmen, REB). Also see SHIPS.

OATH—a solemn statement or claim used to validate a promise. In Bible times, oaths were sometimes accompanied by protective curses to make sure the oaths were kept (1 Sam. 14:24; Gen. 24:41). Such curses were also used to protect property rights from thieves (Judg. 17:2) or from those who found a stolen object or knew of a theft (Lev. 5:1).

An oath was used to seal treaties, insuring that neither party broke their promise (Gen. 26:28). Oaths were also used in Israel's treaty with God at Sinai (Deut. 27:11—28:68; 29:11–20). In the Bible oaths were sometimes taken lightly, as if all parties expected them to be broken (Hos. 10:4). In legal cases oaths were sometimes used to make a person admit guilt (1 Kin. 8:31–32). However, oaths were not to be used in wrongful accusations of people (Ex. 20:7; Job 31:30; Ps. 10:7; Hos. 4:2).

Sometimes people pronounced a curse upon themselves in connection with an oath which they had taken. David vowed not to eat until evening with these words: "God do so to me, and more also, if I taste bread or anything else till the sun goes down" (2 Sam. 3:35). This was a strong pledge on his part that he expected to keep his promise.

Oaths could be taken with symbolic gestures such as raising the hand (Gen. 14:22; Dan. 12:7; Rev. 10:5–6) or touching the sex organs (Gen. 24:2; 47:29), possibly symbolizing a person's life and power. Oaths were taken very seriously (Ex. 20:7; Lev. 19:12). Lying about an oath could result in death (Ezek. 17:16–18). Jesus himself was bound by an oath (Matt. 26:63–64), as was Paul (2 Cor. 1:23; Gal. 1:20). Even God bound Himself by oath to keep His promises to Abraham (Heb. 6:13–18).

OBADIAH [oh bah DIE ah] (servant of the Lord)—the name of thirteen men in the Old Testament:

1. The governor of Ahab's palace (1 Kin. 18:3–7, 16).
2. A descendant of David and the head of a family (1 Chr. 3:21).
3. A son of Izrahiah, of the tribe of Issachar (1 Chr. 7:3).
4. A descendant of King Saul (1 Chr. 8:38).
5. A Levite, a son of Shemaiah (1 Chr. 9:16).
6. A Gadite captain who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chr. 12:9).
7. A leader of the tribe of Zebulun during the reign of David (1 Chr. 27:19).
8. A leader of Jehoshaphat commissioned to teach the Book of the Law (2 Chr. 17:7).
9. A Levite who supervised workmen repairing the temple (2 Chr. 34:12).
10. A son of Jehiel, a descendant of Joab (Ezra 8:9).
11. A priest who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:5).
12. A gatekeeper in Judah after the return from captivity (Neh. 12:25).
13. A prophet of Judah (Obadiah 1). The fourth of the "minor" prophets, Obadiah's message was directed against Edom. Some scholars believe Obadiah was a contemporary of Jehoram, during whose reign (about 844 B.C.) Jerusalem was invaded by Philistines and Arabians (2 Chr. 21:16–17). Other scholars suggest a date following 586 B.C., the time of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians. Still others suggest an earlier Babylonian assault on Jerusalem, in 605 B.C.

    Whatever date is assigned to Obadiah, he lived during a time of trouble for Jerusalem. His prophecy against Edom condemned the Edomites for taking sides against Jerusalem in its distress (Obadiah 15). The strongest mountain fortresses would be no defense for the Edomites against the DAY—the time when God would bring His final judgment upon the world.

OBADIAH, BOOK OF—a brief prophetic book of the Old Testament that pronounces God's judgment against the EDOMITES, ancient enemies of Israel. The book is the shortest in the Old Testament, containing one chapter of only twenty-one verses.

Structure of the Book. In a brief introduction, the author reveals himself as the prophet OBADIAH, a name meaning “servant of the Lord” or “worshiper of the Lord.” He makes it clear that he has received this message directly from God. The Lord has announced that He will destroy the Edomites because they have sinned against Israel. They mocked God’s Covenant People in their hour of misfortune and even participated in the destruction and looting of the capital city, Jerusalem, when it fell to a foreign power. Because of this great sin, Edom will be destroyed. But Israel, the prophet declares, will be blessed by God and restored to its native land.

Authorship and Date. The author clearly identifies himself as the prophet Obadiah, but this is all we know about him. Several Obadiahs are mentioned in the Old Testament (1 Kin. 18:3; Ezra 8:9; Neh. 12:25), but none of these can be identified for sure as the author of this book. But at least his prophecy can be dated with greater certainty. Most scholars believe the great humiliation of Israel that the prophet mentions was the siege of Jerusalem by the Babylonians, beginning in 605 B.C. and ending with its final destruction in 586 B.C. Thus, the book must have been written shortly after the fall of the city, perhaps while the Jews were still in captivity in Babylonia.

Historical Setting. This book’s condemnation of the Edomites is understandable when we consider the bitter feelings that had always existed between these two nations. It began centuries earlier when the twin brothers, Jacob and Esau, went their separate ways (Genesis 27; 36). Esau’s descendants settled south of the Dead Sea and became known as the Edomites. Jacob’s descendants settled farther north, eventually developing into the Covenant People known as the nation of Israel. The Bible reports many clashes between these two factions.

One notable example was the refusal of the Edomites to let the Israelites cross their land as they traveled toward the land of Canaan (Num. 20:14–21). But the final insult to Israel must have been Edom’s participation in the looting of Jerusalem after the city fell to the Babylonians. This led the prophet Obadiah to declare, “For your violence against your brother Jacob, shame shall cover you, and you shall be cut off forever” (v. 10).

Theological Contribution. The Book of Obadiah makes it clear that God takes His promises to His Covenant People seriously. He declared in the Book of Genesis that He would bless the rest of the world through Abraham and his descendants. He also promised to protect His special people against any who would try to do them harm (Gen. 12:1–3). This promise is affirmed in the Book of Obadiah. God is determined to keep faith with His people, in spite of their unworthiness and disobedience.

Special Considerations. Verses 1–9 of Obadiah and Jeremiah 49:7–22 express essentially the same idea. Many of the words and phrases in these two passages are exactly alike. Some scholars believe Jeremiah drew from the Obadiah passage to emphasize God's impending judgment on Edom. If this is true, it indicates the little Book of Obadiah was taken seriously by Jeremiah, one of the great prophetic figures in Israel's history.

OBAL [OH bahl]—a son of Joktan and a descendant of Shem (Gen. 10:28), also called Ebal (1 Chr. 1:22, 40).

OBED [OH behd] (worshiper)—the name of five men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Boaz and Ruth (Ruth 4:17–22; 1 Chr. 2:12) and an ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:5).

2. A son of Ephlal (1 Chr. 2:37–38).
3. One of David’s mighty men (1 Chr. 11:47).
4. A Levite gatekeeper in the time of David (1 Chr. 26:7).
5. The father of Azariah (2 Chr. 23:1).

OBED-EDOM [OH bed EE dum] (servant of Edom)—the name of three or four men in the Old Testament:

1. A Gittite, possibly a Levite from Gath Rimmon, a Levitical city in Dan (2 Sam. 6:10–12; 1 Chr. 13:13–14; 15:25). Some scholars believe, however, that the word Gittite indicates he was a native of the Philistine city of Gath. If so, Obed-Edom was probably a member of David’s bodyguard. David stored the ARK OF THE COVENANT in the house of Obed-Edom for three months before moving it on to Jerusalem. During this time, Obed-Edom and all his household were blessed.
2. A Levite gatekeeper who helped transport the ark to Jerusalem (1 Chr. 15:18–24; 26:4, 8, 15).
3. A Levite musician who ministered before the ark when it was placed in the tabernacle (1 Chr. 16:5, 38). He may be the same person as No. 2.
4. The guardian of the sacred vessels in the temple (2 Chr. 25:24).

OBEDIENCE—carrying out the word and will of another person, especially the will of God. In both the Old and New Testaments the word “obey” is related to the idea of hearing. Obedience is a positive, active response to what a person hears. God summons people to active obedience to His revelation. People’s failure to obey God results in judgment. In the Old Testament covenant between God and human beings, obedience was the basis for knowing God’s blessing and favor (Ex. 19:5; 24:1–8). Samuel emphasized that God’s pleasure was not in sacrifice but in obedience (1 Sam. 15:22). Even the promise of a new covenant emphasized obedience as God’s gift (Jer. 31:33).

In the New Testament, the obedience of Christ stands in contrast to the disobedience of Adam. The disobedience of Adam brought death, but the perfect obedience of Christ brought grace, righteousness, and life (Rom. 5:12–21).

OBEISANCE—the KJV translation of a Hebrew verb that means “to bow down.” The NKJV translates as “bowed down to” (Gen. 37:7, Ex. 18:7), “prostrated” (2 Sam. 1:2), and “did homage” (1 Kin. 1:16).

OBELISK [AHB uh lisk]—a stone monument or PILLAR. Such monuments are generally associated with Egyptian religion (Jer. 43:13). Stone pillars were raised as monuments to honor Rachel and Absalom (Gen. 35:20; 2 Sam. 18:18).

OBIL [OH bill]—an Ishmaelite camel driver appointed keeper of David’s royal camels (1 Chr. 27:30).

OBLATION (see SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS).

OBOTH [OH bowth]—a place where the Israelites camped during their wanderings in the wilderness (Num. 33:43–44).

OBSCENE—indecent or immoral. The word is used in the NKJV to describe the image of the pagan god ASHERAH that King Asa's grandmother set up in the nation of Judah (1 Kin. 15:13; 2 Chr. 15:16). Asa cut down the obscene image and burned it by the Brook Kidron.

OBSERVING TIMES (see MAGIC, SORCERY, AND DIVINATION).

OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES. The ancient Near East is often called the "cradle of civilization." Highly developed cultures flourished in this region of the world long before Abraham's day (about 2100 B.C.). Many skills that developed into occupations and trades originated here very early in history. By Abraham's day civilization was quite complex. Indeed, Abraham himself was a herder of vast flocks of sheep, goats, donkeys, cattle, and camels. A few modern scholars think he was also a trader, managing donkey caravans and doing business from Turkey to Egypt.

Throughout their history, the inhabitants of Palestine ranged from primitive to quite advanced peoples. Many skills were required to sustain and promote life in every period of its history.

Palestine was a dry region where water was carefully handled. Palestinians dug wells and from about 1200 B.C. constructed cisterns lined with plaster. These processes required a great variety of skill.

The gathering of food was an important aspect of life in Palestine. Food was secured from the water, forest, and farm. Each of these sources of food demanded a separate set of skills and abilities.

In early history, each wandering family or tribe relied on its members to supply its needs. As society became more complex, however, tribes began to settle into specific areas with larger groups. As this happened, people became more dependent on each other. Skills and occupations became more and more specialized. Farms and other businesses grew in size, demanding servants and hired hands.

As society developed, the skills needed began to change. The early wandering Hebrew herdsmen lived in tents of animal skins that they could prepare by themselves. When they started to move into houses in towns, they needed a wider variety of skilled laborers. They needed builders, carpenters, brick layers, and many other trades and occupations to build and maintain the houses. The more civilized society had a wider variety of needs. It demanded occupations and trades that could fill its clothing needs, provide health care, education, and other needed products and services. Ultimately, it needed skilled rulers and government officials to govern and maintain order.

Just as in our world, the civilizations of Palestine required specific people to perform certain tasks and hold specific occupations. Young people learned the trades that were needed through apprenticeships. An older tradesman would take the youngster in as an assistant, teaching him everything he would need to know to be able to continue the trade.

Many necessary occupations and trades existed during Bible times. The following list is keyed to the NKJV. But variant names from five additional translations—KJV, NASB, REB, NIV, and NRSV—are cross-referenced to this listing.

Ambassador. An official representative of kings and rulers. In ancient times many kings and rulers spoke to other nations through official representatives who congratulated (1 Kin. 5:1), sought favors (Num. 20:14), made treaties (Josh. 9:4–6), and registered protests (Judg. 11:12). How the other nations treated the ambassador represented how they related to the ruler. If one treated the ambassador rudely, it was an insult to the ruler and could lead to war (2 Sam. 10:4–6). In the New Testament the apostle Paul called himself Christ’s ambassador (Eph. 6:20)—an idea that he applied to all Christian ministers (2 Cor. 5:20). An ambassador is sometimes called an envoy.

Apothecary (see Perfumer).

Archer. One who shot an arrow from a bow. Ancient armies had archers who were trained from childhood. Deadly accurate, these warriors were the first to contact the enemy by shooting from a distance. To draw ancient war bows required a pull of 100 pounds. The arrows could pierce almost all armor. The Bible notes how effective archers could be (1 Sam. 31:3; 2 Sam. 11:24; 1 Chr. 10:3).

• Mosaic of an archer, discovered at ancient Susa. He may have been a professional soldier in the Persian army.

Armorbearer. A servant who carried additional weapons for commanders. Abimelech (Judg. 9:54), Jonathan (1 Sam. 14:6–17), and Joab (2 Sam. 18:15) had armorbearers. David was once Saul’s armorbearer (1 Sam. 16:21). Armorbearers were also responsible for killing enemies slain by their masters. After enemy soldiers were wounded with javelins or bows and arrows, armorbearers finished the job by using clubs and swords. After the time of David, commanders fought from chariots and armorbearers are no longer mentioned.

Armorer. One who made armor. Armorers (smiths skilled in making armor and leather workers skilled in making shields) were primarily Philistines in the days of Saul. While armorer is not mentioned directly in the Bible as an occupation, ancient Hebrew soldiers did use shields, helmets, breastplates of scalelike plates, and greaves (leg armor). God is the great armorer for the Christian soldier (Eph. 6:14–17).

Artificer (see Metalsmith).

Artisan (see Metalsmith).

Astrologer. One who gained or sought information from the positions of the sun, moon, and stars in relation to one another and to the ZODIAC. Astrology and astrologers were widespread in the ancient world, being documented as early as 2000 B.C. in Mesopotamia. From there it spread to Egypt, Greece, China, India, and throughout the ancient world.

The Bible clearly warns against astrologers (Deut. 4:19; 17:2–7; Is. 47:13–15). Many scholars believe the “magi” who came to honor Jesus were astrologers. Other names for astrologers used by other translations are prognosticator, sage, and stargazer.

Attendant (see Servant).

Baker. One who baked bread. Bread was a major food among the ancients, and baking and bakers were common. Home bakers prepared dough from cereal grains and baked it on a rock or in an oven. Towns and villages probably had public bakers who baked bread from dough prepared in their customers’ homes. Kings had their own royal bakers (Gen. 40:2). A street in Jerusalem was occupied by bakers and their shops (Jer. 37:21).

Banker. Someone involved with keeping, loaning, changing, or issuing money. Banking and bankers appeared among the Jews during the Babylonian captivity. There is no mention of banking in the Old Testament, because lending to other Jews for profit was forbidden (Deut. 23:19–20). Loans were permitted if extended to foreigners. Creditors are mentioned in the Mosaic Law (Deut. 15:2). temples and palaces (citadels and homes of the wealthy) safeguarded much wealth, while others hid their treasures and valuables.

By Roman times bankers were common among the Jews (Matt. 25:27) with “moneychangers” setting up open-air banks to change foreign currency into local money. Moneychangers often cheated their customers—a practice especially irksome when moneychanging was necessary to present an offering to God (John 2:13–20). Bankers were usually very wealthy. Under Roman law bankers could put a debtor in prison (Matt. 18:25).

Barber. One who shaved or trimmed a man’s hair or beard. Tomb pictures of Egyptian barbers at work have been found. The Hebrew word for “barber” occurs only in Ezekiel 5:1, where the Lord commanded the prophet to shave his hair and beard. Male Israelites normally let their hair grow long, although they did not let it go uncut as the women did. Barbers most likely served royalty and the rich.

Basketmaker. One who made baskets. Women members of the household wove baskets from some kind of natural fiber such as fronds of palms, straw, reeds, rushes, sedges, and grasses. Ancient Near Eastern societies had a great need for lightweight containers. Israel used such containers throughout its history. Baskets came in all sizes and shapes, although the shape resembling earthenware pots was very common. Basketmakers made containers large enough to hold a man (Acts 9:25) or a human head (2 Kin. 10:7) and small enough to house birds (Jer. 5:27) and carry bread (Ex. 29:3).

Beggar. A person who begged for a living. There are very few biblical references to beggars and no term in biblical Hebrew to describe the professional beggar. A person was reduced to begging by divine judgment or wickedness (1 Sam. 1:7–8; Ps. 109:10; Luke 16:3), a physical handicap (Mark 10:46; Luke 18:35; John 9:8), or laziness (Prov. 20:4). God commanded Israel to care for the poor and handicapped, so the presence of beggars indicated Israel’s disobedience (Deut. 15:1–11; 8:4, 6–10). In New Testament times beggars were commonplace. Almsgiving, giving to beggars, was praised as good work contributing to a person’s righteousness.

Blacksmith (see Metalsmith).

Bleacher (see Fuller).

Brewer. One who made strong drink. While brewers are not mentioned in the Bible, scholars know that ancient brewers produced beers from various cereals starting in very ancient times. Beer was known in Egypt and the Mesopotamian valley. Barley was buried in pots to force it to germinate, then it was mixed with water and fermented naturally. Sometime between the tenth and seventh centuries

B.C. hops began to be added to the process. Strong drink is mentioned in twenty-one Old Testament passages, starting from the Exodus period.

Brickmaker. One who made bricks. The first record of brickmaking occurs in Genesis 11:3. Israel made clay bricks in Egypt, a process depicted on Egyptian wall paintings. Chemicals released by decomposed straw made clay bricks much stronger (Ex. 5:6–19). Such bricks have been found at Pithom. The Israelites who served as slaves in Egypt worked mostly as brickmakers (Ex. 1:11–14).

Brick Worker (see Brickmaker).

Bronze Worker (see Metalsmith).

Builder. One who constructed a building. Building is a very ancient task, beginning with Cain who built a walled dwelling to protect himself (Gen. 4:17). Later, the descendants of Noah built a tower to climb into heaven so they might make a name for themselves (Gen. 11:4). In Egypt the Hebrew people became a slave corps of builders who built storage cities for Pharaoh (Ex. 1:11). While inhabiting Canaan, the Israelites built walled towns (cities) and unwalled towns (villages), houses, palaces, temples, and many other structures.

The more humble structures of Palestine may have employed skilled carpenters for certain tasks, but most of the work was done by the prospective owner or other unskilled laborers. Larger, more extravagant projects were headed by a master builder, who chose the site and laid out the project with a measuring line. He usually recorded the results in a plan and in writing. Isaiah referred to this process as a symbol of God's judgment (Is. 28:17). The master builder checked the work of the skilled and unskilled workers. He used a plumb line to check if it was truly vertical (Zech. 4:10). The most skilled builders employed in Israel came from Phoenicia. These skilled builders included masons, carpenters, and others (2 Sam. 5:11).

God is often symbolically portrayed as a master builder. He built the throne of David (Ps. 89:4), Jerusalem (Ps. 147:2), and the church (1 Cor. 3:9; 1 Pet. 2:4–6). In 1 Corinthians 3 Paul compared himself to God's master builder and others to brick layers building a symbolic living temple. The foundation of this living temple is "the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone" (Eph. 2:20).

Butler (see Cupbearer).

Camel Driver. One who herded and rode camels. The existence of camels in Abraham's day is widely questioned. However, the remains of wild camels found in Palestine, Egyptian sculptures of camels from the third and fourth centuries B.C., and similar evidence, supports the scriptural reports (Gen. 12:16, 24:10). Camels were used to cross the desert between Mesopotamia and Palestine about 1800 B.C. The Midianites were desert nomads and camel drivers (Judg. 6:5), as was the Queen of Sheba (1 Kin. 10:2).

Carpenter (see Builder; Woodworker).

• A stone carving from Egypt showing carpenters at work, probably from about 2500 B.C.

Carver. One skilled at whittling, cutting, or chipping wood, stone, ivory, clay, bronze, gold, silver, or glass. Skilled wood carvers were rare. Carved panels, windows, and woodwork were signs of great wealth. The tabernacle and temple (1 Kin. 6:15–38) were lavishly adorned with such work. Ivory carving—for signet rings and inlays for wooden panels (2 Chr. 9:17), jewelry, furniture, and figurines—was an ancient and highly skilled art.

Caulker. Men skilled in applying tar to hulls of ships to make them watertight. Mentioned only in Ezekiel 27:27, caulkers plugged cracks in and between a ship’s planks. These caulkers were Phoenicians, the most noted nation in the Old Testament for ships and sea trade. Also see Shipbuilder.

Centurion (see Soldier).

Chamberlain. One responsible for guarding the king’s bedroom and harem. This man, usually a eunuch to remove all possibility of unfaithfulness, was employed by ancient kings. He was a highly trusted and influential official (Acts 8:27). Also see Eunuch.

Chancellor (see Government Official).

Charioteer (see Soldier).

City Clerk. An official of a Greek city-state. The city clerk held an important political position. He was responsible for the city archives; taking minutes at the council meetings; handling official communications, including public readings; serving on a number of boards; handling many administrative details; and even annually distributing money to the poor. The Ephesian city clerk (Acts 19:35; townclerk, KJV) was also president of the assembly. His importance and prominence are shown by the fact that his name frequently appeared on coins.

Commander (see Soldier).

Commissioner (see Government Official).

Comptroller (see Government Official).

Confectionary, Confectioner (see Perfumer).

Controller (see Government Official).

Cook. One who prepared food for eating. The Hebrew word translated “cook” literally means “slaughterer”—one who kills and dresses animals. The king’s cooks apparently killed the animals to be prepared for his table. Cooks may have been either women servants (1 Sam. 8:13) or male professionals (Luke 17:8). In the average household, cooking was the women’s job (Gen. 18:6; 27:9), although men did the slaughtering and dressing (Gen. 18:7). Gideon was a cook and a baker (Judg. 6:19).

Coppersmith (see Metalsmith).

Counselor. One who gave advice. Ancient kings often had trusted officials who served as counselors (1 Chr. 27:32; Ezra 4:5). Not all counselors, however, were professionals (2 Chr. 22:3). Isaiah 9:6 describes the coming Messiah as a Counselor. Joseph of Arimathea is called a “counsellor” (Mark 15:43; Luke 23:50, KJV). He was a member of the Jewish council, the SANHEDRIN.

Courtier (see Government Official).

Craftsman (see Metalsmith).

Creditor (see Banker).

Criminal. A lawbreaker. The first criminal was Cain, who murdered his brother (Gen. 4:8). A criminal mentality and rebellion against God's law apparently characterized Cain's descendants (Gen. 4:23–24). Men began to use their own system of laws and "criminal" came to mean one who violated such a system. Divine law again became the ruling system of Hebrew society after the Exodus from Egypt. God distinguished between sacred and civil law. Criminals were to be punished by death, mutilation, scourging, paying monetary damages and fines, and enslavement.

Both thieves and robbers fall into the category of criminal. Both thieves and robbers took the possessions of others. But while thieves stole secretly, robbers stole openly and often violently. The Hebrew language does not differentiate between robber and thief, but Greek does. Jesus was crucified between two robbers (Matt. 27:38).

Cupbearer. One who tasted and served wine to the king. Ancient kings had to be very cautious about what they ate and drank. They used trusted servants to taste everything before they consumed it. If the servant lived or did not get sick, the king and queen then ate or drank. The "chief butler" in the Joseph account (Genesis 40) headed the king's cupbearers. Nehemiah held this highly trusted position under King Artaxerxes (Neh. 1:11), influencing the king politically. King Solomon also employed cupbearers (1 Kin. 10:5).

Dancer. One who dances. Professional dancers apparently did not exist among the Hebrew people as they did in Egypt, Babylon, and other pagan nations. However, children danced in play (Job 21:11) and adults danced in joy (2 Sam. 6:14). One could dance before God as an act of joy in worship (Ex. 15:20; Ps. 149:3; 150:4). The original Hebrew words reveal that this dancing involved skipping about, whirling, and leaping.

Dealer (see Merchant).

Deputy (see Government Official).

Designer. One who designed artistic work. Designers are often mentioned with engravers and weavers (Ex. 35:35; 38:23). Artisans during Old Testament times may have been knowledgeable in several crafts.

Disciple. A follower and a pupil. It was common in the ancient world for students or apprentices to attach themselves to a teacher and follow him in learning and discipline. Isaiah speaks of disciples, “Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples” (Is. 8:16). The Pharisees (Mark 2:18), John the Baptist (Matt. 11:2), and Jesus gathered such disciples, or learners. Jesus chose twelve, the number of tribes in Israel, to be his special disciples.

Diviner. One who practiced MAGIC, SORCERY, AND DIVINATION. Diviners used the trance, dreams, clairvoyance, and many mechanical means such as inspecting the livers of animals to gain information that could not be found by ordinary means. This is the tool of false prophets. Divination was widely spread in the ancient Near East from earliest times, and nonbiblical literature contains directions on its pursuit. Pagan divination and diviners are soundly condemned (Lev. 19:26; Deut. 18:9–14), but the Israelites resorted to it at times (2 Kin. 17:17; 21:6).

Doorkeeper (see Porter).

Drawer of Water (see Water Carrier).

Driver (see Overseer).

Duke (see Prince, Princess).

Dyer. One skilled in permanently coloring cloth. While this is not mentioned as a specific occupation in the Bible, scholars know that dyeing was an ancient craft that often used secret formulas passed on from previous generations. The tabernacle materials were dyed with purple dye that was probably imported from Phoenicia.

Embalmer. One who prepared the dead for burial by treating the body to prevent decay. The Egyptians were well-known for this practice. The Hebrews, however, did not practice embalming because they were prevented by divine law from touching dead bodies (Num. 19:11–19). Joseph, a high official in the Egyptian court and an adopted member of the royal family, was embalmed (Gen. 50:26) and had his father Jacob embalmed (Gen. 50:2–3). This was probably done to preserve the bodies for the trip to the family burial grounds in Canaan (Gen. 50:13–14; Josh. 24:32).

Embroiderer. One skilled in decorative ornamental needlework. Ancient embroiderers decorated clothes by using geometrical and stylized designs. The rich and powerful wore clothes beautifully embroidered (Ps. 45:14). Embroiderers participated in decorating tabernacle garments and hangings (Ex. 27:1, 16; 28:4, 15). The embroiderer and the weaver were separate and distinct occupations, but some translations use the terms interchangeably. Also see Weaver.

Engraver (see Metalsmith).

Envoy (see Ambassador).

Eunuch. A male officer of a court or royal household. Frequently, the Hebrew word translated "eunuch" also means a man who was castrated to assure he would not become involved sexually with the members of the king's harem (Is. 56:3). In many passages, however, the word refers simply to an officer. Castrated males were not permitted to approach God's altar (Deut. 23:1).

Executioner. One who legally takes another person's life. The Old Testament clearly distinguishes between murder, or illegally taking another's life (Ex. 20:13), and execution. In God's law many crimes were met with the death penalty (Gen. 9:6; Deut. 13:10; 21:22). It was the executioner's task to exact that penalty. Personal vengeance was prohibited (Deut. 24:16). The New Testament records several executions that were legal under Roman law but not under divine law (Matt. 14:10). The most famous execution in the Bible is the crucifixion of Jesus (John 19).

Exorcist. One who cast out demons. The people of the ancient world believed in spirit powers and that a person could be taken over by an evil power. Many methods were used to cast out the demons. These included potions, spells, and chants. The New Testament also tells of the existence of evil powers and describes Christ's total victory over them. Jesus expelled demons quickly and easily (Mark 1:23–27). He did not practice the mysterious and often complicated acts of the exorcist (Matt. 12:24–28).

Fanner. One who winnows, or separates, grain. The grain was beaten to loosen the kernels. These kernels were then trampled underfoot to loosen the chaff covering the grain. After each stage, the fanner would throw the grain into the air. The wind blew the chaff away and the grain fell to the ground. The fanner used a pitchfork in the first stage and a shovel for the second stage (Is. 30:24). In the same way, God separates the wheat, or true believers, from the chaff, or hypocrites, at the last day (Matt. 3:12; Luke 3:17).

Farmer. One who tills the soil and raises food. Terms in the Bible that refer to farmer include plowman (Is. 28:24), husbandman (KJV), vinedresser (Is. 61:5), gardener (John 20:15), and tiller (Gen. 4:2). This was one of the major occupations of the ancient Hebrews, along with shepherding. The farmer of ancient times was responsible for all aspects of farming. All the plowing, planting, tending, and harvesting was done by the farmer and his family. More prosperous farmers were able to hire helpers for their farm. In the New Testament a farmer is one who owns the land or rents it and raises crops (Matt. 21:33). In John 15:1–8, Jesus refers to Himself as the true vine and His Father as the vinedresser.

Finer (see Metalsmith).

Fisherman. One who catches fish for food. Both amateur and professional fishermen existed in Bible times. They used various kinds of nets, hooks, and lines (Is. 19:8). Sometimes fishermen used spears (Job 41:7). Several of Jesus' disciples were professional fishermen.

Footman. A runner or messenger. The footmen in Jeremiah 12:5 were couriers. The KJV often uses "footmen" to refer to foot soldiers or infantrymen. Also see Herald.

Foreman (see Overseer).

Forger (see Metalsmith).

Fowler. One who hunts and captures birds. The Egyptians were especially known for their taste for bird meat. Ancient fowlers used all kinds of implements and devices such as decoys, traps, nets, bait, bows and arrows, slings, lures, setting dogs, and bird lime smeared on branches to catch their prey. The Mosaic Law forbade taking a mother bird and her young together; only the young were to be taken (Deut. 22:6–7). Wicked, scheming enemies of the righteous are called fowlers (Ps. 91:3; 124:7).

Founder (see Metalsmith).

Fuller. One who cleans, shrinks, thickens, and sometimes dyes newly cut wool or cloth. The Hebrew word rendered as "fuller" means "to trample" or "to tread," suggesting that action as a major part of the craft. The fuller removed the oily and gummy substances from material before it could be used by washing it in some alkaline such as white clay, putrid urine, or nitre, as there was no soap in those days. The alkaline was washed out by treading on the material repeatedly in running or clean water. The material was then dried and bleached by the sun.

The fuller's process created an unpleasant odor. Therefore, it was usually done outside the city gates in an area named Fuller's Field (2 Kin. 18:17; Is. 7:3). God is compared to fuller's "soap" (Mal. 3:2). Jesus' garments at His transfiguration were described as whiter than any human fuller could make them (Mark 9:3; launderer, NASB; bleacher, REB).

Gardener (see Farmer).

Gatekeeper (see Porter).

Glassworker. One who made glass and formed it into useful or ornamental objects. Glass was known by 2600 B.C. and so glassworkers date from at least this date. While glassworkers are not mentioned specifically in the Bible, Egyptian glassworkers (about 1400 B.C.) made vessels similar to pottery and small perfume vessels by winding hot glass rods around a sand core and then joining the layers by reheating them.

Gleaner (see Laborer).

Goatherd (see Shepherd).

Goldsmith (see Metalsmith).

Government Official. A worker for a government. Many different officials are mentioned in the Bible. Little is known, however, about many of these official positions. These officials may have been government administrators (Gen. 41:34), religious or military overseers (1 Kin. 4:5), secretaries (Ex. 5:6–8), commanders (Num. 11:16), or assistants to the king (Esth. 1:8). Government officials referred to in the Bible by specific title include chancellor, commissioner, comptroller, controller, courtier, deputy, magistrate, officer, prefect, president, procurer, recorder, treasurer, trustee, and viceroy. A quartermaster was an official who made lodging arrangements for the king during his official travels.

Guard (see Soldier).

Harvester (see Laborer).

Hewer of Stone (see Stoneworker).

Herald. One responsible for bearing a message, often in preparation for the appearance of a king or other royal figure. The heralds ran before the king's chariot to announce his coming. Heralds also were responsible for announcing the king's messages (Dan. 3:4). The Aramaic word for herald is sometimes translated "to preach" (Matt. 3:1; 4:17). Hence, New Testament preachers are heralds of the King. Heralds are also sometimes referred to as messengers. Also see Footman; Government Official.

Hewer (see Woodworker).

Horseman (see Soldier).

Hunter. One who pursues wild animals as a source of food, to protect crops, or for sport. Hunting for sport was common among ancient kings. It is often depicted on monuments in Egypt and Assyria. In earliest times Nimrod was a noted hunter, adept at using weapons (Gen. 10:9). Later, Esau was a hunter (Gen. 27:3).

The Mosaic Law allowed Israel to hunt and consume some wild animals (Lev. 17:13). Other Old Testament accounts of hunting have to do with defending homes (Judg. 14:5–6). Hunters used bows and arrows (Gen. 27:3), nets (Prov. 1:17), traps (Amos 3:5), and pits (Is. 24:17) to capture or kill wild animals. Hunters who used traps were called trappers.

Husbandman (see Farmer).

Innkeeper. One who managed an inn. In Old Testament times, most travelers stayed in private dwellings or slept in the open. By New Testament times some people managed inns (Luke 10:35) that were often not very comfortable or safe. Mary and Joseph stopped at a larger private dwelling, because it was the custom for such homeowners to rent out dwelling quarters during festival times (Luke 2:7).

Ironsmith (see Metalsmith).

Jeweler. One who made jewelry. People of the ancient world were fond of jewelry. In Old Testament times, jewelry was a sign of wealth and blessing (Ezek. 23:26; Is. 61:10). It was given to brides as presents (Gen. 24:22, 30, 53) or as part of her dowry.

Judge. One who governs and dispenses justice, judgment, and protection. The first judge mentioned in the Old Testament is God Himself (Gen. 18:25). This divine model is first manifested in human beings in the head of a household (Genesis 21; 22; 27). It was then seen in Moses who judged over all Israel, and in elders appointed to be judges under Moses (Ex. 18:13–27). Israel was ruled by a system of judges described in the Book of Judges. The power of judgment was later passed on to the king.

Israel had both a civil and ecclesiastical system (2 Chr. 19:11). In the New Testament the high court of Israel was the SANHEDRIN, although there were also judges in every town (Luke 18:2). None of the New Testament judges “protected” the people by leading them into battle.

Laborer. One who worked at manual, or physical, labor. Almost everyone in the Bible worked and worked hard. There were relatively few skilled occupations such as potters, metalsmiths, masons, scribes, dyers, weavers, and jewelry makers. For the most part the life of the average person consisted of long hours of very hard work and small incomes (Ps. 90:10). Some laborers worked in the fields at harvest times as harvesters, gleaners, and reapers.

Launderer (see Fuller).

Lawyer. One who knew and practiced law. Lawyers are mentioned only in the New Testament. By Jesus’ day the Law, the first five books of the Old Testament, had been expanded by the Jewish leaders. Their intent was to give the people an adequate interpretation and application of divine law to every situation of life. Added to the Law was a vast body of explanation, commentary, and application that was held to be just as binding as the actual writings of Moses.

New Testament lawyers were experts in this large body of material. They spent their time studying, interpreting, and expounding this law and acting as court judges. Also referred to as “teachers of the law” or “scribes,” Jewish lawyers generally opposed both John the Baptist (Luke 7:30) and Jesus (Luke 14:3) and tried to discredit Jesus (Matt. 22:34–40).

Leatherworker (see Tanner).

Lookout (see Watchman).

Magistrate (see Government Official).

Maid/Maidservant. A female servant. Two Hebrew words are translated “maid” and “maidservant.” Often they refer to a girl or woman whose task was to see to the needs of a wife or daughter of a rich or important man (Gen. 16:1). The Hebrew words may also refer to a female servant (1 Sam. 1:11) or bondservant (Lev. 25:44) whose duties are quite diverse (Ex. 11:5), and a female servant who serves as a concubine (Judg. 19:9). The New Testament uses words that mean "young girl" to signify "maid." Also see Servant.

Mason (see Builder; Stoneworker).

Merchandiser (see Merchant).

Merchant. One who earns a living by buying items from one person and selling them to another. Merchants are referred to by various translations as traders, dealers, and merchandisers. The Old Testament recognizes a difference between international merchants (Gen. 37:28; Prov. 31:14) and merchants in general (Ezek. 17:4). In Jerusalem in Nehemiah's time, merchants selling similar or the same items located close to one another (Neh. 3:22; 13:16). Only in the New Testament was being a merchant as normal as being a farmer (Matt. 22:5).

Messenger (see Footman; Herald).

Metalsmith. One who worked with metal. This occupation included those who dug the ore from the ground, refined the metal, and worked the metal into useful objects. Refining metal was a very ancient skill that was well developed by the time of Abraham.

Long before Abraham's time, copper was mixed with tin to form bronze. Metals such as gold and silver were often hammered or forged into desired shapes by metalworkers from ancient times. The refining process became quite well developed so that ancient metalworkers produced a high quality of gold and silver.

Ancient metalsmiths were skilled in making ornamental objects of precious metals. Israel was relatively ignorant of metalworking skills before the time of David, about 1000 B.C. Recognizing the importance of metalworking, David moved to conquer Edom and its iron and copper mines (2 Sam. 8:14). Solomon brought Israel into a high stage of metalworking by importing experts from other more advanced nations (1 Kin. 7:13–14).

The first metalworker mentioned in the Bible was Tubal-Cain, a descendant of Cain (Gen. 4:22). The smith was often named for the metal he refined, cast, or molded. Goldsmiths worked with gold, silversmiths with silver, coppersmiths with copper, and ironsmiths with iron. Various translations use several different terms to describe metalworkers: artificer, artisan, blacksmith, bronze worker, craftsman, engraver, finer, forger, founder, refiner, and smelter.

Midwife. A woman who helped other women give birth to their children (Gen. 35:17). Midwives were sometimes relatives or friends. Their task involved cutting the umbilical cord, bathing the baby, rubbing it down with salt, and swaddling it (Ezek. 16:4). In swaddling, the baby was wrapped snugly in cloth bound its arms to its body. The midwife also marked which twin was the first to come forth or the firstborn (Gen. 38:28). In Egypt, Pharaoh ordered the Hebrew midwives, apparently professionals, to kill all the boy babies at birth, but the women refused to do so (Ex. 1:15–22).

Mourner. One who grieved over the dead. Paid professional mourners worked in the ancient world from very early times. They are called “mourning women” and “skilled wailing women” (Jer. 9:17), “singing men” and “singing women” (2 Chr. 35:25). These mourners sang or chanted funeral songs or dirges “There shall be wailing in all streets, and they shall say in all the highways, ‘Alas! Alas!’ They shall call the farmer to mourning and skillful lamenters to wailing” (Amos 5:16). They were often accompanied by musical instruments (Matt. 9:23).

Noble (see Prince, Princess).

Nurse. A woman who breast-fed an infant or helped raise the child. Pharaoh’s daughter hired Moses’ mother to suckle him (Ex. 2:7–9), while Naomi helped raise her grandson Obed (Ruth 4:16). Some nurses were respected members of households, even after the child became an adult (Gen. 24:59; 35:8).

Officer (see Government Official).

Orator. A teacher of speech-making or a professional writer of speeches. The Jews found an orator’s services very necessary whenever they appeared before a Gentile court. Such courts operated according to given rules of etiquette and oratory (Acts 24:1). One could lose his case simply by the crudeness of his speech. Paul was a capable orator himself and thus defended himself before Felix (Acts 24:10–21). A careful study of Paul’s speech at the Areopagus (Acts 17:22–31) further shows Paul’s oratorical abilities, even though he notes in 1 Corinthians 2:4 that the power of his preaching did not depend on such a skill.

Overseer. One responsible for controlling and managing a group of people or a task. In the Old Testament, “overseer” refers to those responsible for getting a job done (2 Chr. 2:8) and to those who helped rule a people (Neh. 11:9). A captain in Pharaoh’s guard made Joseph the overseer of his house (Gen. 39:4–5). When an overseer was responsible for slaves, he was sometimes called a taskmaster. The taskmasters over the Israelite slaves in Egypt were particularly cruel (Ex. 1:11–14). Overseers were also sometimes called drivers, foremen, and slavemasters. In the New Testament an overseer is an officer in the church. Some scholars equate this officer with the "elder," while others see it as a distinct office. Some translations do not agree with one another and do not consistently translate the Greek word as "overseer." This word appears in Acts 20:28, Philippians 1:1, 1 Timothy 3:2, and Titus 1:7. Jesus is the great Overseer of the church (1 Pet. 2:25).

Perfumer. One who made perfume. Perfume making is an ancient art. People of the ancient world loved perfumes and used them to cover up unpleasant body odors. The rich, especially royalty, used perfumers (1 Sam. 8:13). Perfumers and cooks are frequently associated in ancient literature, since the skills of both were closely related.

Flower perfume was made by dipping and heating the flowers in oils and by squeezing out the perfume. Egyptian tomb paintings of the 15th century B.C. depict these processes. Tabernacle and temple worship required the services of professional perfumers to make perfumes for the priests as well as incense to burn before God (Ex. 30:25, 35; 1 Chr. 9:30). Guilds of perfumers existed in Old Testament days (Neh. 3:8). Perfumers are sometimes called apothecaries and confectionaries by the KJV.

Pilot (see Sailor).

Plasterer. One who put plaster on the walls of a home (Lev. 14:42–43) to form a smooth surface. Plastering is a very ancient and widespread craft, but homeowners often did their own plastering. Good quality plaster was made by heating broken limestone and gypsum. The lowest quality plaster consisted of clay and straw and was used only in very dry climates. Plaster, called "whitewash" in Deuteronomy 27:2–4, was applied to the altar in the tabernacle and engraved while still wet. God's finger inscribed a message on the dry plaster in Belshazzar's palace (Dan. 5:5).

Plowman (see Farmer).

Poet. One who composed poetry. This involves expressing ideas about things in imagery. Biblical poets used simile, comparing one subject to another (Ps. 125:1); metaphor, referring to a subject in terms of another subject (Ps. 62:2); and other figures of speech. The most famous Old Testament poets are probably Moses (Exodus 15), David (Psalms) and Solomon (Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon). Several New Testament writers, including Paul (Rom. 8:31–39) and John (Rev. 18:2–24), wrote poetry.

Porter. A keeper of the door. This person guarded the entrance to a city, public building (John 18:17), temple, rich man’s house (Mark 13:34), and sheepfold (John 10:3). A guard was stationed at any entrance through which someone unwanted might enter, especially at night. This must have been a lowly job because of the contrast implied in Psalm 84:10, where “doorkeeper” is the opposite of the most luxurious and favorable position. Porters were also called gatekeepers. The duties of the gatekeepers are listed in 1 Chronicles 9:17, 21; 15:17–18, 23–24.

Potter. One who made and decorated pottery. Pottery is a very ancient and developed craft. In its early history, the nation of Israel had professional potters who sat on the edge of a small pit, turning the pottery wheel with their feet. In treading the clay or kneading it by foot it was very important to get the right consistency for a good end product. Many potters probably treaded the clay themselves (Is. 41:25).

The remains of potter’s shops at Lachish (about 1200 B.C.), Megiddo, Gezer, and Hazor (after 1000 B.C.) have been found. These remains include the nearby clay fields, potters’ wheels and kilns, and the dump for unusable pottery. Such a workshop was mentioned by the prophet Jeremiah. The potter’s total control over the clay is likened to God’s control over people (Jer. 18:1–12).

Prefect (see Government Official).

President (see Government Official).

Prince, Princess. A son or daughter of royalty, or a person in a position of authority and responsibility. “Prince” is sometimes translated “duke” or “noble” by some English versions.

Procurer (see Government Official).

Prognosticator (see Astrologer).

Quarryman (see Stoneworker).

Quartermaster (see Government Official).

Reaper (see Laborer).

Recorder (see Government Official).

Refiner (see Metalsmith).

Robber (see Criminal).

Sage (see Astrologer).

Sailor. One who manned a ship. The nation of Israel was never a seafaring power. But the PHOENICIANS were the best known and perhaps most skilled sailors who toiled at sea. The prophet Jonah traveled on a Phoenician ship (Jon. 1:3). Phoenician sailors were skilled as navigators, pilots, oarsmen, and sailmen who sailed their sturdy ships to distant lands in international trade.

Scribe (see Secretary).

Sculptor (see Stoneworker).

Seamster (see Weaver).

Secretary. A man who did the writing and corresponding for another. In Old Testament society this job was done by a scribe (Jer. 36:26, 32). By New Testament times scribal duties had increased considerably. The non-Jewish New Testament world featured public and private secretaries who wrote, usually in shorthand, from dictation, or received the general sense from the author and filled in the rest with appropriate language. The apostle Paul may have dictated his letters (Rom. 16:22; Gal. 6:11; 2 Thess. 3:17).

Sentry (see Watchman).

Sergeant (see Soldier).

Serpent Charmer. One skilled in hypnotizing snakes. This skill was used by the priests and magicians of Egypt before the Exodus (Ps. 58:4; Eccl. 10:11; Jer. 8:17).

Servant. One under another’s authority. In Bible times, a servant could be a slave, a person not free to do his own bidding. Or, he could also be a domestic or hired hand who was paid for his work but free to leave the job. He could also be neither of these, but a volunteer choosing to do someone else’s bidding. This idea may be rooted in and governed by the idea of a covenant. Thus, individual believers (Ps. 78:70–72) or God’s people as a whole (Is. 41:8–10) are His servants. A servant is sometimes referred to in the Bible as an attendant.

Sheepbreeder (see Shepherd).

Sheepshearer (see Shepherd).

Shepherd. One who tends sheep. Abel was the first shepherd mentioned in the Bible. Later Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob became shepherds (Gen. 13:7; 26:20; 30:36). When Israel went into Egypt, the Egyptian rulers isolated them because they considered shepherds unclean (Gen. 46:34). Shepherding and goatherding were among the major occupations of Palestine throughout its history. Sheep and goats were sometimes herded together and sometimes herded separately.

Either way, the methods were the same. Shepherding had many other occupations that grew up around it, including sheepbreeders, and sheepshearers, who cut the sheep’s wool.

Ancient shepherds went before their flocks (John 10:4–5). A flock knew its shepherd’s voice and would follow only him. Often for protection flocks were lodged together at night and separated in the morning when the shepherds called their flock by name. They provided their flocks with water and food (Ps. 23:2; Jer. 31:10). They knew each sheep and lamb. When one was lost, they went out to find it (Ezek. 34:12; Luke 15:4–5). Small lambs, unable to keep up with the flock, were often carried next to a shepherd’s breast inside the fold of his outer garment (Is. 40:11). The shepherd also protected his flock, risking his life if necessary (Amos 3:12; John 10:12).

In the Old Testament God is often called a shepherd. David used this beautiful metaphor for God in Psalm 23. The prophet Isaiah used the same image, probably with Psalm 23 in mind, comparing God’s care of Israel to a shepherd feeding his flock and bearing lambs in “his bosom” (Is. 40:11). According to Jeremiah, God the shepherd protected His flock (Jer. 31:10), while the prophet Ezekiel spoke of the divine shepherd who seeks out His flock (Ezek. 34:12). Jesus declared that He is the good shepherd who cares for, protects, and redeems His flock—the people of God (John 10:2–16). He is the good shepherd who suffers for the sheep (Matt. 26:31) and divides His own from the goats at the day of judgment (Matt. 25:32). He is the “great Shepherd of the sheep” (Heb. 13:20).

In the Old Testament, leaders of God’s people are called shepherds (Num. 27:17; 1 Kin. 22:17). Poor leaders, rebellious against God, are called irresponsible shepherds who desert, mislead, and misfeed God’s flock (Jer. 23:1–4). New Testament leaders are also called shepherds of God’s flock and are admonished to lead and protect His people (Acts 20:28–30).

Shipbuilder. One who built ships. While they were never a seafaring people, the Hebrews were acquainted with ships, as their historical and poetic literature demonstrates (1 Kin. 9:27; Is. 33:21; Ezek. 27:25). The primary shipbuilders of Old Testament days were the Phoenicians, who supplied ships for Solomon’s trading fleet at Ezion Geber (1 Kin. 9:26–27). In the time between the Old and New Testaments, the Greeks and Romans gained prominence as shipbuilders. Smaller fishing boats with a capacity of about 12 men may have been constructed by craftsmen or by the fishermen themselves (Mark 4:1). Shipbuilders were sometimes called shipwrights. Also see Caulker.

Shipwright (see Shipbuilder).

Silversmith (see Metalsmith).

Singer. A professional vocalist, usually trained. David organized 4,000 Levites as temple musicians (1 Chronicles 25). Many of these were probably choir members. temple singers originally were all men between the ages of thirty and fifty. After the captivity, women participated in the choirs (Ezra 2:65).

Slave. One held in bondage by another. In the Old Testament, slaves were both Jewish and Gentile. Jews became slaves through their inability to pay their debts or because of poverty and theft. The Old Testament law protected all slaves and granted them certain rights (Ex. 21:2–11; Lev. 25:39–55; Deut. 21:10–14).

The economy of classical Greece and imperial Rome was based on slave labor, and slaves had fewer rights than under Old Testament law. Christianity, by teaching the equality of all people as God's creatures and objects of the gospel call, has led to the extinction of slavery wherever society is dominated by Christian thought.

Christians, since they are purchased by Christ (1 Cor. 6:20), are to be slaves of Christ (Rom. 6:16–22). On the other hand, the Old Testament calls God's people his servants in a covenantal rather than a purchased sense (Is. 41:8–10; Matt. 12:18).

Slavemaster (see Overseer).

Smelter (see Metalsmith).

Smith (see Metalsmith).

Soldier. A member of a military force. Before SAUL, Israel had no professional soldiers, although each tribe specialized in training its adult males in the use of a particular weapon (1 Chronicles 12). With a few exceptions (Deut. 20:5–8), all men over the age of twenty were liable to be called to arms in emergencies (Num. 1:3). In addition to the militia, Saul chose certain capable fighters to serve him permanently (2 Sam. 13:15). David followed Saul's example in this (1 Sam. 22:2). Solomon boasted a large professional soldiery including cavalrymen, or troops on horseback—the first in Israel's history (1 Kin. 10:26).

These professional soldiers were sometimes referred to in more specific terms. A guard was a soldier assigned to protect a particular person or thing. A charioteer was a soldier who fought from a chariot. As warfare became more developed, chariots were made to hold a driver and one or more fighting soldiers (1 Kin. 22:34; 2 Chr. 18:33). A commander was a soldier who led other soldiers.

During New Testament times, the Romans had a very elaborate and complex army. Specific Roman soldiers are sometimes mentioned in the Bible. A centurion was a noncommissioned officer commanding at least 100 men. A sergeant was often the local policeman, enforcing the law, with punishment pronounced by the magistrate.

Stargazer (see Astrologer).

Steward. One entrusted with caring for a superior's goods. In the Old Testament a steward was over an entire household. He was responsible for managing the householder's material goods (Gen. 43:19). In the New Testament the word "steward" refers to a guardian or curator (Matt. 20:8; Gal. 4:2) in addition to its Old Testament meaning as a manager or superintendent of a household (Luke 8:2–3; 1 Cor. 4:1–2).

The apostle Paul called himself a steward of Christ's household, responsible to Christ the Master for carrying out an assigned task—to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. All Christians are stewards under Christ (1 Pet. 4:10).

Stonecutter (see Stoneworker).

Stonemason (see Stoneworker).

Stoneworker. One who fashioned stone into usable or ornamental items. These included quarrymen or stonecutters who cut stones or slabs of stone in quarries (1 Kin. 5:17; 6:7), stonemasons who shaped the stones and joined them into walls of buildings (2 Kin. 22:6; 1 Chr. 22:2; 2 Chr. 24:12), and sculptors. The most skilled stoneworkers in Old Testament times were from Phoenicia (2 Sam. 5:11; 1 Chr. 14:1). Stoneworkers also hewed out wine vats, cisterns, tombs, and water tunnels.

Many skills were necessary for stoneworkers. Masons used hammers and wooden pegs in quarrying out rock, then sawed it and trimmed it with a pick or an ax. Quarrymen drove wooden wedges into the stone and soaked them until they expanded, causing the rock to crack. The quarryman's hammer is compared to the Word of God (Jer. 23:29). Stoneworkers are sometimes called stonecutters and hewers of stone.

• The beautiful handiwork of stoneworkers on the massive stairway of a temple in ancient Persepolis.

Tailor. One who made clothing. This occupation is implied rather than specifically mentioned in the Bible. In Israel most women made all the family's clothing. This work included preparing the thread or yarn and doing the weaving. Clothing was loose fitting, requiring little design work. The rich, no doubt, had others sew and decorate their clothing for them. The first "tailors" were Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:7) who made loincloths for themselves.

Tanner. One who converted animal skins into leather and made useful or ornamental items from it. Tanning was widespread in the ancient world. Early Israelite families tanned their own hides. But with the growth of cities, leather craftsmen arose. Peter once stayed with a tanner named Simon (Acts 10:6).

Tanning animal skins was an involved process requiring much skill. The hides were soaked until all fat, blood, and hair was removed. After the leather was tanned, it was used for many purposes, including tents (Ex. 26:14), sandals (Ezek. 16:10), hats, skirts, and aprons.

Tapestry Maker (see Weaver).

Taskmaster (see Overseer).

Tentmaker. One who made tents. An ancient craft, tentmaking consisted of cutting and sewing together cloth, frequently of goat's hair, and attaching ropes and loops. Such crafts were passed from father to son. Paul's native city of Cilicia exported Cilician cloth, a cloth of goat's hair. The only direct reference to tentmakers in the Bible occurs in Acts 18:2–3, where Paul, Aquila, and Priscilla are called tentmakers.

Thief (see Criminal).

Tiller (see Farmer).

Town Clerk (see City Clerk).

Trader (see Merchant).

Trapper (see Hunter).

Treasurer (see Government Official).

Trustee (see Government Official).

Viceroy (see Government Official).

Vinedresser (see Farmer).

Watchman. One who guarded or watched over a city or harvest field. Because of the danger of being raided, every Palestinian city or village had a watchman, especially at night. These watchmen were stationed on the city walls (2 Sam. 18:24), a watchtower (2 Kin. 9:17), or a hilltop (Jer. 31:6). Watchmen were responsible for reporting any hostile action or approaching suspicious person. These watchmen sometimes patrolled the city, called out the hours of the night, and especially looked forward to dawn (Is. 21:11–12).

At harvest times watchmen guarded the crops at night. Israel's prophets were responsible for watching for impending divine judgment or blessing (Is. 21:6; 52:8; Jer. 6:17) and bringing the news to the people. Watchmen are sometimes referred to as sentries and lookouts.

Water Carrier. One who went to the well or spring to bring back a household's water. A lowly job, it was assigned to young men (Ruth 2:9) and women (Gen. 24:13; 1 Sam. 9:11), but preferably to the lowliest slaves (Josh. 9:21–27). Some translations refer to this occupation as "drawer of water." Wells and springs were generally situated outside the city gates. Water was carried home in water pots and goatskin bags, sometimes borne by a donkey.

Weaver. One who fashioned threads into cloth. Weaving was known in the ancient world from about 2000 B.C. Almost every household had a loom, and women spent much time at this task (Prov. 31:13, 19, 22, 24). A woman sat before her loom and passed the shuttle back and forth through the warp thread while manipulating the loom. She also made her own yarn or thread from animal hair or plant fibers. For instance, flax was made into linen. In other countries, such as Egypt and Assyria, weaving was done by men. Such professional weavers worked in urban areas. Even urban areas in Israel boasted professional weavers.

Well Digger. One who dug wells. During most of the year there is relatively little rain in Palestine, so having wells and cisterns was quite important. Most scholars believe well diggers were relatively skilled workers. The wells that they dug were considered very valuable. The wells bore specific names (Gen. 26:20–22) and were sometimes fought over by rivals (Gen. 21:25–30).

Starting about the time of the Exodus, people of the ancient world also built cisterns that were usually pear-shaped holes lined with plaster and filled with rain water. They were considerably more skilled in digging through rock and earth and engineering than is often realized. One example of this is Hezekiah's SILOAM tunnel in Jerusalem. It was cut through 5,334 meters (1,750 feet) of solid rock, with workers starting at both ends and meeting in the middle.

Woodcutter (see Woodworker).

Woodworker. One who worked to make wood into usable items. Archaeology has demonstrated that ancient Palestine had forests, and yet wood was scarce and quite expensive. Woodworkers included lumberjacks and woodcutters who felled trees (1 Kin. 5:6); hewers who trimmed and readied them for transportation; laborers who transported them (1 Kin. 5:13–14); carpenters who fashioned them into houses, furniture, tools, and other useful items (2 Kin. 22:6); and those who carved wood into bas-relief and statue artistry (Is. 40:20; Jer. 10:3–4). Also see Builder.

OCHRAN [OCK ran]���a form of OCRAN.

OCRAN [OCK ran]—the father of Pagiel (Num. 1:13; Ochran, KJV).

ODED [OH dead]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The father of Azariah the prophet (2 Chr. 15:1).
2. A prophet of Samaria during the reign of Pekah, king of Israel (2 Chr. 28:9). Pekah invaded Judah and defeated the army of Ahaz. Pekah then carried 200,000 captives to Samaria, the capital of the northern kingdom of Israel. As the victorious army drew near the city, Oded the prophet met them, urging a policy of mercy and forgiveness toward the Judahite captives. His request had a transforming effect on the Israelites, who fed and clothed the captives, brought them to Jericho, and gave them their freedom.

ODOR (see SWEET INCENSE).

OFFAL—the waste or castoff parts of a butchered animal. In the sin offering of Israel's system of worship, the offal was burned outside the camp (Ex. 29:14; Lev. 4:11–12; Num. 19:5; dung, KJV, NRSV).

OFFENSE—a word with two distinct meanings in the Bible:

1. That which prompts a person to bristle with indignation or disgust. This type of offense may in fact be from God, according to its usage in the Bible. The apostle Paul spoke of "the offense of the cross" (Gal. 5:11). The Jews were offended because faith without Jewish legal observances was offered as the only means of salvation.
2. Offense also refers to those things that cause people to do something against their conscience. This type of offense may be from Satan or from human beings. Its effect is to entice a person to sin (Matt. 5:29; 17:23; 18:6–9). It is this kind of offense that can be produced by the "grey" areas of the Christian life—those practices that are right for some but wrong for others (Rom. 14:13; 1 Cor. 8:13).

OFFERINGS (see SACRIFICE; SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS).

OFFICER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

OFFICES OF CHRIST (see JESUS CHRIST).

OFFSCOURING—a coating of filth or refuse; something vile and worthless. The prophet Jeremiah lamented that Jerusalem was left as “an off-scouring and refuse” in the midst of her enemies (Lam. 3:45; scum, NIV).

OG [ahg]—a king of the Amorites of the land of Bashan, a territory east of the Jordan River and north of the River Jabbok (Num. 21:33; 32:33). Og was king over 60 fortified cities, including Ashtaroth and Edrei. He was defeated by Moses and the Israelites (Deut. 3:6). Then his kingdom was given to the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.

Og was the last survivor of the race of giants (Deut. 3:11). His huge iron bedstead was kept on display in Rabbah long after his death (Deut. 3:11).

OHAD [OH had]—a son of Simeon (Gen. 46:10; Ex. 6:15).

OHEL [OWE hell] (shelter)—a son or descendant of Zerubbabel (1 Chr. 3:20).

OHOLAH [oh HOH lah] (her own tent)—a symbolic name for Samaria, capital of the Northern Kingdom, and the ten tribes that made up this nation (Ezek. 23:4–5, 36, 44). The prophet Ezekiel used the allegorical figure of two harlot sisters: Oholah (Aholah, KJV), and Oholibah (Aholibah, KJV), to represent Jerusalem and the kingdom of Judah. Oholah and Oholibah are pictured as lusting after the Assyrians, Babylonians, and Egyptians.

OHOLIAB [o HOLE ih ab]—a form of AHOLIAB.

OHOLIBAH [o HOLE ih bah] (my tent is in her)—a symbolic name given by the prophet Ezekiel to Jerusalem, the capital of Judah (Ezek. 23:4–44), to signify its unfaithfulness to God.

OHOLIBAMAH [oh HOLE ih bah mah]—a form of AHOLIBAMAH.

OIL, OIL TREE (see Olive under PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

OINTMENT—a perfumed oil, sometimes used in Bible times to anoint people as well as bodies for burial.

The term “ointment” frequently means oil, particularly olive oil mixed with aromatic ingredients such as spices, myrrh, and extracts of the nard plant. Many of these ingredients were expensive, leading the prophet Amos to associate those who used “the best ointment” with a life of self-indulgence (Amos 6:6). The use of ointment originated with the Egyptians, and it eventually spread to neighboring nations, including Israel. Ointment was often imported from Phoenicia in small alabaster boxes that best preserved its aroma. Some of the better ointments were known to keep their distinctive scents for centuries.

Perfumed ointments were widely used in warm climates of the ancient world to combat perspiration odor. Ointment had a cosmetic use among the Greeks, Romans, Egyptians, and probably the Jews. It was customary to anoint the head and clothing on festive occasions; and ointment containing myrrh was used to anoint the dead before burial (Luke 23:56). In ancient times, as today, ointment was also used to soothe wounds and bruises.

Ointments, or perfumed oil, are often mentioned in the Bible for both their practical and ceremonial uses. God instructed Moses to compound a “holy anointing oil” composed of pure myrrh, sweet cinnamon, sweet calamus, cassia, and olive oil (Ex. 30:25). The vessels in the tabernacle were anointed with this holy ointment. It was also used to consecrate Aaron and his sons to the priesthood (Exodus 26–30). Ointments were also used by the Hebrew prophets to anoint new kings (2 Kin. 9:3). It was also used in anointing the sick (James 5:14) and in preparing bodies for burial (Mark 14:8; Luke 23:56).

Jesus was deeply touched on more than one occasion by people who anointed Him with perfumed ointment. He seemed to accept these deeds as acts of worship (Matt. 26:6–13; Luke 7:36–50; John 12:1–8). At the home of Simon the leper in Bethany, Mary poured ointment of costly nard on Jesus’ head. This spontaneous expression of love moved the Master to silence her critics with His beautiful tribute: “Let her alone . . . She has done a good work for me . . . She has come beforehand to anoint my body for burial” (Mark 14:6, 8).

OLD GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

OLD TESTAMENT—the first of the two major sections into which the Bible is divided, the other being the New Testament. The title “Old Testament" apparently came from the writings of the apostle Paul, who declared, "For until this day the same veil remains unlifted in the reading of the Old Testament, because the veil is taken away in Christ" (2 Cor. 3:14).

The word testament is best translated "covenant." God called a people, the nation of Israel, to live in covenant with Him. The Old Testament begins with God's creation of the universe and continues by describing the mighty acts of God in and through His people. It closes about 400 years before the coming of Jesus Christ, who established a NEW COVENANT as prophesied by the prophet Jeremiah (Jer. 31:31–34). Also see BIBLE.

OLD TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY (see CHRONOLOGY, OLD TESTAMENT).

OLIVE (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

OLIVES, MOUNT OF (see MOUNT OF OLIVES).

OLIVET DISCOURSE—Jesus' discussion on the Mount of Olives about the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the world (Matt. 24:1—25:46; Mark 13:1–37; Luke 21:5–36).

In response to Jesus' prophecy that the temple would be destroyed, the disciples asked when this would occur and how they would know it was about to happen. The disciples believed that the temple would be destroyed at the end of the world when, among other things, Jesus would return. That is why Matthew records the two questions, "When will these things [the destruction of the temple] be? And what will be the sign of Your coming, and of the end of the age?" (Matt. 24:3). What makes the Olivet discourse difficult to understand is that Jesus intermingles His answers to these two questions.

The key to unraveling His answers is the repetition of the key phrase "take heed" (Mark 13:5, 23, 33). The disciples' first question was, "When will these things be? And what will be the sign when all these things will be fulfilled?" (Mark 13:4). Jesus began by saying, "Take heed that no one deceives you" (Mark 13:5); then He described the events leading up to the temple's destruction (vv. 6–22). He then said, "But take heed; see, I have told you all [these] things beforehand"

(Mark 13:23). By repeating the phrase “these things,” He provides a conclusion to the first answer.

The key note in this first answer is the warning “take heed”: there will be persecutions (Mark 13:9–13), wars and famines (13:7–8), false prophets, and false messiahs (13:6), all of which will lead up to the destruction of Jerusalem (13:14–23). But despite all these woes, the disciples must “take heed” because “the end [of the world] is not yet” (13:7). Mark 13:6–23 is therefore the answer to the question of when the temple will be destroyed. Furthermore, it is an accurate picture of the havoc that existed in Jerusalem during the Roman siege of A.D. 70 when the city and the temple were finally destroyed. Jesus’ prophecy was therefore fulfilled in the years leading up to the temple’s destruction (although some would say it is also a picture of what will be fulfilled again at the end of time).

The disciples had assumed that the temple would be destroyed only at the end of the world. They were mistaken, and Jesus said that despite all the woes leading up to the temple’s destruction, when it happens the end of the world still will not be in sight. Therefore in Mark 13:24–27 He answered the next logical question: what signs will precede the end of the world? The phrase “in those days” is a common Old Testament expression used when speaking of the end times. In those days there will be signs in the heavens; and then Jesus, the Son of Man, will come.

We must be prepared for His coming and must not be taken by surprise. In Mark’s Gospel, Jesus remarked that no one except the Father knows exactly when “that day”—Christ’s return at the end of time—will be (Mark 13:32). Therefore we must be on our guard. Matthew and Luke close with further warnings to wait carefully in anticipation.

OLYMPAS [oh LIMP us]—a Christian in Rome to whom the apostle Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:15).

OMAR [OH mer]—a son of Eliphaz and grandson of Esau (Gen. 36:11, 15; 1 Chr. 1:36).

OMEGA [oh MAY gah]—the last letter of the Greek alphabet, used figuratively in the phrase “the Alpha and the Omega” as a title describing both God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ (Rev. 1:8, 11).

OMEN—a sign used by magicians and fortune tellers to predict future events. God commanded the Israelites not to allow one who interprets omens (Deut. 18:10; an augur, NRSV) to live among them. Also see MAGIC, SORCERY, AND DIVINATION.

OMER (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

OMNIPOTENCE [om NIP oh tunce]—a theological term that refers to the all-encompassing power of God. The almighty God expects human beings to obey Him, and He holds them responsible for their thoughts and actions. Nevertheless, He is the all-powerful Lord who has created all things and sustains them by the Word of His power (Gen. 1:1–3; Heb. 1:3).

God reveals in the Bible that He is all-powerful and in the final sense is the ruler of nature and history. Before Him "the nations are as a drop in a bucket, and are counted as the small dust on the balance" (Is. 40:15). Yet He has so fashioned humankind that He graciously appeals to every person to return to Him.

OMNIPRESENCE [om nih PRES ence]—a theological term that refers to the unlimited nature of God or His ability to be everywhere at all times. God is not like the manufactured idols of ancient cultures that were limited to one altar or temple area. God reveals Himself in the Bible as the Lord who is everywhere. God was present as Lord in all creation (Ps. 139:7–12), and there is no escaping Him. He is present in our innermost thoughts. Even as we are formed in the womb, He knows all the days of our future.

God sees in secret and rewards in secret, as Jesus taught His disciples; He looks not only on outward actions, but especially on the inner attitudes of a person's heart (Matt. 6:1–18). Because God is the Creator and Sustainer of time and space, He is everywhere. Being everywhere, He is our great Comforter, Friend, and Redeemer.

OMNISCIENCE [om NISH unce]—a theological term that refers to God's superior knowledge and wisdom, His power to know all things. God is the Lord who knows our thoughts from afar. He is acquainted with all our ways, knowing our words even before they are on our tongues (Ps. 139:1–6, 13–16). He needs to consult no one for knowledge or understanding (Is. 40:13–14). He is the all-knowing Lord who prophesies the events of the future, including the death and resurrection of His Son (Isaiah 53) and the return of Christ at the end of this age when death will be finally overcome (Rom. 8:18–39; 1 Cor. 15:51–57).

Only the all-knowing and all-powerful God can guarantee real freedom from sin, decay, and death. He can begin a process of change in believers during the present age; for “where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty” (2 Cor. 3:17).

OMRI [UM rih]—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. The sixth king of the northern kingdom of Israel (885–874 B.C.). Omri is first mentioned as the commander of the army of Israel under King Elah. While Omri besieged the Philistine city of Gibbethon, another military figure, Zimri, conspired against Elah, killed him, and established himself as king. Zimri, however, had little support in Israel, and the army promptly made Omri its king. Omri returned to the capital with his army, besieged the city, and Zimri committed suicide. Tibni, the son of Ginath, continued to challenge Omri’s reign; but after four years Tibni died and Omri became the sole ruler of Israel (1 Kin. 16:21–28).

   Omri was a king of vision and wisdom. From Shemer he purchased a hill on which he built a new city, Samaria, making it the new capital of Israel. Samaria was more defensible than Tirzah had been. Because it was strategically located, Omri was able to control the north-south trade routes in the region. Archaeological excavations at Samaria revealed buildings of excellent workmanship—an indication of the prosperity the city enjoyed during his reign.

   The MOABITE STONE tells of Omri’s success against King Mesha of Moab (2 Kin. 3:4). But Omri’s conflict with Syria proved to be less successful, and he was forced to grant a number of cities to the Syrians (1 Kin. 20:34).
2. A member of the tribe of Benjamin and a son of Becher (1 Chr. 7:8).
3. A member of the tribe of Judah and a son of Imri (1 Chr. 9:4).

4. The son of Michael and a prince of the tribe of Issachar during the time of David (1 Chr. 27:18).

ON [own]—the name of a man and a city in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Peleth, of the tribe of Reuben (Num. 16:1). On joined Korah, Dathan, and Abiram in a rebellion against Moses and Aaron.
2. An ancient city of Lower Egypt in the Nile Delta on the east bank of the Nile River, about 31 kilometers (19 miles) north of Memphis and about 10 kilometers (6 miles) northeast of Cairo. Because On was the principal seat of the cult of Ra whose devotees worshiped the sun-god, the Greeks called the city Heliopolis, or “City of the Sun” (Is. 19:18, NRSV). On was also called Aven (Ezek. 30:17), which means “nothingness” or “emptiness,” probably because of its idolatry. At the time of the Greek historian Herodotus (fifth century B.C.), the priests of On were considered the most learned men in the history of Egypt. Associated with the temple of the sun were a medical school and a training center for the priests of On. Greek philosophers who studied in Egypt attended these institutions. Asenath, the Egyptian wife of Joseph, was the daughter of Poti-Pherah, a priest of On (Gen. 41:45, 50; 46:20).

ONAGER (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

ONAM [OH namm]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Shobal (1 Chr. 1:40).
2. Founder of a clan in Judah (1 Chr. 2:26, 28).

ONAN [OH nan]—the second son of Judah by the daughter of Shua the Canaanite (Gen. 38:2, 4). He was a wicked man, and the Lord put him to death (Gen. 38:10).

ONESIMUS [oh NESS ih muss] (useful)—a slave of Philemon and an inhabitant of Colossae (Col. 4:9; Philem. 10). When Onesimus fled from his master to Rome, he met the apostle Paul. Paul witnessed to him, and Onesimus became a Christian. In his letter to Philemon, Paul spoke of Onesimus as “my own heart” (Philem. 12), indicating that Onesimus had become like a son to him.

Paul convinced Onesimus to return to his master, Philemon. He also sent a letter with Onesimus, encouraging Philemon to treat Onesimus as a brother rather than a slave. Paul implied that freeing Onesimus was Philemon's Christian duty, but he stopped short of commanding him to do so. Onesimus accompanied Tychicus, who delivered the Epistle to the Colossians as well as the Epistle to Philemon.

Some scholars believe this Onesimus is Onesimus the bishop, praised in a letter to the second-century church at Ephesus from Ignatius of Antioch.

ONESIPHORUS [on ee SIF oh rus] (profitable)—a Christian from Ephesus who befriended the apostle Paul (2 Tim. 1:16–18; 4:18). Not only did Onesiphorus minister to Paul while the apostle was in Ephesus; he also ministered to Paul during his imprisonment in Rome (2 Tim. 1:17). Onesiphorus overcame any fears he had for his own safety to visit and minister to Paul in prison. Unable to repay Onesiphorus for his "mercy," Paul prayed that he might "find mercy from the Lord in that Day" (2 Tim. 1:18), referring to the Judgment Day.

ONION (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

ONLY BEGOTTEN—a title used by John to designate Jesus' uniqueness (John 1:14, 18; 3:16, 18; 1 John 4:9). This title comes from combining two Greek words that mean "single kind." Therefore, it means "the only one of its kind" or "unique."

ONO [OH noh]—a fortified city in the territory of Benjamin, rebuilt by the sons of Elpaal (1 Chr. 8:12). The site of Ono is generally identified with present-day Kefr 'Ana, about 49 kilometers (30 miles) northwest of Jerusalem.

ONYCHA (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

ONYX (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

OPHEL [OH fell] (knoll)—the northeast part of the triangular hill in ancient Jerusalem on which the CITY OF DAVID stood. Situated south of the temple area, the hill was the site of the original city of the JEBUSITES. Surrounded on three sides by deep valleys, the ancient city was so strongly fortified that it was considered unconquerable. But David captured this center of Canaanite power and made it his new capital city (2 Sam. 5:6–9).

Usually the name Ophel is given to the entire hill. But it is more accurate to identify the hill of Ophel with the fortifications built on the eastern ridge of the hill that overlooks the Kidron Valley. Jotham, king of Judah (750–732 B.C.), built extensively on the wall of Ophel (2 Chr. 27:3). Manasseh, king of Judah (696–642 B.C.), built a high wall outside the City of David; and it enclosed Ophel (2 Chr. 33:14). The NETHINIM, or temple servants, lived in Ophel after the captivity (Neh. 3:26–27; 11:21).

OPHIR [OH fur]—the name of a man and a land in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Joktan (Gen. 10:29; 1 Chr. 1:23). The name may possibly refer to a tribe that inhabited modern Somaliland.
2. A region from which David and Solomon obtained gold (1 Kin. 9:28; 1 Chr. 29:4). Although Ophir is mentioned several times in the Old Testament, its exact location remains a mystery. Some believe Ophir was an island situated in the Red Sea; others think it was in India; still others believe it was in Africa, perhaps Somaliland, or on the southwest corner of the Arabian peninsula, perhaps in the land of Sheba.

   Ophir is consistently associated in the Old Testament with gold, probably its most noteworthy product. The gold may have come from Ophir itself, or it may have simply passed through Ophir from its place of origin. King Solomon sent ships to Ophir for gold (2 Chr. 8:17–18). In addition, they brought a great abundance of algum trees (sandalwood) and precious stones from Ophir (2 Chr. 9:10). Near the end of his life, David announced that he had collected 3,000 talents of gold of Ophir and 7,000 thousand talents of refined silver for the building of the temple (1 Chr. 29:4). Later, Jehoshaphat unsuccessfully attempted to send ships to Ophir for gold (1 Kin. 22:48).

   The air of mystery about Ophir adds to its significance when spoken of in a symbolic way in the Bible. Psalm 45:9 speaks of “the queen in gold from Ophir." Job 28:16 says that wisdom "cannot be valued in the gold of Ophir," suggesting its incomparable worth.

OPHNI [AHF nih]—a city in the territory allotted to the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:24).

OPHRAH [AHF rah]—the name of two cities and a man in the Old Testament:

1. A city of the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:23; 1 Sam. 13:17).
2. A city west of the Jordan River, occupied by the Abiezrites, a family of the tribe of Manasseh (Judg. 6:24). Ophrah was the place where GIDEON lived (Judg. 8:32).
3. A son of Meonothai, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:14).

ORACLE [OR uh cull]—a prophetic speech, utterance, or declaration. In Greek religion, an oracle was a response given by a pagan god to a human question. Oracles were uttered by persons entranced, by those who interpreted dreams, and by those who saw or heard patterns in nature. The most famous oracle, in this sense, was the Oracle at Delphi. Delphi was the shrine of Apollo—the Greek god of the sun, prophecy, music, medicine, and poetry.

The word "oracle" is used in several ways in the Bible. In the Book of Numbers it is used to describe the prophecies of Balaam the son of Beor, the soothsayer (Numbers 23–24; Josh. 13:22). The Hebrew word translated "oracle" means a "similitude, parable, or proverb." In 2 Samuel 16:23 the word "oracle" is a translation of a Hebrew word that means "word" or "utterance." It refers to a communication from God given for man's guidance.

A different Hebrew word is translated "oracle" in Jeremiah 23:33–38 (burden, KJV). This word means "a thing lifted up"; it can refer to a prophetic utterance as well as a physical burden. Jeremiah plays upon this double meaning and speaks of the prophetic oracle as a burden that is difficult to bear.

When the New Testament speaks of oracles, it sometimes refers to the Old Testament or some portion of it (Acts 7:38; Rom. 3:2). Hebrews 5:12 uses the term to speak of both the Old Testament revelation and the Word made flesh, Jesus Christ. First Peter 4:11 warns that the teacher of Christian truths must speak as one who utters oracles of God —a message from God and not his own opinions.

ORACLES, SIBYLLINE (see APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE).

ORATOR (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

ORCHARD—a grove of fruit or nut trees (Eccl. 2:5; Song 4:13). In the Near East, plantations of fruit trees, especially POMEGRANATES, were well-known. Orchards also contained olives, nuts, figs, and spice trees. Also see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE.

ORDAIN, ORDINATION—the process of commissioning or consecrating a priest for sanctuary service (Exodus 29) or a pastor or other officer of the church. This process is seldom mentioned in the New Testament. Some scholars doubt whether the solemn service we know today as ordination was practiced in the time of Christ. However, while the technical sense of the term does not occur in the New Testament, several references do indicate an official commissioning ceremony.

The Twelve were "chosen" and "sent" by Christ (Mark 3:13–19; Luke 6:12–16), but without any ordination service. The same is true of the election of Matthias (Acts 1:26). The seven were commissioned by the "laying on of hands" (Acts 6:6). Paul and Barnabas were commissioned by the Antioch church in the same manner (Acts 13:3). However, the laying on of hands was widespread in the ancient world and does not necessarily point to an ordination service.

The primary evidence of an ordination service comes from 1 Timothy 4:14, where Paul apparently speaks of an official ceremony. Timothy's special spiritual "gift" was given to him "by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." From 2 Timothy 1:6 it would seem that Paul joined with them in this service.

The ordination of a Christian leader is an act of the church by which the responsibility of an office is passed on to an individual. Ordination is a solemn affair for the one who is commissioned and the church that commissions.

OREB [OH reb] (raven)—the name of a man and a place in the Old Testament:

1. One of two Midianite princes defeated by Gideon and beheaded by the Ephraimites near the Jordan River (Judg. 7:25; 8:3; Ps. 83:11). Also see ZEEB.
2. A rock near Beth Barah near the Jordan River where the Midianite prince Oreb was killed (Judg. 7:25; Is. 10:26).

OREN [OH ren] (cedar)—a son of Jerahmeel, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 2:25).

ORGAN (see MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE).

ORION [oh RYE un]—the name of a constellation, consisting of thousands of stars, which is mentioned in the Old Testament (Job 9:9; 38:31; Amos 5:8). The constellation is near Gemini and Taurus, and contains the giant red star Betelgeuse and Rigel, a blue-white star of first magnitude. Most of the stars of Orion cannot be seen without the aid of a telescope.

Also see ASTRONOMY.

ORNAMENTS—decorative or religious jewelry and other items attached to the clothing or body in Bible times. The Bible speaks often of various kinds of ornaments worn by both men and women (Gen. 24:22; Ex. 12:35). These ornaments were worn for dignity (Gen. 41:42), as well as decoration (Song 1:10). Rich women were especially adorned in a lavish way (Is. 3:16, 18–23), but the prophet Jeremiah pointed out that every Jewish maid was attracted to jewelry (Jer. 2:32).

Among Jewish women, ornaments consisted of rings worn on the nose (Is. 3:21; Ezek. 16:12), ears, upper and lower arm, and legs. ANKLETS and ANKLE CHAINS were worn on the ankles. Hebrew men did not wear nose rings.

Egyptian mummies with as many as nine rings on a single hand have been discovered. Some rings were SIGNET bearing the legal seal of an individual. The king's seal was his signature. It bore his personal authority (Gen. 41:42; Dan. 6:17). It could be worn on the finger, on a cord around the neck, or attached to an armlet.

Often jewelry was amulets, or charms to ward off evil spirits or to please the gods (Gen. 35:4; Judg. 8:24). These might be earrings or pendants around one's neck. Some amulets were prayers or curses written on papyrus or parchment, wrapped in linen, and attached to one's body.

Among the Jews, men wore PHYLACTERIES or FRONTLETS, which consisted of passages of Scripture wrapped in leather and attached to the arm or forehead. These were worn while praying.

Both men and women took considerable pains with arranging and caring for their hair. This was true of men with their beards. Women wore their hair very long, braided, held in place with combs and pins, and often ornamented with gold coins, chains, and other jewelry.

ORNAN [AWR nan]—a Jebusite prince who owned a threshing floor on Mount Moriah (1 Chron 21:15). David purchased the property, where he built an altar to the Lord. Ornan was also called ARAUNAH.

ORONTES [oh RAHN tez]—the chief river of Syria, in southwest Asia. Three important cities of the Old Testament period were on the Orontes: Riblah (2 Kin. 23:33–35), Hamath (1 Kin. 8:65), and Kadesh. The Orontes River is not mentioned in the Bible.

ORPAH [AWR pah]—a Moabite woman who married Chilion, one of the two sons of Elimelech and Naomi (Ruth 1:4). When Elimelech and his sons died in Moab, Orpah accompanied Naomi, her mother-in-law, part of the way to Bethlehem and then returned "to her people and to her gods" (Ruth 1:14) in Moab.

ORPHAN—a child deprived by death of one or both parents (John 14:18; James 1:27). Jesus used the word symbolically, promising His followers, "I will not leave you orphans" (comfortless, KJV; orphaned, NRSV; bereft, REB). In His absence, Jesus promised to send the Holy Spirit, who would serve as the believer's teacher, guide, guardian, and protector. The fatherless, or orphans, are included among the needy who need mercy and compassion (Deut. 10:18; Job 22:9; James 1:26–27).

ORYX (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

OSEE [OH zee]—Greek form of HOSEA.

OSHEA [oh SHAY ah]—a form of HOSHEA.

OSNAPPER [oz NAP purr]—the name for ASHURBANIPAL, a king of Assyria (Ezra 4:10).

OSPREY, OSSIFRAGE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

OSTIA [AHS tih ah] (mouth)—the seaport for the city of Rome. An ancient city of Italy at the mouth of the Tiber River, Ostia was about 25 kilometers (15.5 miles) from Rome.

OSTRACA [OSS treh kuh] (potsherds)—the plural of ostrakon, a Greek word for potsherd (broken piece of pottery). Less expensive than PAPYRUS sheets or parchment, pottery fragments were commonly used in the ancient world as a writing material. Inscribed with ink, potsherds were widely used for letters, receipts, notes, inventory lists, brief memoranda, and school lists. Although the word “ostraca” is not used in the Bible, potsherds are mentioned in the Old Testament (Job 2:8; Ps. 22:15; Is. 45:9), but not as writing materials. Archaeologists have unearthed thousands of ostraca in Egypt and Palestine.

OSTRICH (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

OTHNI [OATH nih]—a Levite gatekeeper of the tabernacle in the days of David (1 Chr. 26:7).

OTHNIEL [OATH nih el]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The first judge of Israel (Judg. 1:13; 3:9, 11). Othniel was a son of Kenaz and probably was a nephew of Caleb. When the Israelites forgot the Lord and served the pagan gods of Canaan, the king of Mesopotamia oppressed them for eight years. When the Israelites repented of their evil and cried out to the Lord for deliverance, Othniel was raised up by the Lord to deliver His people. Othniel was one of four judges (the other three were Gideon, Jephthah, and Samson) of whom the Scripture says, "The Spirit of the LORD came upon him" (Judg. 3:10).
2. An ancestor of Heldai (1 Chr. 27:15).

OUCHES—an Old English word, used by the KJV, which denoted sockets or cavities in which gems were set (Ex. 28:11; settings of gold, NKJV).

OUTCASTS—a word used in the Old Testament to refer to refugees or exiles from the land of Israel (Ps. 147:2; Is. 11:12; 56:8). The modern idea of outcasts refers to those who are rejected by society. In the Bible, however, the word corresponds to our refugees—those forced from their homes by terror of war (Is. 16:3–4; Jer. 40:12; 49:5, 36). It is used also of those who were taken into captivity for breaking God's covenant (Is. 11:12; 56:8). Thus, "the outcasts" is a technical term for the DISPERSION.

OVEN (see BREAD; TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

OVENS, TOWER OF THE—a tower on the wall of Jerusalem restored by Nehemiah (Neh. 3:11; 12:38; tower of the furnaces, KJV, NASB).

OVERSEER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

OWL, OX (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

OX-GOAD (see GOAD).

OZEM [OH zim]—the name of two men in 1 Chronicles:

1. The sixth son of Jesse and a brother of David (1 Chr. 2:15).
2. A son of Jerahmeel (1 Chr. 2:25).

OZIAS [oh ZIE us]—a form of UZZIAH.

OZNI [AHZ nih] (my hearing)—a member of the tribe of Gad and the ancestor of a tribal family, the OZNITES (Num. 26:16), also called Ezbon (Gen. 46:16).

OZNITES [AHZ nites]—the descendants of OZNI (Num. 26:16).

P

PAARAI [PAY uh righ]—one of David’s mighty men (2 Sam. 23:35), also called Naarai the son of Ezbai (1 Chr. 11:37).

PADAN, PADDAN [PAD uhn]—forms of PADAN ARAM.

PADAN ARAM [PAD uhn AH rem] (the plain of Aram)—the area of Upper Mesopotamia around Haran and the home of Abraham after he moved from Ur of the Chaldeans (Gen. 25:20; Paddan Aran, NIV; Paddan-aram, NRSV). Abraham later sent his servant to Padan Aram to find a bride for his son Isaac (Gen. 25:20). Much later, Isaac’s son Jacob fled to Padan Aram to avoid the wrath of his brother Esau and dwelt there with Laban (Gen. 28:2, 5–7). The region was also referred to as Padan (Gen. 48:7; Paddan, NIV, NRSV).

PADON [PAY duhn]—a family of temple servants who returned with Zerubbabel after the captivity (Ezra 2:44).

PAGAN—a follower of a false god or a heathen religion; one who delights in sensual pleasures and material goods. After the return from the captivity, Ezra and Nehemiah carried on a vigorous campaign against the practice of marriage between Israelites and the pagan women of the land (Ezra 10:2, 10–18, 44; Neh. 13:26–27, 30).

PAGIEL [PAY gih uhl]—leader of the tribe of Asher during the wilderness wanderings (Num. 7:72; 10:26). Pagiel helped take the first census of Israel.

PAHATH–MOAB [PAY hath MOE ab] (governor of Moab)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. The founder of a clan or family, members of which returned to Jerusalem after the captivity. Under Zerubbabel’s leadership, 2,812 members of the family returned (Ezra 2:6). Under Ezra’s leadership, another company of 200 males of Pahath–Moab also returned from the captivity (Ezra 8:4).
2. A man who sealed the covenant with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:14). Evidently he represented the entire clan of Pahath–Moab.

PAI [PAY eye]—a city in Edom and home of King Hadad (1 Chr. 1:50). In Genesis 36:39 the king is called Hadar and his city is referred to as Pau.

PALAL [PAY luhl]—a son of Uzai (Neh. 3:25). Palal helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem after the captivity.

PALANQUIN [puh LAN kwin]—a portable chair with a canopy carried by four servants. Kings of the ancient world used such chairs as a symbol of their rank and power. The chair sat in the center of two long poles, one on each side, which rested on the shoulders of the servants. Solomon had a luxurious palanquin, which featured silver poles, a golden base, and a purple seat (Song 3:9–10; chariot, KJV; carriage, NIV; sedan chair, NASB).

PALESTINA [pal ess TIE nuh]—the west coast of Canaan, from the Brook of Egypt to Joppa (Ex. 15:14; Philistia, NRSV, NASB, REB, NIV). Palestina is an alternate spelling for PHILISTIA and PALESTINE.

PALESTINE [PAL ess tyne]—the land promised by God to Abraham and his descendants and eventually the region where the Hebrew people lived (see Map 7, D–2).

Palestine (or Palestina) is a tiny land bridge between the continents of Asia, Africa, and Europe. The word itself originally identified the region as "the land of the Philistines," a warlike tribe that inhabited much of the region alongside the Hebrew people. But the older name for Palestine was CANAAN, the term most frequently used in the Old Testament. The AMARNA Letters of the 14th century B.C. referred to "the land of Canaan," applying the term to the coastal region inhabited by the PHOENICIANS. After the Israelites took the land from the Canaanites, the entire country became known as the "land of Israel" (1 Sam. 13:19; Matt. 2:20) and the "land of promise" (Heb. 11:9).

The term "Palestine" as a name for the entire land of Canaan, beyond the coastal plains of the Phoenicians, was first used by the fifth century B.C. historian Herodotus. After the Jewish revolt of A.D. 135, the Romans replaced the Latin name Judea with the Latin Palaestina as their name for this province. Although the prophet Zechariah referred to this region as the “Holy Land” (Zech. 2:12), it was not until the Middle Ages that this land became popularly known as the Holy Land.

Location. The medieval concept that Palestine was the center of the earth (see Ezek. 5:5) is not as farfetched as one might expect. This tiny strip of land not only unites the peoples and lands of Asia, Africa, and Europe but also the five seas known as the Mediterranean Sea, the Black Sea, the Caspian Sea, the Red Sea, and the Persian Gulf. Palestine was sandwiched in between two dominant cultures of the ancient world—Egypt to the south and Babylon–Assyria–Persia between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers to the northeast.

Palestine is also the focal point of the three great world religions: Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. It has been the land corridor for most of the world’s armies and, according to the Book of Revelation, will be the scene of the final great conflict of history, the Battle of Armageddon (Rev. 16:16).

The boundaries of Palestine were not clearly defined in ancient times—a problem that plagues the area even today. Generally, the Israelites occupied the land bordered on the south by the Wadi el-’Arish and Kadesh Barnea and on the north by the foothills of Mount Hermon. The Mediterranean Sea formed a natural western boundary and the Jordan River a natural eastern boundary, except that two and a half of the Israelite tribes occupied the region known as TRANSJORDAN, the land east of the Jordan River.

At certain times in Israel’s history, the territory they occupied was much larger. During the days of the United Monarchy under David and Solomon, Israel controlled Hamath, Damascus, and the region beyond as far as the Euphrates River. They also held dominion over Ammon, Moab, and Edom, stretching the nation’s borders from the mountains of Lebanon to the waters of the Red Sea.

The boundaries of the Promised Land defined in Numbers 34, as promised to Moses, were much more extensive than the region in which the Hebrews eventually settled. The southern boundary was placed at Kadesh Barnea and the northern boundary at “the entrance of Hamath” (Num. 34:8; Lebo Hamath, NIV), which may either be the entrance to the Biqa Valley between the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon Mountains or farther north near modern Lebweh, some 23 kilometers (14 miles) north of historic Baalbek.

It is also clear that the land promised to Abraham and his descendants for an everlasting possession included an area similar to that seen by Moses and greater than that area actually inhabited by the Israelites. This covenant promise to Abraham is the basis for the modern Israeli claim to Palestine (Gen. 12:7; 28:4; 48:4).

Size. To the jet-age traveler Palestine seems quite small. The expression "from Dan to Beersheba" (1 Sam. 3:20) refers to a north-south distance of only about 240 kilometers (150 miles). The width of the region is even less impressive. In the north, from Acco on the coast to the Sea of Galilee is a distance of only 45 kilometers (28 miles). In the broader south, from Gaza on the coast to the Dead Sea is a distance of only 88 kilometers (54 miles). The distance between Jaffa and Jericho is only 72 kilometers (45 miles); Nazareth to Jerusalem is only 98 kilometers (60 miles).

The land area from Dan to Beersheba in Cisjordan (the region west of the Jordan River) is approximately 6,000 square miles—a region smaller than Hawaii. If the area east of the Jordan River (Transjordan) is included, the maximum total area of Palestine amounts to only 10,000 square miles—an area smaller than the state of Maryland.

People. The history of Palestine is complicated by the many different cultures and civilizations that have flourished in the region. The first historical reference to the inhabitants of Canaan occurs in Genesis 10. Canaan, the son of Ham and the grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:6; 5:32), is said to have fathered most of the inhabitants of the land. These include Sidon (the Phoenicians), Heth (the Hittites), and the Jebusites (who lived near Jerusalem), the Amorites (in the hill country), the Girgashites (unknown), the Hivites (peasants from the northern hills), the Arkites (from Arka in Phoenicia), the Sinites (from the northern coast of Lebanon), the Arvadites (from the island of Arvad), the Zemarites (from Simura), and the Hamathites (from Hamath; Gen. 10:15–18).

The native inhabitants of Canaan were tall, giant-like, and stalwart races known as the Anakim (Josh. 11:21–22), the Rephaim (Gen. 14:5), and the Horites (Deut. 2:12). They lived in the hill country, and traces of their primitive population continued as late as the days of the United Monarchy under David and Solomon (2 Sam. 21:16–22). When Abraham arrived in the Promised Land it was almost entirely inhabited by the Canaanites, with a mixture of Amorites, Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites.

History. The history of Palestine gains its significance for the Bible student with the beginning of the biblical period. But the region was inhabited by other cultures long before Abraham and his family arrived.

Prebiblical Period (Tower of Babel—2000 B.C.)—As the human race was scattered over the earth, a number of cultures emerged. Small city-states began to be organized in Mesopotamia, the land between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers. A Sumerian civilization (about 2800–2360 B.C.) was one of the earliest classical civilizations of the world. The Akkadians as well built their cities in the Tigris–Euphrates plain. Almost at the same time Egypt emerged as a unified nation. In the twenty-ninth century B.C. the kingdoms of Upper and Lower Egypt were united, and a world power was born. Palestine witnessed the same urban development and population increases during this period. The cities of Jericho, Megiddo, Beth Shan, Ai, Shechem, Gezer, Lachish, and others were all in existence at this time.

Old Testament Period (Abraham—2000 B.C. and after)—About 2000 B.C. the patriarch Abraham arrived in Canaan from Ur of the Chaldees and found the land controlled by Amorites and Canaanites. Abraham lived for a while in Egypt, where he was exposed to this great culture of the ancient world. He saw the great pyramids of Egypt and eventually returned to Palestine, where the wealth and influence of his family and his descendants expanded through the land.

For 430 years the descendants of Abraham were in Egyptian bondage, but God raised up a champion in Moses to lead them back to the Land of Promise (Exodus 3). God strengthened the new leader of Israel, Joshua (Josh. 1:1–9), and he led the people in successful campaigns to win control of Palestine (Josh. 11:16–23). The period of the judges that followed indicated the continuous struggle that Israel had with the peoples of the land (Judg. 2:16–23).

With the rise of the United Monarchy under David (2 Sam. 8:1–18) and Solomon (1 Kin. 9:15—11:13), people of Israel extended their influence over more of Palestine than ever before. But about 920 B.C. Israel was divided into two segments, the northern kingdom of Israel, and the southern kingdom of Judah. These were turbulent times in the history of Israel. The Old Testament period came to an end with the fall of Samaria, the capital of Israel, in 722 B.C. The Assyrians took Israel into captivity and this nation ceased to exist (2 Kin. 17:1–6).

Babylonian Period (605–539 B.C.)—The influence of the Babylonians in the land of Palestine was swift and deadly. In 605 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, annihilated the Egyptian army, effectively controlling all of Palestine to the Egyptian border. In 597 B.C. Jerusalem was attacked by the Babylonians. Jehoiachin the king was carried into captivity. Eleven years later the city of Jerusalem was destroyed and nearly all the Jewish inhabitants of Palestine were carried away as captives to Babylon (2 Kin. 25:1–21).

Persian Period (539–332 B.C.)—When Cyrus, the king of Persia, conquered Babylon, he allowed the Jews to return to Jerusalem. In 538 B.C. the first group of Jews returned to Jerusalem under Sheshbazzar (Ezra 1:1–11). As a Persian province, the region was governed by regional rulers under Persian authority.

Greek Period (332–167 B.C.)—During this period Alexander the Great conquered Palestine. Upon his death the land fell to the Ptolemies of Egypt and the Seleucids of Syria. In 167 B.C. the Seleucid king Antiochus IV (Antiochus Epiphanes) polluted the Jewish temple by offering pigs on the altar and putting up a statue of a pagan god.

Maccabean Period (167–63 B.C.)—Under the leadership of the aged priest Mattathias and his sons, the Jewish people revolted against the Seleucids and enjoyed nearly 100 years of independence.

Roman Period (63 B.C.—A.D. 330)—In 63 B.C. Pompey conquered Palestine for Rome. From 37 B.C. until 4 B.C. Herod the Great ruled the land under the Caesars. During the reign of this Herod, Jesus was born in Bethlehem. During Roman rule also, Christianity was born. In A.D. 70 Jerusalem was destroyed by the Roman general Titus as he crushed a revolt by the Jewish people.

Pre-Modern Period (A.D. 330–1917)—During these years, Palestine was under the successive rules of the Byzantines (330–634), the Arabs (634–1099), the Crusaders (1099–1263), the Mamelukes (1263–1517) and the Turks (1517–1917).

The most important historical events during this period were Saladin’s consolidation of his control of Egypt, Syria, Mesopotamia, and most of Palestine in A.D. 1187 by his victory over the crusader kingdom of Jerusalem and the establishment of the Turkish Ottoman Empire in A.D. 1517.

Modern Period (1917—Present)—In 1917 the Balfour Declaration liberated Palestine from Turkish rule and placed the land under the control of Great Britain. On May 14, 1948, the modern State of Israel was established, and the British withdrew. Almost immediately the Jews and Arabs began their struggle for control of the land of Palestine. The borders of Palestine have been in a state of flux ever since.

The Geography of Palestine. The geography of Palestine falls naturally into five regions: the coastal plain, the central highlands, the Rift Valley, the Transjordan plateau, and the Negev.

The coastal plain—The coastal lowlands run along the western border of Palestine at the Mediterranean Sea. The plain varies in width from less than 5 kilometers (3 miles) to more than 40 kilometers (25 miles), but it forms an almost straight line for more than 320 kilometers (200 miles) north to south.

At the famous Ladder of Tyre in Upper Galilee, the hills reach the coast and divide the Plain of Phoenicia from the Plain of Acco. The Plain of Acco is about 13 kilometers (8 miles) wide and 40 kilometers (25 miles) long. It was the region allotted to the tribe of Asher (Josh. 19:24–31). At the foot of Mount Carmel the coastal plain is only a few hundred feet wide, but it quickly widens into the Plain of Dor and, at the Crocodile River (the Wadi Zerqa), into the marshy Plain of Sharon. The Plain of Sharon is some 64–80 kilometers (40–50 miles) in length and 13–16 kilometers (8–10 miles) wide. A fertile region, it was once covered with oak forests. Through it flow five streams, including the river Kanah, which in ancient Israel divided the territories of Ephraim and Manasseh. South of the Plain of Sharon is the triangle known as the Philistine Plain where the five lords of the Philistines build their great cities: Ekron, Gath, Ashdod, Ashkelon, and Gaza (1 Sam. 6:17).

One problem with this coastal plain is that it did not have a natural harbor. Joppa was a precarious harbor formed by offshore reefs (2 Chr. 2:16; Acts 9:36). Caesarea was built by Herod the Great, who created an artificial harbor. This territory was of little value to the ancient Israelites, a fact that may have contributed to Philistine dominance of the coastal plains long after the Israelites conquered Canaan.

The central highlands—Between the coastal plain and the hill country of Judea and Samaria runs a series of foothills known as the Shephelah. These hills were the scene of many battles between the Philistines and the Israelites. It is divided by three valleys: the Valley of Aijalon on the north, the Valley of Sorek in the middle, and the Valley of Elah on the south. At Aijalon Joshua commanded the sun to stand still (Josh. 10:12–14). And in Elah young David killed the giant Goliath (1 Sam. 17:2, 19; 21:9).

The central highlands are a mountain range running north to south the length of Palestine. In Lebanon the range rises to over 2,740 meters (9,000 feet) above sea level at Mount Hermon. The highest peak in Palestine itself is Jebel Jermaq, 1,200 meters (3,960 feet), in Upper Galilee.

The highlands consist of several distinct regions. The northernmost region is Galilee, customarily divided into Upper and Lower Galilee. Upper Galilee is almost double the altitude of its lower counterpart with corresponding differences in climate and vegetation. Lower Galilee has outcrops of chalk and marl that give the region a rugged beauty. Even today it is populated with small villages, many of which are mentioned in the New Testament. To the east lies the Sea of Galilee, separated from Lower Galilee by a series of hills and valleys.

South of Galilee is the Plain of Jezreel or Esdraelon. This plain is actually a low plateau of the hill country stretching from Mount Carmel on the west to Mount Gilboa on the east. This was an important corridor between the Via Maris, one of the main roads through Palestine, and the road to Damascus to the north. Many notable battles have been fought here (Josh. 17:16; 2 Chr. 35:22). Here too will be fought the Battle of Armageddon (Rev. 16:16; 19:11–21).

South of the central highlands is the hill country of Ephraim. This broad limestone upland consists of fertile valleys, tree-laden hills, and north-south, east-west highways. This easy access to Samaria explains this region’s greater receptivity to foreign influences in religion and politics than that of Galilee to the north or Judea to the south. The highest of these Samaritan hills are Mount Ebal (940 meters; 3,084 feet) and Mount Gerizim (881 meters; 2,890 feet).

Unlike the broken terrain of Samaria, the Judean highlands present a solid barrier that practically shuts off east-to-west traffic. Judea is subdivided into the Shephelah, the central hills, and the eastern wilderness. The terrain of these three divisions reflects quite a contrast, just like the annual rainfall (16–32 inches in the foothills, 32 inches in the highlands, and 12 inches or less in the wilderness).

Most of the towns in this region are built on a series of hills, just as Jerusalem is. All the land to the south is “down,” although the central highlands continue to climb until they reach the area of Hebron, Judea’s highest town (927 meters; 3,040 feet). As one continues south in these highlands, however, the elevation begins to drop. Thus at Beersheba, a few miles south, the region becomes a triangular depression between the hills of Judea and the hills of the Negev.

The central highlands are the most important natural region in Palestine, boasting of such towns as Nazareth, Shechem, Samaria, Bethel, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Hebron, and Beersheba. This region is known as the heartland of Palestine.

The Rift Valley—Between the western hills of Israel and the plateau east of the Jordan River lies the world’s deepest depression, known as the Rift Valley. Beginning in the valley between the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon Mountains and running south through Palestine, through the Arabah, through the Gulf of Aqaba and the Red Sea and on south through eastern Africa, this is the deepest geological fault on earth. The contrast in elevation is striking. Mount Hermon is a majestic 2,814 meters (9,232 feet) above sea level, while the Sea of Galilee just below it is 212 meters (695 feet) below sea level. The name of the Jordan River, which flows from the foothills of Hermon to the Sea of Galilee and then on south to the Dead Sea, means “the descender.” In one 9-mile stretch the Jordan plunges 284 meters (850 feet). North of the Sea of Galilee the river drops an average of 12 meters (40 feet) per mile. The Jordan is unique in that it is the world’s only major river that runs below sea level along most of its course.

The distance between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea is approximately 105 kilometers (65 miles). In the Rift Valley, or the Jordan Valley, the river has carved a narrow channel called the Zor. A haven for wildlife, this appears as a snakelike path of green vegetation when viewed from the air.

In the southern extremity of the Rift Valley, between the Dead Sea and the Red Sea, is the Arabah. This valley, from 3 to 9 miles wide but 169 kilometers (105 miles) in length, features terrain varying from salt flats to badlands. It is watered only by the flowing of seasonal streams in the rainy season.

From the Gulf of Aqaba the floor of this valley rises to 230 meters (755 feet) on a steep ridge. From there it drops dramatically, over 152 meters (500 feet) in 2 miles, toward the Dead Sea.

The Transjordan plateau—The beautiful hills of the Transjordan tableland are cut by four rivers as they wind their way to the Rift Valley. They are the Yarmuk, Jabbok, Arnon, and Zered Rivers. These rivers provide natural boundaries for five discernible regions of Transjordan.

North of the Yarmuk River is Bashan, a plateau rising from 213 meters (700 feet) in the west to 914 meters (3,000 feet) in the east. South of the Yarmuk to the Jabbok is Gilead. This is the most fertile region of Transjordan. The rainfall of 28 to 32 inches a year provides sufficient water for rich agricultural land and pastureland.

This is where the Greco-Roman cities of the region known as the Decapolis were located. Here, too, the famous "balm of Gilead" was found. South of the deep Jabbok gorge to the southern tip of the Dead Sea lay the kingdoms of Ammon and Moab. Located here were the capital of the Ammonite kingdom, Rabbah, and Mount Nebo (802 meters; 2,631 feet), the commanding site from which Moses viewed the Promised Land (Deut. 34:1). The Arnon River was the approximate border between Ammon and Moab, with the Zered River to the south serving as the border between Moab and Edom.

Edom stretches for 100 miles above the Arabah. In the mountains of Edom the reddish sandstones may have given rise to the biblical name, which means "red." In a basin secluded in these mountains is Petra, the famous capital of the Nabatean kingdom. The conquest of Edom for a brief time during the days of David and Solomon enabled Solomon to build the port of Ezion Geber on the Red Sea (1 Kin. 9:26–28).

The Negev—Directly south of Palestine lies the Negev, a barren wilderness. Shaped like a triangle with its apex pointing toward the Gulf of Aqaba, the steppe of the Negev is situated immediately south of the Valley of Beersheba. It encompasses over 12,500 square miles, more than all of Palestine itself. The inhabitable sector of the area is a small strip about 49 kilometers (30 miles) wide from north to south, centered at Beersheba. The rest of the Negev is a desert.

Because of its long desert frontier, the Negev has been inhabited mostly by tribal herdsmen known as the Bedouin, including the Amalekites (Num. 13:29; 1 Sam. 30:1). In the Old Testament this area was known as the Wilderness of Zin and the Wilderness of Paran. Occasionally permanent settlements would be found here in the days of Abraham and especially in the days of the Nabatean kingdom.

The Negev is crisscrossed with caravan routes. The important route to Egypt, known as "the way of Shur" (Gen. 16:7), went southwest from Beersheba through this area.

Geological Formations. Palestine has a wide variety of geological formations for a small 10,000-square-mile area. A band of Nubian or Petra sandstone, red and soft, stretches along the eastern coast of the Dead Sea. Above this band is the most important geological formation in Palestine, the limestone, which makes up most of the tableland on both sides of the Jordan River. This limestone is particularly evident at Jerusalem; reservoirs, sepulchers, and cellars abound under the city.

The Philistine country north of Mount Carmel consists of sandstone. Between this sandstone and the sand dunes of the seacoast is a sedimentary bed. Along both sides of the Rift Valley, from Mount Hermon to south of the Sea of Galilee, is volcanic rock, called basalt, frequently found in other parts of the land. Another notable feature of the region is the blowing sand from Egypt and the Sinai deserts, which frequently invades the cultivated sections of Palestine.

On the west shore of Galilee as well as along both shores of the Dead Sea are hot springs. At the hot springs of Callirrhoe on the eastern shore of the Dead Sea, Herod the Great sought relief from his illness. Earthquakes also played a vital role in Palestinian life. David interpreted an earthquake as a sign of the anger of the Lord (Ps. 18:7). Jonathan's attack at Michmash was accompanied by an earthquake (1 Sam. 14:15). A memorable quake occurred during the days of Uzziah in the eighth century B.C. (Amos 1:1; Zech. 14:5). An earthquake also accompanied the crucifixion of Jesus in Jerusalem (Matt. 27:51–54).

The presence of these phenomena—plus volcanic activity, basalt, sulphur, petroleum, salt, bromide, phosphate, potash, and other chemicals in and around the Dead Sea—make Palestine a geologist’s paradise. It is indeed one of the unique regions of the world.

The Climate and Vegetation of Palestine. The latitude of Palestine is approximately the same as southern California or Georgia. It is therefore marginally subtropical. Situated between the cool winds of the eastern Mediterranean and the hot winds of the desert, Palestine has a variety of weather patterns.

Temperature—The sea breeze has a moderating effect on the coastal plain. The average temperature at Haifa in January is 56 degrees Fahrenheit and in August 83 degrees. However, the elevation at Jerusalem (777 meters, or 2,550 feet, above sea level), brings cooler temperatures, a 48-degree average in January and a 75-degree average in August.

In contrast, the temperatures in the Rift Valley are much hotter throughout the year. This makes the region comfortably warm in winter but unbearably hot in summer. Jericho has an average winter temperature of 76 degrees Fahrenheit, but the temperature consistently climbs well over 100 in the summer. Such temperature extremes are noted in the Bible. The midday sun caused the death of a lad in Elisha’s day (2 Kin. 4:18–20), but King Jehoiakim sat in his winter house with a fire on the hearth (Jer. 36:22).

Precipitation—Two seasons characterize Palestine: winter, which is moist, rainy, and mild (November to April), and summer, which is hot with no rain (May to October). The exact time when the rainy season begins each year is not predictable. It usually begins about mid-October and includes our winter months plus some additional weeks (Song 2:11). Rainfall usually occurs three to four days in a row, alternating with three to four days of chilling winds from the desert.

The Bible frequently refers to “the early rains and the latter rains” (Deut. 11:14). This designation does not indicate the period of greatest rainfall, which was frequently in January and February (Lev. 26:4; Ezra 10:9, 13), but the period of the most important rainfall for agriculture. The initial autumn rains soften the hard Palestinian soil, making plowing and sowing an easier task. The latter rains fall in March and April when rain is needed to make the fruit and grain luscious and healthy (Hos. 6:3; Zech. 10:1).

The greatest amount of precipitation falls on the region of Galilee (28–40 inches a year). Average rainfall for other areas of Palestine are: Haifa (24 inches); Tiberias (17 inches); Beth Shean (12 inches); Jerusalem (25 inches); and Jericho (4 inches or less). In the summer the humidity is twice as intense as during other times of the year. Thus Jericho, with high temperatures and humidity and little rainfall, is almost unbearable in summer. However, the summer humidity condenses as the ground cools during the night. The result is a heavy dew each morning in Palestine.

Gideon was able to collect a bowl of water from dew on a fleece (Judg. 6:38). Dew was essential for the growing of grapes during the summer (Zech. 8:12). Without dew a devastating drought would occur (2 Sam. 1:21; Hag. 1:10). Frequently God’s grace is compared to the dew (Gen. 27:28; Hos. 14:5).

Occasionally Palestine would be the victim of violent precipitation in the form of hail. Such hail would flatten the standing grain and destroy the tender vines (Ps. 78:47; Ezek. 13:11, 13). Sometimes hailstones big enough to kill a man would fall (Josh. 10:11). Occasionally the higher elevations of Palestine are covered with a light snow during the winter. In David’s time Benaiah slew a lion on a day when snow fell (2 Sam. 23:20).

Vegetation—In areas with adequate precipitation, the abundance of sunshine and fertile soil make Palestine a garden paradise. More than 3,000 varieties of flowering plants exist in the region—a large number for such a small country. So plentiful were flowers in Bible times that floral patterns adorned the branches of the golden lampstand (Ex. 25:31–34) and the walls and doors of the temple (1 Kin. 6:18, 29, 32). The rim of the huge laver in the temple was shaped like the flower of a lily (1 Kin. 7:26; 2 Chr. 4:5).

Trees grow in abundance in Palestine. Grains and other crops are also plentiful. The land also produces fruits and vegetables of all kinds, spices, herbs, aromatics, perfumes, and preservatives. Although it was the scene of many fierce and bloody battles, and yet will be, still Palestine is a special place: the Holy Land.

PALLET—KJV word for a straw-filled mattress, light enough to be carried; the mat of a poor man (John 5:8–11; Acts 5:15; bed, NKJV; mat, NIV).

PALLU [PAL oo]—father of Eliab (Num. 26:8) and founder of the PALLUITES (Num. 26:5), also called Phallu (Gen. 46:9, KJV).

PALLUITES [PAL oo ights]—a tribal family descended from PALLU (Num. 26:5).

PALTI [PAL tigh] (my deliverance)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. One of twelve men sent by Moses to spy out the land of Canaan (Num. 13:9).
2. A son of Laish, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Sam. 25:44; Phalti, KJV; Paltiel, NIV). Palti is the same person as PALTIEL No. 2 (2 Sam. 3:15).

PALTIEL [PAL tih uhl] (God is my deliverance)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Azzan, of the tribe of Issachar (Num. 34:26). Paltiel helped Joshua divide the land west of the Jordan River.
2. A son of Laish, of the tribe of Benjamin (2 Sam. 3:15; Phaltiel, KJV).

PALTITE [PAL tight]—a family name of Helez, one of David's mighty men (2 Sam. 23:26). The term Paltite refers to a native of BETH PELET, a city in southern Judah (Josh. 15:27). Also see PELONITE.

PAMPHYLIA [pam FIL ih uh] (a region of every tribe)—a Roman province on the southern coast of central Asia Minor (modern Turkey; see Map 7, D–2). The province consisted mainly of a plain about 130 kilometers (80 miles) long and up to about 32 kilometers (20 miles) wide. The capital city of Pamphylia, its largest city, was Perga (Acts 13:13–14).

Pamphylia is first mentioned in the New Testament in Acts 2:10. People from Pamphylia were among those present in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost. In Pamphylia Paul first entered Asia Minor (Acts 13:13) during his first missionary journey. It was at Pamphylia that John Mark left Paul and Barnabas (Acts 15:38). On his voyage to Rome, Paul sailed off the coast of Pamphylia (Acts 27:5).

PAN—a shallow container, used for liquids, for cooking, and for other domestic purposes (Ex. 25:29; 2 Sam. 13:9; 2 Chr. 35:13). The pan mentioned in Leviticus 6:21 and 1 Chronicles 23:29 was a thin, flat plate used for baking bread. A larger pan was a kettle or pot for boiling meat (1 Sam. 2:14).

The most frequent occurrence of the word “pan” in the NKJV is in the Book of Numbers: “One gold pan of ten shekels full of incense” (Num. 7:14, 20, 26, 32, 38, 44, 50, 56, 62, 68, 74, 80, 86).

This was a utensil presented as a gift for use in the tabernacle. The Hebrew word in this verse is translated by various versions as spoon (KJV), dish (NIV, NRSV), and saucer (REB).

PANNAG [PAN ag]—KJV word for a product of Palestine exported to the markets of Tyre (Ezek. 27:17; millet, NKJV, NRSV; cakes, NASB; confections, NIV; meal, REB). The name probably refers to some kind of sweet pastry or confection, perhaps fig cakes.

PANTHER (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

PAPER (see PAPYRUS; WRITING).

PAPHOS [PAY fuhs]—a city on the southwestern extremity of the island of Cyprus (see Map 7, D–2). Paul, Barnabas, and John Mark visited Paphos during Paul’s first missionary journey, about A.D. 47 or 48 (Acts 13:6–13). Two settlements in the same general area of Cyprus are known as Old Paphos (modern Konklia), and New Paphos, about 16 kilometers (10 miles) to the northwest. New Paphos is the Paphos mentioned in the Book of Acts (modern Baffa). At Paphos, Paul met the Roman proconsul Sergius Paulus, who believed the gospel (Acts 13:12) when he witnessed Paul’s rebuke of Elymas the sorcerer.

PAPS—KJV translation of breasts (Ezek. 23:21; Luke 11:27) and chest (Rev. 1:13).

PAPYRUS [puh PIE russ]—the name of a plant and a writing material:

1. A tall aquatic plant of southern Europe and northern Africa, especially of the Nile River valley. This plant is now unknown in its wild state in Egypt; but it still grows plentifully in the Sudan. Extensive growths of papyrus may also be found in the marshes at the northern end of Lake Huleh in Palestine. The Roman naturalist Pliny the Elder (A.D. 23–79) wrote in his encyclopedic Natural History about the papyrus plant and its many uses:

   “The papyrus grows in the swamps of Egypt or else in the sluggish waters of the Nile where they have overflowed and lie stagnant in pools not more than three feet in depth; it has a sloping root as thick as a man’s arm, and tapers gracefully up with triangular sides to a length of not more than fifteen feet. The roots are used by the natives for timber, serving not only as firewood but also for making various utensils and vessels. Indeed the papyrus itself is woven to make boats, and the inner bark is woven into sailcloth and matting, and also cloth, as well as blankets and ropes. It is also used as chewing gum, both in the raw state and when boiled, although only the juice is swallowed."

The Hebrew word translated as "papyrus" in Job 8:11 is also used in Exodus 2:3. Apparently the "ark of bulrushes" in which Moses was hidden by his mother was woven from papyrus plants. The Egyptians made blankets, boats, shoes, and other articles from papyrus.

2. A paper made from the pith, or the stems, of the papyrus, used in ancient times as a writing material; also a written scroll made of papyrus. In the same passage from Natural History, Pliny the Elder wrote:

> "The process of making paper from papyrus is to split it with a knife into very thin strips made as broad as possible. . . . Paper of all kinds is 'woven' on a board moistened with water from the Nile, muddy liquid supplying the effect of glue. First an upright layer is smeared onto the table, using the full length of papyrus available after the trimmings have been cut off at both ends, and afterwards cross strips complete the latticework. The next step is to press it in presses, and the sheets are dried in the sun and then joined together, the next strip used always diminishing in quality down to the worst of all. There are never more than twenty sheets to a roll."

The story of the cutting and burning of Jeremiah's scroll by King Jehoiakim (Jer. 36:20–23) suggests papyrus rather than leather; indeed, the Septuagint assumes it was a papyrus scroll. Scholars believe that John's reference to "paper and ink" (2 John 12) is to papyrus writing material because the Greek noun used in this verse refers to the papyrus roll or sheet used in writing a letter.

The ancient Egyptians did not burn their paper rubbish; they simply piled it in the sand and let the blowing sand cover it layer upon layer. Thousands of pages of papyrus documents were found in rubbish heaps by the British archaeologists Grenfell and Hunt, who explored ancient Egyptian tombs in search of documents. They knew that the Egyptians believed that since people lived on in another world, all of their comforts should be buried with them for further use, including books. Whenever these books were discovered, they were an archaeologist's treasure. On one occasion a tomb yielded little reading matter; it contained only mummified crocodiles (in ancient Egypt the crocodile was worshiped as a god). When the workmen were ordered to abandon their digging, one of them broke through the skin of one of these crocodiles. Out spilled rolls and rolls of papyrus, which were dated at three centuries before Christ.

The first recorded notice of papyrus documents was in 1778. An unknown European dealer in antiquities saw peasants setting fire to nearly fifty sheets of papyrus to obtain the aromatic scent of the smoke. The papyrus purchased included documents from the year A.D. 191–192. Between 1820 and 1840, large numbers of papyrus documents were discovered in Egypt, but most scholars ignored these finds as unimportant.

In the year 1891 the great era of papyrus discoveries was born, when Sir Flinders Petrie and E. Wallis Budge discovered some leaves or rolls of outstanding literary merit. Most of these documents were dated in the third century B.C. Perhaps the most important discovery of the period was by Adolf Deissmann, who realized that the language written on the papyri he found was identical to that of his Greek New Testament. Clearly New Testament Greek was not a special biblical language created by the Holy Spirit as many had claimed.

The oldest manuscripts of the New Testament, the majority of the DEAD SEA SCROLLS, and the large collection of GNOSTIC documents at the NAG HAMMADI library were written on papyrus. The English word "paper" comes from the word "papyrus."

PARABLE—a short, simple story designed to communicate a spiritual truth, religious principle, or moral lesson; a figure of speech in which truth is illustrated by a comparison or example drawn from everyday experiences.

A parable is often no more than an extended metaphor or simile, using figurative language in the form of a story to illustrate a particular truth. The Greek word for "parable" literally means "a laying by the side of" or "a casting alongside," thus "a comparison or likeness." In a parable something is placed alongside something else, in order that one may throw light on the other. A familiar custom or incident is used to illustrate some truth less familiar.

Although Jesus was the master of the parabolic form, He was not the first to use parables. Examples of the effective use of parables are found in the Old Testament. Perhaps the best known of these is Nathan's parable of the rich man who took the one little ewe lamb that belonged to a poor man (2 Sam. 12:1–4). By means of this parable, Nathan reproved King David and convicted him of his sin of committing adultery with Bathsheba (2 Sam. 12:5–15). A wise woman of Tekoa also used a parable (2 Sam. 14:5–7) to convince King David to let his son return to Jerusalem.

Jesus' characteristic method of teaching was through parables. His two most famous parables are the parable of the lost son (Luke 15:11–32) and the parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:25–37). Both parables illustrate God's love for sinners and God's command that we show compassion to all people. Actually, the parable of the lost son (sometimes called the parable of the prodigal son or the parable of the loving father) is the story of two lost sons: the younger son (typical of tax collectors and prostitutes) who wasted possessions with indulgent living, and the older son (typical of the self-righteous scribes and Pharisees) who remained at home but was a stranger to his father's heart.

Some entire chapters in the Gospels are devoted to Jesus' parables; for instance, Matthew 13—which contains the parables of the sower (vv. 1–23), the wheat and the tares (vv. 24–30), the mustard seed (vv. 31–32), the leaven (vv. 33), the hidden treasure (v. 44), the pearl of great price (vv. 45–46), and the dragnet (vv. 47–52).

Although parables are often memorable stories, impressing the listener with a clear picture of the truth, even the disciples were sometimes confused as to the meaning of parables. For instance, after Jesus told the parable of the wheat and the tares (Matt. 13:24–30), the disciples needed interpretation in order to understand its meaning (Matt. 13:36–43). Jesus sometimes used the parabolic form of teaching to reveal the truth to those who followed Him and to conceal the truth from those who did not (Matt. 13:10–17; Mark 4:10–12; Luke 8:9–10). His parables thus fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah 6:9–10. Like a double-edged sword, they cut two ways—enlightening those who sought the truth and blinding those who were disobedient.

Most of Jesus' parables have one central point. Thus, Bible students should not resort to fanciful interpretations that find "spiritual truth" in every minute detail of the parable. The central point of the parable of the Good SAMARITAN is that a "hated" Samaritan proved to be a neighbor to the wounded man. He showed the traveler the mercy and compassion denied to him by the priest and the Levite, representatives of the established religion. The one central point of this parable is that we should also extend compassion to others—even those who are not of our own nationality, race, or religion (Luke 10:25–37).

In finding the central meaning of a parable, the Bible student needs to discover the meaning the parable had in the time of Jesus. We need to relate the parable to Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God and to His miracles. This means that parables are more than simple folk stories; they are expressions of Jesus' view of God, people, salvation, and the new age that dawned in His ministry. A good example of this approach are the parables dealing with the four "lost" things in Luke 15:3–32: the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the two lost sons. The historical context is found in Luke 15:1–2: Jesus had table fellowship with tax collectors and sinners. The Pharisees and scribes, the "religious experts" of Jesus' day, saw such action as disgusting because, in their view, it transgressed God's holiness. If Jesus truly were a righteous man, they reasoned, then He would not associate with such people; He would keep Himself pure and separate from sinners.

In response to their murmuring, Jesus told them these parables. God rejoices more, He said, over the repentance of one sinner (those sitting with Him at table) than over "ninety-nine just persons who need no repentance" (Luke 15:7)—that is, than over the religious professionals who congratulate themselves over their own self-achieved "goodness" (see the parable of the Pharisee and the tax collector; Luke 18:9–14). Likewise, the prodigal son (Luke 15:11–24) represents the tax collectors and sinners; the older son (Luke 15:25–32) represents the scribes and Pharisees.

A major theme in Jesus' parables is the demand of following Him in authentic discipleship. In the parable of the great supper (Luke 14:15–24), Jesus showed clearly that the time for decision is now. In the parable of the unfinished tower and the king going to war (Luke 14:28–32), Jesus demanded that His followers be prepared to give up all. In the parables of the hidden treasure and the pearl of great price (Matt. 13:44–46), Jesus stated that the kingdom of heaven is of such value that all other treasures in life are of secondary worth. Jesus' parables are a call to a radical decision to follow Him.

PARACLETE [pair uh KLEET]—a transliteration of the Greek word parakletos, which means “one who speaks in favor of,” as an intercessor, advocate, or legal assistant. The word, translated as “Comforter” or “Counselor,” appears only in the Gospel of John. Jesus applied the term to the HOLY SPIRIT, who would be an advocate on behalf of Jesus’ followers after His ascension; the Spirit would plead their cause before God (John 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7).

PARADISE (park, garden)—a place of exceptional blessedness, happiness, and delight; a descriptive name for heaven. Originally “paradise” was a Persian word meaning “a wooded park,” “an enclosed or walled orchard,” or “a garden with fruit trees.” Traditional Hebrew theology held that the dead descended to SHEOL. After the emergence of belief in the resurrection, however, this view was drastically modified. In the period between the Old and New Testaments, the Jews believed that, after the resurrection, the righteous would go to Paradise, a place much like the Garden of Eden before the Fall.

In the NKJV the word “paradise” occurs only three times (Luke 23:43; 2 Cor. 12:4; Rev. 2:7). To the repentant thief on the cross Jesus said, “Today you will be with Me in Paradise” (Luke 23:43). Various commentators have pointed out that when a Persian king wished to bestow upon one of his subjects a special honor, he made him a “companion of the garden.” The subject was chosen to walk in the king’s garden as a special friend and companion of the king. Thus, Jesus promised the thief that he would be a companion of the King of kings, walking with Christ in the garden of heaven.

PARAH [PAH ruh] (young cow)—a city in the territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:23), apparently identical with Khirbet el-Farah, about 9 kilometers (5.5 miles) northeast of Jerusalem.

PARALLELISM (see POETRY).

PARALYSIS, PARALYTIC (see DISEASES OF THE BIBLE).

PARAMOUR—an adulterous lover, either male or female; a mistress. In Ezekiel 23:20 the word “paramours” in the NKJV refers to male lovers (male prostitutes, REB). In all other occurrences in the NKJV, however, the Hebrew word for paramours is translated as CONCUBINES.

PARAN [PAH ruhn]—a wilderness region in the central part of the Sinai Peninsula (see Map 2, C–1). Although the boundaries of this desert region are somewhat obscure, it probably bordered the ARABAH and the Gulf of Aqaba on the east. The modern Wadi Feiran in central Sinai preserves the ancient name.

Paran is frequently mentioned in the Old Testament. Chedorlaomer, one of the four kings who attacked Sodom, conquered as far as “El Paran, which is by the wilderness” (Gen. 14:6). After Hagar was driven from Abraham’s household (Gen. 21:21), she fled to this wilderness with her son Ishmael. The Israelites crossed Paran during their Exodus from Egypt (Num. 10:12; 12:16), and Moses dispatched spies from Paran to explore the land of Canaan (Num. 13:3). After their mission, these spies returned “unto the wilderness of Paran, to Kadesh” (Num. 13:26).

Much later, after the death of Samuel, David fled to Paran (1 Sam. 25:1). After revolting from King Solomon, Hadad went through Paran on his flight to Egypt (1 Kin. 11:18).

PARAPET—a railing, wall, or latticework around the edge of the flat roofs of Israelite houses, required by Mosaic law as a protection against accidents (Deut. 22:8; battlement, KJV).

PARBAR [PAHR bahr]—a word that refers to an area in the outer court of the temple (1 Chr. 26:18). Apparently, it refers either to a section of the temple courtyard or to a place west of the courtyard where horses dedicated to the sun were stabled during the reign of King Manasseh.

PARCHED GRAIN—grain roasted in a fire and eaten as a snack in Bible times (Josh. 5:11; Ruth 2:14; parched corn, KJV). Seeds, lentils, and beans were also roasted and eaten in the same way (2 Sam. 17:28).

PARCHMENT (see WRITING).

PARDON—to forgive; to release a person from punishment. The Bible portrays God as “ready to pardon” (Mic. 7:18). Also see FORGIVENESS; JUSTIFICATION.

PARENTS—those who give birth to children and provide nurture and guidance during their childhood years. Children were to obey and honor their parents (Ex. 20:12; Lev. 19:3; Deut. 5:16). Failure to do this could result in punishment or death (Deut. 21:18–21). Parents were also taught to “train up a child in the way he should go” (Prov. 22:6). In the New Testament, Paul instructed parents to bring up their children in “the training and admonition of the Lord” (Eph. 6:4).

Also see FAMILY.

PARLOR—KJV word for an inner room in the temple in Jerusalem (1 Chr. 28:11; inner chamber, NKJV). This word also refers to a room on the flat roof of a house, used in the summer as a cool retreat (Judg. 3:20–25).

Also see HOUSE.

PARMASHTA [par MASH tah]—a son of HAMAN, hanged like his father (Esth. 9:9).

PARMENAS [PAHR muh nuhs]—one of seven men chosen by the church in Jerusalem to assist the apostles in distributing food to the needy (Acts 6:5).

PARNACH [PAHR nak]—father of Elizaphan (Num. 34:25).

PAROSH [PAHR ahsh] (flea)—the founder of a family, 2,172 of whom returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:3; Pharosh, KJV; Neh. 7:8). Another group of this family returned from the captivity with Ezra (Ezra 8:3).

PAROUSIA [puh ROO sih ah]—a Greek word that refers to the SECOND COMING, or the return of the Lord Jesus Christ at the end of this age to set up His kingdom, judge His enemies, and reward the faithful. The Greek word literally means, “a being alongside,” hence “appearance” or “presence.” Christians are “looking for the blessed hope and glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ” (Titus 2:13). This blessed hope of the Parousia, or Second Coming, sustains believers in a godless age.

PARSHANDATHA [pahr SHAN duh thuh]—the first of the ten sons of Haman, adviser to Ahasuerus (Xerxes), king of Persia (Esth. 9:7).

PARSIN [PAHR sin] (see MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN).

PARTHIANS [PAHR thih uhns]—a tribal group from Parthia, a region southeast of the Caspian Sea in ancient Persia (Iran). Parthians are mentioned in Acts 2:9 as one of the many national and language groups gathered in Jerusalem for the Feast of Pentecost.

Parthia was one of the original Persian administrative districts established by Darius I (Dan. 6:1). Late in the fourth century B.C., the Persian Empire fell to Alexander the Great and his successors, the Macedonian emperors known as the SELEUCIDS. In the middle of the third century B.C., the Parthians revolted from the Seleucids under the leadership of King Arsaces. The kings who followed Arsaces gradually built a great empire; it extended from the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia to the Indus River in (modern) Pakistan. Fierce warriors, the Parthians were formidable in battle; their archers fought while mounted on horseback. Even the Roman armies were largely unsuccessful against the Parthians.

The Babylonians settled some citizens of the nation of Judah in Parthia after their deportation from Judah in 586 B.C. (2 Chr. 36:20). The Jewish historian Josephus reported that some of the Jews who settled in Parthia continued to practice the Israelite faith, apparently without harassment from the natives. Thus the “Parthians” in Jerusalem on Pentecost (Acts 2:9) may have included remnants of these deported Jewish people as well as converts to Judaism from among native Parthians.

PARTIALITY—favoring one person or party more than another and thus acting in a prejudiced or biased manner. In the Old Testament, the Hebrew people were reminded that just as God shows no partiality, so should they show no favoritism to the rich or poor, great or small (Lev. 19:15; Deut. 16:19; 2 Chr. 19:7). The New Testament declares that salvation is freely given to all who believe in Jesus Christ, whether Jew or Gentile, male or female, bondslave or free (Gal. 3:28).

PARTITION—KJV word for VEIL, a curtain that separated the general worship area from the Holy of Holies in the tabernacle and temple. Once a year the priest passed through this partition, or veil, to make atonement first for his own sins and then the sins of the people (Ex. 26:31–35).

PARTRIDGE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

PARUAH [puh ROO uh] (blossoming)—the father of Jehoshaphat (1 Kin. 4:17).

PARVAIM [pahr VAY uhm]—an unidentified place, rich in minerals, from which Solomon obtained gold to decorate the temple (2 Chr. 3:6).

PARZITES [PAHR zights]—a tribal family descended from Perez, son of Judah (Num. 26:20; Perezite, NASB, NIV, NRSV; Pharzites, KJV).

PASACH [PAY sak]—a son of Japhlet, of the tribe of Asher (1 Chr. 7:33).

PASDAMMIM [pass DAM mim] (boundary of blood)—a place in the territory of Judah, scene of a victory of David over the Philistines (1 Chr. 11:13).

PASEAH [puh SEE uh]—the name of two or three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Eshton, of the tribe of Judah (1 Chr. 4:12).
2. The founder of a family of temple servants who returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Neh. 7:51; Phaseah, KJV).
3. The father of Jehoiada (Neh. 3:6). He may be the same person as No. 2.

PASHHUR [PASH ur]—the name of three or more men in the Old Testament:

1. The founder of a priestly family whose members returned from the captivity (Ezra 2:38; Neh. 7:41). Members of this family divorced their pagan wives after the captivity (Ezra 10:22). This Pashhur may be the Pashur of 1 Chronicles 9:12.
2. A priest who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:3).
3. A son of Immer the priest (Jer. 20:1–6). Pashhur put Jeremiah in the stocks because Jeremiah’s prophecies were so unfavorable.
4. A son of Melchiah and one of several officials who opposed Jeremiah because of his unpopular prophecies (Jer. 21:1; 38:1, 4).

5. The father of Gedaliah (Jer. 38:1) and a person who opposed Jeremiah. He may be the same person as No. 3 and/or No. 4. The KJV consistently spells his name as Pashur.

PASHUR [PASH ur]—the founder of a priestly family whose descendants returned from the captivity (1 Chr. 9:12). Pashur may be the Pashhur mentioned in Ezra 2:38 and Nehemiah 7:41.

PASSAGE—a word used by the NKJV in two ways:

1. A right of way; the right to travel through an area. The Edomites refused to give the Israelites passage through their territory (Num. 20:21).
2. A ford or river crossing (Jer. 51:32).

PASSION OF CHRIST—KJV words referring to the suffering and death of Jesus Christ by crucifixion (Acts 1:3). The NKJV refers to Jesus' ordeal on the cross by using the word "suffering" in its translation of the verse.

PASSOVER, FEAST OF (see FEASTS AND FESTIVALS).

PASTOR—the feeder, protector, and guide, or shepherd, of a flock of God's people in New Testament times. In speaking of spiritual gifts, the apostle Paul wrote that Christ "gave some to be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers" (Eph. 4:11). The term "pastor" by this time in church history had not yet become an official title. The term implied the nourishing of and caring for God's people.

The Greek word translated "pastors" in Ephesians 4:11 is used elsewhere in the New Testament of sheepherders, literally or symbolically (Matt. 25:32); of Jesus, the Good Shepherd (John 10); and of "shepherds," or leaders, of the church (Eph. 4:11). The NKJV uses the word "pastor" only in this verse. Also compare Jeremiah 23:1–2 (KJV).

PASTORAL EPISTLES—the name given to three letters of the apostle Paul: 1 Timothy, 2 Timothy, and Titus. They are called the pastoral epistles because they clearly show Paul’s love and concern as pastor and administrator of several local churches.

Historical Setting. The occasion for Paul’s writing these three letters was the need to maintain the faith and to insure the faithfulness of the church. He charged the young pastor Timothy, “Guard what was committed to your trust” (1 Tim. 6:20). This declaration is the heart of the pastoral epistles. Here Timothy, with all the church, is charged to keep the deposit of faith—the written record or message to be carried on by the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit.

The more immediate need of the first two epistles—1 Timothy and Titus—lay in the fact that many things in Ephesus and Crete, where Timothy was serving, needed adjustment and correction. Paul, intending to advise Timothy and Titus in the faith, determined to advise others at the same time. Paul charged them to avoid heresy, hold to sound doctrine, and maintain purity and piety of life.

Authorship. In the nineteenth century doubts were expressed about whether Paul actually wrote these three letters. Scholars noted alleged differences in style and vocabulary, church organization, heresies, biographical and historical situations, and theology from those found in the letters that were undisputedly written by Paul.

Linguistic objections to Pauline authorship of the pastoral epistles include certain words, phrases, or forms that appear about twice as often in the pastorals as in Paul’s other letters. But this argument is inconclusive because it is impossible to prove. Paul may have chosen to speak in a different vocabulary because he was writing on other subjects and to specific church situations.

Theological objections point to an emphasis on works in the pastorals rather than on grace and faith and an apparent attack on secondcentury GNOSTICISM. Good works, however, are mentioned as the “fruit” (the natural outgrowth) of the “tree” of faith, and grace is celebrated in several passages (1 Tim. 1:14; 2 Tim. 1:9; Titus 2:11—3:7). Moreover, it is reasonable to assume that in these epistles Paul may not have been fighting a Gnosticism as advanced as some have argued.

Ecclesiastical objections have also been raised to the view that Paul wrote the pastorals. Some scholars charge that a highly structured hierarchical organization, later than the time of Paul, is reflected in the pastoral epistles. However, the elements of church organization found in the pastorals are also described elsewhere in the New Testament (Acts 20:28; Phil. 1:1).

Chronological objections revolve around the discrepancies that supposedly exist between the pastoral epistles and the Book of Acts, with the assumption that Paul was put to death at the end of his one-and-only Roman imprisonment. The charge is a very good reason for extending the life of Paul beyond the events recorded in Acts. The pastoral epistles would then be the product of Paul's fourth missionary journey and second imprisonment (1 Tim. 3:14; 2 Tim. 1:8, 16).

All the pastorals are to be taken as written by Paul because their internal evidence reflects the character and temperament of the great apostle. The evidence of the writings themselves indicates that Paul is the writer, since his name appears in the salutation of each letter (1 Tim. 1:1; 2 Tim. 1:1; Titus 1:1).

Date. The first letter to Timothy and the one to Titus were written during travel and missionary work between Paul's two Roman imprisonments. A date somewhere between A.D. 61 and 63 can be set, because the Second Epistle to Timothy contains Paul's farewell address (2 Tim. 4:6–8), the last words from the apostle shortly before his martyrdom, generally set between A.D. 65 and 68.

Summary of Theme. The purpose of the pastoral epistles is to admonish, instruct, and direct the recipients in their pastoral duties. These letters deal with the care and the organization of the church, the flock of God. They contain common injunctions to guard the Christian faith, to appoint qualified officials, to conduct proper worship, and to maintain discipline both personally and in the churches. They give instructions in the work of the church and show how threats to the doctrinal and moral purity of Christians should be overcome.

PATARA [PAT uh ruh]—a seaport of LYCIA (see Map 8, C–2). The apostle Paul visited Patara on his third missionary journey. At Patara he transferred to a ship bound for Tyre (Acts 21:1–3). Patara was famous for a magnificent temple dedicated to Apollo. Many remains of its other impressive structures can still be seen today.

PATH—any road or way. When the word "path" is used literally, it refers to a footpath (Gen. 49:17). However, it usually is used figuratively for a way of life. A person's path may lead him to a life of forgetting God (Job. 8:13) and unrighteousness (Prov. 2:13). A person's path may also be lighted by the Word of God (Ps. 119:105).

PATHROS [PATH rahs] (the southern land)—the Hebrew name for Upper Egypt, roughly the southern region of the Nile River Valley between Cairo and Aswan (Is. 11:11). After the siege of Jerusalem (597 B.C.), the idolatrous Jews who offered incense to other gods fled to Pathros and formed a Jewish colony in Egypt. The prophet Jeremiah predicted that their disobedience would be judged by the king of Babylon (Jer. 44:1, 15). Ezekiel also prophesied that Pathros would be humiliated by Nebuchadnezzar (Ezek. 30:10–14), but that the Jews would recognize their sins and turn to God (Ezek. 29:14).

PATHRUSIM [puh THROO zim] (southerners)—the fifth son of MIZRAIM (1 Chr. 1:12). The term refers to the inhabitants of PATHROS.

PATIENCE—forebearance under suffering and endurance in the face of adversity. Two Greek words are translated as "patience": makrothymia (Heb. 6:12; James 5:10) and hypomone (Matt. 18:26, 29). The former word generally expresses patience with regard to people. It is also translated "longsuffering" as a quality of God (Rom. 2:4; 2 Pet. 3:9) and is listed by the apostle Paul as one of the nine fruits of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 5:22).

The second word, hypomone, generally expresses patience with regard to things. It may be described as the quality that enables a person to be "patient in tribulation" (Rom. 12:12). The Christian has for his example the patience of Jesus, who "endured the cross" (Heb. 12:2). Christians are challenged to run with endurance the race that is set before them (Heb. 12:1).

PATMOS [PAT muhs]—a small rocky island to which the apostle John was banished and where he wrote the Book of Revelation (Rev. 1:9). The island, about 16 kilometers (10 miles) long and 10 kilometers (6 miles) wide, lies off the southwest coast of Asia Minor (modern Turkey). Because of its desolate and barren nature, Patmos was used by the Romans as a place to banish criminals, who were forced to work at hard labor in the mines and quarries of the island. Because Christians were regarded as criminals by the Roman emperor Domitian (ruled A.D. 81–96), the apostle John probably suffered from harsh treatment during his exile on Patmos. An early Christian tradition said John was in exile for eighteen months.

PATRIARCH [PAY trih ark] (head of a father's house)—the founder or ruler of a tribe, family, or clan; the forefathers of the Israelite nation. The phrase "the patriarchs" usually refers to the tribal leaders of Israel who lived before the time of Moses. Specifically, it is used of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the 12 sons of Jacob. Therefore, the patriarchs were the ancestors of the Israelites from Abraham to Joseph (Acts 7:8–9; Heb. 7:4).

In Peter's sermon in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost, the apostle expanded the term to include King David (Acts 2:29). Peter's point was that, in contrast to Jesus Christ, the patriarch David died and remained buried in the tomb. There is no hope in David: "His tomb is with us to this day" (Acts 2:29). In his sermon before the council, Stephen stressed that the patriarchs were sinners—they sold Joseph into slavery in Egypt (Acts 7:9)—and that they all needed to be redeemed from their sin.

The author of Hebrews reminded his readers that the patriarch Abraham gave a tenth of the spoils of battle to MELCHIZEDEK, king of Salem (Heb. 7:1–4). He also compared Melchizedek to Jesus Christ. In all uses of the term “patriarch,” the New Testament says the patriarchs were sinners, were limited in their power, and were greatly inferior to the Lord Jesus Christ.

When Jesus sought to teach the Pharisees their need of Him, they implied they did not need Him. They had pride in the claim, “We are Abraham’s descendants” (John 8:33). They were the “children” of Abraham (the patriarch par excellence). With such an illustrious ancestor, what need did they have of a prophet from Nazareth? They found their security in Abraham, not in Jesus; and thus the man whose faithfulness was the cornerstone of Israel’s faith became the stone against which his descendants stumbled.

PATRIARCHS, TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE (see APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE).

PATRIMONY—the KJV word for an inheritance (Deut. 18:8); family possessions (NIV, NRSV); and what he may inherit from his father’s family (REB).

PATROBAS [PAT ruh buhs]—a Christian at Rome to whom Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:14).

PAU [PAY oo]—a city in Edom where King Hadar was born or reigned (Gen. 36:39). In 1 Chronicles 1:50 the king is called Hadad, and the name of his city is Pai.

PAUL, THE APOSTLE—the earliest and most influential interpreter of Christ’s message and teaching; an early Christian missionary; correspondent with several early Christian churches.

The Life of Paul. Paul was born at Tarsus, the chief city of Cilicia (southeast Asia Minor). He was a citizen of Tarsus, “no mean city,” as he called it (Acts 21:39). He was also born a Roman citizen (Acts 22:28), a privilege that worked to his advantage on several occasions during his apostolic ministry. Since Paul was born a Roman citizen, his father must have been a Roman citizen before him. “Paul” was part of his Roman name. In addition to his Roman name, he was given a Jewish name, “Saul,” perhaps in memory of Israel’s first king, a member of the tribe of Benjamin, to which Paul’s family belonged.

His Jewish heritage meant much more to Paul than Roman citizenship. Unlike many Jews who had been scattered throughout the world, he and his family did not become assimilated to the Gentile way of life that surrounded them. This is suggested when Paul describes himself as “a Hebrew of the Hebrews” (Phil. 3:5), and is confirmed by Paul’s statement in Acts 22:3 that, while he was born in Tarsus, he was brought up in Jerusalem “at the feet of Gamaliel,” the most illustrious rabbi of his day (Acts 5:34). Paul’s parents wanted their son to be well-grounded in the best traditions of Jewish orthodoxy.

Paul proved an apt pupil. He outstripped many of his fellow students in his enthusiasm for ancestral traditions and in his zeal for the Jewish law. This zeal found a ready outlet in his assault on the infant church of Jerusalem. The church presented a threat to all that Paul held most dear. Its worst offense was its proclamation of one who had suffered a death cursed by the Jewish law as Lord and Messiah (Deut. 21:22–23). The survival of Israel demanded that the followers of Jesus be wiped out.

The first martyr of the Christian church was Stephen, one of the most outspoken leaders of the new movement. Luke told how Paul publicly associated himself with Stephen’s executioners and then embarked on a campaign designed to suppress the church. Paul himself related how he “persecuted the church of God beyond measure and tried to destroy it” (Gal. 1:13).

Conversion and apostolic commission—At the height of Paul’s campaign of repression, he was confronted on the road to Damascus by the risen Christ. In an instant his life was reoriented. The Jewish law was replaced as the central theme of Paul’s life by Jesus Christ. He became the leading champion of the cause he had tried to overthrow.

The realization that Jesus, whom he had been persecuting, was alive and exalted as the Son of God exposed the weakness of the Jewish law. Paul’s zeal for the law had made him an ardent persecutor. He now saw that his persecuting activity had been sinful; yet the law, instead of showing him the sinfulness of such a course, had really led him into sin.

The law had lost its validity. Paul learned that it was no longer by keeping the law that a person was justified in God’s sight, but by faith in Christ. And if faith in Christ provided acceptance with God, then Gentiles might enjoy that acceptance as readily as Jews. This was one of the implications of the revelation of Jesus Christ that gripped Paul’s mind. He was assured that he himself had received that revelation in order that he might proclaim Christ and His salvation to the Gentile world.

Paul began to carry out this commission not only in Damascus but also in the kingdom of the Nabatean Arabs, to the east and south. No details are given of his activity in “Arabia” (Gal. 1:17), but he did enough to attract the hostile attention of the authorities there, as the representative of the Nabatean king in Damascus tried to arrest him (2 Cor. 11:32–33).

After leaving Damascus, Paul paid a short visit to Jerusalem to make the acquaintance of Peter. During his two weeks’ stay there, he also met James, the Lord’s brother (Gal. 1:18–19). Paul could not stay in Jerusalem because the animosity of his former associates was too strong. He had to be taken down to Caesarea on the Mediterranean coast and put on a ship for Tarsus.

Paul spent the next ten years in and around Tarsus, actively engaged in the evangelizing of Gentiles. Very few details of those years have been preserved. At the end of that time BARNABAS came to Tarsus from Antioch and invited Paul to join him in caring for a young church there. A spontaneous campaign of Gentile evangelization had recently occurred at Antioch, resulting in the formation of a vigorous church. Barnabas himself had been commissioned by the apostles in Jerusalem to lead the Gentile evangelization in the city of Antioch.

About a year after Paul joined Barnabas in Antioch, the two men visited Jerusalem and conferred with the three “pillars” of the church there—the apostles Peter and John, and James the Lord’s brother (Gal. 2:1–10). The result of this conference was an agreement that the Jerusalem leaders would concentrate on the evangelization of their fellow Jews, while Barnabas and Paul would continue to take the gospel to Gentiles.

The Jerusalem leaders reminded Barnabas and Paul, in conducting their Gentile mission, not to forget the material needs of the impoverished believers in Jerusalem. Barnabas and Paul (especially Paul) readily agreed to bear those needs in mind. This may have been the occasion when they carried a gift of money from the Christians in Antioch to Jerusalem for the relief of their fellow believers who were suffering hardship in a time of famine (Acts 11:30).

Apostle to the Gentiles—The way was now open for a wider Gentile mission. Barnabas and Paul were released by the church of Antioch to pursue a missionary campaign that took them to Barnabas' native island of Cyprus and then into the highlands of central Asia Minor (modern Turkey), to the province of Galatia. There they preached the gospel and planted churches in the cities of Pisidian Antioch, Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe. The missionaries then returned to Antioch in Syria.

The great increase of Gentile converts caused alarm among many of the Jewish Christians in Judea. They feared that too many Gentiles would hurt the character of the church. Militant Jewish nationalists were already attacking them. A movement began that required Gentile converts to become circumcised and follow the Jewish law. The leaders of the Jerusalem church, with Paul and Barnabas in attendance, met in A.D. 48 to discuss the problem. It was finally decided that circumcision was not necessary, but that Gentile converts should conform to the Jewish code of laws in order to make fellowship between Jewish and Gentile Christians less strained (Acts 15:1–29).

After this meeting, Barnabas and Paul parted company. Paul chose SILAS, a leading member of the Jerusalem church and a Roman citizen like himself, to be his new colleague. Together they visited the young churches of Galatia. At Lystra they were joined by TIMOTHY, a young convert from Barnabas and Paul's visit some two years before. Paul in particular recognized qualities in Timothy that would make him a valuable helper in his missionary service. From that time to the end of Paul's life, Timothy was his most faithful attendant.

Paul and Silas probably planned to proceed west to EPHESUS, but they felt the negative guidance of the Holy Spirit. They instead turned north and northwest, reaching the seaport of TROAS. Here Paul was told in a vision to cross the north Aegean Sea and preach the gospel in MACEDONIA. This Paul and his companions did. By now their number had increased to four by the addition of Luke. The narrative reveals his presence at this point by using "we" instead of "they" (Acts 16:10).

Their first stop in Macedonia was the Roman colony of PHILIPPI. Here, in spite of running into trouble with the magistrates and being imprisoned, Paul and his companions planted a strong church. They moved on to THESSALONICA, the chief city of the province, and formed a church there as well. But serious trouble broke out in Thessalonica. The missionaries were accused of rebelling against the Roman emperor by proclaiming Jesus as his rival. They were forced to leave the city quickly.

Paul moved south to BEREA, where he was favorably received by the local synagogue, but his opponents from Thessalonica followed him, making it necessary for him to move on once more. Although churches of Macedonia would later give Paul much joy and satisfaction, he felt dejected at this time from being forced to flee city after city.

Paul, alone now, moved south into the province of ACHAIA. After a short stay in ATHENS, he came "in weakness, in fear, and in much trembling" (1 Cor. 2:3) to CORINTH, the seat of provincial administration. Corinth had a reputation as a wicked city in the Greco–Roman world and it did not seem likely that the gospel would make much headway there. Surprisingly, however, Paul stayed there for eighteen months and made many converts. While he was there, a new Roman proconsul, GALLIO, arrived to take up residence in Corinth. The beginning of his administration can be accurately dated as July 1, A.D. 51. Paul was prosecuted before Gallio on the charge of preaching an illegal religion, but Gallio dismissed the charge. This provided other Roman magistrates with a precedent that helped the progress of the gospel over the next ten years.

The church of Corinth was large, lively, and talented but deficient in spiritual and moral stability. This deficiency caused Paul much anxiety over the next few years, as his letters to the Corinthians reveal.

After his stay in Corinth, Paul paid a brief visit to Jerusalem and Antioch and then traveled to Ephesus, where he settled for the next three years. Paul's Ephesian ministry was perhaps the most active part of his apostolic career. A number of colleagues shared his activity and evangelized the city of Ephesus as well as the whole province of Asia (western Asia Minor).

Ten years earlier there had been no churches in the great provinces of Galatia, Asia, Macedonia, or Achaia. Now Christianity had become so strong in them that Paul realized his work in that part of the world was finished. He began to think of a new area where he might repeat the same kind of missionary program. He wanted to evangelize territories where the gospel had never been heard before, having no desire to "build on another man's foundation" (Rom. 15:20). He decided to journey to Spain, and to set out as soon as he could. This journey would also give him a long-awaited opportunity to visit ROME on the way.

Before he could set out, however, an important task had to be completed. Paul had previously organized a relief fund among the Gentile churches to help poorer members of the Jerusalem church. Not only had he promised the leaders in Jerusalem to do such a thing, but he hoped it would strengthen the bond of fellowship among all the churches involved.

Before leaving, Paul arranged for a member of each of the contributing churches to carry that church's donation. Paul himself would go to Jerusalem with them, giving the Jerusalem Christians an opportunity to see some of their Gentile brethren face to face in addition to receiving their gifts. Some of Paul's hopes and misgivings about the trip are expressed in Romans 15:25–32. His misgivings were well-founded.

A few days after his arrival in Jerusalem, Paul was attacked by a mob in the area of the temple. He was rescued by a detachment of Roman soldiers and kept in custody at the Roman governor's headquarters in Caesarea for the next two years. At the end of that period he exercised his privilege as a Roman citizen and appealed to Caesar in order to have his case transferred from the provincial governor's court in Judea to the emperor's tribunal in Rome. He was sent to Rome in the fall of A.D. 59. The great apostle spent a further two years in Rome under house arrest, waiting for his case to come up for hearing before the supreme tribunal.

Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ—The restrictions under which Paul lived in Rome should have held back his efforts to proclaim the gospel, but just the opposite actually happened. These restrictions, by his own testimony, "actually turned out for the furtherance of the gospel" (Phil. 1:12). Although he was confined to his lodgings, shackled to one of the soldiers who guarded him in four-hour shifts, he was free to receive visitors and talk to them about the gospel. The soldiers who guarded him and the officials in charge of presenting his case before the emperor were left in no doubt about the reason for his being in Rome. The gospel actually became a topic of discussion. This encouraged the Christians in Rome to bear more open witness to their faith, allowing the saving message to be proclaimed more fearlessly in Rome than ever before "and in this," said Paul, "I rejoice" (Phil. 1:18).

From Rome, Paul was able to correspond with friends in other parts of the Roman Empire. Visitors from those parts came to see him, bringing news of their churches. These visitors included EPAPHRODITUS from Philippi and EPAPHRAS from Colossae. From Colossae, too, Paul received an unexpected visitor, ONESIMUS, the slave of his friend PHILEMON. He sent Onesimus back to his master with a letter commending him "no longer as a slave but . . . as a beloved brother" (Philem. 16).

The letters of Philippi and Colossae were sent in response to the news brought by Epaphroditus and Epaphras, respectively. At the same time as the letter to Colossae, Paul sent a letter to Laodicea and a more general letter that we now know as Ephesians. The Roman captivity became a very fruitful period for Paul and his ministry.

We have very little information about the rest of Paul's career. We do not know the outcome of his trial before Caesar. He was probably discharged and enjoyed a further period of liberty. It is not known whether he ever preached the gospel in Spain.

It is traditionally believed that Paul's condemnation and execution occurred during the persecution of Christians under the Roman Emperor NERO. The probable site of his execution may still be seen at Tre Fontane on the Ostian Road. There is no reason to doubt the place of his burial marked near the Basilica of St. Paul in Rome. There, beneath the high altar, is a stone inscription going back to at least the fourth century: "To Paul, Apostle and Martyr."

The Teaching of Paul. Paul is the most influential teacher of Christianity. More than any other disciple or apostle, Paul was given the opportunity to set forth and explain the revelations of Jesus Christ. Because Paul was called to teach Gentiles rather than Jews, he was in the unique position of confronting and answering problems that could only be presented by those completely unfamiliar with Jewish traditions. Several themes come through in his writings.

Christ, the Son of God—Paul knew that the one who appeared to him on the Damascus Road was the risen Christ. “Last of all He was seen by me also,” he says (1 Cor. 15:8), counting this as the last of Christ’s appearances.

Paul seems to have entertained no doubt of the validity of the appearance or of the words, “I am Jesus” (Acts 9:5). Both the appearance and the words validated themselves in his later life. His whole Christian outlook on the world, like the gospel he preached, stemmed from that “revelation of Jesus Christ” (Gal. 1:12).

Christ was, in a unique sense, the Son of God. Other human beings became sons and daughters of God through their faith-union with Christ and their reception of the Spirit of Christ. From this point of view the Spirit was “the Spirit of adoption,” enabling them to address God spontaneously as “Abba, Father” (Rom. 8:15).

Another token of the indwelling Spirit was giving Jesus the designation “Lord”: “No one can say that Jesus is Lord except by the Holy Spirit” (1 Cor. 12:3). This designation is given by Paul to Jesus in the highest sense possible. It was bestowed on Jesus by God Himself when He rose to supremacy over the universe after His humiliation and death on the cross.

One striking designation that Paul gives to Christ—“the image of God” (2 Cor. 4:4) or “the image of the invisible God” (Col. 1:15)—appears to be closely associated with his conversion experience. Paul emphasizes the heavenly light that was such a memorable feature of that experience. Paul speaks of the minds of unbelievers being darkened to keep them from seeing “the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God” (2 Cor. 4:4). This suggests that when “the glory of that light” (Acts 22:11) dispelled the darkness from Paul’s own mind, he recognized the one who appeared to him as being the very image of God.

Christ is presented by Paul as the one “through whom are all things, and through whom we live” (1 Cor. 8:6), and in whom, through whom, and for whom “all things were created” (Col. 1:16).

Displacement of the law—After his conversion Paul said, “To me, to live is Christ” (Phil. 1:21). Before his conversion he might well have said, “To me, to live is law.” In his mind he had judged Christ according to the Jewish law, finding Him condemned by it. Since the law pronounced a curse on one who was impaled on a stake (Deut. 21:23; Gal. 3:13), Paul took the side of the law and agreed that both Christ and His people were accursed.

After his conversion, Paul recognized the continuing validity of the Scripture that declared the impaled man to be accursed by God, but now he understood it differently. If Christ, the Son of God, subjected Himself to the curse pronounced by the law, another look at the law was called for. The law could not provide anyone with righteous standing before God, however carefully he kept it. Paul knew that his life under the law stood condemned in the light of his Damascus Road experience. It was not the law in itself that was defective because it was God's law. It was instead the people with whom the law had to work who were defective.

The righteous standing that the law could not provide was conferred on believers through their faith in Christ. That righteous standing was followed by a righteous life. In one tightly packed sentence Paul declared that God has done what the law, weakened by the flesh, could not do, "sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, on account of sin: He condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteous requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us who do not walk according to the flesh but according to the Spirit" (Rom. 8:3–4).

The law could lead neither to a righteous standing before God nor to a righteous life. Paul, while faithfully keeping the law, was condemned before God rather than justified. His life was not righteous but was sinful because he "persecuted the church of God" (1 Cor. 15:9). This situation radically changed when Paul believed in Christ and knew himself to "be found in Him, not having my own righteousness, which is from the law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness which is from God by faith" (Phil. 3:9).

Christ, then, "is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone who believes" (Rom. 10:4). The word "end" is ambiguous: it may mean "goal" or "completion." As the law revealed the character and will of God, it pointed to Christ as the goal. He was the fulfillment of all the divine revelation that had preceded Him: "All the promises of God in Him are Yes" (2 Cor. 1:20). But when the law came to be regarded as the way of salvation or the rule of life, Christ put an end to it. The law pronounced a curse on those who failed to keep it; Christ redeemed His people from that curse by undergoing it Himself. He exhausted the curse in His own person through His death.

According to Paul, the law was a temporary provision introduced by God to bring latent sin into the open. When they broke its individual commands, men and women would realize their utter dependence on divine grace. Centuries before the law was given, God promised Abraham that through him and his offspring all nations would be blessed. This promise was granted in response to Abraham’s faith in God. The later giving of the law did not affect the validity of the promise. Instead, the promise was fulfilled in Christ, who replaced the law.

The law had been given to the nation of Israel only, providing a privilege that set it apart from other nations. God’s original promise embraced all nations and justified Paul’s presentation of the gospel to Gentiles as well as Jews. The promise had wide implications: “Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law . . . that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles in Christ Jesus, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith” (Gal. 3:13–14).

The age of the Spirit—Those who believe God as Abraham did are not only justified by faith but also receive the Holy Spirit. The blessing promised to Abraham, secured through the redemptive work of Christ, is identified with the gift of the Spirit. The age of the Spirit has replaced the age of law.

It is common teaching in the New Testament that the age of the Spirit followed the completion of Christ’s work on earth. Paul presents this teaching with his own emphasis. His negative evaluation of the place of law in Christian life naturally caused others to ask how ethical and moral standards were to be maintained. Paul answered that the Spirit supplied a more effective power for holy living than the law could ever supply. The law imposed bondage, but “where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty” (2 Cor. 3:17). The law told people what to do, but could provide neither the will nor the power to do it; the Spirit, operating within the believer’s life, can provide both the will and the power.

The Spirit is called not only the Spirit of God but also the Spirit of Christ. He is the Spirit who dwelled within Christ during His earthly ministry, empowering Him to accomplish merciful works and to teach wisdom and grace. The qualities that characterized Christ are reproduced by His Spirit in His people: “love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control” (Gal. 5:22–23).

John the Baptist predicted that Christ would baptize men and women with the Holy Spirit (Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16). The New Testament teaches that this prediction was fulfilled with the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (Acts 2:2–12). Paul accepted this teaching about baptism with the Spirit, but linked it with his teaching about the church as the body of Christ. “For by one Spirit,” he wrote to his converts in Corinth, “we were all baptized into one body—whether Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or free” (1 Cor. 12:13).

In various ways Paul views the present indwelling of the Spirit as an anticipation of the coming glory. The Spirit’s work in the lives of Christ’s people differs in degree, but not in kind, from their full sharing of Christ’s glory at His advent. It is through the work of the Spirit that they, “beholding . . . the glory of the Lord, are being transformed into the same image from glory to glory” (2 Cor. 3:18).

The Spirit is referred to by Paul as the one who identifies the people of God to secure them “for the day of redemption” (Eph. 4:30), as the “firstfruits” of the coming glory (Rom. 8:23), as the “deposit,” “guarantee,” or initial downpayment of the resurrection life that is their assured heritage (2 Cor. 1:22; 5:5).

The body of Christ—Paul is the only New Testament writer who speaks of the church as a body. The members of the church, he suggests, are as interdependent as the various parts of the human body, each making its contribution in harmony with the others for the good of the whole. Just as a body functions best when all the parts follow the direction of the head, the church best fulfills its purpose on earth when all the members are subject to the direction of Christ. He is, by divine appointment, “head over all things to the church, which is His body” (Eph. 1:22–23). The Spirit of Christ not only dwells within each member but also dwells within the church as a whole, continually giving His life to the entire body together. The body cannot be thought of without the Spirit. “There is one body and one Spirit,” and when the members show one another the love of God they “keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Eph. 4:3–4).

The source of Paul’s concept of the church as the body of Christ has been long debated. One source may have been the Old Testament principle of “corporate personality”—the principle of regarding a community, nation, or tribe as a person to the point where it is named and described as if it were an individual. God said to Pharaoh through Moses, “Israel is My Son, My firstborn . . . Let My son go that he may serve Me” (Ex. 4:22–23).

Perhaps the most satisfactory source of Paul’s concept can be found in the words of the risen Christ who appeared to him on the Damascus Road: “Why are you persecuting me?” (Acts 9:4). Paul did not think he was persecuting Jesus, who was beyond his direct reach. But that is exactly what he was doing when he persecuted Jesus’ followers. When any part of the body is hurt, it is the head that complains. Jesus’ words may have sown the seed of that doctrine in Paul’s mind. The Lord told Ananias of Damascus that He would show Paul “how many things he must suffer for My name’s sake” (Acts 9:16). Paul later echoed this in his statement, “If one member suffers, all the members suffer with it” (1 Cor. 12:26).

The first time Paul wrote of this subject (1 Cor. 12:12–27), his purpose was to impress on his readers the fact that, as Christians, they have mutual duties and common interests that must not be neglected. When he next expounded on it (Rom. 12:4–8), he wrote of the variety of service rendered by the various members of the church. In accordance with their respective gifts, all members build up the one body to which they belong. The health of the whole body depends on the harmonious cooperation of the parts.

In his later letters, Paul dealt with the relation that the church, as the body of Christ, bears to Christ as head of the body. The wellbeing of the body depends on its being completely under the control of the head. It is from Christ, as head of the church, that “all the body, nourished and knit together by joints and ligaments, grows with the increase which is from God” (Col. 2:19).

Paul’s doctrine of the church as the body of Christ is closely bound up with his description of believers as being “in Christ” at the same time as Christ is in them. They are in Him as members of His body, having been “baptized into Christ” (Gal. 3:27). He is in them because it is His risen life that animates them. Jesus once used another organic analogy when He depicted Himself as “the true vine” and His disciples as the branches (John 15:1–6). The relationship is similar to that between the head and the body. The branches are in the vine and the vine at the same time is in the branches.

Eschatology—Eschatology is the teaching about things to come, especially things to come at the end times.

Paul originally held the views of eschatology taught in the Pharisaic schools. When Paul became a Christian, he found no need to abandon the eschatological teaching he had received at the feet of Gamaliel. But his experience of Christ did bring about some important modifications of his views.

The distinction between the present age and the age to come was basic to this teaching. The present age was subject to evil influences that affected the lives and actions of men and women. The God of righteousness and truth, however, was in control of the situation. One day He would bring in a new age from which evil would be banished.

The Pharisees taught that the end of the present age and beginning of the new age would be marked by the resurrection of the dead. Whether all the dead would be raised or only the righteous among them was a matter of debate. In Acts 24:15 Paul stated before the governor, Felix, that he shared the hope “that there will be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust.” In his letters he spoke only of the resurrection of believers in Christ, perhaps because it was to such people that his letters were written.

An important question was the relation of this framework to the messianic hope. When would the Messiah, the expected ruler of David’s line, establish His kingdom? His kingdom might mark the closing phase of the present age; it might be set up with the inauguration of the age to come; or it might occupy a phase between the two ages. There was no general agreement on this question. Another question on which there was no general agreement concerned the extent to which the Messiah would revoke or replace the Law of Moses.

When Paul was confronted with the risen Christ on the Damascus Road, he realized that the Messiah had come and that in Him the resurrection had begun to take place. Having been raised from the dead, Christ had now entered upon His reign. The age of the Spirit for His people on earth coincided with the reign of Christ in His place of exaltation in the presence of God. There “He must reign till He has put all enemies under His feet” (1 Cor. 15:25). The present age had not yet come to an end, because men and women, and especially the people of Christ, still lived on earth in mortal bodies. But the resurrection age had already begun, because Christ had been raised.

The people of Christ, while living temporarily in the present age, belong spiritually to the new age that has been inaugurated. The benefits of this new age are already made good to them by the Spirit. The last of the enemies that will be subdued by Christ is death. The destruction of death will coincide with the resurrection of the people of Christ. Paul wrote, “Each one in his own order: Christ the firstfruits, afterward those who are Christ’s at His coming” (1 Cor. 15:23). The eternal kingdom of God will be consummated at that time.

The resurrection of the people of Christ, then, takes place at His coming again. In one of his earliest letters Paul said that, when Christ comes, “the dead in Christ will rise first. Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And thus we shall always be with the Lord” (1 Thess. 4:16–17).

Further details are provided in 1 Corinthians 15:42–57. When the last trumpet announces the Second Coming of Christ, the dead will be raised in a “spiritual body,” replacing the mortal body they wore on earth. Those believers who are still alive at the time will undergo a similar change to fit them for the new conditions. These new conditions, the eternal kingdom of God, are something that “flesh and blood cannot inherit”; they make up an imperishable realm that cannot accommodate the perishable bodies of this present life (1 Cor. 15:50).

The assurance that the faithful departed would be present at the Second Coming of Christ was a great comfort to Christians whose friends and relatives had died. But the question of their mode of existence between death and the Second Coming remained to be answered. Paul’s clearest answer to this question was given shortly after a crisis in which he thought he faced certain death (2 Cor. 1:8–11).

Paul answered that to be “absent from the body” is to be “present with the Lord” (2 Cor. 5:8). Whatever provision is required for believers to enjoy the same communion with Christ after death as they enjoyed before death will certainly be supplied (2 Cor. 5:1–10). Or, as he put it when the outcome of his trial before Caesar was uncertain, “To live is Christ, and to die is gain,” for to die would mean to “be with Christ, which is far better” (Phil. 1:21, 23).

The church as a whole and its members as individuals could look forward to a consummation of glory at the Second Coming of Christ. But the glory is not for them alone. In a vivid passage, Paul describes how “the creation eagerly waits for the revealing of the sons of God” (Rom. 8:19). This will liberate it from the change and decay to which it is subject at present and allow it to obtain “the glorious liberty of the children of God” (Rom. 8:21). In Genesis 3:17–19 man’s first disobedience brought a curse on the earth. Paul looked forward to the removal of that curse and its replacement by the glory provided by the obedience of Christ, the “second Man” (1 Cor. 15:47).

This prospect is integrated into Paul’s message, which is above all a message of reconciliation. It tells how God “reconciled us to Himself through Jesus Christ” (2 Cor. 5:18) and calls on people to “be reconciled to God” (2 Cor. 5:20). It proclaims God’s purpose through Christ “to reconcile all things to Himself, . . . whether things on earth or things in heaven, having made peace through the blood of His cross” (Col. 1:20).

Paul and the Message of Jesus. Some critics charge that Paul corrupted the original “simple” message of Jesus by transforming it into a theological structure. But the truth is completely otherwise. No one in the apostolic age had a surer insight into Jesus’ message than Paul.

A shift in perspective between the ministry of Jesus and the ministry of Paul must be recognized. During His own ministry Jesus was the preacher; in the ministry of Paul He was the one being preached. The gospels record the works and words of the earthly Jesus; in Paul’s preaching Jesus, once crucified, has been exalted as the heavenly Lord. Jesus’ earthly ministry was confined almost entirely to the Jewish people; Paul was preeminently the apostle to the Gentiles. Paul’s Gentile hearers required that the message be presented in a different vocabulary from that which Jesus used in Galilee and Judea.

The gospel of Jesus and the gospel preached by Paul are not two gospels but one—a gospel specifically addressed to sinners. Paul, like Jesus, brought good news to outsiders. This was the assurance that in God's sight they were not outsiders, but men and women whom He lovingly accepted. In the ministry of Jesus, the outsiders were the social outcasts of Israel. In the ministry of Paul the outsiders were Gentiles. The principle was the same, although its application was different.

Paul's achievement was to communicate to the Greco-Roman world, in terms it could understand, the good news that Jesus announced in His teaching, action, and death. Paul did not have before him the gospels as we know them, but he knew the main lines of Jesus' teaching, especially parts of the Sermon on the Mount. This teaching was passed orally among the followers of Jesus before it circulated in written form. If Jesus summed up the law of God in the two great commandments of love toward God and love toward one's neighbor, Paul echoed Him: "All the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself' " (Gal. 5:14; also Rom. 13:9).

Paul's Legacy. Paul was a controversial figure in his lifetime, even within the Christian movement. He had many opponents who disagreed with his interpretation of the message of Jesus. In the closing years of his life, when imprisonment prevented him from moving about freely, Paul's opponents were able to make headway with their rival interpretations. Even though Asia had been Paul's most fruitful mission field, at the end of his life he wrote, "All those in Asia have turned away from me" (2 Tim. 1:15).

In the following generation, however, there was a resurgence of feeling in Paul's favor. His opponents were largely discredited and disabled by the dispersal of the church of that city shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Throughout most of the church Paul became a venerated figure. His letters, together with the gospels, became the foundation of the Christian movement.

Paul's liberating message has proved its vitality throughout the centuries. Repeatedly, when the Christian faith has been in danger of being shackled by legalism or tradition, Paul's message has allowed the gospel to set people free.

The relevance of Paul's teaching for human life today may be brought out in a summary of four of his leading themes:

1. True religion is not a matter of rules and regulations. God does not deal with men and women like an accountant, but He accepts them freely when they respond to His love. He implants the Spirit of Christ in their hearts so they may extend His love to others.

2. In Christ men and women have come of age. God does not keep His people on puppet strings but liberates them to live as His responsible sons and daughters.
3. People matter more than things, principles, and causes. The highest of principles and the best of causes exist only for the sake of people. Personal liberty itself is abused if it is exercised against the personal well-being of others.
4. Discrimination on the grounds of race, religion, class, or sex is an offense against God and humanity alike.

PAULUS, SERGIUS (see SERGIUS PAULUS).

PAVEMENT, THE—the official place in Jerusalem where Pilate passed sentence on Jesus (John 19:13; Stone Pavement, NIV). Archaeologist L. H. Vincent identified The Pavement with a splendid Roman pavement uncovered when an extensive area of the Tower of ANTONIA was excavated. Also see GABBATHA.

PAVILION—any kind of temporary shelter, such as a tent, tabernacle, or booth (2 Kin. 16:18; Ps. 27:5; 31:20; Jer. 43:10). Psalm 31:20 refers to the pavilion of God in which the righteous are sheltered. But usually the Hebrew word sukkah refers to a tent or similar kind of shelter. Leviticus 23:42 mentions booths, or dwellings made of branches, in which the Jews lived during the Feast of Tabernacles.

PE [pay]—the seventeenth letter of the Hebrew alphabet, used as a heading over Psalm 119:129–136. In the original Hebrew language, every one of these eight verses began with the letter pe. Also see ACROSTIC.

PEACE—a word with several different meanings in the Old and New Testaments.

The Old Testament meaning of peace was completeness, soundness, and well-being of the total person. This peace was considered God-given, obtained by following the Law (Ps. 119:165). Peace sometimes had a physical meaning, suggesting security (Ps. 4:8), contentment (Is. 26:3), prosperity (Ps. 122:6–7) and the absence of war (1 Sam. 7:14). The traditional Jewish greeting, shalom, means "peace" and was a wish for peace.

In the New Testament, peace often refers to the inner tranquility and poise of the Christian whose trust is in God through Christ. This understanding was originally expressed in the Old Testament writings about the coming MESSIAH (Is. 9:6–7). The peace that Jesus Christ spoke of was a combination of hope, trust, and quiet in the mind and soul, brought about by a reconciliation with God. Such peace was proclaimed by the host of angels at Christ's birth (Luke 2:14), and by Christ Himself in His SERMON ON THE MOUNT (Matt. 5:9) and during His ministry. He also taught about this kind of peace at the Lord's Supper, shortly before His death (John 14:27).

The apostle Paul later wrote that such peace and spiritual blessedness was a direct result of faith in Christ (Rom. 5:1).

PEACE OFFERING (see SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS).

PEACOCK (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

PEARL (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

PECULIAR—an archaic term used by the KJV to describe Israel, God's "special treasure" (Ex. 19:5; Deut. 14:2)—the valuable property or costly possession of their redeemer God.

PEDAHEL [PED uh hel] (God delivers)—a leader of the tribe of Naphtali who assisted Joshua in dividing the land of Canaan (Num.

34:28).

PEDAHZUR [pih DAH zur] (the Rock delivers)—the father of Gamaliel (Num. 1:10; 7:54).

PEDAIAH [pih DAY uh] (the Lord delivers)—the name of seven men in the Old Testament:

1. Father of Zebudah (2 Kin. 23:36).
2. A descendant of Jeconiah (1 Chr. 3:18–19) and the father of Zerubbabel (1 Chr. 3:19).
3. Father of Joel (1 Chr. 27:20).
4. A son of Parosh (Neh. 3:25). Pedaiah helped repair the wall of Jerusalem after the captivity.
5. A Levite who stood with Ezra when the Book of the Law was read to the people (Neh. 8:4).
6. A son of Kolaiah, of the tribe of Benjamin (Neh. 11:7).
7. A treasurer of the temple in Nehemiah's time (Neh. 13:13).

PEG—a bronze tent pin driven into the ground to secure the cords of the tabernacle court (Ex. 27:19; Num. 3:37; 4:32). JAEL killed Sisera with a tent peg and a hammer (Judg. 4:21–22; 5:26).

PEKAH [PEE kuh] ([God] has opened the eyes)—the son of Remaliah and eighteenth king of Israel (2 Kin. 15:25–31; 2 Chr. 28:5–15). Pekah became king after he assassinated King Pekahiah. Pekah continued to lead Israel in the idolatrous ways of Jeroboam I (2 Kin. 15:28).

Pekah took the throne at the time when Tiglath–Pileser III, king of Assyria, was advancing toward Israel. To resist this threat, Pekah formed an alliance with Rezin, king of Syria. He also hoped to enlist the sister Israelite nation of Judah in the alliance. Under the counsel of the prophet Isaiah, however, Judah's kings, Jotham and later Ahaz, refused. Pekah and Rezin attempted to enlist Judah by force, marching first against Jerusalem. They were unsuccessful, and so they divided their armies.

Rezin successfully captured Elath, and Pekah slew thousands in the districts near Jericho, taking many prisoners into Samaria. Later, these prisoners were returned to Jericho upon the advice of the prophet Oded.

Pekah probably was unaware that he was God's instrument to punish Judah (2 Chr. 28:5–6).

As Tiglath–Pileser III of Assyria advanced, King Ahaz of Judah met him to pay tribute and ask his help against Syria and Israel (2 Kin. 16:10). Assyria planned to march against Syria, and so Damascus was taken and Rezin was killed. The Assyrians also invaded northern Israel, with city after city taken and their inhabitants deported to Assyria. Through the Assyrian army God brought His judgment on Israel and Syria, even as the prophet Isaiah had warned (Is. 7:8–9).

Pekah was left with a stricken nation, over half of which had been plundered and stripped of its inhabitants. Soon Hoshea, son of Elah, conspired against Pekah and assassinated him. However, in his own writings Tiglath–Pileser III claimed that he was the power that placed Hoshea on the throne of Israel, possibly indicating he was a force behind the conspiracy. Pekah's dates as king of Israel are usually given as 740–732 B.C.

PEKAHIAH [pek uh HIGH uh] (the Lord has opened the eyes)—a son of Menahem and the seventeenth king of Israel (2 Kin. 15:22–26). Pekahiah assumed the throne after his father's death. He was an evil king who continued the idolatrous worship first introduced by King Jeroboam I. After reigning only two years (about 742–740 B.C.), Pekahiah was killed by his military captain, PEKAH, and fifty Gileadites. Pekah then became king.

PEKOD [PEE kahd]—a minor Aramean tribe in eastern Babylonia. The prophet Jeremiah applied the name symbolically to the entire land of Babylonia (Jer. 50:21), indicating they would be judged by God.

PELAIAH [peh LIE yuh] (the Lord is wonderful)—the name of two or three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Elioenai, descended from David through Shechaniah (1 Chr. 3:24).
2. A priest who explained the Law as Ezra read it to the people (Neh. 8:7).
3. A Levite who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:10). He may be the same person as No. 2.

PELALIAH [pel uh LIGH uh] (the Lord has intervened)—a priest whose grandson returned from the captivity (Neh. 11:12).

PELATIAH [pel uh TIE uh] (the Lord has set free)—the name of four men in the Old Testament:

1. A descendant of David (1 Chr. 3:21).
2. A captain of the Simeonites who destroyed the Amalekites who lived at Mount Seir during King Hezekiah's reign (1 Chr. 4:42).
3. A chief of the people who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:22).
4. A son of Benaiah (Ezek. 11:1–13).

PELEG [PEE leg] (division)—a descendant of Noah through Shem and a son of Eber (Gen. 10:25). Peleg was an ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:35; Phalec, KJV). He was named Peleg (meaning "division"), because "in his days the earth was divided" (Gen. 10:25; 1 Chr. 1:19), probably referring to the scattering of Noah's descendants as God's judgment following the attempt to build the tower of Babel (Gen. 11:8, 16–19).

PELET [PEE let] (liberation)—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Jahdai (1 Chr. 2:47).
2. A son of Azmaveth (1 Chr. 12:3).

PELETH [PEE leth]—the name of two men in the Old Testament:

1. Father of On (Num. 16:1).
2. A son of Jonathan (1 Chr. 2:33).

PELETHITES [PEE leth ights]—a select company of soldiers who, along with the CHERETHITES, formed David's bodyguard (2 Sam. 8:18; 15:18). Some scholars believe the Pelethites and the Cherethites refer to Philistines and Cretans, respectively.

PELICAN (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

PELLA [PEL uh]—a city of the DECAPOLIS in TRANSJORDAN. Pella is not mentioned in the Bible, but it is referred to by the Jewish historian

Josephus as one of the "Ten Cities," which the Romans called Decapolis (Matt. 4:25; Mark 5:20; 7:31).

PELONITE [PEL uh night]—a designation for Helez (1 Chr. 11:27) and Ahijah (1 Chr. 11:36), two of David's mighty men. Helez is also called the PALTITE (2 Sam. 23:26), or a native of Beth Pelet.

PEN (see WRITING).

PENDANT—an ornament suspended from a necklace. Pendants were among the articles of gold captured from the Midianites by Gideon (Judg. 8:26; collars, KJV). Gold pendants, resembling medallions, have been excavated at Shechem. Pendants of various shapes have been found at Megiddo. Also see JEWELRY.

PENIEL [pih NIGH uhl]—a form of PENUEL.

PENINNAH [pih NIN uh] (ruby)—a wife of Elkanah (1 Sam. 1:2, 4). Peninnah taunted Hannah, Elkanah's other wife, because Peninnah had given birth to sons and daughters while Hannah had remained barren. When Hannah prayed for a child, the Lord answered her prayer by sending Samuel.

PENKNIFE (see SCRIBE'S KNIFE).

PENTATEUCH [PEN tuh tuke]—a Greek term meaning "five-volumed" which refers to the first five books of the Old Testament. The Jews traditionally refer to this collection as "the Book of the Law," or simply "the Law." Another word for this collection, "Torah," means "instruction, teaching, or doctrine." It describes such basic sections of the Pentateuch as parts of Exodus, Leviticus, and Deuteronomy.

This ancient division of the Law into five sections is supported by the SEPTUAGINT, a third-century B.C. translation of the Hebrew Old Testament into Greek, and also by the SAMARITAN PENTATEUCH, which is even earlier.

The five books together present a history of humanity from creation to the death of Moses, with particular attention to the development of the Hebrew people. The activity of God receives special emphasis throughout, and the Pentateuch reveals a great deal about God's nature and His purposes for mankind.

The Pentateuch is generally divided into six major sections: (1) the creation of the world and its inhabitants (Genesis 1–11); (2) the period from Abraham to Joseph (Genesis 12–50); (3) Moses and the departure of the Israelites from Egypt (Exodus 1–18); (4) God's revelation at Sinai (Exodus 19—Numbers 10); (5) the wilderness wanderings (Numbers 11–36); and (6) the addresses of Moses (Deuteronomy 1–34).

From the time it was written, the Pentateuch was consistently accepted as the work of Moses. His specific writing or compiling activity is mentioned in the Pentateuch (Ex. 17:14; 24:4; 34:27), while in the post-exilic writings the Law, or Torah, was often attributed directly to Moses (Neh. 8:1; 2 Chr. 25:4; 35:12). This tradition was supported by Christ in New Testament times (Mark 12:26; John 7:23).

The Pentateuch was also called the Law of the Lord (2 Chr. 31:3; Luke 2:23–24) and "the Book of the Law of God" (Neh. 8:18). The word "book" should not be understood in its modern sense, for several different writing materials were used by Old Testament SCRIBES, including papyrus and leather scrolls or sheets, pieces of broken pottery, clay tablets, and stone. The word "book" has two important usages in connection with the Law. First, it indicates that the material referred to was in written form at an early period. Second, it shows the combination of divine authorship and human transmission that gave the Law its supreme authority and made it "The Book" for the ancient Hebrews.

The Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch was accepted without question for centuries by both Jews and Christians. Occasionally, the account of Moses' death (Deut. 34:5–8) was questioned, but in the Jewish TALMUD, a collection of rabbinical laws and interpretations of the Torah, the section was said to have been written by Joshua. In the Middle Ages Jewish and Christian scholars began to point to supposed contradictions and insertions in the Law, some of the latter being credited to Ezra.

In spite of these objections, most people believed unquestioningly in Moses as the author; but criticism took on a new appearance in 1753 with a theory by Jean Astruc, a French physician, that Moses had used two principal literary sources from which he composed the Book of Genesis: one contained the divine name Elohim (“God”) and the other contained the divine name Jehovah or Yahweh (“the LORD”).

With the expansion of this suggestion by later authors came the increasing abandonment of belief in Mosaic authorship, and support for the view that the Pentateuch was compiled by unknown editors from a number of documents. It became common to attribute sections of the Pentateuch to late periods in Israel’s history. Even the main documents from which the Pentateuch had supposedly been compiled were assigned to periods long after the time of Moses.

In the nineteenth century the Book of Deuteronomy began to be regarded as the law-scroll found in the time of Joshua (2 Kin. 22:8–10), and written at about that time, according to many scholars.

While more conservative thinkers rejected these conclusions, the liberal humanism of the day pushed forward with its suppositions. Allied with the views of organic evolutionists, it presented its opinions about the authorship of Genesis as “scientific.” Actually, these liberal scholars were using procedures that were the exact opposite of true scientific method. But this did not prevent them from making pronouncements that amounted to rewriting history. Thus, all priestly materials in the Pentateuch were assigned to one main documentary source and regarded as late rather than early.

According to the liberal view, the tabernacle could no longer be dated in the days of Moses. It was regarded instead as a much later invention, based on the design of the Jerusalem temple, that had been put back into the Mosaic period by an anonymous compiler or editor. Israelite religion was interpreted in evolutionary terms as originating in the worship of spirits in nature, then advancing slowly from simple family sacrifices to the high view of God as the one and only true God.

This type of approach was aided by the nineteenth-century emphasis on evolution. The liberal view found its fullest development in the supposition that the Pentateuch was compiled from four principal documents, none of which was in writing before about 850 B.C. This theory of composition, popularized by Julius Wellhausen in 1878, is still held by liberal scholars, but with slight changes in emphasis because of the pressure of more recent discoveries.

This view of the compilation of the Pentateuch has had its critics at every stage. Some of the presuppositions of the liberal position are incorrect. One example is the notion that writing was only invented about the time of David (about 1000 B.C.). Evidence to the contrary already existed in Wellhausen's day, but it was ignored. Most recently, the EBLA Tablet discoveries show that a sophisticated language was in use in the ancient world about 2400 B.C.

It is now known that all priestly pronouncements dealing with social organization in the ancient world are always early rather than late, because priests were originally responsible for such matters. Furthermore, exhaustive comparative studies have shown that no other composition of the ancient Near East was assembled in the manner that liberal scholars claimed was the case with the Pentateuch. Archaeological and linguistic studies have confirmed many old customs recorded in the Pentateuch. These discoveries have provided an excellent background against which we can understand the Law of Moses.

To date, no articles that would prove the existence of such persons as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob have been recovered. But if the traditions about the nature and location of the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 23:17) are correct, we know the actual burial place of Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, Rebekah, and Jacob.

Studies in Genesis have shown that the book was compiled from genuine literary sources. But these are vastly different from those imagined by liberal scholarship. Generally speaking, the liberal view has failed to take account of ancient methods of compiling and transmitting information. Liberal scholars have supposed that Western editorial methods can be applied equally well to Near Eastern compositions, which is simply not true.

Whereas the nineteenth-century critics relied heavily upon the handing down of material by word of mouth, subsequent studies have shown that anything of importance in the ancient world was written down when it happened or shortly afterward. Furthermore, this record was quite independent of any verbal accounts passed on to later generations. Not all written or spoken material survived, of course; but enough did to provide us with the Pentateuch, as well as other Scriptures.

Finally, any suggestion that the five books of Moses are basically fraudulent in nature, not actually having been compiled or written by Moses, is contrary to Jewish tradition, as well as the nature of God as revealed in the Torah.

The five books of the Pentateuch can be described as follows:

Genesis. This "book of beginnings" contains very ancient material, describing mankind's place in God's creation and the unfolding of human history. It begins with an account of how the universe came into existence (1:1—2:4), followed by narratives about Adam and Eve and their sin of disobedience (2:5—3:24). The descendants of Adam are described (4:1—5:32), and after this the reasons for a disastrous flood and its consequences (6:1—9:29). Nations spread across the Near East after the Flood (10:1—11:32), and Abraham became prominent after obeying God's call (12:1—25:11). Thereafter the narratives continue with Ishmael, Isaac, and Jacob (25:12—36:43), concluding with the story of Joseph's career (37:1—50:26).

Genesis is important for its theology of creation, sin, and the divine plan of salvation because it provides answers about these matters. If Scripture did not begin in this way, New Testament theology would have little foundation in history. Genesis deals with real people. Near Eastern archaeological discoveries provide an important background to the narratives that describe their activities. The covenants between God and persons such as Noah and Abraham point forward to the covenant under Moses at Mount Sinai. They also point to the new covenant in Jesus Christ.

No author is named for the Book of Genesis, although it has always been regarded as a cornerstone of the Law, and therefore probably written by Moses. In contrast to the artificial sources proposed by liberal criticism, genuine blocks of source material can be recognized in the narratives. Eleven such units can be recovered by observing the phrase "These are the generations [that is, family histories] of" at the headings of major sections. Genesis was apparently compiled by placing these units end to end.

Exodus. This book deals with the miracle of Israel's deliverance from Egypt and with God's covenant relationship with the Israelites at Mount Sinai. Preliminaries to the departure from Egypt (Ex. 1:1—4:28) are followed by the circumstances leading up to the Exodus, including the ten PLAGUES OF EGYPT and the celebrating of the first PASSOVER (4:29—12:36). The deliverance from Egypt and the subsequent journey to Sinai

(12:37—19:2) precede the giving of the Law of God through Moses (19:3—31:8), in spite of intervals of idolatry (32:1—33:23). A renewal of the covenant relationship is followed by narratives describing the construction of the tabernacle (34:1—40:38).

The Book of Exodus continues Hebrew history from the death of Joseph, showing how the sons of Jacob became a distinctive nation. The COVENANT was central to this event. It bound God and Israel in an agreement by which God undertook to provide for all His people's material needs, including a land in which to live, if they would worship Him alone as the one true God and live as a holy community. Central to the rules of the covenant were the Ten Commandments, which are still fundamental to any relationship with God. The tabernacle was a portable place of worship that was placed in the center of Israel's wilderness encampment, symbolizing God's presence in their midst.

Leviticus. This is a book primarily for priests. The priests were responsible for teaching the Law to the people, conducting sacrificial worship in the tabernacle according to the directions given by God, and ordering the life of the community. Because Israel was meant to live as a holy people (Ex. 19:6), Leviticus contained regulations for both the spiritual and material aspects of life. These rules can be divided into five sections: (1) sacrificial laws (Leviticus 1–7); (2) laws governing ordination (Leviticus 8–10); (3) laws about impurities (Leviticus 11–16); (4) laws about holiness (Leviticus 17–26); and (5) rules governing vows (Leviticus 27).

All this material was divinely revealed to the nation of Israel directly from God. No part of it has been adopted from any other nation. The Year of Jubilee legislation (Lev. 25:8–17) is unique in the Near East. Leviticus continues the narrative of Exodus, but it emphasizes the way in which God is to be worshiped and the manner in which His people are to live. Holiness must govern the community (Lev. 11:44); and this must be reflected by everyone, not just the priesthood.

Numbers. This book follows the lead given by Leviticus in emphasizing the holiness of Israel. All the various elements that make up the book bear upon this important concept. The book can be divided into three broad sections: (1) the departure from Sinai (1:1—10:10); (2) the journey to Kadesh (10:11—20:21); and (3) the journey from Kadesh to Moab (20:22—30:13). The holiness of the tabernacle is central, as is the important place that the Levites occupied (8:5–26) in relation to the Aaronic priesthood. The description of the wilderness wanderings shows how quickly divine blessing could turn to severe judgment whenever God's commandments were broken.

The disobedience and idolatry of the Israelites is a sad theme in Numbers. Even Moses was not totally obedient to God. Although he brought Israel to Moab and within sight of the Promised Land, he was not privileged to lead the nation across the Jordan River. The book ends with the nation looking forward to the settlement of Canaan.

Deuteronomy. This book may be described as a covenant-renewal document that begins with a review of Israel's departure from Sinai (1:1—4:40); describes the religious foundation of the nation (4:44—26:19); reestablishes the covenant (27:1—30:20); and narrates the final days of Moses (31:1—34:12). In Deuteronomy Moses looks back upon God's blessing and provision while looking forward to the time when Israel will occupy the Promised Land.

The language of the book is noble oratory that glorifies the righteous and faithful God of Sinai and encourages the response of His people in obedience and faithfulness. The God revealed in Moses' addresses is not only the Judge of all the earth, but also the loving Father of mankind. Israel is reminded that the privileges of covenant relationship with Him also carry responsibilities. Moses predicts a dark future for the nation if it does not follow the covenant principles and remain faithful to God.

PENTATEUCH, SAMARITAN (see SAMARITAN PENTATEUCH).

PENTECOST, FEAST OF (see FEASTS AND FESTIVALS).

PENUEL [pih NOO uhl] (face of God)—the name of a place and two men in the Old Testament:

1. A place north of the River Jabbok where Jacob wrestled with "a Man" until daybreak. Hosea 12:4 calls the "man" an "Angel." Jacob called the place Penuel, "For I have seen God face to face" (Gen. 32:30). A city was built there later, not far to the east of Succoth. When Gideon and his band of 300 men pursued the Midianites, the people of Succoth and Penuel insulted Gideon, refusing to give supplies to his army. Gideon later killed the men of the city (Judg. 8:17). Penuel is about 65 kilometers (40 miles) northeast of Jerusalem. It is also called Peniel (Gen. 32:30).

2. A son of Hur and grandson of Judah (1 Chr. 4:4).
3. A son of Shashak, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:25).

PEOPLE OF GOD—the Hebrew people or the nation of Israel; all people who are part of the COVENANT relationship that God has established with His chosen ones.

In the Old Testament, the nation of Israel is referred to as the people of God. The Hebrew people are the Lord's "special treasure" (Ex. 19:5), His "inheritance" (Deut. 4:20), His "servant" (Is. 48:20), His "son" (Ex. 4:22–23), His "sheep" (Ps. 95:7), and His "holy people" (Deut. 14:2). The concept of the people of God is closely related to the concept of ELECTION, which stresses the truth that Israel is God's possession because of His gracious choosing—not because of Israel's merit or worth. The phrase "the people of God" refers to the special relationship of Israel with the Lord through His Covenant with Abraham (Gen. 12:1–3).

In the New Testament, the phrase is used occasionally to describe the "old Israel" (Heb. 4:9). But there is a definite transition to a new covenant and a new people of God, the church, who are now "His own special people" (Titus 2:14) and "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, His own special people" (1 Pet. 2:9). Peter and Paul applied Old Testament passages describing Israel to the church.

The church, then, is seen as the new Israel, or true Israel, of God (Rom. 9:6; Gal. 6:16), the true seed of Abraham (Gal. 3:29), and the new people of God (2 Pet. 2:9). Each person who believes in the Lord Jesus Christ is chosen by God, set apart as an object of His covenant love and faithfulness.

PEOR [PEE ohr]—the name of a mountain and a pagan god in the Old Testament:

1. A mountain near Mount Nebo, northeast of the Dead Sea, in the land of Moab. Balak took Balaam to the summit of Peor (Num. 23:28) to encourage Balaam to curse the Israelites.

2. A false god, more fully called Baal of Peor, which was worshiped by the Moabites. By the counsel of Balaam (Num. 31:16), the Israelites were enticed to worship this idol. Also see GODS, PAGAN.

PERAZIM [pih RAY zim] (breaches)—a mountain in central Canaan (Is. 28:21), also called BAAL PERAZIM.

PERDITION—destruction, ruin, or waste, especially through the eternal destruction brought upon the wicked by God (Heb. 10:39; 2 Pet. 3:7). Jesus contrasted the broad way that leads to life with the difficult way that leads to destruction (Matt. 7:13). The apostle Paul contrasted perdition with salvation (Phil. 1:28). The "desire to be rich" may lead one to "destruction and perdition" (1 Tim. 6:9). Peter speaks of "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men" (2 Pet. 3:7), a perishing far worse than those destroyed in the Flood.

The New Testament twice uses the phrase "son of perdition": once of Judas Iscariot (John 17:12) and once of "the man of sin [or lawlessness]," whom some scholars identify with the Antichrist (2 Thess. 2:3). The phrase portrays the progression of an evil character who produces ruin in others, and is headed toward final judgment (Rev. 17:8, 11). Perdition in this passage refers to a place of eternal punishment, the final state of the damned.

PEREA [peh REE ah] (the land beyond)—the Greek term for TRANSJORDAN (see Map 6, C–3). The name Perea does not occur in the New Testament (except in a variant reading of Luke 6:17), but it is used regularly by the Jewish historian Josephus to describe the area east of the Jordan River. The New Testament refers to this area by using the phrase "beyond the Jordan" (Matt. 4:25; Mark 3:8). Josephus described Perea as the region between the Jabbok and the Arnon rivers, east of the Jordan.

PERES [PEA rez] (divided)—one of the mysterious words that appeared in the handwriting on the wall in King Belshazzar's palace in Babylon (Dan. 5:28). Daniel interpreted this word to mean that Belshazzar's kingdom had been "divided" (peres) and given to the Medes and "Persians." This play on words is reflected in "Upharsin"

(Dan. 5:25), which means “and Parsin” (the plural of Peres). Also see MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.

PERESH [PIR esh] (separate)—a son of Machir and Maachah (1 Chr. 7:16).

PEREZ [PIR ez] (breakthrough)—the name of a man and a tribal family in the Old Testament:

1. The firstborn of the twin sons of Judah by Tamar (Gen. 38:29; Pharez, KJV). Perez was an ancestor of David and Jesus (Ruth 4:12, 18; Matt. 1:3; Luke 3:33).
2. A tribal family that took its name from Perez (1 Chr. 27:3). After the captivity, 468 valiant “sons of Perez” lived in Jerusalem (Neh. 11:4, 6).

PEREZ UZZAH, PEREZ UZZA [PIR iz UHZ uh] (breakthrough of Uzzah)—the name of the place where God struck Uzzah (or Uzza) dead for touching the ARK OF THE COVENANT (2 Sam. 6:7). Angry at “the Lord’s outbreak against Uzzah” (2 Sam. 6:8), David named the place Perez Uzzah.

PEREZITES [PIR eh zights]—a form of PARZITES.

PERFECT, PERFECTION—without flaw or error; a state of completion or fulfillment. God’s perfection means that He is complete in Himself. He lacks nothing; He has no flaws. He is perfect in all the characteristics of His nature. He is the basis for and standard by which all other perfection is to be measured (Job 36:4; Ps. 18:30; 19:7; Matt. 5:48).

By contrast, human perfection is relative and dependent on God for its existence. As applied to a person’s moral state in this life, perfection may refer either to a relatively blameless lifestyle (Gen. 6:9; Job 1:1; James 3:2) or to a person’s maturity as a believer (Phil. 3:15; James 1:4). Because perfection in this life is never reached, people will continue to sin (Phil. 3:12, 15; 1 John 1:8). A believer’s perfection in the next life, however, will be without sin (Eph. 5:27; Col. 1:28; 1 Thess. 5:23).

PERFUME—liquid substances with a pleasant smell. Perfume, a solid form of which is incense, was used widely throughout the ancient world in Bible times. Making perfume was a highly developed skill, and some were known to retain their smell for centuries. Israel's first perfumer made incense for use in the tabernacle (Ex. 37:29), a task performed in later years by the priests (1 Chr. 9:30).

Perfumes were made from many different herbs and plants. These plants were imported from such places as Arabia, India, Persia, Ceylon, and Egypt. Perfumes were used especially, but not exclusively, by the rich to cover the unpleasant body odors that resulted from the hot temperatures of Palestine and surrounding regions. Thus, they were applied to the feet (Luke 7:38), the freshly washed body (Ruth 3:3), clothing (Ps. 45:8), couches or beds (Prov. 7:17), the priest's head (so he would be presentable to God; Ps. 133:2), and even dead bodies (2 Chr. 16:14; John 19:39–40).

PERGA [PUR guh]—the capital city of Pamphylia, a province on the southern coast of Asia Minor, twice visited by the apostle Paul (see Map 7, C–2). During Paul's first missionary journey, he sailed to Perga from Paphos, on the island of Cyprus (Acts 13:13–14). Some time later, Paul and Barnabas stopped a second time at Perga (Acts 14:25).

PERGAMOS [PURR guh mos]—the chief city of Mysia, near the Caicus River in northwest Asia Minor (modern Turkey) and the site of one of the seven churches of Asia (Rev. 1:11; 2:12–17; Pergamum, NRSV, NIV, REB, NASB). The city, situated opposite the island of Lesbos, was about 24 kilometers (15 miles) from the Aegean Sea.

In its early history Pergamos became a city-state, then a powerful nation after Attalus I (241–197 B.C.) defeated the Gauls (Galatians). It stood as a symbol of Greek superiority over the barbarians. Great buildings were erected and a library containing over 200,000 items was established. The Egyptians, concerned with this library, which rivaled their own at ALEXANDRIA, refused to ship papyrus to Pergamos. As a result, a new form of writing material, Pergamena charta, or parchment, was developed.

In the days of Roman dominance throughout Asia Minor, Pergamos became the capital of the Roman province of Asia. In a gesture of friendship, Mark Antony gave Pergamos' library to Cleopatra; its volumes were moved to Alexandria.

Not only was Pergamos a government center with three imperial temples, but it was also the site of the temple of Asklepios (the Greco–Roman god of medicine and healing), and the medical center where the physician Galen worked (about A.D. 160). Here also was a temple to Athena and a temple to Zeus with an altar showing Zeus defeating snake-like giants. In the Book of Revelation, John spoke of Pergamos as the place "where Satan's throne is" (Rev. 2:13). This could be a reference to the cult of EMPEROR WORSHIP, because Pergamos was a center where this form of loyalty was pledged to the emperor of the Roman Empire.

PERIDA [pih RIGH duh]—a form of PERUDA.

PERIZZITES [PER uh zights] (villagers)—inhabitants of the “forest country” (Josh. 17:15) in the territory of the tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Judah (Judg. 1:4–5). The Perizzites, who lived in Canaan as early as the time of Abraham and Lot (Gen. 13:7), were subdued by the Israelites. After the conquest of the land of Canaan under Joshua, the Perizzites were allowed to live. They entered into marriages with their conquerors and seduced the Israelites into idolatry (Judg. 3:5–6). In the time of the judges, Bezek was their stronghold and Adoni-Bezek was their leader (Judg. 1:4–5). In the days of King Solomon the Perizzites were recruited for the king’s forced-labor force (1 Kin. 9:20).

PERJURY (see OATH).

PERSECUTION—the hatred and affliction that follows the witness and holy life of God’s people in a hostile world. The concept is stressed in many of the Old Testament prophetic books, such as Isaiah. The New Testament also teaches that God’s people will suffer persecution. Jesus taught that God’s prophets always faced persecution (Matt. 5:12); so His disciples should expect the same (Matt. 10:23).

In the early church, two ideas were taken over from Judaism to express the meaning of persecution. The Jewish theologians taught that the death of the righteous sufferer had redemptive value. While this idea was applied primarily to Jesus by the early Christians, the persecution of His followers was seen as a participation in Jesus’ suffering: filling up “what is lacking in the afflictions of Christ” (Col. 1:24). A good statement of this is that of Tertullian: “The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church.”

The idea of the coming Messiah held that the suffering of God’s people was part of the coming of the kingdom—evidence that a person is truly one of God’s own. Therefore they are “blessed” (Matt. 5:10) and should “rejoice” and “glorify God” since “the time has come for judgment to begin at the house of God” (1 Pet. 4:13–17).

Jewish opposition to Christianity arose primarily among the Sadducees (Acts 4:1; 5:17). At first the common people and the Pharisees did not oppose the church strongly (Acts 5:14, 34; 23:6). The first persecution came because Stephen spoke out about the inadequacy of the land of Israel and the temple for salvation. This intensified when the apostle Paul began to proclaim the salvation of the Gentiles through Jesus Christ alone. Both Jew and Christian began to realize that the two were now separate religions, rather than sects of a single religion.

Roman opposition to Christianity also developed gradually. The Book of Acts emphasized Roman tolerance for the new religion. But this began to change with the Jewish riots against Christians in Rome, resulting in the Emperor Claudius banning both groups from Rome in A.D. 49. This set the stage for the intense opposition of later years that allowed Nero to make Christians the scapegoats for the fire that leveled Rome in A.D. 64. During this persecution the apostles Paul and Peter were martyred.

PERSEPOLIS [purr SEP oh liss] (Persian city)—the ceremonial capital of the Persian Empire under DARIUS the Great (522–486 B.C.), his son Xerxes (486–465 B.C.), and their successors. The city was second in importance to Shushan (or Susa), the administrative capital. Persepolis was destroyed in 330 B.C. by Alexander the Great. Its ruins are situated about 49 kilometers (30 miles) northeast of the modern city of Shiraz in southwestern Iran. Although Persepolis is not mentioned in the Bible, it appears in 2 Maccabees (2 Macc. 9:1–2).

PERSEVERANCE—the steadfast effort to follow God's commands and to do His work. The New Testament makes it clear that faith alone can save. But it makes it equally clear that perseverance in doing good works is the greatest indication that an individual's faith is genuine (James 2:14–26). Indeed, perseverance springs from a faithful trust that God has been steadfast toward His people. Through persevering in God's work, Christians prove their deep appreciation for God's saving grace (1 Cor. 15:57–58).

As a result of perseverance, the Christian can expect not only to enhance the strength of the church, but also to build up strength of character (Rom. 5:3–4). In short, Christians can expect to become closer to God. They learn that they can persevere primarily because God is intimately related to them (Rom. 8:25–27) and especially because they have the assurance of a final reward in heaven (1 John 5:13).

PERSIA [PURR zyah]—an ancient world empire that flourished from 539–331 B.C. (see Map 1, E–2). The Babylonian Empire fell to the Persians, setting the stage for the return of the Jews to Jerusalem in 538 B.C., following their long period of captivity by the Babylonians.

The Old Testament contains many references to the nation of Persia and its representatives. Ezra 9:9 refers to the “kings of Persia.” Ezra 6:14 cites “Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes king of Persia.” Daniel 8:20 speaks of the “kings of Media and Persia.” Daniel 10:13 mentions the “prince of the kingdom of Persia.” The Book of Esther refers to the “powers of Persia and Media” (1:3), the “seven princes of Persia and Media” (1:14), and the “ladies of Persia and Media” (1:18). Daniel 5:28 prophesied that Belshazzar’s kingdom would be “given to the Medes and Persians.”

The Persians apparently sprang from a people from the hills of Russia known as Indo-Aryans. As early as 2000 B.C., they began to settle in Iran and along the Black Sea coast. Two of these Indo-European tribes settled on the Elamite border and to the east of the Zagros mountain range. The first references to them are made in the inscriptions of Shalmaneser III (858–824 B.C.). They are noted as the Parsua (Persians) and Madai (Medes).

The first mention of a Persian chieftain refers to his role as an ally aligned against Sennacherib of Assyria. His son was called “King, Great King, King of the City of Anshan.” His grandson fathered Cyrus II, also known as Cyrus the Great, who was one of the most celebrated kings of history. He is called by the prophet Isaiah “My shepherd” (Is. 44:28). In another passage he is referred to as “His [the Lord’s] Anointed” (Is. 45:1), a term used in the Old Testament of the Messiah. He is the only pagan king to be so designated in the Old Testament.

Cyrus II, founder of the mighty Persian Empire, ascended the throne in Anshan in 559 B.C. He conquered the Median King Astyages. Then he defeated Lydia (about 546 B.C.) and Babylon (539 B.C.), finally establishing the Persian Empire. This last conquest is referred to in Daniel 5. Cyrus’ rule was a result of the sovereignty of God. Cyrus was the Persian king who issued the decree restoring the Jews to their homeland, following their long period of captivity by the Babylonians (2 Chr. 36:22–23; Ezra 1:1–4).

Cyrus was the founder of the system under which each province, or satrapy, was governed by an official who answered to the great king. However, he allowed a remarkable degree of freedom of religion and customs for the vassal states, including Palestine. He developed roads, cities, postal systems, and legal codes, and treated the subject nations kindly and humanely. The Bible refers to Cyrus in favorable terms (Is. 44:28—45:3).

Cambyses II (530–522 B.C.), the son of Cyrus, reigned after his father. During his reign, Egypt was added to the list of nations conquered by Persia. According to the Greek historian Herodotus, Cambyses accidentally wounded himself with his own sword in 522 B.C..

The next Persian king, Darius I (521–486 B.C.), was not a direct descendant of Cyrus but was of royal, Achaemenid blood. He defeated nine kings to claim all twenty-three Persian satrapies. This was recorded on the famous Behistun Inscription, which was written in the Akkadian, Elamite, and Old Persian languages.

Darius I further unified the Persian Empire by using an efficient gold coinage, state highways, and a more efficient postal system. He was defeated by the Greeks at the Battle of Marathon in 490 B.C. This is the same Darius who, in his second year, ordered the Jewish temple at Jerusalem to be rebuilt after work on it had been discontinued for sixteen years (Ezra 4:24; 6:1). He also gave a generous subsidy that made it possible to complete the temple. The extent of the Persian Empire under Darius is reflected in Esther 1:1 and 10:1. The vast territory was nearly 4,900 kilometers (3,000 miles) long and 800–2,400 kilometers (500 to 1,500 miles) wide.

Xerxes ruled Persia from 486 to 465 B.C. He was the Ahasuerus of the Book of Esther. Esther did not become queen until the seventh year of his reign, which would be about 479 B.C. This was shortly after his devastating defeat at Salamis (480 B.C.), which ended Persia’s last hope for conquering Greece.

Another Persian king, Artaxerxes I Longimanus (464–424 B.C.), illustrates one of the ironies of history. This minor Persian king was of major importance because of his connection with the Jewish people. Apparently two of the three returns of the Jews from captivity in Babylon occurred during his reign.

The second return was under Ezra in 458 B.C. (Ezra 7:7). This was made possible because of the generosity of Artaxerxes. The third return occurred in 445 B.C. (Neh. 1:1).

Among the kingdoms of the ancient world, Persia is remembered because it built many important cities. PERSEPOLIS was a showpiece of Persian power. Pasargadae was the ancestral capital rapidly supplanted in importance. ECBATANA served as the capital of the Median Empire and became a resort area for the Persians. SUSA (the Shushan of Esther) was the former capital of the Elamite Empire.

The religion of the Persians centered around a reformation of the old Iranian religions developed by Zoroaster. He believed in a dualism in which Ahura Mazda (or Ormazd) headed the gods of goodness (Amesha Spentas) and Angra Mainyu (or Ahriman) headed the gods of evil (daevas). Some of this is revealed in the Jewish apocryphal literature, which developed from the fifth century B.C. to the time of Christ.

PETER, APOCALYPSE OF (see APOCRYPHA).

PETER, EPISTLES OF—two New Testament epistles bearing the name of “Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet. 1:1) and “Simon Peter, a servant and apostle of Jesus Christ” (2 Pet. 1:1), though otherwise having little in common.

First Peter, the longer of the two epistles, is written in fine Greek and refers frequently to the Old Testament. It is an epistle for the downhearted, written to give encouragement in times of trial and disappointment. First Peter anchors the Christian’s hope not on logic or persuasion, but on the matchless sacrifice of Jesus Christ, who “suffered for us, leaving us an example, that you should follow His steps” (2:21).

In contrast to 1 Peter, 2 Peter is briefer and written in a forced style. It rails against false teachers, while reminding believers of their election by God and assuring them of Christ’s return.

Structure of the Epistles. Following a greeting (1:1–2), 1 Peter begins on a positive note, praising God for the blessings of a “living hope” that He has reserved for believers (1:3–12). This doxology of praise sets a triumphant tone for the remainder of the letter, which can be divided into three parts: blessings, duties, and trials. The blessings extend from 1:3 to 2:10. Because of the “inheritance incorruptible and undefiled . . . reserved in heaven for you” (1:4), Peter calls on his readers to live a life holy and blameless, reminding them that they are a “holy nation, His [God’s] own special people” (2:9).

The second part of 1 Peter extends from 2:11 to 3:22. This section consists of guidance for social duties. The Christian’s lifestyle ought to be a testimony to nonbelievers (2:11–17); slaves ought to obey their masters—even unjust ones—bearing their humiliation as Christ bore His (2:18–25); the silent example of a Christian wife has great effect on a non-Christian husband (3:1–6); Christian husbands are to treat their wives as joint-heirs of the grace of life (3:7). In all things, let a blameless lifestyle bring shame on whoever would show opposition (3:8–22).

The third and final part of 1 Peter addresses the question of trials (4:1—5:11). In light of the nearness of the end, Christians must be “good stewards of the manifold grace of God” (4:1–11). They can rejoice in sharing Christ’s sufferings because of the glory that awaits them (4:12– 19). In their pastoral duties, church elders are to follow the example of Jesus, who perfects, establishes, and strengthens the flock (5:1–11). The epistle closes with mention of Silvanus, the secretary who wrote the letter, and with greetings from “Babylon” (5:12–14).

Second Peter begins with a greeting (1:1–2), enjoining believers, because they have been chosen by God, to develop noble characters (1:3–14). Recognizing that his own death is near, the author sees in the transfiguration of Jesus a forecast of the brilliant day when Christ will come again (1:15–21). Chapter two is a condensation of material from the letter of Jude, condemning false teachers and prophets. The final chapter deals with the future coming of the Lord and the reasons for its delay (3:1–18).

Authorship and Date. First Peter identifies its author as “Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ” (1:1). His frequent references to Christ’s suffering (2:21–24; 3:18; 4:1; 5:1) show that the profile of the Suffering Servant was etched deeply upon his memory. He calls Mark his “son” (5:13), recalling his affection for the young man and family mentioned in Acts 12:12. These facts lead naturally to the assumption that the apostle Peter wrote this letter.

Authorship of the epistle by the apostle Peter has been challenged, however, on the following grounds: (1) no official persecutions of the church took place during Peter’s lifetime; (2) the epistle echoes some of Paul’s teachings; and (3) the literary quality of the Greek seems too refined for a Galilean fisherman.

Valid as these objections are, they do not seriously challenge Peter’s authorship of the epistle. The sufferings mentioned in the epistle need not refer to official persecutions, which did not begin until the time of the Roman emperor Domitian (A.D. 81–96), but to earlier local incidents. The last two questions are neatly resolved by recognizing the role that Silvanus (5:12) played in composing the epistle.

As a former associate of the apostle Paul, and as one who doubtless came to the Greek language as a native, Silvanus may have played an important role in bringing this epistle to completion. We might say of 1 Peter that the ideas came from Peter, but the design from Silvanus. The reference to “Babylon” (5:13), a common image for civil power opposed to God, indicates that the epistle was written from Rome.

The question of authorship of 2 Peter is more difficult. Although the epistle claims to come from the apostle Peter (1:1; 3:1–2), who witnessed the transfiguration of Christ (1:18) and at the time of writing was nearing his death (1:14), few scholars believe Peter wrote the letter. Reasons for this judgment stem from a number of factors.

The style of 2 Peter is inferior to that of 1 Peter. Nearly the whole of Jude 4–18 has been reproduced in the second chapter; if Jude were not written until late in the first century, then 2 Peter obviously could not have been written before it. Again, 2 Peter refers to Paul’s epistles as a part of “the Scriptures” (3:16). This suggests a date, perhaps early in the second century, when Paul’s epistles had reached a level of authority in the early church. Finally, the Epistle of 2 Peter seems to have been unknown to the early church, and it was one of the last books to be included in the New Testament. These factors suggest that 2 Peter was written by an anonymous author but attributed by someone to the apostle Peter in order to assure a hearing for a message in a time well after Peter’s death.

On the other hand, most of the above objections are removed if we assume an earlier date for Jude and an earlier acceptance of a few of Paul’s letters into a developing Christian canon. In short, 2 Peter was probably written by Peter just before his martyrdom during the reign of Nero (about A.D. 65).

Historical Setting. First Peter is addressed to Christians living in “Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia” (1:1)—places in the northern and western parts of Asia Minor (modern Turkey). The readers appear to have been Gentiles (1:14, 18; 2:10; 4:3), although they probably had not been evangelized by Peter himself (1:12). The letter was obviously written to believers undergoing trials and persecutions, to give them courage in the face of their adversities (5:10).

Since it makes no mention of its audience, 2 Peter was probably intended for a general readership. Its primary purpose was to combat false teachers. Widespread in the ancient world was the view that sparks of eternal light lay trapped within the prisons of human bodies. These sparks of light, which longed to return to their primal home, could be liberated only by gnosis, or knowledge. Second Peter uses “knowledge” (1:5–6; 3:18) to show that only in Jesus Christ is the knowledge of God and salvation fully revealed. These false teachers also must have been critical of the delay in Christ's return. To this challenge the author devoted the entire third chapter.

Theological Contribution. First Peter was written by one who sensed the triumphant outcome of God's purpose for the world (1:4). The triumph of the future depends in no way on what we have done but on the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Because God has raised Jesus from the dead, God is deserving of praise; for "His abundant mercy has begotten us again to a living hope" (1:3).

The unshakableness of our hope in Jesus Christ, which awaits us in heaven, resounds like a clap of thunder throughout this epistle. Because Christ has been raised from the dead, His suffering and death have meaning. The believer can gain courage in present adversity by looking to the example of Christ in His suffering. We have a sure hope for the future because of Christ's resurrection. This truly is a "living hope," for it is one we can live by, even in the midst of "various trials" (1:6).

If 1 Peter is an epistle of hope, the accent falls not on wishful thinking, but on present help. No biblical writer shows the connection between faith and conduct in a clearer manner than does Peter. "Conduct," in fact, is a key word in this epistle (1:15, 17–18; 2:12; 3:1–2, 16). For Peter, practice is the most important thing.

The conduct Peter describes is the result of a life reclaimed by the perfect power of Jesus Christ. Christ has redeemed believers (1:18–19); Christ upholds and guides them (1:8; 2:25); and Christ will reward them (5:4). Christ is both the model and goal of the redeemed life. Consequently, believers may move forward on the pilgrim way, confident that the end will rise up to meet them with joy and salvation (2:11; 4:13–14).

Jesus said, "Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:10). There is no better commentary on this Beatitude than the Epistle of 1 Peter. Here, too, Jesus is our sole help and our sure Lord, "who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross" (Heb. 12:2).

Second Peter shifts the emphasis from a hope by which one can live to a hope on which one can count. The epistle speaks to the assurance of salvation in chapter one by making the extraordinary claim that Christians are "partakers of the divine nature" (1:4).

The second chapter deals with false teachers. The unique contribution of 2 Peter, however, comes in chapter three.

In chapter three the "day of the Lord" (3:10) or the "day of God" (3:12) breaks through the gloom of the doubters who taunt the hopeful (3:4). Such persons may be assured that God does not delay in coming because He lacks power or concern. Rather, what the unfaithful interpret as delay, the faithful know to be patience; for God is "not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance" (3:9).

PETER, GOSPEL OF (see APOCRYPHA).

PETER, SIMON—the most prominent of Jesus' twelve apostles. The New Testament gives a more complete picture of Peter than of any other disciple, with the exception of Paul. Peter is often considered to be a big, blundering fisherman. But this is a shallow portrayal. The picture of his personality portrayed in the New Testament is rich and many-sided. A more fitting appraisal of Peter is that he was a pioneer among the twelve apostles and the early church, breaking ground that the church would later follow.

The First Apostle to Be Called. Peter's given name was Simeon or Simon. His father's name was Jonah (Matt. 16:17; John 1:42). Simon's brother, Andrew, also joined Jesus as a disciple (Mark 1:16). The family probably lived at Capernaum on the north shore of the Sea of Galilee (Mark 1:21, 29), although it is possible they lived in Bethsaida (John 1:44).

Peter was married, because the gospels mention that Jesus healed his mother-in-law (Matt. 8:14–15). The apostle Paul later mentioned that Peter took his wife on his missionary travels (1 Cor. 9:5). Peter and Andrew were fishermen on the Sea of Galilee, and perhaps in partnership with James and John, the sons of Zebedee (Luke 5:10). In the midst of his labor as a fisherman, Peter received a call from Jesus that changed his life (Luke 5:8).

The Gospel of John reports that Andrew and Peter were disciples of John the Baptist before they joined Jesus. John also reports that Peter was introduced to Jesus by his brother Andrew, who had already recognized Jesus to be the Messiah (John 1:35–42). Whether Andrew and Peter knew Jesus because they were disciples of John is uncertain. But it is clear that they followed Jesus because of His distinctive authority.

The First Among the Apostles. Jesus apparently gathered His followers in two stages: first as disciples (learners or apprentices), and later as apostles (commissioned representatives). Peter was the first disciple to be called (Mark 1:16–18) and the first to be named an apostle (Mark 3:14–16). His name heads every list of the Twelve in the New Testament. He was apparently the strongest individual in the band. He frequently served as a spokesman for the disciples, and he was their recognized leader (Mark 1:36; Luke 22:32). Typical of Peter's dominant personality was his readiness to walk to Jesus on the water (Matt. 14:28), and to ask Jesus the awkward question of how often he should forgive a sinning fellow believer (Matt. 18:21).

An inner circle of three apostles existed among the Twelve. Peter was also the leader of this small group. The trio—Peter, James, and John—was present with Jesus on a number of occasions. They witnessed the raising of a young girl from the dead (Mark 5:37; Luke 8:51); they were present at Jesus' transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–2); and they were present during Jesus' agony in Gethsemane (Matt. 26:37; Mark 14:33). During Jesus' final week in Jerusalem, two of the three, Peter and John, were sent to make preparations for their last meal together (Luke 22:8).

The First Apostle to Recognize Jesus as Messiah. The purpose of Jesus' existence in the flesh was that people would come to a true picture of who God is and what He has done for our salvation. The first apostle to recognize that was Peter. He confessed Jesus as Lord in the region of Caesarea Philippi (Matt. 16:13–17).

Jesus began the process that would lead to Peter's awareness by asking a nonthreatening question, "Who do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" (Matt. 16:13). After the disciples voiced various rumors, Jesus put a more personal question to them, "But who do you say that I am?" (Matt. 16:15). Peter confessed Jesus to be the Messiah, the Son of God. According to Matthew, it was because of this confession that Jesus renamed Simon Cephas (in Aramaic) or Peter (in Greek), both meaning "rock."

Why Jesus called Simon a "rock" is not altogether clear. Peter's character was not always rock-like, as his denial of Jesus indicates. His new name probably referred to something that, by God's grace, he would become—Peter, a rock.

The First Apostle to Witness the Resurrection. How ironic that the one who denied Jesus most vehemently in His hour of suffering should be the first person to witness His resurrection from the dead. Yet according to Luke (Luke 24:34) and Paul (1 Cor. 15:5), Peter was the first apostle to see the risen Lord. We can only marvel at the grace of God in granting such a blessing to one who did not seem to deserve it. Peter's witnessing of the resurrection was a sign of his personal restoration to fellowship with Christ. It also confirmed His appointment by God to serve as a leader in the emerging church.

The First Apostle to Proclaim Salvation to the Gentiles. The earliest information about the early church comes from the Book of Acts. This shows clearly that Peter continued to exercise a key leadership role in the church for a number of years. Indeed, the first eleven chapters of Acts are built around the activity of the apostle Peter.

When the Holy Spirit visited the church in Samaria, the apostles sent Peter and John to verify its authenticity (Acts 8:14–25). But this event was only a prelude to the one event that concluded Peter's story in the New Testament: the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles (Acts 10– 11). The chain of events that happened before the bestowal of the Holy Spirit on Gentile believers—beginning with Peter's staying in the house of a man of "unclean" profession (Acts 9:43), continuing with his vision of "unclean" foods (Acts 10:9–16), and climaxing in his realization that no human being, Gentile included, ought to be considered "unclean" (Acts 10:34–48)—is a masterpiece of storytelling. It demonstrates the triumph of God's grace to bring about change in stubborn hearts and the hardened social customs of Jewish believers.

Following the death of James, the brother of John, and Peter's miraculous release from prison (Acts 12), Peter drops out of the narrative of Acts. Luke reports that he "went to another place" (Acts 12:17). We know, however, that Peter did not drop out of active service in the early church.

Peter probably broadened his ministry, once the mantle of leadership of the Jerusalem church fell from his shoulders to those of James. Peter played a key role at the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15; Galatians 2), which decided in favor of granting church membership to Gentiles without first requiring them to become Jews. Paul mentioned a visit of Peter to Antioch of Syria (Gal. 2:11), and he may refer to a mission of Peter to Corinth (1 Cor. 1:12). Peter dropped into the background in the Book of Acts not because his ministry ended. Luke simply began to trace the course of the gospel's spread to Gentile Rome through the ministry of Paul.

Peter in Rome: The First to Inspire the Writing of a Gospel. According to early Christian tradition, Peter went to Rome, where he died. Only once in the New Testament do we hear of Peter's being in Rome. Even in this case, Rome is referred to as "Babylon" (1 Pet. 5:13). Little is known of Peter's activities in Rome, although Papias, writing about A.D. 125, stated that Peter's preaching inspired the writing of the first gospel, drafted by Mark, who was Peter's interpreter in Rome. Peter was also the author of the two New Testament epistles that bear his name.

This early and generally reliable tradition supports the pioneer role played by Peter throughout his life and ministry. A number of other works—the Preaching of Peter, the Gospel of Peter, the Apocalypse of Peter, the Acts of Peter, and the Epistle of Peter to James—are apocryphal in nature. They cannot be accepted as trustworthy sources of information for the life and thought of the apostle.

Peter the First Pope? Whether Peter was the first pope of Rome is a question that can only be answered by a study of church history. Jesus' statement to Peter in Matthew 16:18, "You are Peter, and on this rock I will build My church," does not mention papal succession. But it does emphasize Peter's prominent role in the founding of the church.

PETHAHIAH [peth ah HIGH ah] (the Lord opens)—the name of three or four men in the Old Testament:

1. A priest whose family was appointed by David as sanctuary priests (1 Chr. 24:16).
2. A Levite who divorced his pagan wife after the captivity (Ezra 10:23).

3. A Levite who helped regulate the devotions of the people (Neh. 9:5). He may be the same person as No. 2.
4. An official of the Persian king for those who had returned from the captivity (Neh. 11:24).

PETRA [PET ruh] (rock)—the capital of Nabatea, situated about 275 kilometers (170 miles) southwest of modern Amman and about 80 kilometers (50 miles) south of the Dead Sea. Petra is not mentioned by name in the Bible, but many scholars believe it was the same place as SELA (Judg. 1:36; 2 Kin. 14:7).

Petra is one of the most spectacular archaeological ruins in the Near East and is a popular attraction on Holy Land tours. Most of the buildings and tombs of Petra are cut into the rose-red rock cliffs of the area.

Petra's ruins consist of about 750 monuments, most of them dating from the second half of the first century B.C. to the second century after Christ. In A.D. 131 the Roman emperor Hadrian (ruled A.D. 117–38) visited the city and ordered construction to begin on the so-called treasury, which has been called "Petra's gem"—a temple to Isis.

Many ruins of Roman construction may be seen at Petra: a triumphal arch, an amphitheater, remains of baths, temples, tombs, and sections of a road. Above the city is the great high place, containing sacrificial altars hewn from the solid rock. Such open-air sanctuaries have thrown light on the HIGH PLACES mentioned in the Old Testament.

Petra is reached from the west by ascending the Wadi Musa and passing through a narrow, high-walled gorge, known as the SIQ. Over a mile in length, this gorge provided Petra with excellent defense. The city is situated in a basin that is about 900 meters (3,000 feet) wide and about 1,600 meters (1 mile) long. The city is surrounded by massive sandstone cliffs of a dark red color.

PHARAOH [PHAY row]—the title of the kings of Egypt until 323 B.C. In the Egyptian language the word pharaoh means “great house.” This word was originally used to describe the palace of the king. Around 1500 B.C. this term was applied to the Egyptian kings. It meant something like “his honor, his majesty.” In addition to this title, the kings also had a personal name (Amunhotep, Rameses) and other descriptive titles (King of Upper and Lower Egypt).

The pharaoh was probably the most important person in Egyptian society. The Egyptians believed he was a god and the key to the nation’s relationship to the cosmic gods of the universe. While the pharaoh ruled, he was the Son of Ra, the sun god, and the incarnation of the god Horus. He came from the gods with the divine responsibility to rule the land for them. His word was law, and he owned everything. Thus there were no law codes, because the king upheld order and justice and insured the stability of society.

When the pharaoh died, Egyptians believed that he became the god Osiris, the ruler of the underworld and those who live after death. The pharaoh was the head of the army as well as a central figure in the nation’s religious life. As an intermediator between gods and people, the pharaoh functioned as a high priest in the many temples in Egypt. Because the Egyptian people believed their fate was dependent on that of the pharaoh, they seldom attempted to overthrow the government, although some pharaohs were very cruel.

In several instances the Israelites came into contact with a pharaoh. Abram (Abraham) went to Egypt around 2000 B.C. because of a famine in the land of Canaan. Because Abram lied about Sarai (Sarah) being his sister, Pharaoh wanted to take her into his harem; but God stopped him by sending a plague (Gen. 12:10–20). About 200 years later Joseph was thrown into prison in Egypt because the wife of Potiphar, the captain of Pharaoh’s guard, lied about Joseph’s behavior (Genesis 39).

While in prison Joseph met two of Pharaoh’s servants, the butler and the baker, who had been put in prison because they displeased the powerful pharaoh (Genesis 40). Joseph correctly interpreted the dreams of the butler and baker and later was brought from prison to interpret the dream of the Pharaoh (Genesis 41). The Egyptian priestly magicians could not interpret Pharaoh’s dream. But because God told Joseph the meaning of the dream, Joseph was appointed as second in command to collect one-fifth of the nation's crops during the seven years of plenty.

Because of the severity of the seven years of famine, the Egyptians had to sell their cattle, their property, and themselves to the Pharaoh for grain; thus the Pharaoh owned everything (Gen. 47:13–20). The Pharaoh sent carts to bring Joseph's brothers to Egypt (Gen. 45:16–20) and settled them in the fertile land of Goshen (Gen. 47:1–6).

After about 300 more years in Egypt, a new dynasty came to power. Its kings did not acknowledge Joseph and his deeds to save Egypt (Ex. 1:8). Therefore all the Israelites but Moses were enslaved. He was raised in the Pharaoh's own court (Ex. 1:11—2:10; Acts 7:21–22). At eighty years of age Moses returned to Pharaoh to ask permission to lead the Israelites out of Egypt. Pharaoh did not know or accept the God of the Israelites and refused to obey Him (Ex. 5:1–2). On a second visit Moses functioned as God to Pharaoh by delivering a divine message (Ex. 7:1), but the miracles and initial plagues only hardened Pharaoh's heart (Ex. 7:8–13, 22; 8:15, 32). Each plague was carried out so the Israelites, the Egyptians, and the Pharaoh would know that Israel's God was the only true God and that the Egyptian gods and their "divine pharaoh" were powerless before Him (Ex. 7:5, 17; 8:10, 22; 9:14, 29–30; 10:2).

Eventually Pharaoh admitted his sin, but before long he again hardened his heart (Ex. 9:27, 34; 10:16, 20). When Pharaoh's own "divine" firstborn son was killed in the last plague, he finally submitted to God's power and let the people go (Ex. 12:29–33). Pharaoh later chased the Israelites to bring them back, but he and his army were drowned in the Red Sea (Ex. 14:5–31).

Solomon formed an alliance with an Egyptian pharaoh through marriage with his daughter (1 Kin. 3:1; 7:8; 9:24), thus demonstrating that Israel was a more powerful nation than Egypt. This pharaoh later gave the city of Gezer to his daughter (1 Kin. 9:16). The next pharaoh had less friendly relationships with Solomon and gave refuge to Solomon's enemy, Hadad the Edomite (1 Kin. 11:14–22). This may have been the Pharaoh Shishak who protected Jeroboam (1 Kin. 11:40) and captured Jerusalem in the fifth year of Rehoboam (1 Kin. 14:25–28). Hoshea, the king of Israel, had a treaty with So, the king of Egypt

(2 Kin. 17:4). The Pharaoh Tirhakah may have had a similar relationship with Hezekiah (2 Kin. 19:9).

In 609 B.C. the Pharaoh Necho marched north through Palestine to save the Assyrians. King Josiah opposed this move, so Necho killed him (2 Kin. 23:29). Nebuchadnezzar later defeated Necho and took control of Judah (Jer. 46:2). It was possibly Pharaoh Hophra who challenged the Babylonians during the siege of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. (Jer. 37:5–10; 44:30; Ezek. 17:17).

The prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Hosea condemned Pharaoh and the Israelites who trusted in him and his army (Is. 30:1–5; 31:1; Jer. 42:18; Hos. 7:11). But the prophecies of Ezekiel are by far the most extensive (Ezekiel 29–32). Pharaoh is quoted as saying, “My River is my own; I have made it for myself” (Ezek. 29:3). Because Pharaoh claimed the power and authority of God, Ezekiel declared, God will destroy Pharaoh and Egypt (Ezek. 29:19; 30:21; 31:2; 32:2, 12).

The “king of the South” in (Dan. 11:5, 9, 11, 14, 25, 40) probably refers to one or more of the Greek kings, called Ptolemy, who ruled Egypt after the line of pharaohs ended in 323 B.C.

PHARES, PHAREZ [FAR eez]—forms of PEREZ.

PHARISEES [FARE uh sees] (separated ones)—a religious and political party in Palestine in New Testament times. The Pharisees were known for insisting that the law of God be observed as the scribes interpreted it and for their special commitment to keeping the laws of tithing and ritual purity.

The Pharisees had their roots in the group of faithful Jews known as the Hasidim (or Chasidim). The Hasidim arose in the second century B.C. when the influence of HELLENISM on the Jews was particularly strong and many Jews lived little differently than their Gentile neighbors. But the Hasidim insisted on strict observance of Jewish ritual laws.

When the Syrian King ANTIOCHUS IV tried to do away with the Jewish religion, the Hasidim took part in the revolt of the MACCABEES against him. Apparently from this movement of faithful Hasidim came both the Essenes—who later broke off from other Jews and formed their own communities—and the Pharisees, who remained an active part of Jewish life. Indeed, during the period of independence that followed the revolt, some of the Greek rulers who controlled Palestine favored the Pharisaic party.

As a result of this favoritism, Pharisees came to be represented on the SANHEDRIN, the supreme court and legislative body of the Jews. At times, the Pharisees even dominated the assembly. In New Testament times, Pharisees, though probably in the minority, were still an effective part of the Sanhedrin.

One distinctive feature of the Pharisees was their strong commitment to observing the law of God as it was interpreted and applied by the scribes. Although the priests had been responsible for teaching and interpreting the Law (Lev. 10:8–11; Deut. 33:8–10) in Old Testament times, many people had lost all respect for the priests because of the corruption in the Jerusalem priesthood. They looked to the scribes instead to interpret the Law for them. Some scribes were priests; many were not. Still, they lived pious, disciplined lives; and they had been trained to become experts in the Law. It was natural, then, for people to follow their leading rather than that of the priests.

The way in which the Pharisees spelled out the meaning of the Mosaic Law, the ways in which they adapted that Law to suit the needs of their day, the time-honored customs they endorsed—all these became a part of the "tradition of the elders" (Mark 7:3). Although these traditions were not put into writing, they were passed on from one scribe to another and from the scribes to the people. From this tradition, they claimed, the Jewish people could know the way God's law should be observed. The Pharisees agreed, and they were known for supporting and keeping the "tradition of the elders."

The Pharisees also believed it was important to observe all the laws of God, which they taught were 613 in all. But they were especially known for their commitment to keep the laws of tithing and ritual purity.

According to the New Testament, the Pharisees were concerned about strictly interpreting and keeping the law on all matters (Acts 26:5), including the Sabbath (Mark 2:24), divorce (Mark 10:2), oaths (Matt.

23:16–22), the wearing of PHYLACTERIES and FRINGES (Matt. 23:5), and so on. But they showed special zeal in insisting that laws of tithing and ritual purity be kept (Matt. 23:23–26; Mark 7:1–13; Luke 11:37–42; 18:12).

Since Pharisees found that other Jews were not careful enough about keeping those laws, they felt it was necessary to place limits on their contacts with other Jews as well as with Gentiles. For example, they could not eat in the home of a non-Pharisee, since they could not be sure that the food had been properly tithed and kept ritually pure.

Unlike the SADDUCEES, the Pharisees did believe in the resurrection of the dead. On this point, they were on common ground with the early Christians (Acts 23:6–9). The scribe in Mark 12:28 who thought that Jesus had answered the Sadducees well concerning the resurrection was probably a Pharisee.

The Pharisees and their scribes enjoyed a good deal of popular support. In one way this is surprising, since the Pharisees kept apart from other Jews. They always seemed to be ready to criticize others for not keeping the laws, and they often looked down on “sinners” who showed no interest in God’s law (Mark 2:16; Luke 7:39; 15:2; 18:11).

Still, unlike the Sadducees, who were mostly rich landowners and powerful priests, many Pharisees were ordinary people. And even though other Jews could not be bothered with observing all the details of the Law, they respected the Pharisees for making the effort. Even Paul credited unbelieving Jews with having a “zeal for God” (Rom. 10:2)—even though it was misguided. He probably was thinking primarily of the Pharisees when he wrote these words.

In the New Testament, the Pharisees appear frequently in the accounts of Jesus’ ministry and the history of the early church. In these passages a number of the typical failings of the Pharisees are evident. Of course, not all Pharisees failed in all these points—and the same failings can be found among religious people of any age.

Pharisees observed the Law carefully as far as appearances went, but their hearts were far from God. Their motives were wrong because they wanted human praise (Matt. 6:2, 5, 16; 23:5–7). They also had evil desires that were hidden by their pious show (Matt. 23:25–28). That is why Pharisees are often called hypocrites: their hearts did not match their outward appearance.

The Pharisees thought they could match God’s standards by keeping all the outward rules. Luke 18:9 says they “trusted in themselves that they were righteous.” This can easily happen when people think God’s will is the same thing as their list of what they can and cannot do. Their desire to keep all of God’s laws was commendable, but sometimes they put the emphasis on the wrong places. Minor details became a major preoccupation, and they forgot the more important things (Matt. 23:23).

Finally, because Pharisees thought they were doing their best to keep God’s laws while others were not, they often looked down on such “sinners”—especially people like tax collectors and prostitutes. Religious people need to remember that they, too, are sinners in God’s eyes, and that Christ died for everyone.

PHAROSH [FAY rahsh]—a form of PAROSH.

PHARPAR [FAHR pahr]—a river of southern Syria near Damascus (2 Kin. 5:12) mentioned by Naaman, the Syrian leper (2 Kin. 5:12). The Pharpar probably is the modern Nahr el-Awaj, formed by several streams that descend from Mount Hermon. The river empties into Lake Bahret Hijaneh, east of Damascus.

PHICOL [FIGH kuhl]—a form of PHICHOL.

PHILADELPHIA [fill ah DELL fih uh] (brotherly love)—a city of the province of Lydia (see Map 6, C–4) in western Asia Minor (modern Turkey) and the site of one of the seven churches of Asia to which John wrote in the Book of Revelation (Rev. 1:11).

Philadelphia was situated on the Cogamus River, a tributary of the Hermus (modern Gediz) and was about 45 kilometers (28 miles) southeast of Sardis. It was founded by Attalus II (Philadelphus), who reigned as king of Pergamos from 159 B.C. until 138 B.C. Philadelphia was a center of the wine industry. Its chief deity was Dionysus, in Greek mythology the god of wine (the Roman Bacchus).

In the Book of Revelation, John describes the church in Philadelphia as the faithful church and the church that stood at the gateway of a great opportunity (Rev. 3:7–13). Christ said to this church, "See, I have set before you an open door and no one can shut it" (v. 8). The "open door" means primarily access to God, but it also refers to opportunity for spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ. Still a city of considerable size, Philadelphia is known today as Alashehir.

PHILEMON [fie LEE mun]—a wealthy Christian of Colossae who hosted a house church. Philemon was converted under the apostle Paul (Philem. 19), perhaps when Paul ministered in Ephesus (Acts 19:10). He is remembered because of his runaway slave, Onesimus, who, after damaging or stealing his master's property (Philem. 11, 18), made his way to Rome, where he was converted under Paul's ministry (Philem. 10).

Accompanied by Tychicus (Col. 4:7), Onesimus later returned to his master, Philemon. He carried with him the Epistle to the Colossians, plus the shorter Epistle to Philemon. In the latter, Paul asked Philemon to receive Onesimus, not as a slave but as a "beloved brother" (Philem. 16).

PHILEMON, EPISTLE TO—the shortest and most personal of Paul's epistles. Philemon tells the story of the conversion of a runaway slave, ONESIMUS, and the appeal to his owner, PHILEMON, to accept him back. The letter is warm and masterful, reminding us that the presence of Christ drastically changes every relationship in life.

Structure of the Epistle. Philemon consists of one chapter of twenty-five verses. A greeting, addressed to Philemon and the church that meets in his house (vv. 1–3), is followed by four verses in praise of Philemon’s love and faith (vv. 4–7). Paul comes to his point in verses 8–16, where he tells of his affection for Onesimus and entreats Philemon to receive him back as a “beloved brother” (v. 16). Paul is so confident that Philemon will do even more than he asks that he offers to pay any expenses Philemon has incurred and asks him to prepare the guest room for a forthcoming visit (vv. 17–22). Final greetings conclude the letter (vv. 23–25).

Authorship, Date, and Historical Setting. The Epistle to Philemon is a companion to the Epistle to the Colossians. Both were written during Paul’s imprisonment, probably in Rome (Col. 4:18; Philem. 9).

They contain the names of the same greeters (compare Col. 4:7–17 with Philem. 23–25) and were delivered at the same time by Tychicus and Onesimus (Col. 4:7–9). The date for the two letters is the late 50s or early 60s.

Theological Contribution. The Epistle to Philemon is a lesson in the art of Christian relationships. No finer example of “speaking the truth in love” (Eph. 4:15) exists than this beautiful letter. While it was Philemon’s legal right in the ancient world to punish or even kill a runaway slave, Paul hoped—indeed expected (v. 19)—that Philemon would receive Onesimus back as a brother in the Lord, not as a slave (v. 16). From beginning to end Paul addresses Philemon as a trusted friend rather than as an adversary (v. 22); he appeals to the best in his character (vv. 4–7, 13–14, 17, 21). In spite of Paul’s subtle pressures for Philemon to restore Onesimus, he is careful not to force Philemon to do what is right; he helps him choose it for himself (vv. 8–9, 14).

Special Considerations. Although Paul never, so far as we know, called for an end to slavery, the Epistle to Philemon laid the ax at the root of that cruel and deformed institution—and to every way of treating individuals as property instead of persons. If there is “one God and Father of all” (Eph. 4:6), and if all are debtors to Him (Rom. 3:21–26), then people cannot look on another person as something to be used for their own ends. In Christ that person has become a “beloved brother.”

PHILETUS [fih LEE tuhs] (beloved)—a false teacher of the early church. Along with Hymenaeus, Philetus was condemned by the apostle Paul because he claimed the resurrection was already past (2 Tim. 2:17). Undoubtedly, Philetus advocated a GNOSTIC teaching that held that the body is evil and only the spirit will be saved. Because it upset the faith of some, such teaching is dangerous, Paul declared.

PHILIP [FILL ihp] (lover of horses)—the name of four men in the New Testament:

1. One of the twelve apostles of Christ (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:14) and a native of Bethsaida in Galilee (John 1:44; 12:21). According to the Gospel of John, Philip met Jesus beyond the Jordan River during John the Baptist’s ministry. Jesus called Philip to become His disciple. Philip responded and brought to Jesus another disciple, named Nathanael (John 1:43–51) or Bartholomew (Mark 3:18). Philip is usually mentioned with Nathanael.

   Before Jesus fed the five thousand, He tested Philip by asking him how so many people could possibly be fed. Instead of responding in faith, Philip began to calculate the amount of food it would take to feed them and the cost (John 6:5–7).

When certain Greeks, who had come to Jerusalem to worship at the Feast of Passover, said to Philip, “Sir, we wish to see Jesus” (John 12:21), Philip seemed unsure of what he should do. He first told Andrew, and then they told Jesus of the request. Philip was one of the apostles who was present in the Upper Room following the resurrection of Jesus (Acts 1:13).

2. A son of Herod the Great and Mariamne; first husband of Herodias (Matt. 14:3; Luke 3:19). He was either the brother or half-brother of Herod Antipas. Since he is not called the tetrarch, scholars believe him to be a different Philip from Philip the tetrarch, a half-brother of Herod Antipas. Most scholars agree that this Philip was Herod Philip the first husband of Herodias. Herodias left him for Herod Antipas. He did not actually reign, but lived as a private citizen in Rome. According to the Jewish historian Josephus, although Philip was in the line of succession, he was passed over in the will of Herod the Great.
3. Philip the tetrarch, a son of Herod the Great by Cleopatra of Jerusalem. Luke 3:1 records that Philip was “tetrarch of Iturea and the region of Trachonitis” at the time when John the Baptist began his ministry. He married Salome, the daughter of Herod Philip and Herodias. According to Josephus, Philip’s character was exceptional and his rule of thirty-seven years (4 B.C.—A.D. 34) was just and fair. He improved the town of Paneas and renamed it Caesarea. It was later called Caesarea Philippi (Matt. 16:13) to avoid confusion with Caesarea on the Mediterranean Sea. He also turned the village of Bethsaida into a city and renamed it “Julias,” in honor of Julia, the daughter of Augustus Caesar.
4. Philip the evangelist, one of the seven men chosen to serve the early church because they were reported to be “full of faith and the Holy Spirit” (Acts 6:5). Their task was to look after the Greek-speaking widows and probably all of the poor in the Jerusalem church. Following the stoning of Stephen, the first Christian martyr, many Christians scattered from Jerusalem (Acts 8:1). Philip became an evangelist and, in Samaria, preached the gospel, worked miracles, and brought many to faith in Christ (Acts 8:5–8).

   Probably the most noted conversion as a result of Philip’s ministry was the ETHIOPIAN EUNUCH, an official under Candace, the queen of the Ethiopians. Philip met the eunuch on the road from Jerusalem to Gaza. The eunuch was reading from Isaiah 53, the passage about the SUFFERING SERVANT. Philip used this great opportunity to preach Jesus to him. The eunuch said, “I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God” (Acts 8:37). Then Philip baptized him.

After this event, Philip preached in Azotus (the Old Testament Ashdod) and Caesarea (Acts 8:40). He was still in Caesarea many years later when the apostle Paul passed through the city on his last journey to Jerusalem (Acts 21:8). Luke adds that Philip had “four virgin daughters who prophesied” (Acts 21:9).

PHILIP HEROD (see HEROD).

PHILIPPI [FIL uh pie] (city of Philip)—a city in eastern Macedonia (modern Greece) visited by the apostle Paul (see Map 7, C–1). Situated on a plain surrounded by mountains, Philippi lay about 16 kilometers (10 miles) inland from the Aegean Sea. The Egnatian Way, the main overland route between Asia and the West, ran through the city. Philippi was named for Philip II of Macedonia, the father of Alexander the Great. In 356 B.C. Philip enlarged and renamed the city, which was formerly known as Krenides. Philip resettled people from the countryside in Philippi and built a wall around the city and an acropolis atop the surrounding mountain. Although they date from later periods, other points of interest in Philippi include a forum the size of a football field, an open-air theater, two large temples, public buildings, a library, and Roman baths.

In 42 B.C. Mark Antony and Octavian (later Augustus Caesar) combined forces to defeat the armies of Brutus and Cassius, assassins of Julius Caesar, at Philippi. In celebration of the victory, Philippi was made into a Roman colony; this entitled its inhabitants to the rights and privileges usually granted those who lived in cities in Italy. Eleven years later, Octavian defeated the forces of Antony and Cleopatra in a naval battle at Actium, on the west coast of Greece. Octavian punished the supporters of Antony by evicting them from Italy and resettling them in Philippi. The vacated sites in Italy were then granted to Octavian’s own soldiers as a reward for their victory over Antony.

The apostle Paul visited Philippi on his second missionary journey in A.D. 49 (Acts 16:12; 20:6). Evidently the city did not have the necessary number of Jewish males (ten) to form a synagogue, because Paul met with a group of women for prayer outside the city gate (Acts 16:13).

French excavations at Philippi between 1914 and 1938 unearthed a Roman arch that lay about one mile west of the city. This arch may have served as a zoning marker to restrict undesirable religious sects from meeting in the city. One of the women of Philippi who befriended Paul, named LYDIA, was a dealer in purple cloth (Acts 16:14). A Latin inscription uncovered in excavations mentions this trade, thus indicating its economic importance for Philippi. Philippi also is mentioned or implied in Acts 20:16; Philippians 1:1; and 1 Thessalonians 2:2.

PHILIPPIANS [fih LIP ih anz]—natives or inhabitants of PHILIPPI (Phil. 4:15), a city of Macedonia situated about 113 kilometers (70 miles) northeast of Thessalonica (Acts 16:12; Phil. 1:1).

PHILIPPIANS, EPISTLE TO THE—one of four shorter epistles written by the apostle Paul while he was in prison. The others are Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon. Paul founded the church at Philippi (Acts 16:12–40). Throughout his life the Philippians held a special place in his heart. Paul writes to them with affection, and the epistle breathes a note of joy throughout. When Paul first came to Philippi, he was thrown in jail. In the deep of the night, bound and beaten, he sang a hymn to God (Acts 16:25). A decade later Paul was again in prison, and he still was celebrating the Christian's joy in the midst of suffering, "Rejoice in the Lord always. Again I will say, rejoice!" (Phil. 4:4).

Structure of the Epistle. Paul begins the epistle by giving thanks for the love of the Philippians and by praying for its increase (1:1–11). Even though Paul is in prison, the gospel is not confined; on the contrary, it is increasing. Whether Paul lives or dies, "Christ is preached" (1:18); and this results in salvation (1:12–26). Following these reflections, Paul introduces a series of exhortations: to remain faithful in suffering (1:27–30); to remain considerate of others, as Jesus Christ was (2:1–11); and to avoid evil and live blamelessly (2:12–18).

Paul then turns to news of two companions. Once a decision has been reached about his trial, Paul will send Timothy to the Philippians with the news (2:19–24). For the present, he is sending back Epaphroditus, who had brought the Philippians' gift to him and who in the meantime has been critically ill (2:25–30). In chapter 3 Paul discusses the difference between true and false righteousness. Whereas the JUDAIZERS would say, "If you do not live rightly you will not be saved," Paul teaches, "If you do not live rightly you have not been saved."

The final chapter summarizes several miscellaneous matters. Paul exhorts quarrelsome church members to rise above their differences (4:1–5). He also leaves two important lessons, on substituting thankful prayer for anxiety (4:6–7), and on the characteristics of a noble and godly life (4:8–9). He concludes with thanks for the Philippians' gift and includes final greetings (4:10–23).

Authorship. There can be little doubt that Philippians comes from Paul. The entire epistle bears the stamp of his language and style; the setting pictures Paul's imprisonments; and the recipients correspond with what we know of the church at Philippi.

During his second missionary journey, in A.D. 49, Paul sensed the Lord calling him to visit Macedonia (Acts 16:6–10). At Philippi he founded the first Christian congregation on European soil (Acts 16:11–40). A lifelong supportive relationship developed between the Philippians and Paul (Phil. 1:5; 4:15). He visited the church again during his third missionary journey (Acts 20:1, 6).

At the time he wrote Philippians, Paul was in prison awaiting trial (Phil. 1:7). The Philippian Christians came to Paul's aid by sending a gift, perhaps of money, through Epaphroditus (4:18). During his stay with Paul, Epaphroditus fell desperately ill. But he recovered, and Paul sent him back to Philippi. He sent this letter with him to relieve the anxiety of the Philippians over their beloved fellow worker (2:25–30).

Historical Setting and Date. The location of Paul's imprisonment has been long debated. Much can be said for Ephesus or Caesarea but still more for Rome. Paul refers to "the whole palace guard" (1:13), and he even sends greetings from "Caesar's household" (4:22). These references suggest Rome, as does the description of his confinement in 1:12–18. This description is similar to Clement's description of Paul's Roman imprisonment written near the close of the first century. Paul also considers the possibility of his death (1:23). This prospect was more likely toward the end of his life in Rome than earlier. The epistle, therefore, should probably be dated about A.D. 60.

Theological Contribution. The focus of Paul's thoughts in this epistle is the Christ-centered life, the hallmark of which is joy. Paul has surrendered everything to Christ and can say, "For to me, to live is Christ" (1:21), "to be a prisoner for Christ" (1:13), "to live and die in Christ" (1:20), "and to give up all to win Christ" (3:7–8). Christ has laid hold of Paul (3:12), and Paul's sole passion is to glorify Christ (3:8–9). Paul longs for his experience of Christ to be repeated in the lives of the Philippians. He prays that they will abound in the love of Christ (1:9), will lay hold of the mind of Christ (2:5–11), and, like himself, will know the experience of Christ—His sufferings, death, and resurrection (3:10–11).

Because Paul's only motive is to "know Him" (3:10), he shares in the power of Christ and "can do all things through Christ," who is his joy and strength (4:13).

Several times in the epistle Paul exhorts the Philippians to translate their relationship with Christ into daily life by being “like-minded” with Christ or “setting their minds on Christ.” In the face of opposition, Paul tells them to “stand fast . . . with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel” (1:27).

Differences between Christians can be overcome when the parties have “the same mind in the Lord” (4:2). Paul exhorts the believers to set their mind on the high calling of God in Jesus Christ (3:14–15) and to meditate on whatever is true, noble, just, pure, lovely, and of good report (4:8). To have the mind of Christ is to see life from Christ’s perspective and to act toward other people with the intentions of Christ.

Special Considerations. Nowhere is the mind of Christ presented to the Christian more strongly than in Philippians 2:1–11. Appealing to the Philippians to be of “one mind” (2:2) in pursuing humility, Paul cites the example of the incarnation of God in Jesus Christ. “Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus” (2:5), urges Paul. Unlike Adam, who sought to be equal with God (Gen. 3:5), Christ did not try to grasp for equality with God. Instead, being God, He poured Himself out and took upon Himself the form of a slave, to the point of dying the death of a common criminal. “Therefore,” glories Paul, “God . . . has highly exalted Him, and given Him the name which is above every name” (2:9).

This is the Christ whose attitude and intention all believers must share. To be identified with Christ in humility and obedience is the noblest achievement to which anyone can aspire.

PHILISTIA [fih LIS tih uh]—the land of the PHILISTINES (see Map 3, A–4), as used in the poetry of the Book of Psalms (60:8; 108:9). This land lay between Joppa and Gaza on the coastal plain of Palestine. Also see PALESTINE.

PHILISTIM [fih LIS tim]—KJV spelling of PHILISTINES (Gen. 10:14).

PHILISTINES [fih LIS teens]—an aggressive nation that occupied part of southwest Palestine (see Map 3, A–4) from about 1200 to 600 B.C. The name Philistine was used first among the Egyptians to describe the sea people defeated by Rameses III in a naval battle about 1188 B.C. Among the Assyrians the group was known as Pilisti or Palastu. The Hebrew word pelishti is the basis of the name Palestine, a later name for Canaan, the country occupied by God’s Covenant People.

Little is known about the origins of the Philistines except what is contained in the Bible—that they came from Caphtor (Gen. 10:14), generally identified with the island of Crete in the Mediterranean Sea. Crete also was supposed to be the home of the Cherethites, who were sometimes associated with the Philistines (Ezek. 25:16). Philistine territory was considered Cherethite in 1 Samuel 30:14, suggesting that both peoples were part of the invading group defeated earlier by Rameses III of Egypt.

Liberal scholars have assumed that references to the Philistines during Abraham’s time are incorrect historically and that the Philistine occupation actually occurred in the 12th century B.C. More careful examination indicates there were two Philistine settlements in Canaan, one early and another later. Both these settlements were marked by significant cultural differences.

The Philistines of Gerar, with whom Abraham dealt (Genesis 20–21), evidently were a colony of the early settlement located southeast of Gaza in southern Canaan. This colony was situated outside the area occupied by the five Philistine cities after 1188 B.C. Gerar was also a separate city-state governed by a king who bore the name or title of Abimelech.

That Abimelech’s colony was the chief one in the area seems probable from his title, “king of the Philistines” (Gen. 26:1, 8). This is different from a later period when the Philistines were governed by five lords. Unlike the later Philistines who were Israel’s chief foes in the settlement and monarchy periods, the Gerar Philistines were peaceful. They encouraged the friendship of Abraham and Isaac. Finally, Gerar was not included among the chief cities of Philistia (Josh. 13:3). It was not mentioned as one of the places conquered by the Israelites. It is best, therefore, to regard the Genesis traditions as genuine historical records.

The early Philistine settlements in Canaan took on a new appearance when five cities—Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, Gath, and Gaza—and the areas around them were occupied by the Philistines in the twelfth century B.C. Probably all of these except Ekron were already in existence when the sea peoples conquered them. These five Philistine cities formed a united political unit. Archaeological discoveries in the area have illustrated how they expanded to the south and east. Broken bits of Philistine pottery were found at archaeological sites in those areas.

The Philistines possessed superior weapons of iron when they began to attack the Israelites in the eleventh century B.C. The tribe of Dan moved northward to escape these Philistine attacks, and Judah also came under increasing pressure (Judges 14–18). In Samuel’s time the Philistines captured the ARK OF THE COVENANT in battle. Although the ark was recovered later, the Philistines continued to occupy Israelite settlements (1 Sam. 10:5).

The threat of the Philistines prompted Israel's demands for a king. But even under Saul the united nation was still menaced by the Philistines—a threat that ultimately resulted in Saul's death (1 Samuel 31). David's slaying of Goliath, a giant from Gath, was a key factor in his rise to fame. By this time the Philistines had moved deep into Israelite territory. Archaeological evidence shows they had occupied Tell Beit Mirsim, Beth Zur, Gibeah, Megiddo, and Beth Shean. Yet by the end of David's reign their power had begun to decline significantly. By the time Jehoshaphat was made king of Judah (873–848 B.C.), the Philistines were paying tribute (2 Chr. 17:11), although they tried to become independent under Jehoshaphat's son, Jehoram (2 Chr. 21:16–17).

When the Assyrians began to raid Palestine in later years, the Philistines faced additional opposition. The Assyrian Adad–Nirari III (about 810–783 B.C.) placed the Philistine cities under heavy tribute early in his reign, while Uzziah of Judah (791–740 B.C.) demolished the defenses of several Philistine strongholds, including Gath. When he became king, Ahaz of Judah (732–715 B.C.) was attacked by Philistine forces, and cities in the Negev and the Judean lowlands were occupied. The Assyrian king Tiglath–Pileser III responded by conquering the chief Philistine cities.

In 713 B.C. Sargon II, king of Assyria, invaded Philistia and conquered Ashdod. The following year he launched another campaign against other Philistine cities. Hezekiah of Judah (716–686 B.C.) attacked Gaza (2 Kin. 18:8), supported by the people of Ekron and Ashkelon; but in 701 B.C. Sennacherib brought Philistine territory under his control to prevent any Egyptian interference. When Nebuchadnezzar came to power in Babylon, the Philistines formed an alliance with Egypt; but when the Jews were exiled to Babylonia between 597 and 586 B.C., the Philistines, too, were deported.

No Philistine literature has survived, making it difficult to reconstruct their religious beliefs or rituals. Old Testament records indicate they worshiped three gods, Ashtoreth, Dagon, and Baal-Zebub—each of which had shrines in various cities (Judg. 16:23; 1 Sam. 5:1–7; 2 Kings 1:2). Philistine soldiers apparently carried images of their gods into battle, perhaps as standards (2 Sam. 5:21). Like other Near Eastern peoples, the Philistines were superstitious. They respected the power of Israel’s ARK OF THE COVENANT (1 Sam. 5:1–12).

As depicted on Egyptian reliefs, Philistine soldiers wore short tunics, were clean-shaven, had crested or decorated helmets, carried round shields, and fought with spears and swords.

In the days before David’s reign, the Philistine cities were governed by a representative from each city. These authorities exercised complete power in both peace and war. This centralized control made the Philistines strong, in contrast to the loosely organized Israelites.

The Philistines were important culturally because they adopted the manufacture and distribution of iron implements and weapons from the Hittites. Goliath’s equipment was obviously of Philistine manufacture. The golden objects that were offered to Israel’s God (1 Sam. 6:4–5) show that the Philistines were skilled goldsmiths as well.

The remains of Philistine furnaces have been uncovered at Tell Jemmeh and Ashdod. The area around Ashdod has produced some examples of typical Philistine pottery. This pottery reflected Greek as well as Egyptian and Canaanite styles.

The Philistines loved beer. Large beer mugs decorated with red and black geometric designs were some of their important pottery products, along with large cups, beakers, and bowls. Some Philistine burial places discovered at Tell Far’ah reveal bodies encased in clay coffins shaped to match the human body. The coffin lid was decorated with crude figures of the head and clasped arms of the deceased.

PHILO JUDAEUS [FIE low joo DEE us]—a Jewish philosopher and teacher who is known for his allegorical interpretation of Scripture; also known as Philo of Alexandria. He was born into one of the most influential Jewish families in Alexandria, Egypt, around 20 B.C. and died in A.D. 50. Thus, he was teaching and writing during the time of Jesus. Philo was schooled in the Greek philosophers and dramatists as well as his own Jewish traditions. Most scholars agree that he was not familiar with the Hebrew Bible and did most of his work in the Greek translation known as the SEPTUAGINT.

Philo was very active in the synagogues of Alexandria, and he learned from the numerous teachers and preachers who visited there. The stories and scholarly lectures he heard were incorporated into his writings. During the reign of the Roman Emperor, Gaius Caligula, Philo visited Rome to plead for the protection of the Jews of Alexandria. The persecution of Jews in Egypt made it impossible for Philo to isolate himself from diplomatic service.

Philo's writings were preserved by the Christian church. Many Jews thought his writings were suspect because they reflected Greek philosophy rather than Hebrew tradition, while the church viewed his works as close to the thoughts of the church fathers. Many Christian writers saw parallels between Philo and the Gospel of John, for example—especially in his idea of the Word, or Logos, of God being in the beginning with God (John 1:1).

Philo's writings dealt mainly with the Pentateuch and various themes within the writings of Moses. Among his many writings are On the Creation, which says that the creation (the laws of nature) is in harmony with the law as written in the first five books of Moses (the Pentateuch). Allegorical Interpretation is a comment on the first seventeen chapters of Genesis. He does not deal with the text of Genesis itself so much as he uses it as a springboard to various themes from the rest of the Pentateuch. On Dreams is a series of sermons Philo gave in the synagogue; it is based on the dream stories in Genesis.

On the Ten Commandments is Philo's interpretation of the Ten Commandments; and On the Special Laws is a summary of the laws in the Pentateuch placed into the ten categories given in the Ten Commandments. Philo also wrote lives of the patriarchs, Abraham, Joseph, and Moses. These Lives deal with the patriarchs as models of righteous people.

PHILOLOGUS [fih LAHL uh guhs] (talkative)—a Christian to whom the apostle Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:15).

PHILOSOPHY—the love of wisdom (from phileo, "to love," and sophia, "wisdom"). At the sporting events of ancient Greece, the philosopher Pythagoras said, there were three types of people: lovers of money (selling refreshments), lovers of fame (sports heroes), and lovers of wisdom (seekers of wisdom in sports and life in general). Everyone who has some convictions by which he lives is a philosopher. However, those called philosophers in a formal sense consciously seek well-founded convictions by which to live.

Teachers of philosophy give their lives to examining convictions by which people live in order to develop a consistent world view and way of life based on reliable evidence. The Bible warns against philosophies whose highest realities and concerns are atoms, energy, cosmic laws, or humanity—those founded on “the basic principles of the world, and not according to Christ” (Col. 2:8). Christians ought to beware that their minds not be taken captive by such philosophies as secular humanism, communist materialism, and capitalist materialism. But these philosophies are best fought with spiritual weapons (2 Cor. 10:4–5).

Christian wisdom appears to be foolishness to the people of the world (1 Cor. 1:18). But it is wiser than the philosophy of this age, which comes to nothing (1 Cor. 1:25; 2:6). Christians “speak the wisdom of God” (1 Cor. 2:7), which is revealed through His Spirit (1 Cor. 2:10) and received by His Spirit (1 Cor. 2:12–14). Christians have the highest and most complete wisdom in Christ (Col. 2:8–10).

The chief biblical example of how to help students of philosophy who do not accept biblical authority is found in Paul’s ministry to the EPICUREAN and STOIC philosophers at Athens. Paul commended their zeal, quoted them favorably on a point of agreement, declared the truth about the living Lord of all, announced their accountability to Christ (not to Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Epicurus, or Zeno), and called on them to repent and trust Jesus Christ (Acts 17:16–34).

PHINEHAS [FIN ih uhs] (the Nubian)—the name of three men in the Old Testament:

1. A son of Eleazar and grandson of Aaron (Ex. 6:25). During the wilderness wandering, Phinehas killed Zimri, a man of Israel, and Cozri, a Midianite woman whom Zimri had brought into the camp (Numbers 25). This action ended a plague by which God had judged Israel for allowing Midianite women to corrupt Israel with idolatry and harlotry. For such zeal Phinehas and his descendants were promised a permanent priesthood (Num. 25:11–13). Phinehas became the third high priest of Israel, serving for nineteen years. His descendants held the high priesthood until the Romans destroyed the temple in A.D. 70, except for a short period when the house of Eli served as high priests.
2. The younger of the two sons of Eli the priest (1 Sam. 1:3). Phinehas and his brother, Hophni, were priests also; but they disgraced their priestly office by greed, irreverence, and immorality (1 Sam. 2:12–17, 22–25). The Lord told Eli his two sons would die (1 Sam. 2:34). They were killed in a battle with the Philistines. When Phinehas' wife heard the news, she went into premature labor and died in childbirth. The child was named ICHABOD, which means "The glory has departed from Israel!" (1 Sam. 4:22). Because of the evil actions of Phinehas and Hophni, the high priesthood later passed from Eli's family.
3. The father of Eleazar (Ezra 8:33).

PHLEGON [FLEG ahn]—a Christian of Rome to whom the apostle Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:14).

PHOEBE [FEE bih]—a servant of the church in Cenchrea, the eastern port of Corinth (Rom. 16:1; Phebe, KJV). The apostle Paul tells us little about Phoebe, other than "she has been a helper of many and of myself also" (Rom. 16:2). The Greek words he used to describe her suggest that Phoebe was a wealthy businesswoman. Many scholars believe she delivered Paul's letter to the Romans.

PHOENICIA [foe KNEE shih uh]—the land north of Palestine on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea (see Map 4, B–2), between the Litani and Arvad Rivers. Phoenicia is a Greek word, that means “land of purple.” The area was famous from early times for its purple dyes, produced from shellfish. In the KJV, Phoenicia is spelled Phenicia.

Phoenicia was a long, narrow country on the seacoast covering much of the territory that today is called Lebanon and southern Latakia (coastal Syria). Like Israel, much of it is mountainous, with only a narrow coastal plain. The low hills and plain are very fertile. Phoenicia was famous in biblical times for its lush plant life, which included fruit, flowers, and trees (Hos. 14:5–7). “They shall be revived like grain, and grow like the vine. Their scent shall be like the wine of Lebanon” (v. 7).

The cedars of Phoenicia were cut and shipped as far away as Egypt and eastern Mesopotamia, because most other nations in this part of the world had very few trees suitable for timber. Many direct land and sea routes connected Phoenicia to northern Israel. The Phoenicians had many contacts with the Israelites. During their long history, the Hebrew people often fell into paganism and idolatry because of the influence of Phoenician religion.

Also see PHOENICIANS.

PHOENICIANS [foe KNEE shih uns]—inhabitants of PHOENICIA, the ancient nation along the Mediterranean Sea north of Palestine. The Phoenicians were known for their trade and commerce and their skill as a seafaring people. There were three major reasons why Phoenicia became a major trading power.

First, the Phoenicians lived on a narrow strip of coastland. Thus hemmed in, they took to the sea in order to expand their economy, eventually becoming one of the most distinguished seafaring peoples in history.

Second, the mountains that approach the Phoenician coast made travel by land unusually difficult; travel by sea was the logical alternative.

Finally, the plentiful supply of pine, cypress, and cedar trees in Phoenicia made shipbuilding an ideal pursuit for the Phoenician people. The men of Byblos were noted shipbuilders (Ezek. 27:9), and the people of the Phoenician city of Sidon were experts at felling trees (1 Kin. 5:6).

Phoenicia’s two major ports, Tyre and Sidon, were semi-independent city-states. Besides these two, several other Phoenician cities grew in influence as the merchant fleets brought wealth into the country. By its “golden age” (about 1050–850 B.C.) the Phoenicians achieved their height of prosperity and influence. Phoenicia founded many colonies along shipping routes, so that Phoenicians lived in Crete, Cyprus, Sardinia, Sicily, North Africa (especially the important colony of Carthage), and even Spain.

In the course of their travels, Phoenician merchants developed many skills that had a lasting influence on world culture. They are usually given credit for originating the alphabet and for pioneering the skills of glassmaking and the dyeing of cloth. Scholars believe Solomon’s temple and many of its furnishings were based on a Phoenician design.

Some archaeologists believe that the Phoenicians were extremely skilled in working with gold, iron, and copper, and that they were skilled jewelers. Also, Phoenician designs possibly inspired much of Greek, Assyrian, and Etruscan architecture.

As the Assyrians began to dominate the ancient world in the eighth century B.C., Phoenicia’s influence declined. Phoenicia was progressively weakened in wars with Assyria during the seventh century B.C. In 585 B.C. the Babylonians, who had conquered Assyria only two decades earlier, laid siege to Tyre—the last remaining independent Phoenician city.

After thirteen years of siege (585–572 B.C.), the mainland city of Tyre was captured. There was also an island city of Tyre, which did not fall until 332 B.C. when Alexander the Great built a causeway over half a mile long in order to reach it. Alexander destroyed the city, but Tyre was later rebuilt. The city was an important outpost in the Greek and Roman period.

Like its neighbor Israel, Phoenicia finally ceased to be an independent nation. It was dominated in turn by the Persians, Greeks, Seleucids, and Romans.

Phoenician Religion. Phoenician gods were male and female representations of nature. Their primary god was called Baal. He combined the attributes of several other Phoenician deities, including Hadad, the storm god; Shamash, the sun god; and Resheph, god of the earth and the netherworld. The Phoenician goddess honored as the “great mother” was called Ashtoreth. Additionally, Eshmun, the god of healing, was especially honored in Sidon.

Connections with the Old Testament. When David completed the conquest of the Promised Land and made Israel the strongest power in the area, the Phoenicians under Hiram of Tyre (981–947 B.C.) became involved commercially with the Israelites (2 Sam. 5:11). The Phoenicians of Tyre helped supply materials and laborers for the building of Solomon’s temple (1 Kin. 5:1–12). In later years, Solomon bought Hiram’s help by transferring ownership of large tracts of real estate in Galilee from Israel to Tyre (1 Kin. 9:11).

The Phoenicians also helped the Israelites in Solomon’s kingdom to learn the shipping trade and to construct a merchant fleet that brought wealth to Israel (1 Kin. 9:26–28). Regrettably, Solomon fell under the influence of foreign religions later in his life.

These problems included worship of the Phoenician idol Ashtoreth, the supreme goddess of the Sidonians (1 Kin. 11:1–8). His turning from the Lord to the beliefs of people such as the Phoenicians resulted in the division of the nation—an act of judgment by God (1 Kin. 11:9–13).

Phoenician religious influence in Israel was given a dramatic boost by King Ahab, who married the Phoenician princess Jezebel, the daughter of the king of the Sidonians. Ahab gave Jezebel the freedom to put prophets of Baal on the government payroll in Israel (1 Kin. 18:19) and to try to convert the nation to idolatry.

Although the Bible mentions Phoenicia rarely, it often refers to the major Phoenician cities of Tyre and Sidon. Isaiah (23:1–18), Jeremiah (25:22; 47:4), Ezekiel (26:2—28:23), and other Old Testament prophets predicted the judgment of God on Tyre and Sidon. This judgment came in large measure when the Babylonians captured these cities along with the rest of Phoenicia in the early sixth century B.C.

Connections with the New Testament. Phoenicians were among those who came to hear Jesus teach about the kingdom of God (Luke 6:17). After the death of Stephen, some Christians escaped persecution by going to Phoenicia, where they preached the gospel (Acts 11:19). The apostle Paul traveled through Phoenicia on more than one occasion (Acts 15:3; 21:2–3).

PHOENIX [FEE niks]—a harbor in the southern part of CRETE, west of Fair Havens (Acts 27:12; Phenice, KJV). On his trip to Italy the ship on which the apostle Paul and 275 other passengers were traveling anchored in the harbor of Fair Havens.

PHRYGIA [FRIJ ih uh]—a large province of the mountainous region of Asia Minor (modern Turkey; see Map 7, C–2), visited by the apostle Paul (Acts 2:10; 16:6; 18:23). Because of its size, Phrygia was made a part of other provinces. In Roman times the region was split between two provinces. The cities of Colossae, Laodicea, and Hierapolis belonged to Asia, while Iconium and Antioch belonged to Galatia.

The apostle Paul visited Phrygia on two journeys (Acts 13:14—14:5, 21; 16:6). He apparently also passed through Phrygia on his third journey (Acts 18:22–24), although his letter to the Colossians suggests he did not found a church there (Col. 2:1). Jews who were at Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost may have been the first Phrygian converts (Acts 2:10). Jews settled in Phrygia during the SELEUCID period. Some of them apparently adopted non-Jewish practices. Consequently, strict Jews became hostile to new ideas (Acts 13:44—14:6).

PHURAH [FYUR uh]—a form of PURAH.

PHUT [fuht]—a form of PUT.

PHUVAH [FOO vuh]—a form of PUVAH.

PHYGELLUS [FIGH juh luhs]—a Christian who deserted the apostle Paul in his hour of need (2 Tim. 1:15). He was probably afraid of being condemned by the Roman authorities.

PHYLACTERIES [fie LACK tuh rees]—small square leather boxes or cases, each containing four strips of parchment inscribed with quotations from the Pentateuch, the first five books of the Old Testament (Ex. 13:1–10; 13:11–16; Deut. 6:4–9; 11:13–21). Phylacteries were worn by every male Israelite above thirteen years of age during morning prayer, except on the Sabbath and holidays. Although orthodox Jews still observe this practice, reformed Judaism has discontinued it.

Phylacteries consisted of two small hollow cubes made of the skin of clean animals. These boxes were attached to leather straps that were used to fasten them to the left hand and to the forehead during morning worship. The custom of wearing phylacteries can be traced to Deuteronomy 6:8, “You shall bind them as a sign upon your hand, and they shall be as frontlets between your eyes.”

The discovery of portions of phylacteries in the Dead Sea caves reveals they were not standardized before the time of Christ. Certainly not all the people wore them, but the Pharisees possibly wore them constantly during the time of Jesus.

The word “phylacteries” occurs only once in the New Testament: “They [the scribes and Pharisees] make their phylacteries broad and enlarge the borders of their garments” (Matt. 23:5). In this passage Jesus criticized the display of some religious leaders who wanted to impress people with their piety.

PHYSICIAN—a person skilled in the art of healing the sick. Both the Old and New Testaments frequently mention the curing of ailments, but specific details about how this was done are few.

In the ancient world, primitive medical practices were performed by magicians or priests. This was especially true in ancient Egypt, where even elementary brain surgery was attempted. Some of the Egyptian procedures were adopted by the Hebrews. These included embalming (Gen. 50:2, 3, 26) or obstetrics, as with the midwives Shiphrah and Puah (Ex. 1:15).

Specific medical remedies are often recorded in the Bible. These include the application of bandages (Is. 1:6), oil (James 5:14), roots and leaves (Ezek. 47:12), wine (1 Tim. 5:23), and salves—particularly the BALM OF GILEAD (Jer. 8:22).

In the New Testament, the Good Samaritan treated the wounded traveler's injuries with oil and wine (Luke 10:34). Luke, author of the Gospel of Luke, is called "the beloved physician" by the apostle Paul (Col. 4:14).

PI BESETH [pie BEE zith] (house of Bastet)—an ancient city in the Nile River delta that became the capital of Egypt at one time in its past. In Ezekiel 30:17 (Bubastis, NIV) it is the place where young men were to fall by the sword and from which others were to be carried into captivity. The city was about 49 kilometers (30 miles) southwest of ancient Zoan and about 73 kilometers (45 miles) northeast of modern Cairo.

PI HAHIROTH [pie huh HIGH rahth]—the site of the final Israelite encampment in Egypt before they crossed the RED SEA. Pi Hahiroth is described as being "between Migdol and the sea" and "opposite" Baal Zephon (Ex. 14:2). Numbers 33:8 has Hahiroth, a shortened form of Pi Hahiroth.

PICK (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

PIECE OF GOLD, MONEY, SILVER (see MONEY OF THE BIBLE).

PIETY—a word usually defined as religious devotion and reverence to God. In its only occurrence in the NKJV, however, it means faithfulness in performing one's responsibilities to the family, especially to parents (1 Tim. 5:4).

PIG, PIGEON (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

PILATE, PONTIUS [PIE lat, PON chus]—the fifth Roman prefect of Judea (ruled A.D. 26–36), who issued the official order sentencing Jesus to death by crucifixion (Matthew 27; Mark 15; Luke 23; John 18–19).

Pilate's Personal Life. The Jewish historian Josephus provides what little information is known about Pilate's life before A.D. 26, when Tiberius appointed him procurator of Judea. The sketchy data suggests that Pilate was probably an Italian-born Roman citizen whose family was wealthy enough for him to qualify for the middle class. Probably he held certain military posts before his appointment in Judea. He was married (Matt. 27:19), bringing his wife, Claudia Procula, to live with him at Caesarea, the headquarters of the province. Pilate governed the areas of Judea, Samaria, and the area south as far as the Dead Sea to Gaza. As prefect he had absolute authority over the non-Roman citizens of the province. He was responsible to the Roman governor who lived in Syria to the north (Luke 2:2).

Pilate never became popular with the Jews. He seemed to be insensitive to their religious convictions and stubborn in the pursuit of his policies. But when the Jews responded to his rule with enraged opposition, he often backed down, demonstrating his weakness. He greatly angered the Jews when he took funds from the temple treasury to build an aqueduct to supply water to Jerusalem. Many Jews reacted violently to this act, and Pilate's soldiers killed many of them in this rebellion. It may be this or another incident to which Luke refers in Luke 13:1–2. In spite of this, Pilate continued in office for ten years, showing that Tiberius considered Pilate an effective administrator.

Pilate's later history is also shrouded in mystery. Josephus tells of a bloody encounter with the Samaritans, who filed a complaint with Pilate's superior, Vitellius, the governor of Syria. Vitellius deposed Pilate and ordered him to stand before the emperor in Rome and answer for his conduct. Legends are confused as to how Pilate died. Eusebius reports that he was exiled to the city of Vienne on the Rhone in Gaul (France) where he eventually committed suicide.

Pilate's Encounter with Jesus. Since the Jews could not execute a person without approval from the Roman authorities (John 18:31), the Jewish leaders brought Jesus to Pilate to pronounce the death sentence (Mark 14:64). Pilate seemed convinced that Jesus was not guilty of anything deserving death, and he sought to release Jesus (Matt. 27:24; Mark 15:9–11; Luke 23:14; John 18:38–40; 19:12). Neither did he want to antagonize the Jews and run the risk of damaging his own reputation and career. Thus, when they insisted on Jesus' crucifixion, Pilate turned Jesus over to be executed (Matt. 27:26; Mark 15:12–15; Luke 23:20–25; John 19:15–16).

Pilate's Character. Pilate is a good example of the unprincipled achiever who will sacrifice what is right to accomplish his own selfish goals. Although he recognized Jesus' innocence and had the authority to uphold justice and acquit Jesus, he gave in to the demands of the crowd rather than risk a personal setback in his career. This is a real temptation to all people who hold positions of power and authority.

PILDASH [PIL dash]—the sixth son of Nahor and Milcah (Gen. 22:22).

PILEHA [PIL ih huh]—a form of PILHA.

PILGRIMAGE—a word with three distinct meanings in the Bible:

1. The course of life on earth (Gen. 47:9; Ex. 6:4). Jacob summed up his entire life to that point—130 years—as a pilgrimage (Gen. 47:9).
2. A journey of a pilgrim to a sacred place or shrine, especially of the worshipers of the Lord who went up to the temple in Jerusalem for special feasts (Ps. 84:5; 119:54).
3. A long journey or search, especially one of exalted purpose and moral significance. The heroes of faith are described as "strangers and pilgrims on the earth" (Heb. 11:13). The Christian's true citizenship, or permanent home, is in heaven (Phil. 3:20). While on earth, he or she is but a pilgrim, a traveler, a temporary resident.

PILHA [PIL huh]—a leader of the people who sealed the covenant after the captivity (Neh. 10:24; Pilha, REB, NRSV; Pileha, NASB).

PILLAR—a word with several different meanings in the Bible:

1. The word pillar can refer to an architectural element that supports a roof. Use of pillars was common in the Near East long before the time of Abraham. Pillars were usually made of wood or stone. References to pillars as a part of a building occur throughout the Old Testament but not in the New Testament.

   Wooden pillars were a prominent part of the tabernacle (Ex. 27:11; posts, NIV). But the only mention of pillars in the construction of Solomon's temple were the two that flanked the main entrance (1 Kin. 7:15–22). Solomon built a "Hall of Pillars" as part of his palace complex (1 Kin. 7:6). A famous reference to pillars occurs in Judges 16:25–30, where Samson brought down the roof of a pagan temple by knocking out two key pillars. Excavators have found the remains of a Philistine temple that had two pillars close to each other, probably like the ones Samson pulled down.
2. Pillars, or upright standing stones with religious significance, were used by both the Canaanites and the Israelites. In Canaanite worship places, a stone pillar was used as a symbol for the male god, usually Baal (2 Kin. 17:10). Moses erected twelve pillars, representing the twelve tribes of Israel, beside the altar he built to call upon the COVENANT (Ex. 24:4). Pillars could also serve as boundary markers (Gen. 31:45) or as tombstones (Gen. 35:20).

3. The Bible also contains many figurative references to pillars. For instance, the physical demonstration of God’s presence during the Exodus was described as a “pillar of fire” and a “pillar of cloud” (Ex. 13:21). In other places, the importance of persons or things is emphasized by referring to them as pillars (Gal. 2:9). That which holds something up, either figuratively or literally, can also be called a pillar (1 Tim. 3:15).

PILLAR OF FIRE AND CLOUD—the phenomenon by which God guided the Israelites during their travels through the wilderness after leaving Egypt (Ex. 14:24). The pillar of fire and cloud is first mentioned in Exodus 13:21–22, where some of its characteristics are described. In the form of cloud by day and fire by night, the pillar was constantly visible to the Israelites. By this phenomenon, God led the people on their journey from the border of Egypt as they marched toward the Promised Land. As a pillar of fire, it gave enough light for the people to travel by night.

The pillar of fire and cloud was also a visible sign or representation of God's presence with His people. In a sense God could be said to be "in" the pillar (Ex. 14:24); in it He "came down" to the tabernacle of meeting (Num. 12:5), and "appeared" at the tabernacle (Deut. 31:15).

After the TABERNACLE was built in the wilderness, it was covered by a cloud that had the appearance of fire by night. Although this cloud was not described as a pillar, it must have been the same phenomenon. While the cloud remained over the tabernacle, the people did not break camp. But they set out when the cloud was taken up. Wherever it settled down again was to be the next stopping place.

PILLARS OF SALT—odd-shaped natural rock-salt formations near the Dead Sea, in the area of Sodom and Gomorrah. In spite of the warning by the angels, Lot's wife looked back at the wicked cities of the plain and was transformed into a pillar of salt (Gen. 19:26).

Also see LOT.

PILLOW—a leather-covered cushion on which a person's head rests while at sleep (Mark 4:38; cushion, NRSV, NIV, REB, NASB). Jesus rested in the stern of a boat on the Sea of Galilee, asleep on a pillow that may have belonged to the owner of the boat. This is the only occurrence of the word pillow in the NKJV. In the KJV, Jacob put a stone under his head for a pillow (Gen. 28:11, 18).

PILOT (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

PILTAI [PIL tigh] (my deliverance)—the head of a household in the time of the high priest Joiakim (Neh. 12:17).

PIM [pim] (see WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

PIN—KJV word for PEG. The pin or tent peg was a part of the structure of the tabernacle (Ex. 27:19; 39:40; Num. 4:32). A peg was also a symbol of the worthlessness of a fruitless vine (Ezek. 15:3). God compared the inhabitants of Jerusalem to the wood of a vine that, if it does not bear fruit, is good only for burning.

PINE (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

PINNACLE—a part of the temple mentioned in the temptation of Jesus (Matt. 4:5; Luke 4:9). The pinnacle was an elevated part of the temple now unknown. It probably was either the battlement or the roof of Solomon's Porch. Whatever its exact location, the pinnacle offered a vast view of Jerusalem.

PINON [PIE nahn]—a chief of Edom, of the family of Esau (1 Chr. 1:52).

PIPE (see MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE BIBLE).

PIRAM [PIE ruhm]—the king of JARMUTH, a city southwest of Jerusalem in the lowlands of Judah (Josh. 10:3). Piram was one of five Amorite kings who formed a military alliance to resist the invasion of the Israelites.

PIRATHON [PIR uh thahn]—a city in which Abdon died after judging Israel eight years (Judg. 12:13–15). Pirathon is now called Ferata. It is about 12 kilometers (7.5 miles) southwest of Shechem.

PIRATHONITE [PIR uh thuh night]—a native or inhabitant of PIRATHON (Judg. 12:13; 1 Chr. 11:31).

PISGAH [PIZ guh]—a word that refers to the rugged ridge that crowns a mountain. As a proper noun, the word "Pisgah" was sometimes identified with Mount Nebo. But the word more likely refers to the entire ridge of the Abarim Mountains, which extends from the Moabite plateau toward the Dead Sea.

Nebo is the highest peak of this "pisgah." From the top of Pisgah Moses was permitted to survey the Promised Land. The particular peak upon which he stood was on or near Mount Nebo (Num. 21:20; 23:14; Deut. 3:27; 34:1).

Balaam offered sacrifices upon seven altars at the field of Zophim on the top of Pisgah (Num. 23:14). From the Pisgah ridge steep slopes drop about 792 meters (2,600 feet) into the Jordan valley below (Deut. 3:17). Ashdoth–Pisgah, "the slopes of Pisgah" (translated "the springs of Pisgah" in Deut. 4:49, KJV), was allotted to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:20, KJV). This ridge originally marked the southern limits of the territory of Sihon, king of the Amorites (Josh. 12:3).

PISHON [PIE shahn]—an unknown stream named in connection with the river that watered the Garden of EDEN (Gen. 2:11–12; Pison, KJV).

PISIDIA [pih SID ih uh]—a mountainous province in central Asia Minor (modern Turkey; see Map 7, C–2), twice visited by the apostle Paul (Acts 13:14; 14:24). Pisidia was a wild, mountainous country infested with bandits. When Paul wrote that he had been "in perils of robbers" (2 Cor. 11:26), he may have been referring to his dangerous journey through the mountains of Pisidia. While in Perga Paul intended to travel north through this rugged and dangerous mountain terrain to Antioch of Pisidia. The synagogue in Antioch of Pisidia was the scene of one of Paul's most impressive sermons (Acts 13:16–41).

PISON [PIGH sahn]—a form of PISHON.

PISPAH [PIS puh]—a son of Jether (1 Chr. 7:38; Pispa, NRSV, NASB).

PISTACHIO NUTS (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

PIT—a deep hole in the ground, either natural (Gen. 14:10) or man-made (Gen. 37:20). This word translates twelve Hebrew words in the Old Testament and two Greek words in the New Testament. The Hebrew word used most often denotes a cistern in which rainwater was collected (Lev. 11:36).

Another Hebrew word referred to a pit sometimes used to trap animals or people (Ezek. 19:4, 8). These verses reflect this practice, either literally describing a snare or figuratively describing temptation (Ps. 35:7).

The word "pit" is used in a theological way in both the Old Testament and the New Testament. As a deep underground place, "the Pit" became synonymous for SHEOL, the abode of the dead, the netherworld of departed spirits (Job 33:18, 24; Ps. 30:3; Is. 14:15).

In the New Testament, the phrase "the bottomless pit" refers to the abode of the demons. Satan will be bound and cast into the bottomless pit (Rev. 20:2–3; Abyss, NIV). Then he will be released from this pit or prison after a thousand years of captivity (Rev. 20:4–7).

PITCH (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

PITCHER—a vessel for holding liquids; a clay jar or water jug. In the ancient world, pitchers ordinarily had one or two handles, were usually carried on the head or shoulders, and were used mainly by women for carrying water or drawing water from wells (Gen. 24:14). The pitcher used by Rebekah at the well may have been made of pottery, but leather buckets were also used.

This was the same kind of jug used by Gideon's warriors in their battle with the Midianites (Judg. 7:16–20). The men hid their torches inside their pitchers until the time of their surprise attack. The fact that they broke the pitchers (v. 19) indicates that the vessels were clay jars.

PITHOM [PIE thuhm]—one of the supply cities, or store cities (see Map 2, A–1), in Lower Egypt built by the Israelites while they were slaves in Egypt (Ex. 1:11). Pithom was in the general area of RAAMSES. Some archaeologists suggest that the temple, fortress, and storage chambers discovered at Tell el-Maskhutah, in the valley connecting the Nile River and Lake Timsah, are the remains of biblical Pithom. Others believe that Pithom should be identified with Tell er-Ratabah, about 16 kilometers (10 miles) to the west and closer to the land of Goshen. The site of Pithom remains a subject of doubt and debate.

It is possible that Pithom and Raamses (Ex. 1:11) were built during the reign of Pharaoh Rameses II (who ruled from about 1292–1225 B.C.). Rameses II, however, often made claims to "build" a city, when actually he "rebuilt" it, or strengthened its fortifications. Pithom is supposed by some scholars to be identical with Succoth (Ex. 12:37)—Pithom being the sacred, or religious name and Succoth being the secular or civil name.

PITHON [PIE thahn]—a son of Micah, of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chr. 8:35).

PITY—a sense of sympathetic sorrow for the unfortunate. In this respect, pity is the emotional side of mercy, the desire to help people in this state. Pity may come from God, especially in His role as heavenly Father to His children (Ps. 103:13). Pity for others may also be expressed by people (Ps. 103:13; Matt. 18:33; Luke 10:33). Also see MERCY.

PLACENTA—a protective sack that surrounds an unborn baby during the mother's pregnancy (Deut. 28:57; young one, KJV; afterbirth, NRSV, NASB, REB, NIV). God called the Hebrew people to worship Him as the one true God. They were warned that if they failed to do so, the Lord would judge them. In their desperate situation mothers might become so hungry that they would eat the placentas that are expelled during birth.

PLAGUE—an affliction sent by God as punishment for sin and disobedience. In most cases in the Bible the affliction is an epidemic or disease. The Hebrew word for "plague" literally means a blow or a lash, implying punishment or chastisement.

Plagues appear throughout the biblical record. The first mention of a plague in Scripture was that sent on Pharaoh for the protection of Sarah, Abraham's wife (Gen. 12:17). The next plagues were the ten afflictions experienced by the Egyptians when the pharaoh refused to release the Hebrew people from bondage. While these plagues were phenomena with which the Egyptians were familiar, they exhibited miraculous features that were characteristic of God's judgment.

Later, during the years of the EXODUS, a plague was sent upon the Hebrews for making and worshiping a golden calf (Ex. 32:35). Another occurred because of their murmuring against the food that God provided for them (Num. 11:33–34). The spies who brought faithless reports about the Promised Land were inflicted with a plague (Num. 14:37).

When the Hebrews complained about the righteous punishment of the rebels Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, 14,700 people died of a plague (Num. 16:46–50). In another plague sent upon the Hebrews because of idolatry at Baal-peor, 24,000 people died (Num. 25:9; Josh. 22:17; Ps. 106:29–30).

The plagues were sometimes miraculous events. At other times they appeared as natural phenomena. But always they represented God's aggressive acts to punish sin and disobedience among His people.

PLAGUES OF EGYPT—the series of ten afflictions used by God to break the will of Pharaoh and to bring about the release of the Hebrew people from slavery in Egypt.

After the Hebrews had been in Egypt for about 400 years, “there arose a new king over Egypt, who did not know Joseph” (Ex. 1:8). This new king enslaved the Hebrews and forced them to labor in his extensive building projects, “You shall no longer give the people straw to make brick. Let them go and gather straw . . .” (Ex. 5:7–19). When the Hebrews cried out for deliverance, God sent Moses to lead them from bondage. The pharaoh resisted the release of the Hebrew people. The plagues of Egypt occurred as God’s action to change the mind of the Pharaoh, thus bringing the Hebrews’ freedom.

Scholars generally agree that the first nine plagues were regular, natural occurrences in Egypt. They were remarkable only in their intensity and in the timing with which they happened. But this does not mean that they were purely natural phenomena. They were miraculous in that God used natural forces to achieve His purpose. A sovereign God can use whatever methods He chooses to bring about a miracle. The method does not diminish the miraculous nature of the occurrence.

The tenth plague, the death of the firstborn of Egypt, was altogether supernatural. There is no known natural phenomenon closely related to this highly selective plague.

The sequence of the plagues has been studied and compared with the observations of travelers to Egypt. Many scholars point out that the first nine plagues are logical consequences of an unusually high flooding of the NILE River. Such flooding usually occurred in July, August, and September. Based on the best estimates that can be made from the biblical account, the plagues probably occurred over a period of about seven to nine months, beginning in July or August and continuing until around April or May.

The plagues may be viewed as God’s intervention to seek the release of the Hebrew people. They also represented God’s challenge to the Egyptian religious system. To the Egyptians, the Nile River was a god. From it came the power and life of the Egyptian culture. They worshiped the Nile and the abundance of resources that it provided. Since the first nine plagues seem to be a natural progression of God’s attack on the Nile River, all of these plagues relate to God's challenge to the Egyptian religious system.

Following are the ten plagues, as recorded in Exodus 7:14—12:30:

1. The Water of the Nile Turned into Blood (Ex. 7:14–25). This first plague probably was the pollution of the Nile River by large quantities of fine, red earth, brought down from the Sudan and Ethiopia by abnormal flooding. The pollution of the water provided a favorable environment for the growth of microorganisms and parasitic bacteria. Their presence could have led to the death of the fish in the river (Ex. 7:21).

   In addition to depriving Egypt of water and fish—an important part of their diet—the plague also had a religious effect. The Nile River, god of the Egyptians, had been confronted by the power of the Redeemer God of the Hebrew people.

2. Frogs Cover the Land (Ex. 8:1–15). Seven days after the first plague, frogs came out of the river and infested the land. The frogs would have been driven from the Nile and its canals and pools by the polluted water. When Moses prayed to God, the frogs died in the houses, courtyards, and fields. The frogs were symbols of the Egyptian goddess, Heqt, who was supposed to help women in childbirth. This plague was another demonstration of the superior power of God over the gods of Egypt.
3. Lice Throughout the Land (Ex. 8:16–19). Insects of various kinds are common in Egypt. It is not easy to identify the exact pests involved in the third plague. Various translations have lice (KJV, NKJV), gnats (NASB, NRSV, NIV), and maggots (REB).
4. Swarms of Flies (Ex. 8:20–32). Many kinds of flies are common in Egypt. The mounds of decaying frogs would have provided an ideal breeding ground for these pests. Some scholars suggest that the swarms mentioned here were a species known as the stable fly, a blood-feeder that bites people as well as cattle. This fly is a carrier of skin anthrax, which is probably the disease brought on by the sixth plague.
5. Pestilence of Livestock (Ex. 9:1–7). Either the frogs or the insects may have been the carriers of this infection. The livestock of the Israelites were miraculously protected (Ex. 9:6–7). This was the second time God had made a distinction between the Israelites and the Egyptians in the plagues He sent (Ex. 8:22–23).
6. Boils on Man and Beast (Ex. 9:8–12). This infection was probably skin anthrax, carried by the flies of the fourth plague. The festering boils broke into blisters and running sores.
7. Heavy Hail, with Thunder and Lightning (Ex. 9:13–35). Egypt was essentially an agricultural country. By destroying the crops, this plague and the next struck at the heart of Egypt’s economy. Moses’ warning gave the Egyptians a chance to save their remaining livestock, and some acted upon it (Ex. 9:19–20). The severe storm caused great destruction (Ex. 9:24–25). The flax and barley were ruined, but not the wheat because it had not yet been planted (Ex. 9:31–32). This would suggest early February as the time of this plague. Again the Israelites received special protection. There was no hail in the land of Goshen, where the Hebrews lived (Ex. 9:26).

8. Swarms of Locusts (Ex. 10:1–20). The destruction from the previous plague was fresh in the minds of Pharaoh's advisors (Ex. 10:7). The eighth plague must have followed the hail very closely. Heavy rainfall in July–September would have produced conditions favorable for locusts in March. These locusts, swarms of foliage-eating grasshoppers, probably were driven into the Egyptian delta by strong winds. They wiped out the vegetation that had survived the earlier destruction. Again, as after the seventh plague, Pharaoh confessed "I have sinned" (Ex. 10:16). But again, after the plague was withdrawn, Pharaoh hardened his heart and would not let the people of Israel go (Ex. 10:20).

9. Three Days of Darkness (Ex. 10:21–29). This darkness could have been caused by a severe dust storm. For three days darkness covered the land (Ex. 10:23). This storm would have been intensified by fine earth deposited over the land by previous flooding. This plague probably occurred in March. Again, the Israelites were spared the effects (Ex. 10:23). By showing God's power over the light of the sun—represented by one of Egypt's chief deities, the sun-god Ra—this plague was a further judgment on the idolatry of the Egyptians.

10. Death of Egyptian Firstborn (Ex. 11:1—12:30). The tenth plague was the most devastating of all—the death of the firstborn males in Egyptian families. The Hebrews were spared because they followed God's command to sprinkle the blood of a lamb on the doorposts of their houses. The death angel "passed over" the houses where the blood was sprinkled—hence, the name PASSOVER for this religious observance among the Jewish people. Only a supernatural explanation can account for the selective slaughter of the tenth plague.

Some people might wonder if such a massive slaughter was really necessary. But Pharaoh had been given ample warning (Ex. 4:23). He had seen many demonstrations of God's reality and power, and yet he had refused to acknowledge Him. Although Pharaoh wavered at times and promised to release the Israelites (Ex. 8:8, 28; 9:28), once the danger passed he changed his mind (Ex. 8:15, 32; 9:34–35). Because he rejected the power of God, Pharaoh was forced to face one final, terrible manifestation of God's power. The deliverance of the Hebrews from slavery in Egypt was one of the most memorable occasions in Hebrew history. The Passover Feast was observed annually as a celebration of God’s deliverance of His people from bondage.

PLAIN—a level stretch of land; a valley or tableland. In the Old Testament plains were especially important to military strategy. Since they were flat and open, they were the likely sites of conflicts involving large numbers of warriors. Plains were particularly suited for chariot warfare (Joshua 11; 1 Kings 20).

The Hebrew word shephelah refers to a plain in southern and central Canaan (1 Chr. 27:28; 2 Chr. 9:27; Jer. 17:26; Obad. 19; Zech. 7:7). Bounded on the west by the Mediterranean Sea, these “lowlands” were particularly crucial to maritime trade.

The word arabah refers to the plain that runs along the Jordan River from north of the Sea of Galilee to south of the Dead Sea (Num. 22:1; 36:13; Deut. 1:1; 34:8). In this plain the Hebrew people of the Exodus found the Promised Land.

The word kikkar, meaning “circle” or “circuit,” refers to the Plain of the Jordan that lies east of the Jordan River (Gen. 13:10–12; 1 Kin. 7:46). The city of Succoth was at the northern extreme of this plain. The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah (Genesis 19) lay at its southern edge.

PLANE (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

PLANE TREE (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

PLANK—a beam (KJV) or log (NRSV, NASB). Jesus used this word in Matthew 7:3–5 and Luke 6:41–42 when he said a person should not criticize the speck of sawdust in another’s eye while disregarding the plank in his own eye.

PLANTS OF THE BIBLE—The land that God promised to Abraham and his descendants was extremely fertile. Because of its diverse climate, the world of the Bible contained many varieties of plants. Botanists have identified 3,500 species of plant life in Palestine and Syria. Plants or plant products are mentioned in almost every book of the Bible.

The flora of the Bible have been the subject of much discussion and research. Accurately identifying many of these plants has taken many years of scientific research. The Bible writers were not botanists, and they seldom bothered to describe or identify the plants they mentioned.

In the sixteenth century Levinus Lemmens wrote the first book on the plants of Scripture. It was not until the middle of the eighteenth century, however, that a botanist traveled to Palestine for firsthand knowledge of its vegetation. Since then much valuable information has been learned about the plants of the Bible.

Many of the Bible writers often used general terms to refer to plants. Sometimes a reference is no more specific than “tree,” “grass,” or “grain.” Even if an individual grain such as “corn” or “wheat” is named, it is referring to all grains in general.

Although many types of flowers grow in Palestine and other Bible lands, very few are mentioned by name in the Bible. Some of the flowers found in the Holy Land are irises, roses, anemones, lilies, tulips, hyacinths, and narcissus.

Some of the other general terms referring to plant life include bush, herb, grass, cockle, fruit, and verdure.

The Hebrew people were certain that God provided the Promised Land for their use, but they were not careful to take good care of it. The land was cultivated continuously for thousands of years without rest until much of the soil was depleted and many areas became devastated wastelands. The great forests of Lebanon and Hermon were eventually destroyed and the soil was eroded. The people of that time did not know how to manage their environment intelligently. Eventually the land that once flowed with "milk and honey" became barren of much of its vegetation. Today many of these barren regions of the Holy Land are being turned again into fertile farmland. Effort is being made to restore the richness of the land as God intended it to be.

The following specific plants are mentioned in the Bible. This listing is keyed to the NKJV, but variant names from five additional popular translations—KJV, NASB, REB, NIV, and NRSV—are cross-referenced throughout the listing.

Acacia. A large thorny tree with rough, gnarled bark. The orange-brown wood was hard-grained, and it repelled insects. It bore long locust-like pods with seeds inside and produced round, fragrant clusters of yellow blossoms. Many species of acacia grew in the desert of Sinai, in southern Canaan and in Egypt.

Acacia wood was used to build the ark of the covenant and the first tabernacle (Ex. 36:20; 37:1). The acacia is called shittim and shittah in the KJV (Ex. 25:5, 10; Is. 41:19).

Algum, Almug. A large leguminous tree native to India and Ceylon. While its identity is uncertain, many consider it to be the red sandalwood. Its blossoms were pea-like, and its wood was close-grained, dark outside, and red inside. It was highly scented, making it resistant to insects. Most authorities believe that algum and almug are two names for the same wood.

Solomon ordered the algum wood from Ophir and Lebanon (1 Kin. 10:11–12; 2 Chr. 9:10–11). The wood was well-suited for making musical instruments, cabinet work, and pillars for the temple.

Almond. A large tree resembling the peach tree in both size and fruit. The almond was chiefly valued for the nuts it produced, which were used for making oil used in the home and as medicine. The Hebrew word for almond means "awakening," an allusion to the almond blossom, which is first to bloom in the spring. The almond's pinkish-white blossoms always appear before its leaves.

The almond played an important role in the history of Israel. Jacob included almond nuts in his gifts to Joseph in Egypt (Gen. 43:11). The decorations on the lampstands were modeled after the almond blossom (Ex. 25:33), and Aaron's rod was an almond twig (Num. 17:8). The almond also symbolized the dependability of God (Jer. 1:11–12). Many scholars think the hazel of Genesis 30:37 (KJV) is the almond tree.

Almug (see Algum, Almug).

Aloes. Two plants, one a tree and the other a flower.

1. The aloes mentioned in Psalm 45:8, Proverbs 7:17, and Song of Solomon 4:14 came from a large tree known as "eaglewood," a plant native to India. The wood of the aloe tree is fragrant and highly valued for perfume and incense. Many authorities believe the lign aloe to be the same tree (Num. 24:6, KJV).
2. The aloes brought by Nicodemus to wrap the body of Jesus (John 19:39) were probably the true aloes of the lily family. The aloin derived from the pulp of the aloe leaf was an expensive product used in embalming.

Amaranth. A large family of plants that includes weeds and garden plants. Goodspeed translates the amaranth, also called the "rolling thing," of Isaiah 7:13 as the tumbleweed. It is also called the "resurrection plant" and the "rose of Jericho." The Greek word for amaranth means "unfading." This meaning is used symbolically in 1 Peter 1:4 and 5:4, where the inheritance of the faithful is described as unfading. Thus, the amaranth became a symbol of immortality.

Anise. An annual herb that bears yellow flowers and fragrant seeds. The anise mentioned in the Bible is generally thought to be dill. Anise (dill) was used as medicine and for cooking.

Jesus used the anise as an illustration when He scolded the Pharisees for keeping part of the law in detail while ignoring the rest (Matt. 23:23; also Deut. 14:22).

Apple. A tree that grows about 9 meters (30 feet) high and has rough bark and pink blossoms. Many authorities believe the apple of Scripture actually is the apricot, a native of Armenia. Other authorities suggest the quince, peach, citron, orange, or some other fruit; some believe it was in fact the apple.

The apple was described as sweet and fragrant (Song 7:8; REB), golden (Prov. 25:11), and suitable for shade (Song 2:3). This fruit was used figuratively to show how precious we are to God, and how extremely sensitive He is to our needs. The phrase "apple of (the Lord's) eye" (Deut. 32:10; Ps. 17:8; Zech. 2:8) refers to the pupil of the eye, which is its most precious part.

Apricot (see Apple).

Ash (see Pine).

Aspen (see Mulberry).

Asphodel (see Rose).

Balm (see Balsam).

Balsam. A thorny tree growing 3 to 5 meters (10–15 feet) tall with clusters of green flowers, also known as the Jericho balsam. Some think the lentisk or mastic tree, a shrubby evergreen growing one to three meters (3–10 feet) tall, is meant.

Balsam was highly valued during Bible times (Gen. 37:25; 43:11; Jer. 8:22; 46:11; 51:8; Ezek. 27:17). It produced a fragrant, resinous gum called balm.

This was an article of export (Gen. 37:25) and was given as a gift by Jacob (Gen. 43:11). Balm was used as a symbol in Jeremiah 8:22 to refer to spiritual healing.

Barley. A grain known since early times. It was well-adapted to varied climates, ripening quickly and resistant to heat; it usually was harvested before wheat. Because barley was considered a food for slaves and the very poor, however, it was held in low esteem as a grain.

In the Bible barley was first associated with Egypt (Ex. 9:31). It was used as an offering of jealousy (Num. 5:15), for fodder (1 Kin. 4:28), and for food (Judg. 7:13; John 6:5, 13).

Bay Tree. The laurel, a tree native to Canaan. The laurel grew to heights of 12 to 18 meters (40–60 feet) and produced small greenish-white flowers and black berries. Parts of the tree were used in medicine, while its leaves were used as seasoning. The Hebrew word means "a tree in its native soil"; this was a fitting way for David to describe the natural prosperity of the wicked (Ps. 37:35, KJV; native green tree, NKJV).

Bean. A hardy plant about one meter (three feet) tall with pea-shaped fragrant blooms, large pods, and black or brown beans, which were eaten alone or cooked with meat. Beans have always been an important part of the Hebrew diet, especially among the poor, and they have been known since ancient times. When beans were threshed and cleaned, they were often mixed with grains for bread (Ezek. 4:9).

Bitter Weed* (see Wormwood).

Black Cummin (see Cummin; Fitches).

Box Tree. A tree of very hard wood and glossy leaves, which grew to a height of about 6 meters (20 feet). A native of northern Canaan and the Lebanon mountains, the box tree was well-suited to beautify the temple (Is. 60:13). The box tree was used since Roman times for wood engravings and musical instruments. Isaiah symbolically used the box tree, along with other trees, to remind Israel of God’s perpetual presence (Is. 41:17–20).

Some scholars have suggested that the box tree of Scripture may instead be the cypress or plane. Also see Chestnut.

Bramble (see Thistles/Thorns).

Brier (see Thistles/Thorns).

Broom. A dense, twiggy bush, almost leafless, which grew to about 3.6 meters (12 feet). It has small white blooms. Common in the desert regions of Palestine, Arabia, and Egypt, it was used as charcoal (Ps. 120:4) and provided shade for the prophet Elijah (1 Kin. 19:4–5). The roots that Job ate were not from the broom, which was not edible, but may have been an edible parasite that infested the bush (Job 30:4). The broom is sometimes referred to as juniper in the NKJV, KJV, and NASB. Many scholars believe this to be the shrub or heath referred to in Jeremiah 17:6 and 48:6.

- The long roots of the broom tree enable it to reach ground water even in the driest months (1 Kin. 19:4).

Bud (see Gourd).

Bulrush (see Reed/Rush).

Calamus. A fragrant, reed-like grass growing along streams and river banks (Song 4:14), also referred to as sweet cane (Is. 43:24; Jer. 6:20). Calamus leaves are fragrant and ginger-flavored when crushed. It is named with other aromatic substances (Ezek. 27:19) and as one ingredient for the anointing oil (Ex. 30:23). It is believed to be a plant native to India (Jer. 6:20). Also see Reed/Rush.

Camel-thorn (see Cypress).

Camphire (see Henna).

Cane (see Calamus; Reed/Rush).

Caperberry. A plant with large white, berry-producing flowers, which grows in clefts of rocks and on walls. Only the REB and NASB refer to the caper. Other versions translate the Hebrew word as “desire” (Eccl. 12:5). Also see Hyssop.

Caraway (see Cummin).

Cassia. A plant with a flavor and aroma similar to cinnamon, but considered inferior. Some believe it could be the Indian perfume called orris. Moses included cassia in the anointing oil (Ex. 30:24). It was also an article of trade (Ezek. 27:19).

Cedar. An evergreen tree that sometimes grows more than 30 meters (100 feet) tall with a trunk circumference of 12 to 15 meters (40–50 feet). It grows in western Asia, the Himalayas, and Cyprus as well as Lebanon.

The cedar's fragrant wood was rot-resistant and knot-free, making it ideal for building purposes (2 Sam. 5:11; 1 Kin. 6:9), shipbuilding (Ezek. 27:5), and fashioning idols (Is. 44:14). The reference to cedar in Leviticus 14:4 and Numbers 19:6 is generally understood to be the juniper which grew in the Sinai. Also see Fir; Pine.

- Once plentiful in the mountains of Palestine, the cedars of Lebanon have suffered from centuries of reckless cutting. Only a few isolated groves remain today.

Chestnut. A tree of Syria and Lebanon thought by many scholars to be the plane tree. It grew to a height of about 21 to 27 meters (70–90 feet) and had a massive trunk. This tree is translated "chestnut" in the NKJV and KJV, but is translated “plane” by the NRSV, NIV, REB, and NASB.

Cinnamon. A member of the laurel family, the cinnamon tree grew to be more than 9 meters (30 feet) tall with white flowers and wide-spreading branches. A native of Ceylon, the cinnamon tree produced bark and oil that was used for the anointing oil (Ex. 30:23) and as perfume (Prov. 7:17; Rev. 18:13).

Citron. A fragrant wood from the sandarac tree. Citron is sometimes referred to as “sweet” or “scented” wood. The sandarac tree grew to a height of no more than about 9 meters (30 feet) tall. Citron is translated as “thyine” by the KJV (Rev. 18:12).

Coriander. An annual herb, growing from one-half to one meter (two to three feet) tall, which produced grayish seeds used to flavor foods, for confections, and in medicine. The dried leaves of coriander were also used to flavor foods.

Corn (see Wheat).

Crocus (see Rose; Saffron).

Cucumber. A climbing vine that produces vegetables. The cucumber was one of the vegetables the Israelites longed for after leaving Egypt (Num. 11:5).

Cummin. An annual seed-producing herb with pinkish-white blooms. Cummin is native to the eastern Mediterranean lands. When harvested, cummin was threshed with sticks (Is. 28:25, 27), a method still used today. Cummin was used to flavor foods and in medicine. It was subject to the tithe (Matt. 23:23).

The NKJV also mentions black cummin, which is translated dill (RSV, NEB, NASB), caraway (NIV), fitches (KJV) and holm tree (NRSV).

Cypress. A tall evergreen tree of hard and durable wood. Cypress wood was suitable for building, and was used to fashion idols (Is. 44:14). The word rendered “gopherwood” by the NKJV, KJV, RSV, and NASB in Genesis 6:14 is thought to be cypress. This was the wood that Noah used to build the ark. The word for cypress is also rendered as camel-thorn (Is. 55:13) and ilex (Is. 44:14) by the REB.

Darnel (see Tares).

Date Palm (see Palm).

Dill (see Anise; Cummin).

Dove Droppings/Dove's Dung. A bulbous plant which was edible after being boiled or roasted. Dove's dung was mentioned as food eaten during the siege of Samaria (2 Kin. 6:25). Some believe this was excrement from pigeons and doves, while others interpret it as an edible plant (seed pods, NIV; locust-beans, REB). Also see Locust.

Ebony. A large tree that produces edible fruit. The hard, black wood from the inner portion of the tree is quite valuable and is used for fine furniture. It is also known to have been inlaid with ivory. Idols were sometimes carved from ebony.

Elm (see Terebinth).

Fig. A fruit-producing plant that could be either a tall tree or a low-spreading shrub. The size of the tree depended on its location and soil. The blooms of the fig tree always appear before the leaves in spring. When Jesus saw leaves on a fig tree, He expected the fruit (Mark 11:12–14, 20–21). There were usually two crops of figs a year.

Figs were eaten fresh (2 Kin. 18:31), pressed into cakes (1 Sam. 25:18), and used as a poultice (Is. 38:21). Jeremiah used the fig tree as a symbol of desolation (Jer. 8:13). It also signified security and hope for Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:7), the twelve spies (Num. 13:23), and the poets and prophets. Sycamore figs were similar to the fig but were smaller and of poorer quality (Amos 7:14). They were eaten by poor people who could not afford the better variety.

• A fig tree loaded with its small green fruit and an inset of the ripe fruit. Jesus pronounced a curse on a fig tree because of its lack of fruit (Mark 11:12–14).

Fir. An evergreen tree of uncertain identity. Although this tree is mentioned several times in Scripture, biblical authorities question whether this was the true fir or some other evergreen of Palestine. Many suggest the Aleppo pine would fit this description, while others think the cypress, juniper, or cedar could be meant.

The Israelites valued the timber of the fir tree for building the temple (1 Kin. 6:15, KJV), for shipbuilding (Ezek. 27:5), and for making musical instruments (2 Sam. 6:5). The fir is used symbolically to describe the blessings of God for His people (Is. 41:19; 55:13, KJV).

Fitches. Two different plants mentioned in the KJV:

1. An annual herb one-half meter (one to two feet) tall with finely cut leaves and blue flowers, which produces black poppy seeds used in curries and sprinkled on breads. It is translated black cummin in the NKJV (Is. 28:25, 27).

2. A plant mislabeled by the KJV in Ezekiel 4:9. The correct identification is spelt. Also see Spelt.

Flag (see Reed/Rush).

Flax. A plant growing one meter (three feet) tall with pale blue flowers, and used for making linen. When mature, the entire flax plant was pulled and placed in water to separate the fibers from the stems. It was then laid on housetops to dry (Josh. 2:6) and later woven into linen. Twisted flax was also used as wicks for lamps in Bible times (Is. 42:3). Also see Reed/Rush.

Frankincense. An aromatic gum resin obtained from the Boswellia tree. These trees are large with small, white, star-shaped flowers and leaves resembling the mountain ash. The gum is obtained by cutting into the bark and collecting the resin from the tree. When this substance hardens, it is gathered and used as incense.

Frankincense was part of the sacred anointing oil (Ex. 30:34). It was used in sacrificial offering (Lev. 2:1), as a fumigant during animal sacrifices (Ex. 30:7), and as perfume (Song 3:6). It was a gift to the baby Jesus (Matt. 2:11).

The trees are native to India, Arabia, and Africa. Palestine probably obtained this product through foreign trade. “The dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all those from Sheba shall come” (Is. 60:6).

Galbanum. The gum from an herb that grew one to one and one-half meters (three to five feet) high and had greenish-white flowers. Galbanum was the milky substance extracted from the stems that quickly hardened. It was used in perfume and anointing oil (Ex. 30:34).

Gall. A bitter, poisonous herb. This may have been the poppy or some other wild poisonous plant. Gall is used figuratively to mean a bitter punishment (Jer. 8:14; 9:15; 23:15) or any bitter experience (Acts 8:23). Gall and vinegar were offered to Jesus on the cross (Matt. 27:34), but He refused the drink.

Garlic. A strong-flavored herb, resembling the onion. Garlic was eaten with bread and used to flavor food and is still highly favored today. Garlic was highly esteemed in Egypt and was believed to have been used as wages for the workers who built the pyramids. The Hebrews yearned for garlic after leaving Egypt (Num. 1:5).

Gopherwood (see Cypress).

Gourd. A fast-growing shrub that grew to a height of three to four meters (10–12 feet). One of Elisha’s servants put the fruit of the gourd into a pot of stew (2 Kin. 4:39).

The gourd (Jon. 4:6–10; KJV, REB; vine, NIV) is identified as the plant under which Jonah found shade. Some biblical scholars suggest this may have been pumpkin, squash, or ivy.

Many types of wild gourds also flourished in the Mediterranean region. Some of these were poisonous. The decorations used on the temple called ornamental buds (1 Kin. 6:18; 7:24) are thought to be a type of wild gourd.

Grapes. A luscious fruit cultivated on vines. Large clusters of grapes weighing about 5 kilograms (12 pounds) each (Num. 13:23) have been reported in Palestine.

Grapes were used in a variety of ways. They were eaten fresh or dried and were made into wine or vinegar. Dried grapes were called raisins. The first suggestion of grapes in Scripture was in connection with Noah’s vineyard (Gen. 9:20).

The soil and climate of Palestine was well-suited for vineyards, where grapes were grown. They were cultivated here long before the Israelites occupied the land (Gen. 14:18). The vineyards of Palestine produced immense clusters of grapes (Num. 13:20, 23–24).

Vineyards were hedged or fenced as protection from wild animals (Song 2:15). In each vineyard a tower was erected and a guard placed to protect the vines from robbers (Matt. 21:33).

Vinedressers were hired to care for the vines and prune them yearly (Lev. 25:3; Is. 61:5). The grapes were gathered in baskets in September and October with much festivity (Judg. 9:27; Is. 16:10). Provision was made for the poor to glean the fields (Lev. 19:10; Deut. 24:21). The choicest grapes were dried or eaten fresh and the rest were placed in presses to extract the juice (Is. 61:5; Hos. 9:2–4). This was drunk fresh or fermented.

Jesus alluded to His relationship with His followers by referring to Himself as the vine and to them as the branches (John 15:5). The fruit of the vine symbolized Jesus’ shed blood (Matt. 26:27–29). He also used the vineyard in many of His parables (Matt. 9:17; 20:1–6; 21:28–32; Luke 13:6–9).

Hazel (see Almond).

Heath (see Broom).

Hemlock. A poisonous plant that grows to about two meters (five feet) tall and has small white flowers. Hemlock is referred to only once in the NKJV (Hos. 10:4). Other translations use the more general term “weeds.”

Also see Wormwood.

Henna. A plant used to produce a valuable orange-red dye. It was two to three meters (seven to ten feet) tall and bore fragrant white flowers. Solomon compared his beloved to a cluster of henna (Song 1:14; 4:13; camphire, KJV).

Hyssop. A species of marjoram and a member of the mint family. Hyssop was an aromatic shrub under one meter (three feet) tall with clusters of yellow flowers. It grew in rocky crevices and was cultivated on terraced walls. “From the cedar tree of Lebanon even to the hyssop that springs out of the wall” (1 Kin. 4:33). Bunches of hyssop were used to sprinkle blood on the doorposts in Egypt (Ex. 12:22), and in purification ceremonies (Lev. 14:4, 6, 51–52). David mentioned it as an instrument of inner cleansing (Ps. 51:7). It was used at the Crucifixion to relieve Jesus’ thirst (John 19:29).

Ilex (see Cypress).

Juniper (see Broom).

Laurel (see Bay Tree).

Leek. A bulbous vegetable resembling the onion that grows 15 centimeters (about 6 inches) high. The stems and bulbs of leeks were eaten raw and used to flavor foods. Named with garlic and onions, the leek was a food the Hebrew people ate in Egypt (Num. 11:5).

Lentil. A small annual plant with white, violet-striped flowers. The seeds of lentils grew in pods similar to the pea. During Bible times lentil was threshed like wheat and boiled into a reddish-brown pottage. This was the dish Esau purchased with his birthright (Gen. 25:34). Lentils could also be used as an ingredient for bread (Ezek. 4:9).

Lign Aloe (see Aloes).

Lily. A flower with white or rosy-purple blooms measuring up to 30 centimeters (12 inches) across. Many scholars think the lily is sometimes a term applied to flowers in general. Others believe specific types such as the Turks Cap, the Madonna, or the lotus is referred to.

The lily was used as an ornament for the temple (1 Kin. 7:22). The Beloved and the Shulammite used lilies to describe their love (Song 2:1; 2:16; 4:5; 5:13; 6:3).

Locust. An evergreen tree growing about 6 to 9 meters (20–30 feet) tall and having small glossy leaves. A native of Syria and Palestine, it bears long pods known as carob or locust beans (Luke 15:16; husks, KJV). These may have been used for food in dire circumstances (2 Kin. 6:25, locust beans, REB).

Lotus (see Lily).

- The lotus, a type of water lily, was the symbol of Upper Egypt.

Mallow. A shrub growing $1^1/_2$ to 3 meters (5 to 10 feet) high and having thick, succulent leaves and small purple flowers. The Hebrew word for mallow means “salt plant.” It thrived in dry, salty regions especially around the Dead Sea. Although the leaves were sour and had little nutritive value, they were boiled and eaten by the poor in dire circumstances.

Mentioned only once in the Bible (Job 30:4), mallow is also translated as salt herbs in the NIV and saltwort in the REB.

Mandrake. A fruit-producing plant with dark green leaves and small bluish-purple flowers. The mandrake grew abundantly throughout Palestine and the Mediterranean region.

The yellow fruit of the mandrake was small, sweet-tasting, and fragrant. It had narcotic qualities and may have been used medicinally. The fruit of the mandrake was also referred to as the “love apple.” It was considered a love potion (Gen. 30:16).

Marjoram (see Hyssop).

Melon. A type of gourd that bears sweet fruit. Both cantaloupes and watermelons may have grown along the banks of the Nile River in Egypt. Melons were used as food and medicine. An intoxicating drink was made from their juice.

The Hebrews had become accustomed to eating melons and other tasty foods in Egypt. They looked back on these fondly while in the wilderness (Num. 1:5; watermelon, REB).

Millet. An annual grain-producing grass that was under 1 meter (3 feet) high and produced many seeds. The seeds of millet were smaller than other cereal grains. Millet has been known since ancient times in Palestine and Egypt. It was used for bread (Ezek. 4:9) and eaten raw, especially by the poor.

Millet is referred to in several different ways in Ezekiel 27:17 (pannag, KJV; confections, NIV; meal, REB, cakes, NASB).

Mint. A sweet-smelling herb that grew to a height of 1 meter (3 feet) and produced spikes of lilac flowers. Mint was used in medicine and to flavor foods.

Mulberry. A tree that grew to a height of about 8 to 10 meters (25–30 feet) and produced red berries. A refreshing drink was prepared from the fruit. Jesus used the mulberry tree as an illustration when teaching about faith (Luke 17:6). It is called sycamine in the KJV and NRSV, and mulberry in the REB. The mulberry trees mentioned in 2 Samuel 5:23–24 and 1 Chronicles 14:14–15 are believed to be a species of poplar.

Mustard. A plant that grew wild along roadsides and in fields, reaching a height of about 4.6 meters (15 feet). The black mustard of Palestine seems to be the species to which Jesus referred (Matt. 13:31–32; Mark 4:31–32; Luke 13:19). It was cultivated for its seeds, which were used as a condiment and for oil.

The mustard seed was the smallest seed known in Jesus' day (Matt. 13:32). Nevertheless, Jesus said that if one has faith like a mustard seed, he can move mountains (Matt. 17:20) or transplant a mulberry tree in the sea (Luke 17:6).

Myrrh. An extract from a stiff-branched tree with white flowers and plum-like fruit. After myrrh was extracted from the wood, it soon hardened and was valued as an article of trade. It was an ingredient used in anointing oil (Ex. 30:23), and was used as perfume (Ps. 45:8; Prov. 7:17; Song 3:6), in purification rites for women (Esth. 2:12), as a gift for the infant Jesus (Matt. 2:11), and in embalming (John 19:39). According to the Gospel of Mark (15:23), the drink offered to Jesus before His crucifixion was "wine mingled with myrrh."

The reference to myrrh in Genesis 37:25 and 43:11 is thought to be ladanum, sometimes called onycha, from a species of rockrose and not the true myrrh.

Also see Onycha.

Myrtle. An evergreen tree with dark glossy leaves and white flowers. The leaves, flowers, and berries of the myrtle were used for perfume and as seasoning for food. The myrtle tree had a religious significance for the Jews (Zech. 1:8–11) and was a symbol of peace and joy. Queen Esther's Hebrew name, Hadassah (Esth. 2:7), meant "myrtle."

Nard (see Spikenard).

Nettle. Two different plants referred to in the Bible:

1. The nettles mentioned in Isaiah 34:13 and Hosea 9:6 are believed to be the true nettle. It is a spiny leaf plant sometimes growing to a height of about 2 meters (6 feet).
2. The nettles referred to in Job 30:7 and Proverbs 24:31 are considered by some to be the acanthus, a stinging plant common in Palestine.

   The nettles of Zephaniah 2:9 (KJV) are translated weeds by the NKJV.

Oak. A large tree with a massive trunk that grew abundantly in Palestine and the surrounding countries. Many Hebrew words refer to the oak. Some scholars think these words could have referred to any large tree such as the terebinth or elm.

The oak tree was an important historical landmark to the Hebrews. Some specific oak trees are mentioned in the Bible. These include the oaks of Bashan (Is. 2:13; Zech. 11:2), the oak of Bethel (Gen. 35:8, KJV; terebinth tree, NKJV), and the oaks of Mamre (Gen. 13:18, NRSV; terebinth trees, NKJV).

Oak wood was also used in shipbuilding (Ezek. 27:6), and for fashioning idols (Is. 44:14). Also see Tamarisk; Terebinth.

Oil Tree. A tree of uncertain identity. Many oil-producing trees mentioned in the Bible could be identified as the oil tree. Many authorities believe the oleaster or wild olive is the tree meant. It grew to a height of about 4.5 to 6 meters (15–20 feet) and produced small bitter fruit resembling an olive. The oleaster yielded an inferior oil that was used medicinally.

The oil tree of Isaiah 41:19 is translated the olive in the NRSV, NIV, wild olive, REB, and the olive tree in NASB. Also see Olive.

Olive. A fruit-bearing tree about 6 meters (20 feet) tall with a gnarled, twisted trunk, white flowers, and berries that ripen to a black color. The olive tree grew slowly and continued to bear fruit after reaching a great age. Before it died, new branches sprouted from its roots.

The fruit was harvested by beating the boughs of the olive tree with a stick (Deut. 24:20), or by shaking the tree (Is. 17:6). The ripe fruit was enjoyed fresh, and the green fruit was often pickled or made into a relish.

The best oil was obtained from the green olive fruit. It was used as fuel for lamps (Ex. 27:20), as anointing oil (Lev. 2:1), as an article of commerce (1 Kin. 5:11), and for dressing wounds (Luke 10:34).

Olive trees were cultivated in groves or orchards (Ex. 23:11; Josh. 24:13). The most famous olive garden mentioned in the Bible is Gethsemane, meaning “oil press” (Matt. 26:36).

Onion. A plant with a large, edible bulb. The onion was one of the foods the Hebrews longed for in the wilderness (Num. 11:5). The onion was known in Egypt from ancient times and is pictured on the walls of Egyptian tombs.

Onycha. A dark brown gum resin obtained from the stem and leaves of a species of the rockrose, also known as ladanum. Onycha was used as an ingredient in the holy anointing oil (Ex. 30:34). It was highly valued for its fragrance and medicinal qualities.

The rockrose was a bush growing to a height of about 1 meter (3 feet) and having large white flowers measuring 8 centimeters (3 inches) across. Some scholars believe the substance referred to as myrrh in Genesis 37:25 and 43:11 was onycha.

Palm. A tree that grew to a height of about 18 to 30 meters (60–100 feet) and had long feathery leaves (branches, Neh. 8:15; John 12:13; Rev. 7:9). These branches, were about 2 to 3 meters (6 to 8 feet) long and grew from the top of the trunk. Also called the date palm, this tree lives to be 100 to 200 years old.

Palm branches were considered a symbol of victory (John 12:13; Rev. 7:9). Many places in the Bible were identified by the abundance of palm trees (Ex. 15:27; Deut. 34:3; Judg. 1:16).

One of the Hebrew words for palm, tamar, was often used as a woman’s name (Gen. 38:6; 2 Sam. 13:1).

Pannag (see Millet).

Papyrus (see Reed/Rush).

Pine. An evergreen tree of uncertain identity. Biblical scholars believe pine refers to either the Brutian or the Aleppo pine (Is. 41:19; 60:13). The Brutian pine grew to a height of about 9 to 11 meters (30–35 feet). It is smaller and has longer needles than the Aleppo pine, which grew to a height of about 27 meters (90 feet). Both trees grew in Lebanon and in Palestine.

Bible scholars are not agreed on the identity of the many evergreens mentioned in the Bible. Other trees suggested for these references are the ash, fir, cypress, cedar, or juniper.

Pistachio Nut. A product of the pistacia tree, which was about 9 meters (30 feet) tall with wide, spreading branches. The pistachio nut is about 2.5 centimeters (1 inch) long and has a thin, hard outer shell. The smooth husk or skin that shields the green kernel is red. These nuts were sweet and considered a luxury. Jacob included them in the gifts sent to Egypt. “Take some of the best fruits of the land in your vessels and carry down a present for the man . . .” (Gen. 43:11).

Plane (see Chestnut).

Pomegranate. A round, sweet fruit about 10 centimeters (4 inches) across with a hard rind. It is green when young and turns red when ripe. There are numerous edible seeds inside the pomegranate.

The pomegranate tree has been cultivated in Palestine and Egypt since ancient times (Num. 13:23; Deut. 8:8). It grew as a bush or small tree, sometimes reaching a height of about 9 meters (30 feet) with small, lance-shaped leaves. The blossoms were bright red. The fruit usually ripened in August or September.

The hem of Aaron’s robe was decorated with blue, purple, and red pomegranates (Ex. 28:33–34; 39:24–26). It was listed among the pleasant fruits of Egypt (Num. 20:5). Solomon decorated the temple with the likeness of the pomegranate (1 Kin. 7:18, 20). A spiced wine was made from the juice (Song 8:2).

• A flowering pomegranate. In biblical times pomegranates were widely cultivated in Palestine (Num. 13:23; Deut. 8:7–8). The juice of the fruit made a pleasant drink (Song 8:2).

Poplar. A tree that grew to a height of about 9 to 18 meters (30–60 feet) and had wide, spreading branches. The leaves were green with white undersides. Jacob stripped the bark from poplar branches to reveal the white wood. This was supposed to control the color of his cattle. “Now Jacob . . . exposed the white which was in the rods” (Gen. 30:37).

Hosea refers to the Israelites worshiping idols in the shade of poplar trees. This brought God’s condemnation for their sin (Hos. 4:13). Also see Willow.

Raisin (see Grapes).

Reed/Rush. Gigantic hollow-stemmed grasses that grew along river banks and in moist areas of Egypt and Palestine. Many different Hebrew words refer to the marsh plants of the Bible. They form a large order of plants, such as flax, flags, bulrush, cane, calamus, and papyrus.

Reeds and rushes grew anywhere from 1 to 6 meters (3–20 feet) high and had long, narrow leaves. A cluster of white flowers formed at the top of each stem.

The reeds were used in various ways, including walking sticks, fishing poles, musical instruments, and pens. People also used them for weaving baskets, mats, and for other domestic purposes. Moses' basket was woven from reeds. Papyrus, a particular reed, was used to make paper.

Reeds were a symbol of weakness (Is. 36:6). Jesus refers to them as shaking in the wind (Matt. 11:7). A reed was placed in Jesus' hand as He was mocked by the Roman soldiers (Matt. 27:29).

Rose. The name of two different plants:

1. Most authorities think that the rose referred to in Song of Solomon 2:1 and Isaiah 35:1 is not what we know as the rose today, but a low-growing bulbous plant producing from two to four yellow flowers on each stalk. This flower is noted for its fragrance. Other scholars have suggested the mountain tulip, anemone, saffron, or crocus as the flower in question. All of these flowers grew wild in Palestine. This particular flower is translated crocus by the NRSV, NIV, and NASB (Is. 35:1) and asphodel by the REB (Song 2:1; Is. 35:2). The flower we call the "Rose of Sharon" is a native of China and is not the one mentioned by Solomon (Song 2:1).
2. The rose of Ecclesiasticus 24:14; 39:13 (REB) is thought to be the oleander. This shrub grows to a height of about 3.6 meters (12 feet) and has pink or white flowers.

Rue. A garden herb growing $^1/_2$ to 1 meter (2 to 3 feet) high with gray-green foliage and clusters of small yellow flowers. Rue had a strong odor. It was valued for its antiseptic and disinfectant qualities. It was also used to flavor foods.

Rye (see Spelt).

Saffron. The product of many varieties of crocus, a flower that grew from a bulb and produced light-blue flowers.

Crocus blooms were gathered, dried, and pressed into cakes of saffron. Saffron was used as a coloring for curries and stews. It was also used as a perfume for the floors of theaters and for weddings. Solomon was the only Bible writer to refer to saffron (Song 4:14).

Salt Herb (see Mallow).

Saltwort (see Mallow).

Shittah Tree (see Acacia).

Shittim Wood (see Acacia).

Spelt. An inferior kind of wheat. Although the bread made from this grain was of a poorer quality than that made from wheat, spelt was preferred over barley by many in the ancient world. The KJV translates this word as rye in Exodus 9:32 and Isaiah 28:25, and as fitches in Ezekiel 4:9. Spelt was sown later than wheat. It thrived in poor soil and under adverse conditions.

Spikenard. A costly oil derived from the dried roots and stems of the nard, an herb of Asia. This oil was used as a liquid or made into an ointment. Solomon praised the fragrance of spikenard (Song 1:12; 4:13–14).

Spikenard was imported from India in alabaster boxes. These were stored and used only for special occasions. When household guests arrived, they were usually anointed with this oil. Jesus was anointed on two occasions as an honored guest (Mark 14:3; John 12:3).

Many spikes grew from a single nard root that produced clusters of pink flowers. The stems were covered with hair, giving them a woolly appearance. Some translations of the Bible refer to spikenard as nard.

Stacte. A resin believed to be an extract of the stems and branches of the storax tree. Stacte was highly prized as perfume and as incense. It was one of the ingredients of anointing oil (Ex. 30:34).

The storax was a small, stiff shrub growing to a height of about 3 to 6 meters (10–20 feet), which grew abundantly in Lebanon and throughout Palestine. Its leaves were dark with grayish-white undersides. In spring the storax flowered profusely with highly fragrant white blooms that resembled the orange blossom.

Straw. The dried stalks of various grains such as spelt, barley, millet, or many kinds of wheat. Straw could also include stalks of wild grasses. Straw was mixed with grain and used as fodder (Gen. 24:25; Judg. 19:19; 1 Kin. 4:28). The Egyptians mixed straw with clay for stronger bricks (Ex. 5:7).

Sycamine (see Mulberry).

Sycamore. A huge evergreen tree growing to a height of about 12 to 15 meters (40–50 feet) with a trunk circumference of over 6.5 meters

(20 feet). The trunk forked near the ground, and the branches grew outward.

The leaves of the sycamore, sometimes called the sycamore fig, were heart-shaped, resembling mulberry leaves. The fruit was similar to the true fig but was inferior in quality (Amos 7:14). These yellow figs grew in clusters close to the branches.

Sycamores were trees of the plains (1 Kin. 10:27) and could not tolerate colder climates (Ps. 78:47). The sycamore was the tree Zacchaeus climbed to gain a better view of Jesus (Luke 19:4).

Tamarisk. A small tree with thick foliage and spikes of pink blooms. It provided ample shade for desert travelers (1 Sam. 22:6). The word for tamarisk is translated tree, grove, or oak by the KJV.

Tares. A poisonous grass resembling wheat, but with smaller seeds. The tares were usually left in the fields until harvest time, then separated from the wheat during winnowing. Jesus used tares growing with wheat as a parable to illustrate evil in the world (Matt. 13:25–30, 36–40). Tares is translated weeds in the NRSV and NIV, and darnel in the REB.

Teil (see Terebinth).

Terebinth. A large spreading tree that grew to a height of about 6 to 8 meters (20–26 feet) with reddish-green leaves and red berries in clusters. The terebinth is mentioned several times in the Bible. It is sometimes translated as teil (Is. 6:13), elm (Hos. 4:13), or oak (Gen. 35:4) by the KJV.

Thistles/Thorns. General terms for any spiny plant. Such plants are characteristic of arid and desert regions. Some of these were brambles, briers, thorny bushes, small trees, weeds, and prickly herbs. They grew abundantly in Palestine and other Bible lands.

The most noted use of thorns in the Bible was the crown of thorns placed on the head of Jesus on the cross. “When they had twisted a crown of thorns, they put it on His head” (Matt. 27:29).

Some of the thorns and thistles were annuals, scattering their seed in autumn. The industrious farmer would destroy the plants before he seeded (Matt. 13:7). Many of them were used as fuel for ovens (Ps. 58:9; Eccl. 7:6; Is. 33:12).

Thorny shrubs were used as hedges to guard fields and vineyards (Prov. 15:19; Mark 12:1). The prophet Micah declared that even the most upright person is “sharper [more destructive] than a thorn hedge” (Mic. 7:4).

Thyine (see Citron).

Vine (see Grapes).

Watermelon (see Melon).

Wheat. The most important cereal grass mentioned in the Bible. It was cultivated in Bible lands from early times, “Now Reuben went in the days of wheat harvest” (Gen. 30:14). Egyptian wheat was the many-eared variety called “mummy wheat.” This was the wheat of Pharaoh’s dream (Gen. 41:5–57). It was also depicted on Egyptian monuments.

Wheat was sown after barley in November or December. It was usually broadcast and then either plowed or trodden into the soil by oxen or other animals (Is. 32:20). This grain was used for bread (Ex. 29:32), and was also eaten parched (Lev. 23:14; Ruth 2:14). It was used in ceremonial offerings (Lev. 2:1; 24:5–7) and as an article of commerce (Ezek. 27:17; Acts 27:38).

When corn is mentioned in the Bible, it refers to wheat, as corn was not known in Bible times (Ps. 72:16; Matt. 12:1; Mark 4:28). Jesus compared His death to a grain of wheat that must die to produce fruit (John 12:24).

• Wheat, the main field crop of biblical times, was a staple food as well as a trade item for the Israelites (1 Kin. 5:10, 11).

Willow. A tree that grew to about 9 to 12 meters (30–40 feet) and had reddish-brown bark; narrow, pointed leaves; and flowers or catkins that hung downward. Willow branches were used to construct the booths for the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. 23:40). The Jews hung their harps on willows while in Babylon.

Some biblical scholars think the willow mentioned in the Bible was actually the poplar or Euphrates aspen. The word for willow is consistently translated as poplar by the NIV. In Isaiah 44:4 it is translated willow by the REB and poplar by the NASB. Also see Poplar.

Wormwood. A woody shrub covered with small green leaves, with greenish-yellow flowers growing in clusters. Wormwood grows in the desert regions of Palestine and Syria. This plant is mentioned many times in the Bible. It had a bitter taste and a strong aroma (Jer. 9:15).

Wormwood was used symbolically to refer to any calamity or bitter experience (Deut. 29:18; Prov. 5:4; Amos 5:7; Rev. 8:10–11). An intoxicating drink could also be made from this plant (Lam. 3:15). Wormwood is sometimes translated as bitter weeds or hemlock (Amos 6:12, KJV).

PLASTER (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

PLASTERER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

PLATE (see DISH).

PLATTER—a large, shallow dish or plate, used especially for serving food. Most of the references to platters in the Bible occur in Numbers 7. They refer to the silver plates or dishes presented by the twelve tribal leaders at the dedication of the altar of the Tabernacle (Num. 7:13–85). The platters of Ezra 1:9 were probably basins for receiving the blood of sacrifices. In the New Testament, John the Baptist's head was brought to Salome, the daughter of Herodias, on a platter (Matt. 14:11; Mark 6:28; charger, KJV).

PLAY (see GAMES).

PLEDGE—something held as security to guarantee fulfillment of an obligation. As proof of his intention to send Tamar a young goat from his flock, Judah left his signet, cord, and staff with her as a pledge (Gen. 38:17–18, 20). The giving of pledges is regulated in Deuteronomy 24:6, 10–13, 17–18. The abuse of this custom is mentioned by the prophet Ezekiel (18:7, 12). He classified this abuse with such crimes as idolatry, robbery, murder, and adultery. Amos also makes reference to the oppression of the poor through the misuse of the pledge (Amos 2:8).

PLEIADES [PLEE uh deez]—a brilliant cluster of stars seen in the shoulder of Taurus (the Bull). The name Pleiades comes from the seven daughters of Atlas and Pleione in Greek mythology.

This constellation consists of several hundred stars, although the naked eye can usually see only six or seven. Job declared that God made the Pleiades (Job 9:9) and bound them in a cluster (Job 38:31).

PLEROMA [pleh RAUH muh]—a Greek word meaning "fullness." In the New Testament pleroma is used with two basic senses: (1) something that fills or completes, such as a patch in Matthew 9:16 or love in Romans 13:10; (2) fullness or the state or fact of being filled, such as the completed number of saved Gentiles (Rom. 11:25) or the “full measure” of Christ’s blessing (Rom. 15:29, NIV).

First Corinthians 10:26 (the earth’s fullness) and Galatians 4:4 (the fullness of the time; Eph. 1:10) suggest God’s sovereign appointment of events in both space and time. In Romans 11:12 pleroma refers to the completion of God’s plan for the nation of Israel. The Lord Jesus Christ possesses the complete fullness of God’s divine nature and attributes. “In Him dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily” (Col. 2:9).

The apostle Paul also used the phrase, “all the fullness of God” (Eph. 3:19), to show that Christ embodied the love of God. In Ephesians 4:13, “the fullness of Christ” means that state of Christian maturity in which believers are no longer “tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men” (v. 14).

There are other practical implications of this idea of the fullness of Christ. Knowing that we have been made full and “complete” in Christ (Col. 2:10), as Christians we must be willing to accept whatever edifying suffering God may send to “fill up in [our] flesh what is lacking in the afflictions of Christ” (Col. 1:24).

PLOWMAN (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

PLOWSHARE—the blade of a plow used for tilling the soil. In early times plows were constructed of wood; but with the development of metallurgy, metal tips were placed over the wood. The prophets Micah and Isaiah spoke of making plowshares from weapons as a sign of the peace to be accomplished in the coming reign of God (Is. 2:4; Mic. 4:3).

Also see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE.

PLUMB LINE, PLUMMET (see TOOLS OF THE BIBLE).

POCHERETH–ZEBAIM [POCK eh reth zeh BAY im] (binder of gazelles)—a servant of Solomon whose descendants returned from the captivity with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:57; Neh. 7:59; Pokereth–Hazzebaim, NIV). Some scholars believe this reference may be to ZEBOIM (Neh. 11:34), a town occupied by Benjamites after the captivity.

PODS—the rough seed cases of the carob tree, commonly called the acacia or locust tree. The prodigal son became so destitute after he squandered his inheritance that “he would gladly have filled his stomach with the pods that the swine ate” (Luke 15:16; husks, KJV). The rabbis frequently mention the pods and beans of the carob tree as fodder for domestic animals in their writings. It was eaten by humans as food only by the poorest classes, or in times of great famine.

POET (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

POETRY—lofty thought or impassioned feeling expressed in imaginative words. Beautiful poetry occurs in both the Old Testament and the New Testament of the Bible.

Poetry in the Old Testament. At a very early date poetry became part of the written literature of the Hebrew people. Many scholars believe the song of Moses and the song of Miriam (Ex. 15:1–21), celebrating the destruction of Pharaoh’s army in the sea, is the oldest existing Hebrew hymn or poetic work, dating perhaps from the twelfth century B.C. Three of the greatest poetic masterpieces of the Old Testament are the Song of Deborah (Judges 5); the Song of the Bow—David’s lament over the death of Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:17–27)—and the Burden of Nineveh (Nah. 1:10—3:19).

Approximately 40 percent of the Old Testament is written in poetry. This includes entire books (except for short prose sections) such as Job, Psalms, Proverbs, the Song of Solomon, and Lamentations. Large portions of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the Minor Prophets are also poetic in form and content. Many scholars consider the Book of Job to be not only the greatest poem in the Old Testament but also one of the greatest poems in all literature.

The three main divisions of the Old Testament—the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings—contain poetry in successively greater amounts. Only seven Old Testament books—Leviticus, Ruth, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Haggai, and Malachi—appear to have no poetic lines.

Poetic elements such as assonance, alliteration, meter, and rhyme—so common to poetry as we know it today—occur rarely in Hebrew poetry; these are not essential ingredients of Old Testament poetry. Instead, the essential formal characteristic of Hebrew poetry is parallelism. This is a construction in which the content of one line is repeated, contrasted, or advanced by the content of the next—a type of sense rhythm characterized by thought arrangement rather than by word arrangement or rhyme. The three main types of parallelism in biblical poetry are synonymous, antithetic, and synthetic.

Synonymous parallelism—A parallel segment repeats an idea found in the previous segment. With this technique a kind of paraphrase is involved; line two restates the same thought found in line one, by using equivalent expressions. Examples of synonymous parallelism are found in Genesis 4:23: "Adah and Zillah, hear my voice;/Wives of Lamech, listen to my speech!/For I have killed a man for wounding me/Even a young man for hurting me." Another example is found in Psalm 2:4: "He who sits in the heavens shall laugh;/The Lord shall hold them in derision." Yet a third example is Psalm 51:2–3: "Wash me thoroughly from my iniquityAnd cleanse me from my sin./For I acknowledge my transgressions,/And my sin is always before me." (Also see Ps. 24:1–3; 103:3, 7–10; Jer. 17:10; Zech. 9:9.)

Antithetic parallelism—By means of this poetic construction, the thought of the first line is made clearer by contrast—by the opposition expressed in the second line. Examples of antithetic parallelism may be found in Psalm 1:6: "The Lord knows the way of the righteous,/But the way of the ungodly shall perish"; in Psalm 34:10: "The young lions lack and suffer hunger;/But those who seek the Lord shall not lack any good thing"; and in Proverbs 14:20: "The poor man is hated even by his own neighbor,/ But the rich has many friends."

Synthetic parallelism—Also referred to as climactic or cumulative parallelism, this poetic construction expands the idea in line one by the idea in line two. In synthetic parallelism, therefore, there is an ascending (or descending) progression, a building up of thought, with each succeeding line adding to the first.

Here is one good example of this poetic technique: "He shall be like a tree/Planted by the rivers of water,/That brings forth its fruit in its season,/Whose leaf also shall not wither;/And whatever he does shall prosper" (Ps. 1:3).

Another poetic form found in the Old Testament is the alphabetical acrostic, a form used often in the Book of Psalms (Psalms 9–10; 25; 34; 37; 111; 112; 119; 145). In the alphabetical psalms the first line begins with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, the next with the second, and so on, until all the letters of the alphabet have been used. Thus, Psalm 119 consists of twenty-two groups of eight verses each. The number of groups equals the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet. The first letter of each verse in a group is (in the original Hebrew text) that letter of the alphabet that corresponds to its position in the group.

Many of the subtleties of Hebrew poetry, such as puns and various plays on words, are virtually untranslatable into English and may be fully appreciated only by an accomplished Hebrew scholar. Fortunately, many good commentaries are available to explain to the layperson these riches of Hebrew thought.

The Bible is full of numerous figures of speech, such as metaphors and similes. For example, the psalmist metaphorically described God by saying, “The Lord is my rock and my fortress and my deliverer; My God, my strength, in whom I will trust; My shield and the horn of my salvation, my stronghold” (Ps. 18:2).

Moses gave this remarkable simile describing God’s care of Israel in the wilderness: “As an eagle stirs up its nest,/Hovers over its young,/Spreading out its wings, taking them up,/Carrying them on its wings,/So the Lord alone led him” (Deut. 32:11–12).

Such figures of speech are not to be interpreted literally but as poetic symbolism for God. He is the firm ground of life and a solid defense against evil. The worshiper sings for joy because of His protecting presence and the soaring power of His loving care.

Poetry in the New Testament. Very little poetry is found in the New Testament, except poetry quoted from the Old Testament or hymns that were included in the worship services of the early church. The Beatitudes (Matt. 5:3–10; Luke 6:20–26) have a definite poetic form. The Gospel of Luke contains several long poems: Zacharias’ prophecy, known as the Benedictus (Luke 1:68–79); the song of Mary, known as the Magnificat (Luke 1:46–55); the song of the heavenly host, known as the Gloria in Excelsis (Luke 2:14); and the blessing of Simeon, known as the Nunc Dimittis (Luke 2:29–32).

Examples of parallelism may be found in the New Testament. For instance, synonymous parallelism occurs in Matthew 7:6: “Do not give what is holy to the dogs, nor cast your pearls before swine.” Antithetic parallelism occurs in Matthew 8:20: “Foxes have holes and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay His head.” Synthetic parallelism occurs in John 6:32–33: “Moses did not give you the bread from heaven, but My Father gives you the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is He who comes down from heaven and gives life to the world."

In the writings of the apostle Paul several poetic passages may be found: his lyrical celebration of God's everlasting love (Rom. 8:31–39); his classic hymn to love (1 Corinthians 13); his glorious faith in the triumph of the resurrection (1 Cor. 15:51–58); and his thoughts on the humbled and exalted Christ (Phil. 2:5–11).

Who can deny the poetic passion in Paul's words to the Corinthians? "We are hard-pressed on every side, yet not crushed;/we are perplexed, but not in despair;/persecuted, but not forsaken;/struck down, but not destroyed" (2 Cor. 4:8–9).

• Wild flowers near Jerusalem, in the Kidron Valley. The psalmist probably had flowers such as these in mind when he spoke of the fleeting nature of life (Ps. 103:15, 16).

POISON—a chemical substance that causes injury or death when taken into the body. The Bible contains many references to the poison of “serpents” (Deut. 32:24, 33), “cobras” (Job 20:16), and “asps” (Ps. 140:3; Rom. 3:13). When the apostle Paul was on the island of Malta, a viper bit him, but he suffered no ill effects from the snakebite (Acts 28:1–6).

Poisonous plants are also mentioned in the Bible. These include hemlock (Hos. 10:4) and wormwood (Deut. 29:18). At Gilgal, in a time of famine, the prophet Elisha purified a pot of stew that contained poisonous “wild gourds” (2 Kin. 4:38–41).

POLE—the staff or standard upon which Moses put a bronze serpent, when the Israelites were bitten by fiery serpents in the wilderness. Everyone who looked at the serpent on the pole lived, in spite of their snakebites (Num. 21:4–9). The Gospel of John treats this event as a type, or symbol, of the lifting up of the Son of Man (John 3:14–15)—the death of Jesus on the cross.

POLLUTE—to make ceremonially unclean or morally impure; to defile, profane, or corrupt. Allowing a murderer to go unpunished polluted the land of Israel (Num. 35:33). So did participation in a pagan religion that practiced human sacrifice (Ps. 106:38; Jer. 7:30). The prophet Zephaniah charged the wicked and corrupt leaders of Jerusalem with polluting the holy city (Zeph. 3:1–4). Worship of the one true God was the way to keep oneself holy and morally pure.

POLYGAMY—the practice of having several spouses, especially wives, at one time. Polygamy includes polygyny (marriage to more than one woman) and polyandry (marriage to more than one man). The term polygamy is more often used, however, as a synonym for polygyny, which was common throughout the ancient world.

According to the custom of the times, Abraham took Hagar, the Egyptian maidservant of his wife Sarah, to be his wife when Sarah was unable to bear a child (Gen. 16:1–4). Abraham’s son, Isaac, had only one wife; but Abraham’s grandson, Jacob, took two wives (Leah and Rachel) and two CONCUBINES, Zilpah and Bilhah (Gen. 29:15—30:13).

The Bible presents monogamy as the divine ideal. The Creator made marriage as a union between one man and one woman (Gen. 2:18–24; Matt. 19:4–6; 1 Cor. 6:16). Apparently polygamy, like divorce, was tolerated because of the hardness of people’s hearts (Matt. 19:8).

After the time of Moses, polygamy continued to be practiced, especially by wealthy individuals, such as Gideon, Elkanah, Saul, and David (Judg. 8:28–30; 1 Sam. 1:2; 2 Sam. 5:13; 1 Kin. 11:3). But the most famous polygamist in the Bible was King Solomon: "And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines; and his wives turned away his heart" (1 Kin. 11:3). The criticism of polygamy expressed in Deuteronomy 17:17 is not surprising: the ideal king to whom Israel's obedience can be rightly given shall not "multiply wives for himself, lest his heart turn away."

POMEGRANATE (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

POMMEL—KJV word for CAPITAL.

POND (see POOL).

PONTIUS PILATE (see PILATE, PONTIUS).

PONTUS [PONN tus]—a province in northern Asia Minor (modern Turkey) mentioned in the Book of Acts (see Map 7, D–1). Pontus was situated on the southern shore of the Pontus Euxinus, or the Black Sea. A mountainous area broken by fertile plains, Pontus produced olives, grain, and timber.

Pontus was made part of the Galatian–Cappadocian province of the Roman Empire by Nero in A.D. 64. It is mentioned twice in the Book of Acts. People from Pontus were in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost (Acts 2:9), and it was the birthplace of Aquila, the husband of Priscilla (Acts 18:2). The First Epistle of Peter is addressed to "the pilgrims of the Dispersion in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia" (1 Pet. 1:1). From this we may assume that Christians were living in Pontus.

POOL—a large open receptacle fed either by springs or by rainwater; a pond or reservoir for holding water. Because rainfall is not plentiful in Palestine, storage of water is crucial. Most cities developed near a spring or similar water supply, but this was not always adequate as the city grew. It became necessary to store water to provide for the dry season and to prepare for the possibility of a prolonged siege against the city.

Individual families or groups sometimes stored water in cisterns, which are plaster-lined pits in the ground. Another method was to collect water in open-air pools. The pools could be quite large, and frequently they took advantage of natural features. For instance, a narrow valley might be dammed to create a pool. Pools were frequently fed by underground springs.

Several pools are mentioned in the Bible, but the location of most of these remains unknown today. One famous pool in Jerusalem was the “pool of Siloam” (John 9:7, 11), still in use today. It was originally built by King Hezekiah shortly before 700 B.C. to provide an adequate water supply during an expected siege by the Assyrians. A tunnel, dug through the ridge upon which Jerusalem was built, allowed the water of the Gihon Spring to flow to the pool of Siloam (2 Kin. 20:20; 2 Chr. 32:30). In the New Testament, Jesus sent a blind man to wash his eyes at the pool of Siloam (John 9:7).

Pools of water came to be used as figures of God’s blessing upon the land of Israel. In Isaiah 35:7 and 41:18, God promised that He would once again bless the land. Part of that blessing would be abundance of water.

• The Pool of Siloam (John 9:7–11), a reservoir inside the walls of Jerusalem that held the city’s water supply.

POOR—having little or no wealth and few or no possessions; lacking in financial or other resources. Although the poor will remain a part of society (Deut. 15:11; Matt. 26:11), the Bible instructs the righteous to show concern for them.

God takes up the cause of the poor. The psalms repeatedly emphasize that God helps them. He will “spare the poor and needy” (Ps. 72:13). He promises, “I will satisfy her poor with bread” (Ps. 132:15). The poor of the world can take comfort in the fact that God cares for them.

The divine compassion for the poor is demonstrated by Jesus (Luke 6:20). Luke, who especially emphasizes concern for the poor, relates Christ’s mission statement from Isaiah, “He has anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor” (Is. 61:1; Luke 4:18). The rich young man was instructed by Jesus to sell his possessions and “to distribute to the poor” (Luke 18:22). Jesus’ followers cannot remain unconcerned about the poor of the world.

Instructions about considerate treatment of the poor are found in the Old Testament and the New Testament. The Law, as well as the Prophets, warned against oppressing the poor and crushing the needy (Deut. 24:14; Prov. 14:31; Amos 2:6; 4:1).

People of means were warned not to take advantage of the poor, especially in court: “You shall not pervert the judgment of your poor in his dispute” (Ex. 23:6; Amos 5:12). Help was to be given to the poor (Deut. 15:7–8; Is. 58:7). Such help was to be motivated by God’s own action of providing the underprivileged with food and clothing (Deut. 10:18).

The extent to which God identifies with the poor is clear from Proverbs 19:17 and Matthew 25:34–40. Jesus instructed that the poor should be invited when a feast is prepared (Luke 14:12–14; Gal. 2:10). James warned against discrimination against the poor (Lev. 19:15; James 2:2–4).

POOR IN SPIRIT—those who admit their spiritual inadequacy and cast themselves on the mercy of God (Matt. 5:3). The poor in spirit are the opposite of the proud, the arrogant, the self-righteous who boast of their own goodness. Jesus’ parable of the Pharisee and the tax collector (Luke 18:9–14) illustrates this contrast.

The Gospel of Luke declares, “Blessed are you poor for yours is the kingdom of God” (Luke 6:20). The poor in spirit are those who look to the Lord for justice, mercy, and deliverance, and not to themselves.

POPLAR (see PLANTS OF THE BIBLE).

PORATHA [poe RAY thuh]—a son of Haman, hanged like his father (Esth. 9:8).

PORCH—an open veranda, vestibule, or portico on the outside of a building (Joel 2:17; John 5:2). Few homes in Bible times had porches. Most references to porches in the Bible refer to the temple or to Solomon’s palace. Solomon’s palace featured a veranda that was open in front and on the sides, but it could be closed off with curtains. Also see HOUSE.

PORCIUS [POHR shih uhs] (see FESTUS PORCIUS).

PORCUPINE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

PORPHYRY (see MINERALS OF THE BIBLE).

PORPOISE (see ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE).

PORTER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

PORTION—an allowance, ration, or part that is allotted to a person or group. It includes the following:

1. An allowance of food or clothing (Gen. 14:24). Daniel refused his portion of the king's delicacies (Dan. 1:8–16).
2. One's family inheritance, the part of an estate received by an heir (Gen. 31:14; Luke 15:12).
3. A parcel of ground (2 Kin. 9:10).
4. A person's destiny or lot in life (Job 3:22).
5. One's spiritual or religious heritage (2 Chr. 10:16), especially in the sense of one's personal relationship to the Lord (Ps. 119:57).
6. The judgment that is the lot of the wicked (Matt. 24:51).

POSSESSION, DEMON (see DEMON POSSESSION).

POST, POSTS—words used in the Bible in a number of ways: a command post (1 Kin. 20:12, 16); an observation post, or watchtower (Is. 21:8); guard posts (Acts 12:10); a person's position or station of employment (Eccl. 10:4); and the doorposts of a building (Prov. 8:34; Eccl. 10:4). The prophet Ezekiel used the word several times to describe the doorway of the new temple. The NKJV uses gateposts (Ezek. 40:9–38) and doorposts (Ezek. 40:48–49; 41:1, 3).

Posts also referred to runners (2 Chr. 30:6, 10; Job 9:25; Jer. 51:31) and couriers (Esth. 3:13, 15; 8:10, 14)—men usually employed by a king to deliver letters swiftly on horseback (Esth. 8:10).

POTENTATE [POTE un tate]—one who has the power, position, and authority to rule over others. The apostle Paul called the Lord "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords" (1 Tim. 6:15; Sovereign, NRSV, NASB; Ruler, NIV).

POTIPHAR [PAHT uh fur] (dedicated to Ra)—the Egyptian to whom the Ishmaelites (Gen. 39:1) sold Joseph when he was brought to Egypt as a slave. Potiphar was a high officer of Pharaoh and a wealthy man (Gen. 37:36). In time, he put Joseph in charge of his household.

But Potiphar's wife became attracted to Joseph and attempted to seduce him. When he rejected her advances, she falsely accused him and had him imprisoned (Gen. 39:6–19).

POTI-PHERAH [poh TIFF eh rah] (he whom Ra has given)—a priest of ON (Heliopolis) and father-in-law of Joseph (Gen. 41:45). Asenath, Poti-pherah's daughter, bore Joseph two sons. Other spellings of the name are Potipherah (KJV) and Potiphera (NRSV, REB, NASB, NIV).

POTSHERD [POTT shurd]—a fragment of broken pottery; a shard found in an archaeological excavation. Job used a potsherd to scrape the sores of his body (Job 2:8). The sharp points of a potsherd are compared to the scales of LEVIATHAN (Job 41:30). The dryness of a potsherd is likened to one whose strength is totally gone (Ps. 22:15). Larger fragments of broken pottery were used to "take fire from the hearth"—that is, carry hot coals from one house to another—and "take water from the cistern" (Is. 30:14).

The same Hebrew word translated as potsherd can also refer to unbroken earthenware pots (Lev. 6:28; Jer. 19:1).

A careful analysis of the make-up, style, and method used in making pieces of pottery gives archaeologists an important clue for dating different levels of occupation of ancient cities. Potsherds were also used as a writing material in Bible times. These potsherds, called ostraca, contained tax receipts, military correspondence, and other short bits of information. The famous Lachish ostraca were potsherds containing correspondence between the city of Lachish and its military outposts.

POTSHERD GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

POTTAGE (see STEW).

POTTER (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

POTTER'S FIELD—the field bought with the thirty pieces of silver paid to Judas for his betrayal of Jesus (Matt. 27:7, 10). Since the field was purchased with blood money, it was considered good for nothing but a cemetery in which foreigners were buried. According to tradition, the potter's field was at the eastern end of the Valley of Hinnom. Also see AKEL DAMA.

POTTER'S GATE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

POTTERY—vessels or other objects manufactured from clay and hardened by fire. In modern usage, the term pottery generally refers only to vessels (bowls, plates, jars, etc.). But the products of the potter's craft were very diverse in Bible times.

The Making of Pottery. Clay is the basic material from which pottery is produced. It has two important characteristics: it can be shaped and will retain its form, and it hardens when exposed to a high temperature. A clay vessel that has been sun-dried will eventually collapse if filled with water. But if the clay is heated to a temperature of at least 500 degrees C (900 degrees F), its chemical composition and physical characteristics change. It hardens and no longer can be molded.

Clay, in its natural state, was seldom fit for use in making pottery. Several stages of preparation were usually necessary. The clay was mixed with water, then sifted to remove stones and larger particles. This was accomplished with the use of settling basins, a series of refining pits that produced gradually finer grades of clay. Straw, sand, shell, or pulverized POTSHERDS were often added to the clay. These ingredients minimized shrinkage and helped to prevent cracking of the vessel during the drying or firing process. A final step was to knead the clay with hands or feet to remove air bubbles and assure the right consistency.

A number of techniques for shaping a vessel were developed by the potters of the ancient world. Fashioning by hand was probably the earliest pottery-making technique. But this method was inadequate for larger and more complex vessels. Before the invention of the potter's wheel, such pottery was produced by the technique of coil construction. By this method a vessel was built up by coiling long rolls of clay on top of one another. More elaborate forms were possible by varying the thickness of the coils. The irregular surface created by the coils was smoothed over as the vessel was formed.

Another common technique was the use of molds to form figurines and vessels. Oil lamps, small statuettes, and plaques were among the most common clay objects manufactured in molds. One of the most beautiful ceramic products from the ancient world, known as Arretine ware, was produced from molds. This pottery generally features scenes of people, plants, animals, and geometric designs.

Pottery-making was revolutionized with the invention of the potter's wheel. A primitive wheel, called a turntable or tournette, is datable in Palestine to about 2500 B.C. This device consisted of a single horizontal disk that was turned by hand. The slow rotation created the centrifugal force that allowed the potter to "throw" the vessel. The true potter's wheel added a second disk or kick wheel, operated by foot, that increased the speed of rotation. The development of the potter's wheel evolved in several stages from the tournette to the kick wheel.

Pottery was sometimes produced by a combination of techniques. The bodies of certain jars, bottles, and teapots were produced by the technique of coil construction, while the necks and rims were wheelmade.

Because a vessel has no function until hardened by exposure to high temperatures, the drying or firing process was the crucial step in the production of pottery. Although pottery could be sun-dried, as the earliest vessels were, they could only be used for storing dry materials. A pot will sufficiently harden to hold liquid and retain its shape if exposed to a minimum temperature of 500 degrees C (900 degrees F). An open fire will produce temperatures in the range of 700–800 degrees C, adequate to fire clay vessels, but a vessel fired in this way is brittle, porous, and black from the smoke.

Efficient firing finally was accomplished in a kiln. The earliest kiln in Palestine dates to about 3000 B.C. Although there are variations, the basic form of the kiln remained unchanged throughout the biblical period. A beehive-shaped structure was divided into two chambers by a horizontal partition, which was perforated with holes. The vessels were placed in the upper chamber. The fuel, consisting of wood or dung, was placed in the lower chamber. Heat reached the upper chamber through the holes in the floor. Firing was a delicate process. It required well-prepared clays, thoroughly-dried vessels, adequate temperatures, and firing time.

Many decorating techniques were developed by the potters of ancient times. These included painting, incising, burnishing, stamping, glazing, and the application of slip.

Pottery as a Dating Tool. Pottery is the most common artifact from the ancient world. It was found in the poorest houses and in the most luxurious palaces, on the surfaces of ancient streets and in building foundations. Burials, from the simplest to the most elaborate, yield quantities of pottery, usually whole vessels.

An archaeological excavation will produce thousands of sherds (fragments of pottery) and many intact vessels. The fact that pottery finds far outnumber any type of archaeological artifact is due mainly to its indestructibility. Fired clay will not disintegrate even if buried for thousands of years. Most other materials, like metal or wood, will disappear.

Apart from its functional value to the people of ancient times, pottery has a special importance for the study of these cultures. Pottery has changed through the centuries. These changes are reflected in form, decoration, clay composition, manufacturing technique, and quality of firing. Pottery is, therefore, one of the indicators of the technical and artistic achievements of a culture. The presence of imported pottery, clearly distinguishable from the styles and wares of local pottery, enables the archaeologist to identify and study foreign influence, such as trade relations, population movements, and conquest. The most important contribution of pottery to the study of ancient cultures is its value as a dating tool.

Pottery is usually found in every level of an ancient TELL—an artificial mound formed by the accumulation of ancient ruins. A tell may be described as one city or occupational level on top of another, producing a mound of considerable height. Each occupational level has its own level or layer of debris. The study of these various layers presents the archaeologist with a complicated task. In the absence of written materials, pottery is the most reliable tool for determining the chronology of a site or its individual levels.

Ceramic Typology. Mastery of ceramic typology, the ability to date potsherds, is the result of many years of study and constant exposure to the pottery forms of the various archaeological periods. Textbooks alone are inadequate for the study of pottery typology. There are many features that have potential significance for the dating of pottery, such as the quality and texture of the clay, the kind of matter included for strength, the type and quality of decoration, numerous considerations relative to the firing process and, most importantly, the vessel's form or shape.

The shape of the vessel's rim or base, the curvature of the body, the presence or absence of handles, the type of handle, the manner and point of a handle's attachment—these are among the distinctives of pottery that have chronological significance. The shape of a vessel's rim most often provides the best dating criterion. The cooking pot, for instance, has very distinctive rim shapes as this vessel changes through the archaeological periods. Some pottery shapes change dramatically and rapidly while others, like the lamp, change more slowly and subtly.

Also of great value as chronological indicators are the various types of burnishing, painting, and glazing. Clay composition and firing technique can be significant. The retrieval of this data is achieved through various scientific tests.

The earliest pottery dates back to the Neolithic period (New Stone Age), about 7500–4000 B.C. This archaeological period is divided into two phases at about 5000 B.C. by the first appearance of pottery: pre-Pottery Neolithic and Pottery Neolithic. The second, ceramic, phase of the Neolithic culture has been studied at a number of sites, including Catal Huyuk in Anatolia, Jericho, and in the Yarmuk Valley. The pottery of this period is handmade and is characterized by simple and primitive forms. The ware or fabric is often soft and crumbly—the result of firing the clay at a low temperature.

During this period, straw was frequently mixed with the clay as a temper. In addition to these coarse wares, finer pottery was also used in this period. The clay is of better quality, the firing is at a higher temperature, and the pottery was frequently decorated with a burnished red slip in a design of triangles or chevrons. The most common forms are small bowls, deeper bowls with gently curving sides, and globular jars with flat bases. The handles are basically of three types: simple loop handles, small pierced lug handles, and small ledge or knob handles. The ledge handle is a most distinguishing feature of Early Bronze Age pottery.

The transition from the Neolithic period to the Chalcolithic period, from about 4000–3200 B.C., is not well understood. The site of Tuleilat el-Ghassul in the southern Jordan Valley and several sites in the region of Beersheba have contributed significantly to our understanding of the culture and pottery of the Chalcolithic period.

Two pottery forms characteristic of the Chalcolithic period are churns and cornets. The cornet is shaped much like an ice cream cone, often painted with horizontal bands, and it has small lug handles. Its distinctive shape makes it a hallmark of Chalcolithic pottery. The churn is an oddly shaped vessel whose function is not completely understood. The form is horizontal, barrel-shaped, with tapered ends. Small loop handles are mounted on the top of each end, allowing the vessel to be hung much like a goat skin. The neck, sometimes containing a strainer, is located in the middle of the body. The overall shape gives the general impression of a submarine. The larger churns are decorated with red painted bands.

Although there is some controversy, the Early Bronze Age (3200–2200 B.C.) may be divided into three phases, each of which has characteristic pottery types and distinctive decoration. One of the most common features of Early Bronze pottery is the ledge handle, which has distinctive shapes for each of the phases of this period. Vessels with parallel lines of red paint covering the entire body are one of the common ceramic types of the Early Bronze I period.

The most typical pottery shape of Early Bronze II is an oval jug that is designated “Abydos ware” after the name of the site in Egypt where it was first discovered. A typical pottery type of Early Bronze III, designated “Khirbet Kerak ware” after the site of its discovery, is one of the most beautiful ceramics of ancient Palestine. Though the forms set this pottery apart from local ceramic traditions, the decoration is the distinguishing feature. This handmade ware is a red and/or black burnished pottery. It differs also from local pottery in terms of clay quality, manufacturing technique, and firing. Although the origins of this import are not clear, Khirbet Kerak ware is widely distributed throughout northern and central Palestine.

The period traditionally designated Middle Bronze I, now Early Bronze IV–Middle Bronze I (2200–2000 B.C.), was an interlude between the urban cultures of the preceding Early Bronze Age and the following Middle Bronze II period. New pottery forms appeared. Among the most common were four-spouted lamps, jars with flat bases, and spouted pots (teapots).

The widespread use of the potter's wheel in the Middle Bronze II period (2000–1550 B.C.) is, in large measure, responsible for technical improvements in pottery-making. A wide range of forms, some quite elaborate, appeared in this period. One of the distinctive forms was a carinated, or sharply curved, bowl which may have been patterned after a metal vessel. Another common pottery type is the so-called "Tell el-Yahudiyeh ware," named after the site of its first discovery in the Nile Delta. Found primarily on juglets, this ware is characterized by white-filled punctures, making up geometric patterns.

The Late Bronze Age (1550–1200 B.C.) is divided into two main phases with further subdivision of each phase. The variety of local and imported ceramic traditions is rich. Characteristic of Late Bronze I is a beautiful pottery, called "bichrome painted ware," which is decorated with pictures of birds, animals, fish, and geometric designs. Imported Cypriot wares and pottery from Mycenae are common in this period.

The Iron Age spans the period from about 1200 B.C. to the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. Two fundamental problems associated with the study of this period are the nature of the transition from the Late Bronze to the Iron Age and the division of the Iron Age into phases. As with all of the archaeological periods, the constant flow of new pottery from recent excavations is helping to clarify the picture. The Iron Age has generally been divided into two periods with the division of the kingdom under Solomon's son Rehoboam (931 B.C.) constituting the datum that separates Iron I and Iron II. Both periods are further subdivided.

Iron Age pottery is characterized by technical sophistication and an abundance of types with numerous variants. Finish and decoration in this period are distinctive. Vessels are commonly covered with a red, black, brown, or yellow slip (a coat of watery clay applied to the surface of a pot before firing) that is burnished to a high luster. Pottery of this period clearly reflects ancient Israel's relations with Phoenicia, Cyprus, Egypt, Assyria, and other nations. One of the outstanding traditions of the early Iron Age is Philistine pottery, which is decorated with red and black geometric designs and stylized birds.

A vast variety of pottery forms are characteristic of Iron II, including various sizes of burnished bowls, kraters, jugs, juglets, cups, and large storage jars. These storage vessels often bear royal seal impressions on the handles. Contemporary with the wheelmade wares of the Iron Age is the tradition of handmade pottery known as "Negevite ware." It is attested throughout this period in a wide variety of forms that often look like wheelmade types of pottery.

The Exilic–Persian period (about 586–332 B.C.) is distinguished by many unique forms, including jars with stump bases and "basket" handles, shallow lamps distinguished by wide rims, and the so-called "sausage" jars. An imported black-glazed pottery, commonly small bowls and plates, is the hallmark of the Hellenistic period (about 332–63 B.C.). The Roman period, in addition to the usual ceramic repertoire, has produced two beautiful pottery traditions. "Nabatean ware," common in the Negev and Transjordan, is a thin, delicate, well-fired pottery with painted floral designs. "Terra sigillata" is a red-glazed, ribbed pottery, stamped with roulettes, that was produced in Italy and the Roman provinces. This ware was imitated by local potters.

Pottery and Pottery-Making in the Bible. The potter's craft is alluded to in numerous biblical passages. This is especially true of the Old Testament, which contains a large ceramic vocabulary. Among the numerous references are those to bowls of varying sizes (Ex. 8:3; 12:34; kneading trough, KJV; Judg. 6:38; 2 Kin. 2:20; cruse, KJV; Matt. 26:23; dish, KJV); cooking pots (Judg. 6:19; 2 Kin. 4:38); jars and pitchers (Gen. 24:14; 1 Sam. 26:11; cruse, KJV; 2 Kin. 4:2; pot, KJV; Jer. 35:5; pots, KJV; John 4:28; waterpot, KJV); juglets (1 Kin. 17:12; cruse, KJV); and lamps (Ex. 27:20; Prov. 31:18; candle, KJV). The list of ceramic types in the Bible, together with the actual vessels found in archaeological excavations, have provided a clear picture of the pottery of biblical times.

Jeremiah 18:1–6 is the most vivid passage about pottery-making in the Bible. It contains a realistic description of the potter's workshop (18:1–4), and it uses figurative language for the potter's craft. The image of God as the Master Potter also appears in Genesis 2:7; Isaiah 29:16; 64:8; Job 10:8–9, and Romans 9:20–24.

POUND (see MONEY OF THE BIBLE; WEIGHTS AND MEASURES).

POVERTY (see POOR).

POWDERS—aromatic spices pulverized and used as perfume or burned as incense (Song 3:6). Solomon's palanquin was perfumed by powders.

POWER—the ability or strength to perform an activity or deed. Power is sometimes used with the word authority. If power suggests physical strength, authority suggests a moral right or privilege.

One can have power to perform a task but not authority to do it. Jesus Christ had both power and authority (Luke 4:36), and He bestowed these upon His followers (Luke 10:19).

PRAETORIUM, PRAETORIAN GUARD—a special group of Roman soldiers in New Testament times, established to guard the emperor of the Roman Empire. Originally, they were restricted to the city of Rome, but later they were sent to the Roman provinces as well. This guard was an elite corps of soldiers whose salaries, privileges, and terms of service were better than the other soldiers of the Roman Empire.

In the NKJV, Praetorium is mentioned with reference to a place (Matt. 27:27; Mark 15:16; John 18:28, 33; 19:9). The implication from the Gospels is that the Praetorium was part of Herod's palace or the governor's residence in Jerusalem. Paul, when he was in prison in Caesarea, was "kept in Herod's Praetorium" (Acts 23:35).

Philippians 1:13 refers to the "imperial guard" (NRSV) or to the "whole palace guard" (NKJV). Commentators are not sure whether this reference is limited to the guard or whether it may refer to the imperial high court as well.

The Praetorium guard was discontinued in the third century A.D. because they had become too powerful, threatening the authority of the Roman emperor himself.

PRAISE—an act of worship or acknowledgment by which the virtues or deeds of another are recognized and extolled. The praise of one human being toward another, although often beneficial (1 Cor. 11:2; 1 Peter 2:14), can be a snare (Prov. 27:21; Matt. 6:1–5). But the praise of God toward people is the highest commendation they can receive. Such an act of praise reflects a true servant's heart (Matt. 25:21; 1 Cor. 4:5; Eph. 1:3–14).

Our praise toward God is the means by which we express our joy to the Lord. We are to praise God both for who He is and for what He does (Ps. 150:2). Praising God for who He is is called adoration; praising Him for what He does is known as thanksgiving. Praise of God may be in song or prayer, individually or collectively, spontaneous or prearranged, originating from the emotions or from the will.

The godly person will echo David's words, "My praise shall be continually of You . . . And [I] will praise You yet more and more" (Ps. 71:6, 14).

PRAYER—communication with God. Because God is personal, all people can offer prayers. However, sinners who have not trusted Jesus Christ for their salvation remain alienated from God. So while unbelievers may pray, they do not have the basis for a rewarding fellowship with God. They have not met the conditions laid down in the Bible for effectiveness in prayer.

Christians recognize their dependence upon their Creator. They have every reason to express gratitude for God's blessings. But they have far more reason to respond to God than this. They respond to the love of God for them. God's love is revealed through the incarnation and life of Christ, His atoning provision at the cross, His resurrection, and His continuing presence through the Holy Spirit.

Prayer cannot be replaced by devout good works in a needy world. Important as service to others is, at times we must turn away from it to God, who is distinct from all things and over all things. Neither should prayer be thought of as a mystical experience in which people lose their identity in the infinite reality. Effective prayer must be a scripturally informed response of persons saved by grace to the living God who can hear and answer on the basis of Christ's payment of the penalty that sinners deserved. As such, prayer involves several important aspects.

Faith. The most meaningful prayer comes from a heart that places its trust in the God who has acted and spoken in the Jesus of history and the teachings of the Bible. God speaks to us through the Bible, and we in turn speak to Him in trustful, believing prayer. Assured by Scripture that God is personal, living, active, all-knowing, all-wise, and all-powerful, we know that God can hear and help us. A confident prayer life is built on the cornerstone of Christ's work and words as shown by the prophets and apostles in the Bible.

Worship. In worship we recognize what is of highest worth—not ourselves, others, or our work, but God. Only the highest divine being deserves our highest respect. Guided by Scripture, we set our values in accord with God's will and perfect standards. Before God, angels hide their faces and cry, "Holy, holy, holy is the LORD of hosts" (Is. 6:3).

Confession. Awareness of God's holiness leads to consciousness of our own sinfulness. Like the prophet Isaiah, we exclaim, "Woe is me, for I am undone! Because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for my eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts" (Is. 6:5). By sinning we hurt ourselves and those closest to us; but first of all, and worst of all, sin is against God (Ps. 51:4). We need not confess our sins to another being. But we should confess them directly to God, who promises to forgive us of all our unrighteousness (1 John 1:9).

Adoration. God is love, and He has demonstrated His love in the gift of His Son. The greatest desire of God is that we love Him with our whole being (Matt. 22:37). Our love should be expressed, as His has been expressed, in both deeds and words. People sometimes find it difficult to say to others and to God, “I love you.” But when love for God fills our lives, we will express our love in prayer to the one who is ultimately responsible for all that we are.

Praise. The natural outgrowth of faith, worship, confession, and adoration is praise. We speak well of one whom we highly esteem and love. The one whom we respect and love above all others naturally receives our highest commendation. We praise Him for His “mighty acts . . . according to His excellent greatness” (Ps. 150:2), and for His “righteous judgments” (Ps. 119:164). For God Himself, for His works, and for His words, His people give sincere praise.

Thanksgiving. Are we unthankful because we think we have not received what we deserve? But if we got what we “deserved,” we would be condemned because of our guilt. As sinners, we are not people of God by nature. We have no claim upon His mercy or grace. Nevertheless, He has forgiven our sins, granted us acceptance as His people, and given us His righteous standing and a new heart and life.

Ingratitude marks the ungodly, “because, although they knew God, they did not glorify Him as God, nor were thankful” (Rom. 1:21). Believers, in contrast, live thankfully. God has been at work on our behalf in countless ways. So in everything, even for the discipline that is unpleasant, we give thanks (Col. 3:17; 1 Thess. 5:18).

Dedicated Action. Christ’s example does not require us to withdraw from society, but to render service to the needy in a spirit of prayer. He wept over Jerusalem in compassionate prayer, and then He went into the city to give His life a ransom for many. Authentic prayer will be the source of courage and productivity, as it was for the prophets and apostles.

Request. Prayer is not only response to God’s grace as brought to us in the life and work of Jesus and the teaching of Scripture; it is also request for our needs and the needs of others.

For good reasons God’s holy and wise purpose does not permit Him to grant every petition just as it is asked. Several hindrances to answered prayer are: iniquity in the heart (Ps. 66:18), refusal to hear God’s law

(Prov. 28:9), an estranged heart (Is. 29:13), sinful separation from God (Is. 59:2), waywardness (Jer. 14:10–12), offering unworthy sacrifices (Mal. 1:7–9), praying to be seen by people (Matt. 6:5–6), pride in fasting and tithing (Luke 18:11–14), lack of faith (Heb. 11:6), and doubting or double-mindedness (James 4:3).

More positively, God has promised to answer our requests when we start helping the hungry and afflicted (Is. 58:9–10), when we believe that we will receive what we ask (Mark 11:22–24), when we forgive others (Mark 11:25–26), when we ask in Christ's name (John 14:13–14), and when we abide in Christ and His words (John 15:7), pray in the Spirit (Eph. 6:8), obey the Lord's commandments (1 John 3:22), and ask according to His will (1 John 5:14–15). Until we have properly responded to God and His Word, He cannot entrust us with His powerful resources.

Prayer is request to a personal Lord who answers as He knows best. We should not think that we will always have success in obtaining the things for which we ask. In His wisdom, God hears and answers in the way that is best.

Effectiveness. Prayer has power over everything. God can intelligently act in any part of the universe or human history. Although some people think prayer is a waste of time, the Bible declares that "the effective, fervent prayer of a righteous man avails much" (James 5:16).

Prayer meets inner needs. One who prays will receive freedom from fear (Ps. 118:5–6), strength of soul (Ps. 138:3), guidance and satisfaction (Is. 58:9–11), wisdom and understanding (Dan. 9:20–27), deliverance from harm (Joel 2:32), reward (Matt. 6:6), good gifts (Luke 11:13), fullness of joy (John 16:23–24), peace (Phil. 4:6–8), and freedom from anxiety (1 Pet. 5:7).

Is prayer effective only in the inner lives of those who pray? No, prayer can make a difference in the lives of others. Biblical writers believed prayer for others could result in greater wisdom and power (Eph. 1:18–19); inward strength, knowledge of Christ's love, filling with God's fullness (Eph. 3:16–19); discernment, approval of what is excellent, filling with the fruits of righteousness (Phil. 1:9–11); knowledge of God's will, spiritual understanding, a life pleasing to God, fruitfulness, endurance, patience, joy (Col. 1:9–12); a quiet, peaceable life (1 Tim. 2:1–2); love for one another and all people, holiness before God (1 Thess. 3:10–13); comfort and establishment in every good word and work (2 Thess. 2:16–17); love for God, steadfastness in Christ (2 Thess. 3:5); the sharing of one's faith, promotion of the knowledge of all that is good (Philem. 6); and equipment for every good work that is pleasing to God (Heb. 13:20–21).

Some people who think prayer can affect others question the ability of God to change His usual patterns in the physical world. But some prayers in the Bible changed nature and physical bodies.

Jabez prayed for enlarged borders and protection from harm (1 Chr. 4:10). Other people in the Bible prayed for deliverance from trouble (Ps. 34:15–22), deliverance from both poverty and riches (Prov. 30:7–9), deliverance from the belly of a great fish (Jon. 2:7–10), daily bread (Matt. 6:11), preservation and sanctification of spirit, soul, and body (1 Thess. 5:23), the healing of the sick (James 5:14–15), and the ending of the rain and its beginning again (James 5:17–18).

When the disciples prayed, the building around them shook (Acts 4:31) and an earthquake opened the doors of their prison (Acts 16:25–26). Our prayers do make a difference in how God acts in the world!

PRAYER OF AZARIAH, PRAYER OF MANASSEH (see APOCRYPHA).

PRAYER, LORD'S (see LORD'S PRAYER).

PREACHER, PREACHING—one who proclaims the gospel; proclamation of God's saving work.

The Old Testament mentions several prominent preachers. Noah, who warned of the impending flood and proclaimed God's ark of safety, was called a "preacher of righteousness" (2 Pet. 2:5). Solomon described himself as a preacher who taught "words of truth" (Eccl. 1:2; 12:9–10). At God's direction, Jonah made a preaching mission to Nineveh, declaring God's judgment and mercy (Jon. 3:2). Like Jonah, all the prophets of the Old Testament were regarded as preachers.

In the New Testament, the gospel advanced on the wings of preaching. The zeal generated by PENTECOST, coupled with growing persecution of the young church, led the disciples to preach everywhere in the known world (Mark 16:20). With a sense of urgency, Jesus and the apostles preached in homes, by the seaside, on the temple steps, and in the synagogues. John the Baptist called for repentance in preparation for the Messiah’s appearance (Matt. 3:11–12).

At His home synagogue in Nazareth, Jesus connected His ministry with that of the prophets (Is. 61:1) and identified His mission as one of proclaiming deliverance: “The Lord has anointed Me to preach good tidings to the poor . . . to preach deliverance to the captives” (Luke 4:18–19).

Jesus was under a divine order to spread the gospel by means of preaching (Luke 4:43–44). Philip, the preaching deacon, “preached the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ” (Acts 8:12). In sending out the Twelve, Jesus commanded them, “As you go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand” (Matt. 10:7). The apostle Paul proudly declared his credentials as one whom God “appointed a preacher and an apostle” (1 Tim. 2:7).

Virtually all New Testament preaching carries an evangelistic thrust. Paul declared, “It pleased God through the foolishness of the message preached to save those who believe” (1 Cor. 1:21). The redemptive mission of Christ as fulfillment of prophecy—particularly His death and resurrection—was the main theme of apostolic preaching (1 Cor. 1:2–3; 15:14). The preacher’s personal testimony to Christ’s power in his own life was also featured in many sermons (Acts 4:20). As a consequence of such evangelistic passion, thousands were saved when Peter preached at Pentecost (Acts 2:41).

The distinction between preaching and teaching made in the church today is not evident in the New Testament. Both Jesus and Paul regarded themselves as preacher-teachers and were so regarded by others. Luke reports that Jesus “taught the people and preached the gospel” (Luke 20:1). Paul testified that he was appointed “a preacher, an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles” (2 Tim. 1:11). The best New Testament preaching, while aimed at motivating sinners to receive Christ, had a strong element of teaching. Paul charged young Timothy to “preach the word! . . . Convince, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and teaching . . .” (2 Tim. 4:2).

The Great Commission has a broad application that calls all believers to participate in preaching the gospel (Mark 16:15). The piercing question, “How shall they hear without a preacher?” (Rom. 10:14), challenges all Christians to share with others the good news of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

PRECIOUS STONES (see JEWELS AND PRECIOUS STONES).

PREDESTINATION—the biblical teaching that declares the sovereignty of God over human beings in such a way that the freedom of the human will is also preserved.

Two major concepts are involved in the biblical meaning of predestination. First, God, who is all-powerful in the universe, has foreknown and predestined the course of human history and the lives of individuals. If He were not in complete control of human events, He would not be sovereign and, thus, would not be God.

Second, God's predestination of human events does not eliminate human choice. A thorough understanding of how God can maintain His sovereignty and still allow human freedom seems to be reserved for His infinite mind alone. Great minds have struggled with this problem for centuries.

Two views of predestination are prominent today. One view, known as Calvinism, holds that God offers irresistible grace to those whom he elects to save. The other view, known as Arminianism, insists that God's grace is the source of redemption but that it can be resisted by people through free choice. In Calvinism, God chooses the believer; in Arminianism, the believer chooses God.

Although the term predestination is not used in the Bible, the apostle Paul uses a form of the same word in Ephesians 1:11: "We have obtained an inheritance, being predestined according to the purpose of Him who works all things according to the counsel of His will."

All Christians agree that creation is moving within the purpose of God. This purpose is to bring the world into complete conformity to His will (Rom. 8:28). From the very beginning of time, God predestined to save humankind by sending His Son to accomplish salvation. Thus, "God would have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:4).

The doctrine of predestination does not mean that God is unjust, deciding that some people will be saved and that others will be lost. Mankind, because of Adam's FALL in the Garden of Eden, sinned by free choice.

Thus, no person deserves salvation. But God’s grace is universal. His salvation is for “everyone who believes” (Rom. 1:16).

Paul also declared that he was a debtor under obligation to take the message of the gospel to other people (Rom. 1:14) so they might hear and obey. Paul clearly meant that no one is saved apart from the will of God and no one is lost apart from the will of God. But the will of God functions within an order that God Himself has established.

Predestination is a profound and mysterious biblical teaching. It focuses our thinking on human freedom and responsibility as well as divine sovereignty.

PREFECT (see GOVERNOR).

PREPARATION DAY—the day immediately before the Sabbath and other Jewish festivals. Preparation Day always fell on Friday among the Jewish people, because all religious festivals began on the Sabbath, or Saturday (Matt. 27:62; John 19:14, 31).

With a week of holidays ahead, the Preparation Day for the PASSOVER was especially busy. The details for preparing the Passover supper had to be completed by afternoon. Preparations included baking the unleavened bread, gathering festive garments to wear for the occasion, and taking a ceremonial bath.

But above all, the paschal lamb had to be slain. Slaughtering began an hour or more earlier than for the usual daily evening sacrifice. At the temple, the priests slaughtered thousands of lambs brought in by the people. Their blood was poured at the foot of the altar. Then the lambs were roasted whole in preparation for the Passover meal in each home that evening.

PRESBYTER—a leader in one of the Jewish communities (especially a member of the SANHEDRIN), or of the early Christian churches. The Greek word presbyteros, translated “elders” in most English translations of the Bible, basically means an older person and is sometimes used with that sense (1 Tim. 5:1–2). The word may also refer to the lay members of the Jewish Sanhedrin (Mark 14:43, 53) or to the spiritual leaders in each Christian church (Acts 14:23). A number of presbyters together constitute a “presbytery” (1 Tim. 4:14), a council or assembly of Christian elders. Regardless of what the chief governing body in a local church is called today, the members of that body should have the same high qualifications (Titus 1:5–9) and perform the same essential duties of teaching (1 Tim. 5:17; Titus 1:9), serving (James 5:14), decision-making (Acts 15:2, 6, 22–29), and shepherding (Acts 20:17, 28) as the New Testament presbyters. Also see ELDERS.

PRESBYTERY—an assembly of elders in one of the early Christian churches (1 Tim. 4:14). The same Greek noun translated "presbytery" (presbyterion) is also used twice in the New Testament to refer to the Jewish Sanhedrin (Luke 22:5, 66). Also see PRESBYTER.

PRESIDENT (see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES).

PRESS (see PRESS; WINE).

PRIEST, HIGH—a chief priest of the Hebrew people, especially of the ancient Levitical priesthood traditionally traced from AARON. "Head priest," "the great one from his brothers," and "ruler of the house of God" are literal translations of references to this officer (Lev. 21:10; 2 Chr. 19:11). The high priest was the supreme religious head of his people. Aaron held this position above his sons that was to continue in the firstborn of successive holders of the office. The high priest was distinguished from his fellow priests by the clothes he wore, the duties he performed, and the particular requirements placed upon him.

Character and Conduct. Although the office of high priest was hereditary, its holder had to be without physical defect as well as holy in conduct (Lev. 21:6–8). He must not show grief for the dead—even his father or mother—by removing his headdress or letting his hair go unkempt. He must not tear his clothes in grief or go near a dead body. Leaving his duties unperformed because of a death would "profane the sanctuary" (Lev. 21:12). He could marry only a "virgin of his own people" (Lev. 21:14), or a believer in God. She could not be a widow, a divorced woman, or an impure woman. He must not, by a bad marriage, spoil his own holiness or endanger the holiness of his son who would succeed him.

Consecration. A high priest was consecrated (installed in office) by an elaborate seven-day service at the tabernacle or temple (Exodus 29; Leviticus 8). He was cleansed by bathing, then dressed in the garments and symbols he must wear in his ministry and anointed with special oil. Sacrifices of sin offering, burnt offering, and consecration offering were made for him; and he was anointed again with oil and blood of the sacrifice. Thus "sanctified" to serve as a priest and "consecrated" to offer sacrifice (Ex. 28:41; 29:9), he became "the saint [holy one] of the LORD" (Ps. 106:16).

Clothing. The high priest's special garments represented his function as mediator between God and people. Over the trousers, coat, girdle, and cap, worn by all priests, the high priest wore an EPHOD, a two-piece apron reaching to his hips, made of royal colors (blue, purple, and scarlet), and sewed with gold thread. By two onyx stones bearing the names of the twelve tribes of Israel fastened to the shoulders of the ephod, he brought the whole nation before God in all his priestly acts (Ex. 28:5–14).

The "breastplate of judgment," made of the same material, was attached to the front of the ephod (Ex. 28:15–30). On its front were twelve precious stones engraved with the names of the twelve tribes. In its pocket, directly over his heart, were the URIM AND THUMMIM (Ex. 28:30), the medium through which God could communicate His will. By this the high priest was Israel's advocate before God and God's spokesman to them.

Over the breastplate he wore the blue "robe of the ephod" (Ex. 28:31). Around its hem were pomegranates, pointing to the divine law as sweet and delicious spiritual food (Deut. 8:3), and bells that would ring as he went "into the holy place before the LORD . . . that he may not die" (Ex. 28:35).

On his forehead the high priest wore "the holy crown" of gold engraved with the words, "Holiness to the LORD" (Ex. 28:36–37). Thus he was represented as bearing "the iniquity of the holy things" (Ex. 28:38) which Israel offered to God and crowned mediator, making atonement for the nation so God might accept their gifts and show them favor.

All these garments stood for the "glory and beauty" (Ex. 28:40) God placed upon his priests, sanctifying them to minister in His name (Ex. 28:3).

Particular Services. The high priest held a leadership position in seeing that all responsibilities of the priests were carried out, "Amariah the chief priest is over you in all matters of the LORD” (2 Chr. 19:11). He could participate in all priestly ministry, but certain functions were given only to him. As he alone wore the Urim and the Thummim, Israel came to him to learn the will of God (Deut. 33:8). For this reason Joshua was to “ask counsel” of Eleazar regarding the movements of the army in the conquest of the land of Canaan (Num. 27:21). Even John recognized prophecy as a gift belonging to the high priest (John 11:49–52). The high priest had to offer a sin offering for his own sins and the sin of the whole congregation (Lev. 4:3–21). At the death of the high priest freedom was granted to all who were confined to the CITIES OF REFUGE for accidentally causing the death of another person (Num. 35:28).

The most important responsibility of the high priest was to conduct the service on the DAY OF ATONEMENT, the tenth day of the seventh month each year. On this day he alone entered the Holy Place behind the veil before God. Having made sacrifice for himself and for the people, he brought the blood into the Holy of Holies and sprinkled it on the mercy seat, God’s “throne.” This he did to make atonement for himself and the people for all their sins committed during the year just ended (Ex. 30:10; Leviticus 16). It is with this particular service that the ministry of Jesus as high priest is compared (Heb. 9:1–28).

Historical Development. ELEAZAR succeeded Aaron (Num. 20:28) and served at Shiloh where the tabernacle was erected after the conquest of Canaan by the Israelites (Josh. 18:1). He was followed by his son PHINEHAS (Num. 25:11–12; Josh. 24:33). ELI, a descendant of Ithamar, the younger brother of Eleazar, held the office by the Lord’s choice (1 Sam. 2:28) at the end of the period of the judges, the change being unexplained.

Because of the sins of Eli’s sons, SAMUEL appears to have succeeded Eli (1 Sam. 2:12–36; 7:5, 9–10, 17), although he is not called a high priest, and did not regularly function at the tabernacle. Eli’s sons cared for the tabernacle at Nob after the destruction of Shiloh (1 Samuel 21–22). ABIATHAR, a descendant of Eli, escaped Saul’s slaughter of the priests at Nob (1 Sam. 22:19–21) taking the ephod with him and serving with David (1 Sam. 23:9; 30:7).

David appointed ZADOK, a descendant of Eleazar, to serve at the tabernacle at Gibeon (1 Chr. 16:39) at the same time that he took the ark to Jerusalem. Zadok and Abimelech, the son of Abiathar, are listed as priests among David's officers. Zadok crowned Solomon (1 Kin. 1:39) and was appointed by him as high priest in the place of Abiathar when the latter was banished for supporting Adonijah's claim to the throne (1 Kin. 2:26–27, 35). This made him the first high priest to minister in the temple. His line of high priests served there until the Babylonian captivity (1 Chr. 6:3–15).

Mutual support and encouragement characterized the Davidic kings and high priests. David organized twenty-four divisions of priests to serve by turn at the temple, supervised by both Zadok and Abiathar (1 Chr. 24:6, 31). Solomon confirmed the appointments of his father (2 Chr. 8:14–15). Jehoshaphat organized priests, Levites, and chief men of Israel under the leadership of the high priest to go through the land teaching the people the law, encouraging them to faithful, reverent service (2 Chronicles 19). The high priest Jehoiada protected Joash from Athaliah's murder of the king's sons and organized his coronation and the destruction of Athaliah (2 Chr. 22:10—23:21).

Kings Hezekiah and Josiah assisted the high priests in reform and restoration of the temple and its worship after its desecration by Ahaz and Manasseh (2 Chronicles 30–31, 34–35). Ezekiel announced that the sons of Zadok would be priests in the new temple (Ezek. 44:15–16) because they had not rejected God when Israel went astray (1 Kin. 12:31; 2 Chr. 11:13–15; 13:9).

After the captivity, JOSHUA the high priest, of the sons of Zadok (Hag. 1:1), and ZERUBBABEL of the house of David—the governor appointed by Cyrus—led the rebuilding of the temple. As no further governors were appointed, the high priest became sole political and religious leader. Great care was taken by Ezra and Nehemiah to restore the Mosaic order in purity, but interference by unprincipled civil rulers took a sad toll on the purity and influence of the high priest. The Syrian, ANTIOCHUS IV, removed the Zadokite high priest and replaced him with a man from a nonpriestly family.

In the revolt that followed and the consequent independence, the Hasmoneans, a family of ordinary priests, took political control. In 152 B.C. one of them, Jonathan, assumed the high priest's office, and later the royal title. When Herod came to power under Rome in 37 B.C. he arbitrarily deposed and appointed high priests as he pleased, and did away with anointing them.

During this period until the destruction of the temple in Jerusalem in A.D. 70, five prominent families of high priests held power. ANNAS was the leader of one of these. His son-in-law CAIAPHAS, five of his sons, and a grandson held the office. Although Annas had been replaced by Caiaphas before the time of Jesus' ministry, his influence continued (Luke 3:2; John 18:13, 24).

New Testament Times. In the New Testament as in the Old, the "high priest was appointed to offer both gifts and sacrifices" (Heb. 8:3), and was referred to as "God's high priest" and "ruler of [the] people" (Acts 23:4–5). He was the president of the SANHEDRIN, the highest ruling body of the Jews (Matt. 26:3). But the office ceased to be hereditary, and it was subject to the whim of the political power, Rome. The high priests' religious influence was weakened by the rising power of the scribes and Pharisees, and they became known for their materialism and thirst for power.

Above all, the high priest and his fellow priests were threatened by the presence of Jesus in His Father's house, for they had changed it from a "house of prayer for all nations" (Mark 11:17) to a place of merchandise, a "den of thieves" (Matt. 21:12–13; Luke 19:45–48; John 2:14–16).

The "chief priests" were the holders of the priestly offices of higher rank in the temple and, along with the high priest, were leaders in the Sanhedrin. That they had administrative authority in the temple is indicated by their agreement with Judas concerning his betrayal of Jesus (Matt. 27:6; Luke 22:4–5). The chief priests led the opposition to Jesus at His trial (Mark 15:3, 11; Luke 23:23). They were equally prominent in their opposition to the apostles and the Christian church (Acts 4:6; 9:14, 21). Along with all the council, the high priest and chief priests condemned Jesus to death (Matt. 26:65–66), mocked Him as He was dying (v. 41), and sealed His grave (Matthew 26–27).

Jesus as High Priest. The New Testament's most important references to the high priest are found in the Epistle to the Hebrews, referring to Jesus. Qualifying Himself to be a merciful and faithful high priest by becoming a man of the seed of Abraham (Heb. 2:11–18), He is sympathetic with our weaknesses (Heb. 4:15). He did not assume the office of high priest for glory (Heb. 5:5), but was called by God to the office, and not of the order of Aaron, but of Melchizedek (Heb. 5:10). He had no need, as the sons of Aaron, to offer sacrifices for His own sins, and then for the sins of the people; for He had no sin (Heb. 7:27–28). They offered animal blood that could never take sin away (Heb. 10:1–4). But he offered His own blood (Heb. 9:12) once for all (Heb. 9:26; 10:10, 12). They were many priests, because they died (Heb. 7:23); His is an eternal priesthood because He lives forever (Heb. 7:25). Their priesthood was performed in an earthly model of the real sanctuary (Heb. 8:5); He performs His ministry in heaven itself (Heb. 4:14; 9:11), seated at the right hand of God (Heb. 10:12). By His one offering He has achieved His goal—the sanctification of His people. We may therefore come directly into the presence of God through the "one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5).

PRIESTS—official ministers or worship leaders in the nation of Israel who represented the people before God and conducted various rituals to atone for their sins. This function was carried out by the father of a family (Job 1:5) or the head of a tribe in the days before Moses and his brother Aaron. But with the appointment of Aaron by God as the first High Priest, the priesthood was formally established. Aaron's descendants were established as the priestly line in Israel. They carried out their important duties from generation to generation as a special class devoted to God's service.

The Bible often speaks of priests and Levites as if these two offices were practically the same (1 Chr. 23:2; 24:6, 31). They were closely related, in that both priests and Levites sprang from a common ancestor. They traced their lineage back to Levi, head of one of the original twelve tribes of Israel. But these two offices were different, in that priests (a specific branch of Levites descended through Aaron) and Levites (all descendants of Levi in general) performed different duties.

Priests officiated at worship by offering various offerings and by leading the people to confess their sins. The Levites were assistants to the priests. They took care of the tabernacle and the temple and performed other menial tasks, such as providing music, serving as doorkeepers, and preparing sacrifices for offering by the priests.

In their function of offering sacrifices at the altar, the priests acted as mediators between people and God, offering sacrifices so that sin might be forgiven (Lev. 4:20, 26, 31). Each sacrifice was a demonstration that the penalty of sin is death (Ezek. 18:4, 20), and that there can be no forgiveness of sin without the shedding of BLOOD (Heb. 9:22).

The first priest mentioned in the Bible was Melchizedek, king of Jerusalem and “the priest of God Most High” (Gen. 14:18). Abraham paid tithes to Melchizedek and was blessed (Gen. 14:18–20). Next mentioned was Jethro, Moses’ father-in-law and the priest of Midian, who joined Moses, Aaron, and the elders of Israel for a sacrificial meal (Ex. 18:1, 12).

But true priesthood began many years before their time in the Garden of Eden.

Abel offered a sacrifice that pleased God (Gen. 4:4). Still later Noah (8:20), Abraham (12:7–8), Isaac (26:25), Jacob (35:1–7), and Job (Job 1:5) all acted as priests, offering sacrifices to God. In fact, each family in Israel killed the PASSOVER lamb, offering it as sacrifice to God (Ex. 12:6; 34:25). But when God established Israel as His Chosen People at Mount Sinai after their deliverance from slavery in Egypt (Ex. 6:7; 19:5–6), He established a formal priesthood through Aaron and his descendants. As descendants of Levi, they were to represent the nation of Israel in service to God at the tabernacle and altar (Num. 8:9–18).

The priesthood was given to Aaron and his descendants “as a gift for service” (Num. 18:7) and as “an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations” (Ex. 40:15). Since the office was hereditary, the descendants of Aaron were obligated to accept the responsibility and meet the qualifications. No person with a physical defect or disqualifying disease could serve as a priest (Lev. 21:16–21). Bodily perfection was to symbolize the priest’s spiritual wholeness and holiness of heart. Even the priest's home life and relationship with his wife were to show his consecration to God (Lev. 21:7).

Aaron and his sons were consecrated for the priesthood in an elaborate seven-day ceremony (Ex. 29:30, 35, 37). Their bodies were bathed to symbolize the purifying of their souls from sin. Then they were clothed in their priestly garments and anointed with oil as sacrifices were made on their behalf. The entire dedication procedure was as an outward sign of their SANCTIFICATION in God's service (Ex. 29:9).

The clothes the priests wore also carried great significance. Their white linen garments symbolized holiness and glory. They also wore a coat woven in one piece without a seam to indicate their spiritual integrity, wholeness, and righteousness. The four-cornered cloth of the coat signified that the priest belonged to the kingdom of God. The cap, resembling an opening flower, symbolized the fresh, vigorous life of the one who wore it. The girdle, or sash, a belt that encircled the priest's body, was the priestly sign of service. It showed that the wearer was an office-bearer and administrator in the kingdom of God (Exodus 39).

The priests had several responsibilities as mediators between the sinful people and their holy God. They lit the incense and cleaned, trimmed, and lit the lamps. Ministering before God at the altar, the priests had to make sure the offerings of the people were correct and that the sacrificial rituals were carried out correctly. Otherwise, the people could not be cleansed of their sin until the priests had made atonement for the error (Num. 18:1).

As "messengers of the LORD" (Mal. 2:7), the priests also were to teach the Law to the people of Israel. In addition to instructing in the Law year by year, they were also responsible for reading the Law at the Feast of Tabernacles every seventh year (Deut. 31:9–13).

By their example, the priests also taught the people how to "distinguish between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean" (Lev. 10:10). Living in cities scattered throughout the nation of Israel, the priests were in a good position to fulfill this function (Joshua 21). In addition, the priests served as judges, acting as a kind of supreme court for Israel (Deut. 17:8–13). In special cases, the high priests declared the will or judgment of God through the URIM AND THUMMIM, the medium through which God sometimes communicated His divine will (Ex. 28:30; Lev. 8:8; Deut. 33:8).

When the land of Canaan was conquered and divided among the tribes of Israel, forty-eight cities with their surrounding land were allotted to the priests and Levites as residences for their families and pasturelands for their flocks (Josh. 21:41). Across the centuries, the priests increased to a numerous body. King David divided them into twenty-four groups (1 Chr. 24:1–19). Except for the great festivals when all the divisions served at the tabernacle at the same time, each division officiated for a week at a time on a rotating basis.

As long as the king and the people of Israel remained loyal to God and His Law, the priests were highly respected and exercised a healthy influence in the land. But the priests eventually sank to immorality, departed from God, and worshiped idols, along with the rest of the people (Ezek. 22:26).

In the final book of the Old Testament, the prophet Malachi pointed to the neglect, corruption, and false teaching of the priests. According to Malachi, this was the reason why the people began to neglect the offerings and festivals of the temple. They lost their respect for the persons who held the office, and finally the office itself (Mal. 1:6; 2:7–9). Thus, the Old Testament closes with the announcement that God in His judgment "will suddenly come to His temple . . . like a refiner's fire" to purify the priests (Mal. 3:1–3). God was determined to preserve His human priests until the appearance of His true Priest, Jesus Christ.

By the New Testament period, the position of priests in the nation of Israel had changed considerably. The temple functions were taken over by the "chief priests." Rank-and-file priests were also overshadowed by the SCRIBES and PHARISEES, two special groups that arose to present the Law and interpret its meaning for the people. But in spite of the diminished role of priests, Jesus respected the office and called upon the priests to witness His healing of lepers in keeping with the Law of Moses (Mark 1:44; Luke 17:12–14). But the priests themselves were some of the most zealous opponents of Jesus. As leaders of the SANHEDRIN, the Jewish high court, they bore much of the responsibility for His crucifixion. They also led the opposition to the apostles and the early church.

The office of priest was fulfilled in Jesus Christ. The Son of God became a man (Heb. 2:9–14) so that He might offer Himself as a sacrifice “once to bear the sins of many” (Heb. 9:28). Hence, there is no longer a need for priests to offer a sacrifice to atone for man’s sin. A permanent sacrifice has been made by Jesus Christ through His death on the cross.

Priesthood and holiness were meant to be inseparable. But the sinful nature of the priests allowed corruption to enter the God-ordained office. However, the priesthood to which the nation of Israel was called at Mount Sinai continues today in the church. “You are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, His own special people, that you may proclaim the praises of Him who called you out of darkness into His marvelous light” (1 Pet. 2:9).

PRINCE—a leader or ruler. The common elements in the many different words translated as prince in the Bible are leadership and authority. The word often denotes royalty, but it just as frequently describes leadership in general. Both Abraham (Gen. 23:6) and Solomon (1 Kin. 11:34) were called princes. Tribal leaders of early Israel were often designated as princes. Jesus, the coming Messiah, was referred to by the prophet Isaiah as the Prince of Peace (Is. 9:6).

In the New Testament, Jesus is called the Prince (Author, NIV) of life (Acts 3:15) and a Prince (Author, NRSV) and Savior (Acts 5:31).

PRINCESS—a woman of royal rank. The NKJV uses this word to refer to Solomon’s wives (1 Kin. 11:3) and to Jerusalem as the “princess” among the provinces (Lam. 1:1; queen, NIV; queen among provinces, REB), which was made a slave and carried into Babylonian captivity. The Hebrew word translated “princess” is also translated as “lady” and “queen.” Thus, Esther 1:18 refers to the noble ladies of Persia, and Judges 5:29 refers to the ladies of Sisera’s mother.

PRINCIPALITY—a powerful ruler, or the rule of someone in authority. The word (often found in the plural) may refer to human rulers (Titus 3:1, KJV), demonic spirits (Rom. 8:38; Eph. 6:12; Col. 2:15), angels and demons in general (Eph. 3:10; Col. 1:16), or (especially when used in the singular) any type of rule other than God Himself (Eph. 1:21; Col. 2:10). While Christians must often wrestle against evil principalities (Eph. 6:12), they can be victorious because Christ defeated all wicked spirits (Col. 2:15).

PRINTING—the process of applying ink to a prepared surface, then transferring that ink to paper or some other material, making an exact copy of the original. The Old Testament speaks of one ancient printing form, which consisted of coloring a person's body with various shapes. The art of tattooing was practiced by ancient people in pagan worship (Lev. 19:28; Job 13:27; Ezek. 9:3–6). Another ancient form of printing was the branding of characters on the flesh. Many scholars believe Cain was marked with such a brand (Gen. 4:15).

Early manuscripts of the Bible were not printed or reproduced by mechanical means. Each copy was an original that had to be done by hand. Scribes produced copies of the Bible text under close supervision to ensure quality and a minimum of errors. The modern process of printing did not begin until the middle of the fifteenth century.

The love of God for His people is everlasting. His constant remembrance of the believer is compared to a permanent, tattooed inscription on a person's hands (Is. 49:16).

PRISCA [PRIS kuh]—a form of PRISCILLA.

PRISCILLA [prih SIL uh]—the wife of AQUILA and a zealous advocate of the Christian cause (Rom. 16:3; 1 Cor. 16:19). Her name is also given as PRISCA (2 Tim. 4:19). Aquila and Priscilla left their home in Rome for Corinth when the emperor Claudius commanded all Jews to depart from the city (Acts 18:2). Thus, they were fellow passengers of the apostle Paul from Corinth to Ephesus (Acts 18:18), where they met Apollos and instructed him further in the Christian faith (Acts 18:26).

PRISON—a place of forcible restraint or confinement. Most prisons of the ancient world were crude and dehumanizing. Persons guilty of violating the laws of a community were detained in several different types of prisons.

Most common were natural pits or cavelike dungeons, where prisoners survived on the bread and water "of affliction" (1 Kin. 22:27). Prison pits provided places in which to conceal the slain (Jer. 41:7). The prophet Jeremiah may have been cast into a dungeon because this was a convenient way to kill him without bloodshed (Jer. 38:6).

Another example of a natural pit used for holding prisoners is the one on the plain of Dothan, into which Joseph's jealous brothers threw him (Gen. 37:20–28).

Less common were manmade structures or prison houses like the one in which Samson was held at Gaza (Judg. 16:21, 25) and the one provided by King Ahab at Samaria (1 Kin. 22:26–27).

Old Testament kings were usually held in prison by conquering armies (Jer. 52:11). Hebrew prophets who were at odds with the policies of their kings were often thrown into prison, notably Hanani the seer under King Asa of Judah (2 Chr. 16:10).

During the wandering of the Hebrews in the desert after their escape from Egypt, some of the people were held "in custody" or "under guard" (Lev. 24:12; Num. 15:34). Since imprisonment was not specifically called for by Mosaic Law, it was not practiced in Israel until the time of the monarchy, when the prison is mentioned as a special part of the king's house (Neh. 3:25; Jer. 32:2; 37:21).

The New Testament uses four related terms that are translated as "prison." The cell of John the Baptist was a "place of bonds" (Matt. 11:2). The apostles were arrested in Jerusalem and placed in the common prison ("place of custody or public watching") by the Sadducees (Acts 5:18). The apostle Peter was imprisoned in a "house" (Acts 12:7). Paul and Silas were thrown into a prison ("place of guarding") at Philippi (Acts 16:23–40).

Jewish prisons mentioned in the New Testament were used to detain persons awaiting trial or execution (Acts 5:21, 23; Acts 4:3; 5:18). Imprisonment as a form of punishment was also known (Acts 22:19).

Roman prisons are more fully described in the New Testament than the prisons of other nations. Roman authorities used imprisonment to control behavior (Matt. 18:30) and as punishment for minor lawbreakers (Matt. 11:2; Acts 16:26). Prisons were usually part of the government headquarters: examples are the PRAETORIUM at Jerusalem (Mark 15:16) and the Caesarea prison in Herod's judgment hall, where Paul was detained for two years (Acts 23:35; 24:27).

Paul had so many prison experiences that he called himself a "prisoner of the Lord" (Eph. 4:1). When Paul and Silas were cast into the Roman prison at Philippi, the jailer fastened their feet in stocks (Acts 16:23–24). Under Roman military rule, the soldier who guarded the prison was responsible for the safety of the prisoners. After Paul and Silas were miraculously released by God (Acts 16:25–34), their jailer would have killed himself if Paul had not prevented it. Paul was bound with chains at the Jerusalem Tower of Antonia (Acts 21:33, 37), from which his declaration of Roman citizenship freed him. He was also imprisoned in Rome, but under lenient surveillance in his own dwelling.

In a symbolic way, the Book of Revelation refers to the imprisonment of persecuted Christians (Rev. 2:10) and to the binding of Satan in a bottomless pit for a thousand years (Rev. 20:3, 7).

Christ showed concern for prisoners (Matt. 25:36). He made several references to prisons (Matt. 5:25; 18:30; 25:36). His parable of the unmerciful debtor reveals the custom of casting men and their families into prison for their debts (Matt. 18:24–35). Jesus himself became Jerusalem’s most notable prisoner, detained at first by the Sanhedrin and later at the Praetorium.

PRISON, GATE OF THE (see GATES OF JERUSALEM AND THE TEMPLE).

PROCHORUS [PRAHK uh ruhs] (leader of the dance)—one of the seven men chosen by the early church to provide for the Greek-speaking widows and the poor among the Christians (Acts 6:5).

PROCLAMATION (see PREACHER, PREACHING).

PROCONSUL [pro CON suhl]—a title given to the governor of a senatorial province in the Roman Empire. Under the Roman system of government, the Empire was divided into senatorial provinces and imperial provinces. Imperial provinces were administered by representatives of the emperor. The senatorial provinces were presided over by proconsuls appointed by the Roman senate. Two proconsuls are mentioned in the New Testament: Sergius Paulus (Acts 13:7–8, 12), and Gallio (Acts 18:12; deputy, KJV; governor, REB). Also see OCCUPATIONS AND TRADES.

PROCURATOR (see GOVERNOR).

PRODIGAL—reckless and extravagant. When Jesus told the parable of the two lost sons, He devoted the first part of the story to the younger son who “wasted his possessions with prodigal living” (Luke 15:13; dissolute living, NRSV, loose living, NASB; riotous living, KJV; wild living, NIV). The lesson of the prodigal son is that when one abandons the Father’s house to venture into the far country, he ends up with an empty purse, an empty stomach, and a starving soul.

PROFANE—to treat anything holy with disrespect. In the Bible, many things could be profaned by disregarding God’s laws about their correct use: the Sabbath (Is. 56:6), the temple (Acts 24:6), the covenant (Mal. 2:10), and God’s name (Ex. 19:22). The term “profane” is often applied to foolish or irresponsible people. Esau, who sold his birthright, was a “profane” person (Heb. 12:16).

PROGNOSTICATOR—one who predicts future events by using present signs and omens as a guide. According to the prophet Isaiah, one of the superstitions of the Chaldeans, or Babylonians, was that of the monthly prognosticators (Is. 47:13), who foretold the future by observing the phases of the moon. This pagan superstition probably was related to the practice of constructing horoscopes based on signs of the planets in the heavens. Isaiah made it plain that this type of fortune-telling would not save the Babylonian nation from God’s certain judgment.

PROMISE—a solemn pledge to perform or grant a specified thing. God did not have to promise anything to sinful people. But the fact that almost all biblical promises are those made by God to human beings indicates that His nature is characterized chiefly by grace and faithfulness.

Grace prompted God to promise a new land to the Israelites (Ex. 12:25). His faithfulness urged Him to fulfill that promise, in spite of the nation’s disobedience. And as Paul pointed out (Gal. 3:15–29), God’s faithfulness and grace are particularly evident in His promise to Abraham. This promise was eventually fulfilled in the work of Christ. Christians should trust completely that God’s promise of eternal life (Heb. 9:15) is secure.

PROPHECY—predictions about the future and the end-time; special messages from God, often uttered through human spokesmen, which indicate the divine will for mankind on earth and in heaven.

The focus of all prophetic truth is Jesus Christ (Heb. 1:2; Luke 24:25–27), who was destined to be the greatest prophet (Deut. 18:15–18). He declared God's truth in this age (John 3:31–33) and the age to come (Is. 2:2–4). As the embodiment of truth (John 1:1), Christ fully radiated the brilliance of God, which the earlier prophets reflected only partially.

Earlier prophets anticipated Jesus Christ by reflecting His person and message in their own life and ministry (Ex. 34:29–35; 1 Kin. 19:10; 2 Chr. 24:20–21). Each contributed a portion of the truth, sharing in the Spirit that would be completely expressed in Jesus Christ (John 6:68).

Prophecy was technically the task of the prophet. But all truth or revelation is prophetic, pointing to some future person, event, or thing. The full panorama of God's will takes many forms; it may be expressed through people, events, and objects. Historical events such as the PASSOVER anticipated Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 5:7), as did various objects in the tabernacle, including MANNA (John 6:31–35) and the inner VEIL (Matt. 27:51; Heb. 10:20).

Prophecy may also be expressed in many different forms through the prophet himself, whether by his mouth or some bodily action. The prophets received God's messages from the voice of an angel (Gen. 22:15–19), the voice of God, a dream (Daniel 2), or a vision (Ezek. 40:2ff.). The prophetic speech might range from the somber reading of a father's last will (Genesis 49) to an exultant anthem to be sung in the temple (Ps. 96:1, 13).

Sometimes a prophet acted out his message symbolically. Isaiah's nakedness (Isaiah 20) foretold the exile of the Egyptians and the Cushites. Hosea's marriage symbolized God's patience with an unfaithful wife, the nation of Israel. Ahijah divided his garment to foretell the division of the monarchy (1 Kin. 11:30–31). Even the names of some of the prophets are symbolic, matching their message. Hosea means "salvation"; Nahum, "comfort"; Zephaniah, "the Lord hides"; and Zechariah, "the Lord remembers."

Prophecy declared God's word for all time, so the time of fulfillment of a prophecy is rarely indicated in the Bible. Exceptions to this rule include the timetable assigned to Daniel's seventy weeks' prophecy

(Dan. 9:24–27), the prophecy of Peter's denial (Matt. 26:34), and predictions of someone's death (Jer. 28:16–17). The common problem of knowing the time for the fulfillment of a prophecy is acknowledged by Peter (2 Pet. 1:11). This problem is due to several factors. First, some prophecies appear together, as if they would be fulfilled simultaneously. For example, Isaiah 61:1–2a has already been fulfilled, according to Luke 4:18–19; but Isaiah 61:2b, which adjoins it, awaits fulfillment. The same is true of Zechariah 9:9–10. The prophets saw the mountain peaks of prophetic events but not the valleys of time in between.

Another factor that complicates the problem is the ambiguity of tenses in the Hebrew language, which distinguishes type of action but usually not time of action. The prophets focused on the reality of their prophecies and not the time of their fulfillment. In their minds their prophecies were already accomplished, primarily because they knew God was in charge of history.

Finally, since the prophets' messages had eternal force, it is often difficult to tell whether they applied their messages to their day or the future. For example, Isaiah 7:14 promised a son who could be a contemporary of Isaiah (perhaps the prophet's son in 8:3 or the son of Hezekiah the king in Isaiah 36–39), or Jesus (Matt. 1:23), or both.

Several questions are raised when there appear to be more than one possible fulfillment for a prophecy. Does a primary fulfillment in one passage rule out a secondary application to another passage? Not necessarily. Did the author intend both fulfillments with one as an analogy or illustration for the other? Did the author intend a dual fulfillment for two different audiences at two different times? Joel 2:30, speaking about signs on the earth, was applied by the apostle Peter to the tongues of fire at PENTECOST (Acts 2:3–4, 18–19). But Jesus seemed to apply this prophecy to His SECOND COMING (Mark 13:24; Luke 11:25).

In the same way, the destruction of Gog and Magog in Ezekiel 38 and 39 may be fulfilled in Revelation 20:8 after the MILLENNIUM. But similarities of this prophecy to earlier invasions from the north before the millennium seem to allow for its multiple fulfillment. The earlier parallels with Ezekiel 38 and 39 are two invasions from the north in Daniel 11:40, 44 and a third in Revelation 19:17–18, where the birds consume the carcasses as in Ezekiel 39:17–20.

The problem of understanding when a prophecy is fulfilled is compounded if the modern reader has a theological bias about who is to fulfill a prophecy. For example, premillennialists believe that a 1,000-year reign by Christ (Rev. 20:2–7) will exalt the nation of Israel and the Jewish people in the future (Rom. 11:24–26). But amillennialists believe the promises to Israel in the Old Testament have been taken from Israel and transferred to the church (Gal. 6:16). Such a disagreement does not deny that Abraham's descendants will inherit Palestine from the River of Egypt to the Euphrates River (Gen. 15:18). But the premillennialist looks for a future revival of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37:11–28), while the amillennialist claims the promise of the land was fulfilled in the past in the days of Joshua (Josh. 21:43–44) or Solomon (2 Chr. 9:26).

Prophecy presents volumes about the future kingdom of God, particularly information about the MESSIAH and His chosen people, Israel. Much prophecy also foretells the destiny of the nations and their relationship to the kingdom of God. The New Testament identifies Jesus as the King (John 1:49) who spends much of His ministry describing His kingdom and its establishment (Matthew 13; 24–25). The battleground is the world; and the arch-foe of Christ is Satan, whose intrigue in Eden gave him control of the nations (Matt. 4:9). Most prophecy is concerned with undoing Satan's work; it elaborates upon the initial promise of Genesis 3:15, which announced that Christ, the seed of the woman (Gal. 4:4), would crush the great Serpent, the Devil (Rom. 16:20; Rev. 20:2). All prophecy testifies about Jesus (Rev. 19:10).

Over 300 prophecies in the Bible speak of Jesus Christ. Specific details given by these prophecies include His tribe (Gen. 49:10), His birthplace (Mic. 5:2), dates of His birth and death (Dan. 9:25–26), His forerunner John the Baptist (Mal. 3:1; 4:5; Matt. 11:10), His career and ministry (Is. 52:13—53:12), His crucifixion (Ps. 22:1–18), His resurrection (Ps. 16:8–11; Acts 2:25–28), His ascension (Psalm 2; Acts 13:33), and His exaltation as a priest-king (Psalm 110; Acts 2:34). The kingly magnificence of His second coming is also graphically portrayed. Psalms 2, 45, and 110 picture His conquest and dominion over the nations. His kingdom is characterized in Psalm 72. Events leading up to and including the first and second advents of Christ are described in the two burdens of the prophet Zechariah (Zechariah 9–11, 12–14).

Premillennialists point to many Bible passages to support their belief in the national resurrection of Israel. Many prophecies graphically portray Israel's history (Leviticus 26; Deuteronomy 27–28; Amos 6–9). Her bounty as a nation is prophesied in Deuteronomy 30 and Isaiah 35. Just as the nation had received a double punishment (Jer. 16:18), so it would receive a double blessing (Is. 61:7). Temple worship would be restored (Ezekiel 40–48); Israel would be the center of world government (Zechariah 1–6); and the Davidic line would be set up as a permanent dynasty (2 Sam. 7:12–16; Luke 1:32–33).

Much controversy surrounds the roles of the church and Israel in the final days preceding Christ's Second Coming, known as the "day of Jacob's trouble" (Jer. 30:7), "the great tribulation" (Matt. 24:21), or "the great day of His wrath" (Rev. 6:17). This will be a period of seven years (9:27) with the most intense trial in the last three-and-one-half years of this time (Dan. 12:11–12; Rev. 12:6; 13:5).

As Christ's Second Coming approaches, many difficult prophecies about the Tribulation will be understood more clearly (Jer. 30:24; Dan. 11:32–35; 12:3, 9–10). Premillennialists point to the establishment of the state of Israel in 1948 as just one of these signs of Christ's approaching return.

While premillennialists agree upon the restoration of Israel in the earthly reign of Jesus Christ, many are divided over the relation of Israel to the church, particularly just before Christ's appearance at the end of the Tribulation. Covenant theologians see Israel and the church as one people who go through the Tribulation together. Some dispensational theologians believe Israel and the church are always separated in the Bible. As a result, they believe the church will not join Israel in its days of tribulation, but will be transported to heaven before it begins, at the beginning of the seven years.

Among premillennialists, theories exist about the time of the church's departure to meet the Lord in the air (1 Thess. 4:13–17): the pre-tribulational rapture, the mid-tribulational rapture, and the post-tribulational rapture. These three theories place the rapture at the time of John's ascension to heaven (Rev. 4:1), at the time when the two prophets ascend to heaven (Rev. 11:11–12), and at the end of the series of seven bowls (Rev. 16:15), respectively.

• This inscription at the city of Tyre contains the names of nine Greek generals who accompanied Alexander the Great when he destroyed the city about 333 B.C. More than 200 years before, Ezekiel had prophesied Tyre’s destruction (Ezek. 26:1–5).

PROPHET—a person who spoke for God and who communicated God’s message courageously to God’s Chosen People—the nation of Israel.

The Prophet’s Call. Prophets received their call or appointment directly from God. Some prophets, like Jeremiah or John the Baptist, were called before birth (Jer. 1:5; Luke 1:13–16), but their privilege was not a birthright. Their authority came from God alone whose message they bore (Ex. 7:1). Who can match the eloquence and brilliance of Isaiah, the depth of emotion and melancholy of Jeremiah, or the dramatic and dogged spirit of Ezekiel? A prophetic call was a call to liberty and freedom to be oneself (John 8:31–32). It enabled the prophet to be unaffected by human bias and criticism. The call of the prophets required that they not be intimidated or threatened by their audience (Jer. 1:7–8; Ezek. 2:6).

Prophets sometimes became quite dramatic and acted out their messages. Isaiah went naked and barefoot for three years (Is. 20:2–3). Ezekiel lay on his left side for 390 days and on his right side for 40 more (Ezek. 4:1–8). Zechariah broke two staffs (Zech. 11:7–14). Making themselves a spectacle, prophets not only aroused curiosity but also invited the scorn of their peers (Jer. 11:21).

Except for God's call, prophets had no special qualifications. They appeared from all walks of life. They included sheepbreeders and farmers like Amos (Amos 7:14) and Elisha (1 Kin. 19:19) but also princes like Abraham (Gen. 23:6) and priests like Ezekiel (Ezek. 1:3). Even women and children became prophets (1 Sam. 3:19–20; 2 Kin. 22:14). In rare circumstances, God used the hesitant or unruly to bear his message. Balaam prophesied (Num. 22:6—24:24) the Lord's message but was actually an enemy of God (2 Pet. 2:15–16; Rev. 2:14). Saul certainly was not in fellowship with God when he prophesied (1 Sam. 10:23–24).

Some prophets were called for a lifetime. But sometimes prophets spoke briefly and no more (Num. 11:25–26). In either case, a prophet spoke with the authority of the Holy Spirit (Num. 11:29; 24:4). One trait characterized them all: a faithful proclamation of God's word and not their own (Jer. 23:16; Ezek. 13:2). Jesus' reference to Himself as a prophet in John 12:49–50 rests upon this standard of faithfully repeating God's word to people.

Many scholars deny that prophecy includes the prediction of future events. But fulfillment was, in fact, the test of a prophet's genuineness (Deut. 18:20–22). Whether prophets' words were fulfilled within their lifetime or centuries later, they were filfilled to the letter (1 Kin. 13:3; 2 Kin. 23:15–16). But regardless of the time of fulfillment, the prophets' messages applied to their generation as well as to ours.

The main role of the prophet was to bear God's word for the purpose of teaching, reproving, correcting, and training in righteousness (2 Tim. 3:16). Whether warning of impending danger or disclosing God's will to the people, they were similar in function to the modern preacher in the church. Prophets were referred to as messengers of the Lord (Is. 44:26; Hag. 1:13), servants of God (Amos 3:7), shepherds (Zech. 11:4, 7; Jer. 17:16), and watchmen (Is. 62:6).

Important Prophets of the Bible. God has used people in every age to fill the prophetic role of proclaiming His word. Noah was a "preacher of righteousness" to his generation (2 Pet. 2:5). Abraham was considered a prophet (Gen. 20:7). So was his son Isaac (Ps. 105:9, 14–15) and his grandson Jacob (Genesis 49). Moses was eulogized as the greatest prophet of all, due to his major accomplishments as well as his many writings (Deut. 34:10–12). His successor, Joshua, received the commission to continue Moses' work and so assumed the prophetic role also (Deut. 34:9; Josh. 1:1, 5).

Following the entrance of the Hebrew people into the land of Canaan, many prophets appeared throughout Israel's history to aid and protect the nation. The prophets mentioned in the Bible probably represent only a small portion of the total number of prophets. Most of the prophets remain obscure because they never wrote down their message. This indicates their task required face-to-face confrontations and a spoken rather than a written message. Many times the prophet stood alone and spoke to an unsympathetic or even antagonistic audience. Great courage and independence of spirit was required. Prophets were not people of routine tasks like priests; they charted new paths for the people.

It is appropriate that the first prophet mentioned after Joshua is unnamed (Judg. 6:7–10). Prophets were to exalt God's word and not seek their own glory. This unnamed prophet appeared in the time of Gideon when Israel was falling back into idolatry. Rather than speak of the future, he called Israel to remember the Lord who delivered them from Egypt.

The next prophet was Samuel, whose vocation was apparent to all from his youth (1 Sam. 3:19–20). Samuel's life was spent serving diligently as a judge (1 Sam. 7:15), leading the army to victory (1 Sam. 7:9–10), and establishing the religious and civil life of the nation (1 Sam. 10:25). He both appointed (1 Sam. 12:1) and recalled the first king of Israel (1 Sam. 15:26–28). Samuel provided a model for other prophets to follow (1 Sam. 19:20).

Four prophets appeared in the time of David, who himself demonstrated the traits of a prophet (2 Sam. 23:2–3). They were Gad (1 Sam. 22:5), Nathan (2 Sam. 12:1–15), Zadok (2 Sam. 15:27), and Heman (1 Chr. 25:5).

Four prophets also appeared during the time of Jeroboam: Ahijah, a man of God, an old prophet, and Iddo the seer. Iddo apparently had visions, but he confined his revelations to writing (2 Chr. 9:29; 12:15; 13:22). A man of God confronted Jeroboam for his intrusion into the priestly office at the altar and prophesied the coming of Josiah by name (1 Kin. 13:1–9); but his rival, the old prophet in Bethel, deceived him and brought about his death (1 Kin. 13:11–32). Even though the old prophet lied, God revealed the death sentence of the man of God to him (1 Kin. 13:21–23).

The prophet Shemaiah appeared to Solomon's successor, Rehoboam, to stop him from attempting to reunite the country by force (2 Chr. 11:2–4). The prophet Iddo recorded the acts of Abijah, the successor of Rehoboam (2 Chr. 13:22), who himself raised a prophetic voice, although he was a wicked king (1 Kin. 15:1–5). The king correctly anticipated victory over Jeroboam's troops (2 Chr. 13:12).

The next king, Asa, was promised God's blessing by the prophet Azariah when the king was returning from his victory over Zerah, the Ethiopian (2 Chr. 15:1–7). But Asa did not remain faithful, seeking help instead from the Syrians when Baasha threatened him. The prophet Hanani was imprisoned for rebuking Asa for not relying upon the Lord alone as in the earlier victory (2 Chr. 16:7–10). The son of Hanani, Jehu, played a more prominent role than his father. He condemned the wickedness of Baasha and declared his dynasty would end (1 Kin. 16:1–4).

Jehoshaphat was promised victory over the alliance of Moab, Ammon, and Edom by the prophet Jahaziel (2 Chr. 20:14–17). God alone would supply the victory. After these two lessons about alliances, Jehoshaphat allied with Ahab's son, Ahaziah, in order to build a southern fleet. The prophet Eliezer proclaimed that the alliance caused God to destroy the fleet, "Then the ships were wrecked, so that they were not able to go to Tarshish" (2 Chr. 20:37).

Five prophets appeared during the reign of Ahab. These included the famous prophets ELIJAH and ELISHA. Elijah was the most unforgettable and dynamic of the Hebrew prophets. He dominated the scene under Ahab in 1 Kings 17–19 and 21, but his ministry continued until the reigns of Ahaziah (2 Kings 1) and Jehoram (2 Kings 2). His impact and eminence was compared with Moses, as their joint appearance with Christ in His transfiguration suggests (Matt. 17:1–13). Elijah's spectacular success over the prophets of Baal in the bringing of rain defies comparison. His volatile and dynamic temperament stands in stark contrast to Elisha, who realized that his quieter personality needed some help if he were to follow a prophet like Elijah. So he asked for a double portion of Elijah's spirit (2 Kin. 2:9).

Although he was called by Elijah in the reign of Ahab, Elisha really only succeeded him in the reign of Jehoram (2 Kings 2–9). Doubly blessed, Elisha performed fourteen miracles to Elijah's seven.

Three prophets confronted kings in person. A man of God told Amaziah of Judah to dismiss his Israelite mercenaries (2 Chr. 25:7–10), while another prophet rebuked Amaziah for saving the idols after defeating Edom (2 Chr. 25:15). Finally, Oded secured the release of Judahites captured by Israelites during the time of Ahaz (2 Chr. 28:9–15).

These prophets in Joshua, Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, and 1 and 2 Kings provided those books with the name of Former Prophets in the Hebrew canon. They actually overlapped in time with the "latter" or "writing" prophets, known commonly as the major and minor prophets. The former prophets dealt more with daily problems and the current state of affairs, while the latter prophets wrote down for later generations what would happen in the future.

A few passages in the writing prophets give biographical material about the prophets themselves. While most of the writing prophets simply present God's message, there are biographical sections in Isaiah (6–7; 20; 37–39), Jeremiah (1; 13; 19–21; 24–29; 32; 34–35), Daniel (1–6), Hosea (1, 3), Amos (7:10–17), Jonah (1–4), and Zechariah (7–8). Other parts of Zechariah and Ezekiel tell about the prophets' receiving visions, but these passages have lesser value in portraying the prophets' personalities.

The writing prophets do not appear to be in chronological order, but they provide clues that can be matched with historical facts that suggest their proper sequence. Obadiah spoke against Edom; his ministry may have occurred in the time of Jehoram (853–41 B.C.) when Edom revolted against Judah (2 Kin. 8:20–22). Joel can be dated to the time when Judah's enemies were Tyre and Sidon along with Philistia (Joel 3:4), Egypt, and Edom (Joel 3:19). Since no king is mentioned, the book has been dated to the time of Joash's childhood when Jehoida the high priest was his guardian. The dates of Joash's reign are 835–796 B.C. The dates of Obadiah's and Joel's prophecies, however, are by no means certain.

In the following century five prophets can be dated to the reigns of various kings. Hosea probably prophesied from about 760 B.C. to past 715 B.C. or from the time of Uzziah and Jeroboam II to Hezekiah. Amos prophesied when Uzziah and Jeroboam II ruled. Their reigns overlapped for at least 15 years (767–753 B.C.) and even longer if Uzziah's co-regency with his father Amaziah is counted.

Jonah was a contemporary of Jeroboam II (793–753 B.C.), but his trip to Nineveh may have been before or after Jeroboam's reign. Since Assyrian power and spirit fell during the weak reign of Ashurdan III (773–755 B.C.), especially after the plague of 765 B.C. and the total eclipse of the sun in 763 B.C., Jonah may have undertaken his successful mission shortly afterwards around 760 B.C.

Isaiah 1:1 says that Isaiah's ministry spanned four kings from the death of Uzziah (Is. 6:1) through Hezekiah, about whom Isaiah wrote a history (2 Chr. 32:32). That Isaiah ministered after Hezekiah's death in 686 B.C. is evident from his recording of Sennacherib's death in 681 B.C.

Micah began his ministry under Jotham and finished it some time in the reign of Hezekiah (Mic. 1:1). This would suggest his ministry began after Uzziah's death in 739 B.C. Since Micah does not mention Sennacherib's invasion of 701 B.C., he must have concluded his ministry before that date.

Nahum, Zephaniah, Habakkuk, and Jeremiah appeared in the next century. Nahum probably wrote his prophecy in the latter half of the seventh century, since Nahum 3:8–10 refers to the destruction of Thebes in 663 B.C. Nahum probably prophesied the 612 B.C. destruction of Nineveh before the ministry of Zephaniah, who also predicted the fall of Nineveh and dates himself to the time of Josiah (640–609 B.C.), according to Zephaniah 1:1. Zephaniah's attack on idolatry suggests he wrote his work before the reforms of Josiah in 621 B.C.

Habakkuk's prophecy should be dated after 612 B.C., since he made no reference to Assyria. The prophet was concerned about the coming invasion of Babylon, probably the first one of 605 B.C. in the reign of Jehoiakim (609–598 B.C.). Thus his work can be dated about 609–606 B.C.

Jeremiah began his work in 627 B.C. (Jer. 1:2–3) and continued ministering in Egypt after the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

Daniel and Ezekiel ministered during the captivity in Babylon. Daniel was taken to Babylon in 605 B.C. at the time of Nebuchadnezzar's first invasion of Judah. Ezekiel was taken there in 597 B.C. at the time of the second invasion. Daniel ministered until the third year of Cyrus of 536 B.C. (Dan. 10:1). Ezekiel was called to begin his ministry in 592 B.C. (Ezek. 1:2) and continued until at least 571 B.C. (Ezek. 29:17).

Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi ministered after the captivity when the people returned to Judah. Haggai dates his prophecy to 520 B.C. (Hag. 1:1, 15; 2:1, 20). Zechariah began his prophecy two months after Haggai (Zech. 1:1) with his first message. His other revelations came later in the year, two years later (Zech 1:7; 7:1), and at a later period of time (Zech. 9:1).

Malachi was probably written after 432 B.C. when Nehemiah wrote his book because Nehemiah 13 faces the same problems mentioned by Malachi: priestly carelessness (Mal. 1:6—2:9), intermarriage with foreigners (Mal. 2:10—3:6), and lack of tithing (3:7—4:3).

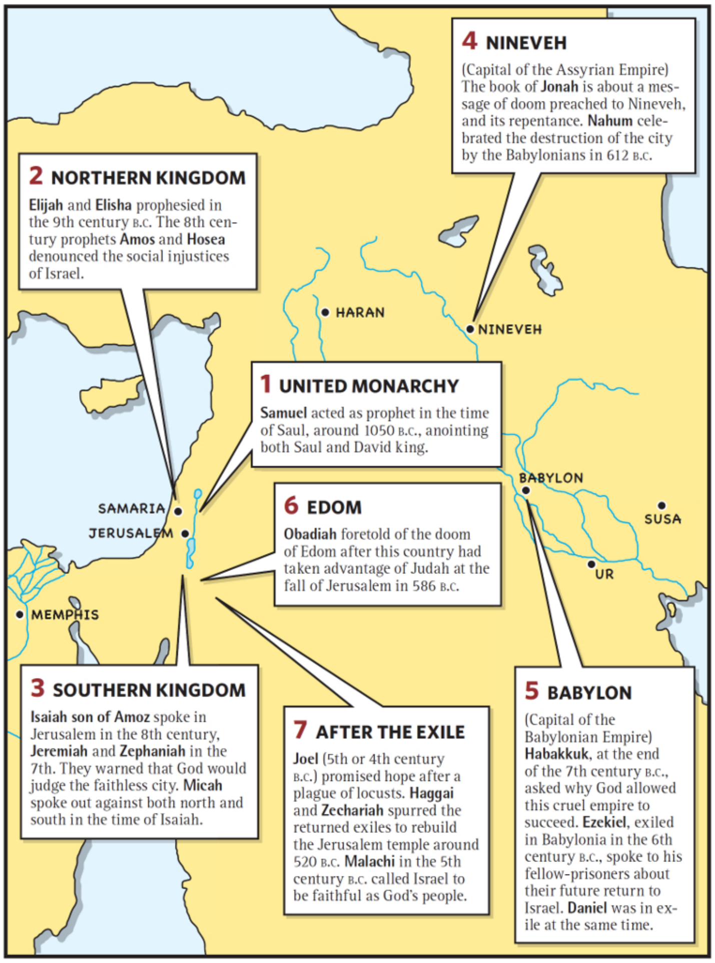
THE PROPHETS SPEAK



1 UNITED MONARCHY
Samuel acted as prophet in the time of Saul, around 1050 B.C., anointing both Saul and David king.

2 NORTHERN KINGDOM
Elijah and Elisha prophesied in the 9th century B.C. The 8th century prophets Amos and Hosea denounced the social injustices of Israel.

3 SOUTHERN KINGDOM
Isaiah son of Amoz spoke in Jerusalem in the 8th century, Jeremiah and Zephaniah in the 7th. They warned that God would judge the faithless city. Micah spoke out against both north and south in the time of Isaiah.

4 NINEVEH
(Capital of the Assyrian Empire) The book of Jonah is about a message of doom preached to Nineveh, and its repentance. Nahum celebrated the destruction of the city by the Babylonians in 612 B.C.

5 BABYLON
(Capital of the Babylonian Empire) Habakkuk, at the end of the 7th century B.C., asked why God allowed this cruel empire to succeed. Ezekiel, exiled in Babylonia in the 6th century B.C., spoke to his fellow-prisoners about their future return to Israel. Daniel was in exile at the same time.

6 EDOM
Obadiah foretold of the doom of Edom after this country had taken advantage of Judah at the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

7 AFTER THE EXILE
Joel (5th or 4th century B.C.) promised hope after a plague of locusts. Haggai and Zechariah spurred the returned exiles to rebuild the Jerusalem temple around 520 B.C. Malachi in the 5th century B.C. called Israel to be faithful as God's people.

PROPHET, FALSE (see FALSE PROPHET).

PROPHETESS—a female prophet. Miriam, the sister of Moses, led the women with her chorus in response to the great song of her brother (Ex. 15:20). Deborah joined with Barak in song and exulted in their great victory (Judg. 5:2–31). Hannah's prayer was remarkable, foretelling how David's dynasty would be founded (1 Sam. 2:1–10).

Luke reported the prophetic activity of the elderly Anna in the temple (2:36–38), as well as that of Elizabeth and Mary (1:41–45, 46–55). First Corinthians 11:5 assumes the female role in prophesying, seen again in Philip’s four virgin daughters (Acts 21:9). Other prophetesses such as Noadiah gained a bad reputation (Neh. 6:14).

PROPITIATION [pro pish ih AY shun]—the atoning death of Jesus on the cross, through which He paid the penalty demanded by God because of people’s sin, thus setting them free from sin and death. The word means “appeasement.” Thus, propitiation expresses the idea that Jesus died on the cross to pay the price for sin that a holy God demanded.

Although Jesus was free of sin, He took all our sins upon Himself and redeemed us from the penalty of death that our sins demanded. As the writer of 1 John declared, “He Himself is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only but also for the whole world” (1 John 2:2; atoning sacrifice, NIV, NRSV).

PROSELYTE [PROS eh lite]—a convert from one religious belief or party to another. In the New Testament (Matt. 23:15; Acts 2:10), the term is used in a specific sense to designate Gentile converts who had committed themselves to the teachings of the Jewish faith or who were attracted to the teachings of Judaism. A full-fledged proselyte, or convert, to Judaism underwent circumcision and worshiped in the Jewish temple or synagogue. They also observed all rituals and regulations concerning the sabbath, clean and unclean foods, and all other matters of Jewish custom.

By the New Testament period, when communities of Jews were widely scattered over the Gentile world, many Gentiles came into contact with Judaism. They found worship of one God and its wholesome ethical teaching attractive. Tired of pagan gods and heathen immorality, the Gentiles came to the synagogues to learn of the one true God and of His call to holiness, justice, and mercy. Many of them accepted the religion, morality, and lifestyle of the Jews. Not all Gentile sympathizers went so far as to be circumcised, but by New Testament times proselytes were nevertheless a significant part of Judaism, as the references to them in the Book of Acts (2:10; 6:5; 13:43) make clear.

These “halfway proselytes” proved to be a rich mission field for the early church. Unable to accept the binding requirements of the Jewish law, many of them turned to Christianity. This new faith welcomed all people, regardless of their background, culture, or religious tradition.

This universal appeal of Christianity was largely the result of the pioneering work of the apostle Paul. He taught that Gentiles did not have to become Jews—or submit to circumcision—in order to embrace the truths of the gospel. With this barrier removed, many proselytes who were attracted to Judaism turned instead to the Christian faith.

PROSTITUTION—the act or practice of promiscuous sexual relations, especially for money. Several words are used for a woman who engages in illicit sexual activity for pay, including HARLOT, whore, and prostitute.

One type of harlot was the temple prostitute, who performed sexual acts at a heathen temple (Hos. 4:12–14). Both male and female cult prostitutes presided at these temples. Whenever Judah was ruled by a righteous king, this king sought to remove the temple prostitutes from the land (2 Kin. 23:4–14).

Jerusalem is pictured as playing the part of a harlot. But instead of being paid for her services, she paid others (Ezek. 16:15–59)! Those who worshiped idols were also referred to in a symbolic way as harlots (Judg. 2:17).

PROVERB—a short, pithy statement about human nature and life. In the Bible Solomon is singled out for his use of proverbs (1 Kin. 4:32). His wisdom was shown by his ability to make clear, true commentaries upon the nature of things. The Hebrew word most frequently translated as proverb means literally “a similitude,” or loosely, “a representation.” So when God declared that Israel would be “a proverb . . . among all peoples” (1 Kin. 9:7), He implied that the name Israel would come to symbolize disobedience. Proverbs are designed to make God’s truth accessible to all people, so they might direct their lives in accordance with His will.

PROVERBS, BOOK OF—one of the “wisdom books” of the Old Testament, containing instructions on many of the practical matters of daily life. The PROVERBS was a familiar literary form in all ancient cultures; it was a very suitable device for collecting and summarizing the wisdom of the centuries. But the Book of Proverbs has one important difference: it points the believer to God with instructions on how to live a holy, upright life.

Structure of the Book. The Book of Proverbs has the longest title of any Old Testament book, covering the first six verses of chapter one. The author introduces himself as a teacher, one of the wise men of Israel, who has written this book as a manual of instruction on the ways of wisdom. His declaration, “The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge” (1:7), summarizes the theme of Proverbs, a point he emphasizes again and again throughout the book.

In its 31 chapters, Proverbs discusses many practical matters to help believers live in harmony with God as well as their neighbors. Subjects covered in this wise and realistic book include how to choose the right kind of friends, the perils of adultery, the value of hard work, dealing justly with others in business, the dangers of strong drink, treating the poor with compassion, the values of strong family ties, the folly of pride and anger, and the characteristics of genuine friendship.

Scholars agree that Proverbs is a compilation of material from several different sources. This gives the book a unique internal structure. But the book itself tells us which parts were written by one author and which came from another’s hand.

Authorship and Date. The name of Solomon as author is associated with the Book of Proverbs from the very beginning. Verse 1 of chapter 1 states: “The proverbs of Solomon the son of David.” We also know that Solomon was noted throughout the ancient world for his superior wisdom (1 Kin. 4:29–34). Additional evidence of his authorship is found within the book itself, where Solomon is identified as author of the section from 10:1—22:16 as well as writer of chapters 25–29.

But what about those portions of Proverbs that clearly are attributed to other writers, such as “the wise” (22:17), Agur (30:1), and King Lemuel (31:1)? Although Solomon wrote a major portion of Proverbs, he did not write the entire book. Many scholars believe he wrote the basic core of Proverbs but that some writings were later added from other sources.

Another interesting fact about this book and its writing is that the second collection of proverbs attributed to Solomon (chaps. 25–29) was not added to the book until more than 200 years after his death. The heading over this material reads: “These also are proverbs of Solomon which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied” (25:1). Perhaps these writings of Solomon were not discovered and inserted into the book until Hezekiah’s time.

Because of the strong evidence that the Book of Proverbs is, indeed, a compilation, some scholars dismiss the idea that Solomon wrote any of the material. But evidence for his authorship of some sections is too strong to be dismissed that lightly. In its original version the book must have been written by Solomon some time during his reign from 970 B.C. to 931 B.C. Then, about 720 B.C. or later the non-Solomonic sections were added to the book.

Historical Setting. The Book of Proverbs is the classical example of the type of writing in the Old Testament known as WISDOM LITERATURE. Other books so categorized are Job, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon. These books are called wisdom writings because they were written by a distinctive group of people in Israel’s history who grappled with some of the eternal questions of life. This type of writing flourished especially during Solomon’s time, and he was known as the wisest of the wise throughout the ancient world. “Thus Solomon’s wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the men of the East and all the wisdom of Egypt. For he was wiser than all men . . . and his fame was in all the surrounding nations” (1 Kin. 4:30–31).

Theological Contribution. Israel’s distinctive contribution to the thinking of the wise men of all nations and times is that true wisdom is centered in respect and reverence for God. This is the great underlying theme of the Book of Proverbs.

Special Considerations. In reading the Book of Proverbs, we need to make sure we do not turn these wise sayings into literal promises. Proverbs are statements of the way things generally turn out in God’s world. For example, it is generally true that those who keep God’s commandments will enjoy “length of days and long life” (3:2). But this should not be interpreted as an ironclad guarantee. It is important to keep God’s laws, no matter how long or short our earthly life may be.

PROVIDENCE—the continuous activity of God in His creation by which He preserves and governs. The doctrine of providence affirms God’s absolute lordship over His creation and confirms the dependence of all creation on the Creator. It is the denial of the idea that the universe is governed by chance or fate.

Through His providence God controls the universe (Ps. 103:19); the physical world (Matt. 5:45); the affairs of nations (Ps. 66:7); human birth and destiny (Gal. 1:15); human successes and failures (Luke 1:52); and the protection of His people (Ps. 4:8).

God preserves all things through His providence (1 Sam. 2:9; Acts 17:28). Without His continual care and activity the world would not exist. God also preserves His people through His providence (Gen. 28:15; Luke 21:18; 1 Cor. 10:13; 1 Pet. 3:12).

Divine government is the continued activity of God by which He directs all things to the ends He has chosen in His eternal plan. God is King of the universe who has given Christ all power and authority to reign (Matt. 28:18–20; Acts 2:36; Eph. 1:20–23). He governs insignificant things (Matt. 10:29–31), apparent accidents (Prov. 16:33), and good (Phil. 2:13) and evil deeds (Acts 14:16).

God acts in accordance with the laws and principles that He has established in the world. The laws of nature are nothing more than our description of how we perceive God at work in the world. They neither have inherent power nor work by themselves.

We are not free to choose and act independently of God's will and plan; we choose and act in accordance with them. In His sovereignty, God controls people's choices and actions (Gen. 45:5; Deut. 8:18; Prov. 21:1). God's actions, however, do not violate the reality of human choice or negate our responsibility as moral beings.

God permits sinful acts to occur, but He does not cause us to sin (Gen. 45:5; Rom. 9:22). He often overrules evil for good (Gen. 50:20; Acts 3:13).

PROVINCE—an administrative district of the government or civil ruling authority. The word "province" is used only four times of rulers in Israel. All these occurrences come from the time of King Ahab (1 Kin. 20:14–15, 17, 19).

The other occurrences of the word refer to the administrative districts during the Babylonian and Persian rules (Ezra 2:1; 4:15; Neh. 1:3). The term occurs only twice in the New Testament (Acts 23:34; 25:1).

During New Testament times the government of the Roman Empire had senatorial and imperial provinces. The senatorial provinces were the ten older provinces of the Empire, which had no need of a large military force. These were ruled by proconsuls like Sergius Paulus of Cyprus (Acts 13:7) and Gallio of Achaia (Acts 18:12). The proconsuls were appointed for one year.

The imperial provinces of the Roman Empire consisted of frontier provinces that had large installations of Roman troops under the leadership of the emperor. Each of these provinces was governed by a military leader.

The second kind of imperial provinces were those consisting of special cases such as rugged terrain (Alpine districts) or difficult people to rule (Judea and Egypt). They were ruled by an imperial governor appointed by the emperor.

These regional governors were responsible to both the emperor and the local provincial military ruler. In Jesus' day Judea was governed by the governor or prefect Pilate (Luke 3:1). In Paul’s day it was ruled by the governors Felix (Acts 23:24) and Festus (Acts 25:1).

PROVOCATION—anything that provokes, excites, incites, or stimulates. The reference in Hebrews 3:8, 15 to “the provocation” (KJV), or “the rebellion” (NKJV, NIV), is a quotation from Psalm 95:7–11. This passage points back to a specific time when the Israelites provoked God by their rebellion against Moses during the Exodus (Ex. 17:1–7). The name of that place was called MASSAH (testing, temptation) and MERIBAH (strife, contention).

PROW—the front section of a ship or boat (Acts 27:30, 41; bow, NRSV, NIV, REB).

PRUDENCE—skill, good judgment, and common sense. Both David and Solomon are described as men of prudence and wisdom (1 Sam. 16:18; 2 Chr. 2:12). The Book of Proverbs has good words for the prudent person (Prov. 1:4; 12:16, 23; 18:15).

PRUNING HOOKS—small knives with curved blades used for pruning grapevines. The prophets Isaiah, Joel, and Micah contrasted pruning hooks with spears in a way that allowed these knives to become symbols of peace, not war (Is. 2:4; Joel 3:10; Mic. 4:3).

PSALMIST—a writer or composer of a psalm. David is called “the sweet psalmist of Israel” (2 Sam. 23:1). Also see BIBLE; MUSIC; POETRY; PSALMS, BOOK OF.

PSALMS, BOOK OF—a collection of prayers, poems, and hymns that focus the worshiper’s thoughts on God in praise and adoration. Parts of this book were used as a hymnal in the worship services of ancient Israel.

The musical heritage of the Psalms is demonstrated by its title. It comes from a Greek word that means “a song sung to the accompaniment of a musical instrument.”

Structure of the Book. With 150 individual psalms, this book has the most chapters of any in the Bible.

It is also one of the most diverse, since the psalms deal with such subjects as God and His creation, war, worship, wisdom, sin and evil, judgment, justice, and the coming of the Messiah.

In the original Hebrew manuscripts, this long collection of 150 psalms was divided into five sections: book 1 (1–41); Book 2 (42–72); Book 3 (73–89); Book 4 (90–106); and Book 5 (107–150). Each of these major sections closes with a brief prayer of praise.

Scholars are not sure exactly why the Book of Psalms was organized in this manner. One theory is that it was divided into five sections as a sort of parallel to the Pentateuch—the first five books of the Old Testament (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy). But other scholars believe the five sections were different collections of psalms that circulated at different times in Israel's history. These five small collections were finally placed together, they believe, to form the large compilation which we know today as the Book of Psalms.

The second theory does not seem to make sense when we examine the content of the psalms themselves. Individual psalms attributed to David appear in all five sections of the Book. Within these five sections, different types of psalms also appear. These include songs of thanksgiving, hymns of praise, psalms of repentance and confession, psalms that invoke evil upon one's enemies, messianic psalms, and songs sung by pilgrims as they traveled to Jerusalem to observe one of the great festivals of their faith. Such variety among the psalms within these five sections may indicate they were complete collections within themselves before they were placed with other groups of psalms to form this larger body of material.

But no matter how the present arrangement of the book came about, these individual psalms were clearly inspired by God's Spirit. Through these hymns of praise, we come face to face with our Maker and Redeemer. In the glory of His presence, we are compelled to exclaim along with the psalmist, "O LORD, our Lord, how excellent is Your name in all the earth!" (8:1).

Authorship and Date. Most people automatically think of David when they consider the question of who wrote the Book of Psalms. A shepherd boy who rose to become the most famous king of Judah, he was also known as "the sweet psalmist of Israel" (2 Sam. 23:1). He lived during the most creative age of Hebrew song and poetry. As king, he organized the services of worship in the tabernacle, appointing priests and Levites for the specific purpose of providing songs and music. So it is not surprising that his name should be clearly associated with this beautiful book of praise.

The brief descriptions that introduce the psalms have David listed in them in seventy-three instances. But some scholars believe the phrase, "A psalm of David," should not be interpreted as a certain indication that David actually wrote all these psalms. They point out the Hebrew word translated as "of" can also be translated "to" or "for."

Thus, these psalms could have been written by anonymous authors and dedicated to David or even written on his behalf (for David) and added to a special collection of his material already being used in the sanctuary.

While this is an interesting theory, there is no compelling reason to question the traditional view that David actually wrote most or all the psalms that bear his name. David's personality and identity are clearly stamped on many of these psalms. For example, Psalm 18 is a psalm of David that sings praises to God as the sovereign Savior. The title indicates it was written after David was delivered "from the hand of all his enemies and from the hand of Saul." The same psalm in almost identical wording appears in 2 Samuel 22. This passage indicates that David sang this song after the death of Saul.

While it is clear that David wrote many of the individual psalms, he is definitely not the author of the entire collection. Two of the psalms (72 and 127) are attributed to Solomon, David's son and successor. Psalm 90 is a prayer assigned to Moses. Another group of twelve psalms (50 and 73–83) is ascribed to the family of Asaph. The sons of Korah wrote eleven psalms (42, 44–49, 84–85, 87–88). Psalm 88 is attributed to Heman, while Psalm 89 is assigned to Ethan the Ezrahite. With the exception of Solomon and Moses, all these additional authors were priests or Levites who were responsible for providing music for sanctuary worship during David's reign. Many of the psalms designate no specific person as author. They were probably written by many different people.

A careful examination of the authorship question, as well as the subject matter covered by the psalms themselves, reveal they span a period of many centuries. The oldest psalm in the collection may be the prayer of Moses (90). One of the latest psalms is 137, a song of lament clearly written during the days when the Jews were being held captive by the Babylonians, from about 586 to 538 B.C.

It is clear that the 150 individual psalms were written by many different people across a period of a thousand years in Israel’s history. They must have been compiled and put together in their present form by some unknown editor shortly after the captivity ended about 538 B.C.

Historical Setting. Some of the psalms written by David grew out of specific experiences in his life. For example, Psalm 3 is described as “a Psalm of David when he fled from Absalom his son” (see also 51, 52, 54, 56, 57, 59).
